1683. ber of thirty thousand Men, from whence, after some stay, they passed the Danube near Gran; it was believed that the design was formed against Newhausel, and the rather, because it had been so greatly streightned by General Mercy, who had block'd it up all the Winter, and reduced it to the Condition, as was supposed, of a voluntary surrender. But it was at length discovered that Buda was at the bottom of the Design, as a thing of greater Consequence, being therefore to leave no Place behind them, the Army was transported to Vicegrade, a place scituate upon the Danube, having left their Baggage under the Cannon of Gran; and having without much labour rendred themselves Masters of the City, the Turks that were in the Castle surrendered the next day, marching out to the number of seven hundred and forty men. In the mean time, the Turks of Alba Regalis, and the Neighbour Garrisons, to the number of six thousand, unexpectedly attack'd the Baggage at Gran, but were so rudely received, that having lost two hundred of their Men, and four Colours, they were forced to give back. Major General Hallowell of the Imperialists was slain in this Fight.

But the Turks, sollicitous for Newhausel, and finding they could not sufficiently relieve it with small Parties, resolved to attempt it with an Army, and being advanced as far as Vacia, the Duke resolved to oppose them. To this purpose he set forwards, and found them drawn up in Battalia upon the heights near the Town. The place was of difficult access, having on the left the Danube, and a large Morass, and the right secured by a Wood. The Duke having embattelled his men, moved directly towards the Enemy, and about Eleven of the Clock passed the Morass, without any great opposition, till being come upon the heights, they were then charged with great fury, but the Turks not being able to break them the first time, they bravely attacked them the second, and third time; but with like success, still repelled, especially the third time with great loss, and forced to save themselves by flight. The Foot saved themselves in the Castle, but were forced to surrender at discretion, after three hours resistance. Novigrade was hereupon quitted by the Turks, and as soon possest by the Imperialists.

Jun. 27. This Victory animated the Christians to prosecute their march to Pest, whither being come, they cast a great number of Bombs into the Town, with that success, that the fire taking in several places of it, frightned the Garrison so, that taking their best moveables with them, they fled into Buda, after they had also reduced some Houses in the Town to ashes, and fired the Bridge behind them. But the Christians taking possession of Pest, quenched the fire, repaired the fortifications, and battered Buda with the Artillery they found in the place.

The Siege of Buda. Hitherto fortune had been so favourable to the Imperialists, that they began to think nothing insuperable to their courage. This opinion made them pass the Danube again, and undertake the Siege of Offen, or Buda, the Capital of the Kingdom, sometimes the Residence of the Kings of Hungary, and now of the Bassa's, that govern that wealthy Kingdom with no less authority. After some ruffling and skirmishes, the City was invested, and the Suburbs taken without any great opposition. The Turks likewise quitted St. Gerards Hill, and the besiegers began to batter the Walls with their Artillery.

The Turks abroad were not idle, for having got twenty thousand Men together, they were resolved to attempt the relief of Buda. But the Christians having left all their Foot, with what Horse was necessary to continue the Siege, they marched with the rest of the Cavalry, one thousand Foot under the command of Count Aversberg, and two thousand five hundred Hussars of Count Esterhasis. The Duke marched all Night to find out the Enemy, who, though well trenched, at sight of the Christians came out of their Camp, and embattell'd themselves for their defence. The dispute lasted near four hours, the Turks making several motions to gain the Flanks of the Enemy, which being perceived, the Christians used all possible diligence to prevent them, and engaging at length, after a sharp fight, the Infidels being disordered, were put to flight, and so closely pursued, that not only their Camp and Cannon were taken, but at least four thousand of them slain, and the great Standard, the badge of the Grand Visier's dignity also surprised. 1683.

After this Victory, the Duke returning to the Siege, summoned the place, but received for answer, that the Governour had in the presence of his Messengers caused forty Christian Slaves to be hewed in pieces, saying, he wished he could do as much to all the Christian Army. In revenge of this, the Christians assaulted the place, but in vain, though upon a second attempt they carried the lower Town, with their Swords in their hands, notwithstanding the opposition they found was great. They raised a Battery there of twenty four Cannon, and seventeen Mortars, from whence, as also St. Gerards hill, they battered the City. Nor were the besieged idle, who made a brave sally upon the Besiegers, wherein they slew some hundreds of them, with several considerable Officers, besides the wounded.

The Christian Army beginning to want Forrage, they made a Bridge to pass to the Isle of St. Margaret, from whence they might be the better provided with all things. Many were the attempts, the batteries, the sallies, and endeavours on both sides. The Christians endeavoured to hinder the Turks, though in vain, from watering at the Danube. The Christians sprung a Mine by the great Tower, which did indeed take effect, but it was found that the Turks were too well provided to hazard an assault. About mid-August, the Governour, or Visier of Buda, Kara Mehemet, was kill'd with a shot he received in his face, a Person very brave, and very knowing. Ephraim Bassa succeeded him in the Government, but did not enjoy it long, being likewise slain with a Cannon Bullet, so that the Chief command was devolved upon the Aga of the Janizaries.

As the attack was vigorous, so the defence was brave, the Turks continually vexing the Christians with their Alarms and Sallies, who on the other side continued their approaches with great resolution, but their Foot being much spent, it was judged advisable not to hazard a General assault, before the Bavarian Forces, which were daily expected, were come up.

In the mean time the Serasquier Bassa formed a design to make a diversion some other way, in order to which he marches towards the frontiers of Croatia, where General Lesley was camped, who had besieged Virovitza in July, beaten the relief designed for their succour, and thereupon had the place surrendered to him upon composition. Having now notice of the Serasquier's design, he went and posted himself within half a League off his Camp, near a Bridge that was lay'd over the Danube at Turanowitz. A while after the Turks approached, who charged 1683. with great fury eight hundred Croats, newly come to the Imperial Camp, but with their accuſtomed misfortune. They however returned immediately to the fight, and forced the Croats to retire, leaving them three Standards for priſe, ſo that being animated with this advantage, they would attempt more, and attacked the Imperialiſts in their Poſt; but they were ſo ill received, that they were obliged to retire with the loſs of five hundred men, which were killed upon the place. The Chriſtians loſt two hundred.

Though this Siege, for the Greatneſs and Fame of it, deſerves to be deſcribed in all its particulars, the Approaches, the Attacks, the Mines, the Battels, the Batteries, the Breaches of the Chriſtians being carried on with ſo much Valour and Conſtancy, that it amazed the wondering World; yet the Greatneſs of the Garriſon, the Scituation and Strength of the Place, the reiterated Succours that were brought in, a potent Army commanded by a Seraskier, within the noiſe of their Guns, yea, oft-times their view; a vigorous and intrepid Courage in the Defendants, frequent and furious Sallies, Countermines, and the advance of a wet Seaſon ſo favourable to them, rendred all the Endeavours of the Beſiegers fruitleſs, and forced them to a Retreat.

The Duke of Bavaria had indeed brought with his Perſon, a conſiderable recruit to the Imperialiſts, and they performed all that Courage could ſuggeſt; but being the fatal moment of the reducing of this Capital City of the Kingdom was not yet come, we will tranſmit the Hiſtory of it till then, when the ſame great Atchievements were in a manner acted over again, and indeed by the ſame Generals on the ſide of the Chriſtians, but with better fortune.

The Siege had laſted from the fourteenth of July, till the firſt of November, at which time the Chriſtians having tranſported their Baggage, their ſick, and ſome pieces of Artillery to the Iſle of St. Andrew; the Army ſending their great Cannon, their Ammunition, and the reſt of their Baggage by Water, for want of draught-Horſes, though well convoyed, followed themſelves in a Body uninterrupted, and marched to their Winter Quarters, the Bavarians into upper Hungary, and the Imperialiſts into both the upper and lower Hungary, Bohemia, Sileſia, &c. according to their Repartitions.

The Turks attempted nothing upon the Army in their retreat, but brought near a thouſand Priſoners, which were left in the Iſle of St. Margaret, into the City, not ſingly triumphing for ſo ſignal a deliverance.

Such was the end of this bloody Siege, where, following the common Opinion, the Emperour loſt twenty thouſand Men, and amongſt them a great number of Officers. Of thoſe of moſt note were the Counts of Altheim, two of the Starembergs, James and Lewis, Carlowitz, Richtari, Hoken-Zollern, Furſtenburg, Naſſau, Durheim, Chriminz, and the young Counts of Harrah, and great quantity of others.

The Turks recovered their Garriſons of Peſt and Vacia, without any great difficulty, but in exchange the Count of Zober took the Caſtle of Suran near Newheuſel.

The Venetians declare War againſt the Turks.

The Republick of Venice had a more fortunate Campaign. Their Doge or Prince being dead, Marco Antonio Juſtiniano being elected Duke in his place, the Senate ſent orders to their Secretary Capello, at the Ottoman Port immediately after the concluſion of the Alliance made with the Emperour and Poland, to declare War againſt the Turks, and to ſave himſelf as well as he could, which he did; for having ſcarce finiſhed his Declaration, he retired from Conſtantinople in the habit of a Sea-man, and embarked himſelf upon a French Ship. But two of his Domeſticks, and ſix other ſervants, had the misfortune to be taken, whilſt the Merchants of his Nation took Sanctuary in the French Embaſſadour's Palace. The Kaimacan of Conſtantinople would ſearch whether Capello was not there alſo, but the Ambaſſadour anſwered him, if he came to re-ſearch there without expreſs orders from the Grand Seignior, he ſhould repent it, which ſo diſcompoſed him, that after ſome excuſes, he proceeded no further. 1683.

The Council chooſing their great Officers, made Moroſini Captain General, Mocenigo Procurer General of Dalmatia, the Prince of Parma General of the Infantry, &c. General Strozoldo paſſed out of the Emperour's ſervice, to that of this Common-wealth.

The Morlacks did likewiſe, for the moſt part, embrace the Party of the Venetians, holding the Turks in perpetual Alarms, making oft-times very conſiderable Booty, perpetually peſtering them with their ravagings and excurſions.

The General Rendezvouz of the Venetian Fleet was at Corfu, where the Gallies of the Pope, of Malta, and of Tuſcany joyning with them, conſiſting in all of forty-ſix Gallies, ſix Galliaſſes, thirty-three Men of War, beſides other ſmaller Veſſels, manned with above twenty thouſand Foot, and five or ſix hundred Horſe. A General Council of War being held in preſence of all the Chief of the Auxiliary Squadrons, it was reſolved to attempt the Iſland of St. Maure, in purſuance whereof, arriving before the Iſland about the 20*th* of July, the Army entred the Port of Dameta, on the Eaſt ſide of the Iſland, where alſo they made their deſcent. Seignior Monetta landed firſt with one hundred and fifty Men, being followed by General Strozoldo, with two Venetian Regiments, the Popes, and the Infantry of Malto, the reſt of the Venetian and Duke of Tuſcany's Forces landing on the Weſt ſide. Having taken their Poſts, the Generaliſſimo ſent a Summons to them in the Fort, to ſurrender it, which they with contempt refuſing, the Chriſtians began to batter the Town from their Gallies and Galliaſſes, whereby the houſes and fortifications of the City were greatly endamaged, as alſo a Moſque, which was ruined; and however the Turks were not wanting in their defence, yet they would hinder the Chriſtians to lodge in the Suburbs, and to raiſe Batteries, which did greatly prejudice the Walls, beſides that the Bombs did very great harm in the City. The firſt of Auguſt, a great Breach was made in the Wall, one of their Bulwarks being much ruined, and four of their Pieces of Cannon rendred uſeleſs to the Beſieged; beſides, the Town flamed in ſeveral parts, being fired by the Bombs; by favour of which advantages the Venetians advanced their approaches ſo well, that they began already to fill the Ditch, and making every thing ready for a general aſſault. Things being at this paſs, General Moroſini, by an unaccuſtomed kind of Clemency, ſent them a ſecond Summons, which they accepting off, hung out towards evening a white Flag, and about one in the Morning, ſent three Deputies, to notifie they were content to ſurrender, upon condition they might carry all their goods with them, but they could obtain no more, than to march out with their Families, and what they could carry. Hoſtages were next Morning delivered on both ſides, and all the Slaves were releaſed, ſave that they were obliged

1683. obliged to ſerve as Sea-men in the Gallies of the Common-wealth for a year. The Garriſon with their Army, ſeven hundred in number, marched out that evening by the Weſt Port, and the Venetians entred by the breach into the City, where they found ſtore of Proviſion, and eighty Pieces of Ordinance, twenty whereof had the Arms of St. Mark upon them. During the time of the Siege, which laſted ſeventeen days, the Chriſtians loſt four-hundred men, and the Turks near three hundred.

St. Maura taken.

And thus this Neſt of Pirates, (the Leucade of the Ancients) about ſeventy miles round, and well peopled, and in the poſſeſſion of the Turks ever ſince Mahomet the ſecond's time, was re-taken in leſs than three Weeks, with ſo inconſiderable a loſs. The General cauſed the Moſques forthwith to be re-conſecrated, and Te Deum to be ſung in them for ſo happy a Victory, which was alſo celebrated in Venice with great magnificence.

After the fortifications of this place were repaired, and the Garriſon provided with all neceſſaries, the Government of it being given to Laurence Venier, as extraordinary Provider, and to Phillip Paricz in ordinary, both Gentlemen of Venice, the General choſe two thouſand Venetians, the remainder of thoſe which were in a condition to march, by reaſon of the manifold ſickneſſes that reigned amongſt the Souldiery, and diſpatched them with Collonel Angelo, to aſſemble all the Grecians he could get together, and tranſported himſelf to the haven of Pettala, in expectation of the ſaid Collonel's enterpriſe. He went thence, and ancred in the haven or Port of Dragomeſtro, where landing with two thouſand Venetians, and one thouſand of the Auxiliaries, he joyned himſelf with fifteen or ſixteen hundred Grecians. Theſe Troops ravaged the Country, chaſed the men which Saban Baſſa, Governour of Prevezza, had poſted to obſerve the Chriſtians. Having allured the ſaid Baſſa into the field, burnt ſome Villages, and pillaged the Country five days together, they re-imbark'd at Pettala, and ſailed thence to the Haven of Dameta. There, at a Council of War, the reſolution of attacking Prevezza was taken, it being the only place that covered the Iſland of St. Maur, being ſome twelve miles diſtant from it. In order to this deſign, the General ſent five Gallies, and ſix Gailiaſſes towards the Caſtles called the Gomenizze, within ſight of the Fortreſs, to oblige the Turks to divide their Forces, which alſo happened; for upon a ſuppoſition that the Chriſtians would attempt the Towers, they ſent moſt of their Men thither: The Army parted from Dameta the 20th of September, and came to anchor that evening at the mouth of the Gulph of Arta or Ambracia, that City being famous for the Reſidence of King Pyrrhus, and its Gulf, for the Victory of Auguſtus againſt Marc Anthony.

The next day the Captain Monetta, who was come with twenty four Barks and Brigantines, landed his Troops, being aſſiſted by the approach of the Gallies, which hindred the Turks from daring to appear upon the ſhore, before the Venetians were drawn up into Battalia by General Strozoldo, and had forced five hundred Spahis, who came to charge them, to retire. They took the Caſtle without difficulty, and poſted themſelves upon a height which commanded the City. The General thereupon ſummoned the place, but the Officer who commanded in chief in the abſence of Saba Baſſa, refuſed the Letter and Meſſenger, ſhooting at the later, upon confidence of being relieved by his Gouvernour. Several Mortars and Cannon were landed, and Batteries being raiſed, the place was ſorely canonado'd, in ſo much that all the Enemies Pieces but one were diſmounted. The twenty fourth, they carried their Approaches into the Moat, and by Favour of the Obſcurity of the Night, carried their Mine under the great Tower. The twenty eighth they made a Lodgment in the Ditch, and the Breach being very large, Order was given for the Aſſault as ſoon as the Mine had played; but the Turks, ſenſible of their Danger, prevented it by hanging out a Flag of Truce. They demanded the ſame Conditions with them at St. Maur, though but thirty of the principal were ſuffered to go out with Arms and Baggage, the reſt being only allowed what they could carry about them. There were found in this place forty ſix pieces of Cannon, and much Proviſion. The Winter advancing apace, the Auxiliaries returned to their ſeveral Homes, and the Venetians to their Iſles to paſs the Seaſon there.

As alſo Prevezza.

In Dalmatia the Venetians happily ended their Campania with the taking of Narenta.

And Narenta in Dalmatia.

The King of Poland did not take the Field this year before mid-Auguſt, after the Troops which had been laſt year in Hungary, and a party of Brandenburgs had joyned his Army. He took a review of his Army near Buzac, from whence he ſent a ſtrong detachment to inveſt Jaſtowitz but two miles off, whither he alſo came towards Evening with the reſt of his Army, and ſummoned the place; but the Commander having anſwered, that the place being intruſted to him by the Grand Seignior, he would keep it to the laſt Extremity; but he was not as good as his word, for after having been battered two days, the Turks demanded a Parley. Hoſtages were given on both ſides, and the Articles quickly ſigned, according to which the Garriſon marched out with their Arms, to the number of five hundred men. The King turned hence towards Swaniec, near the Nieſter, over which he cauſed a Bridge to be lay'd, and his Army to paſs it. But he quickly repaſſed it again, upon the advice he received, that thirty thouſand Tartars had paſſed this River, with deſign to make an irruption into Poland. His Majeſty going in queſt of them, had the luck to cut four hundred of them in pieces, but he could not ingage them in a formal battel, being they ſtayed no where, for this reaſon, and the ſeaſon being paſſed, he reſolved to ſend his Army into Winter-Quarters.

The Poles take the Field.

Go into Winter Quarters.

The ſucceſſes of the Coſſacks laſt year in December, which we have already mentioned, encouraged them with their General Kunincky, betimes in the Spring, to go in queſt of new Adventures, and being reinforced with Moldavians and Walachians, they marched towards Stravico, where the Danube diſgorges it ſelf into the black Sea, but being aſſailed by the Hoſpodar Duka, they were obliged to retire, and their General fled out of the Field with the Horſe, but the Infantry ſtanding firm, recovered the day, routed the Turks and Tartars, took Jas, the Hoſpodar's Reſidence, and himſelf Priſoner. But not being ſatisfied with their General Kunicky, they depoſed him, and put Mohila into his place; and however that afterwards the old General was reſtored by the interceſſion of the King of Poland, and that the new had but a ſubaltern command under him, yet the Coſſacks mortally hating him, they at length aſſaſſinated him, and gave the entire command to Mohila, after which they ſtill continued their excurſions, without ingaging before any ſtrong Place.

The Coſſacks aſſaſſinate their General.

The

1685. The state of the Ottoman Empire.

The Ottoman Empire had been in no small distraction before the relief of Buda, and that seeming in some sort to compensate their loss at Vienna, they at least made use of it as an incentive to raise the well-nigh desponding spirits of their People. It had been given out that the Grand Seignior himself would in Person come into the field, at least to Belgrade, to countenance his Armies, though he was pleased to remain at Adrianople; and being the Forces he had ordered from the several Provinces of the Empire were defective in the numbers he expected, he caused several of their Leaders to be strangled. The Troops of Asia did likewise mutiny, which so retarded his preparations, that the Christians got into the Field before him, and necessitated him to a defensive War. The Rendezvouz of his Forces was at Belgrade, from whence they passed by the Bridge of Essieck to Buda, whose fortifications they took care to repair, for fear lest the Enemy might attempt a second Siege, placing twelve thousand men there in Garrison, with Victuals and Ammunition for its defence. The numerous Hoards of the Tartars, which never failed to attend their Conquests, refused now to march, the Cham having sent the Grand Seignior word, that he could spare none of his Troops this Summer, having himself need of them, to secure his Country against the invasion of the Cossacks.

Newheusel had been block'd up all the Winter by the Christians, under the command of Collonel Heusler, so that most of the attempts for its relief from Buda, Agria, and other of their Garrisons, proved fruitless. The Turks seeing no good to be done with small Detachments, drew a great Body of Men together, betwixt Pest and Vicegrade, and having provided a great Convoy of Provisions, resolved to attempt the relief of the place, which occasioned Collonel Heusler to be daily re-inforced with new Troops; who, ten thousand strong, posted his Men along the River Gran, having taken care to secure all the Fords and passages of it. His numbers daily increasing, the Ottomans who were gathered together betwixt Pest and Vacia, having intelligence of it, retired, having sent the Provisions, designed for the relief of Newheusel, back to Buda, fearing they should be attack'd by the Imperialists, if they stay'd there.

The Christian Army, composed of the Imperial Troops, and their several Allies, being much more forward than the Turks, had rendezvouzed, and were now encamped betwixt Newheusel and Barcan, where, upon the Duke of Lorrain's arrival, it was resolved at a Council of War to attack Novigrade, to cut off by that means the communication betwixt Buda and Newheusel, and afterwards formally to besiege Newheusel. But he afterwards altered his mind, being it might take up too much time to besiege Novigrade, by reason of the distance, and would but little contribute to the Siege of Newheusel. Besides, this last place was represented very defective, through their wants and distempers.

Newheusel besieged by the Christians.

Jul. 7th.

Newheusel the Oywar of the Hungarians, is a large Hexagon, well bulwork'd and moated, the Plain about being Moorish and Fenny. The River Newtra runs within Pistol-shot of it, furnishing the Town-Ditch with its Water, by a cut or trench, which conveys it into it. The resolution of attacking this important place being taken, it was invested by the Imperial Army, the lines of Circumvallation were made, and a resolution was taken to attack the place with vigour and conduct. Two lines of approaches were advanced towards two Bastions; that to the right by the Imperialists, and they of Luxebourg; and the other by the Imperialists, and the Bavarian Troops; the one commanded by the Princes of Hanovre, and Croy, by turns, and the other by Count Serini, with each three Master Generals to assist them. The same night the Trenches were opened by three thousand Foot, and the Approaches carried on seven hundred paces. Those on the Bavarian side towards the Mosque were enlarged and deepened, so that three Men might pass a-breast, and be covered. On the Imperialists side, the Duke caused two Batteries to be raised, both on the right of his Approaches, whereon they worked the whole Night; and though the Enemy continued to shoot their Cannon without ceasing, there were but very few killed or wounded. In short, the Approaches on both sides were carried on with such care, and industry, and courage, the Duke seldom leaving the Trenches till very far in the Night, but assisting and encouraging the Souldiery by his presence and authority, that maugre all the brave opposition of the Garrison, and their perpetual firing and sallies, the works were continued to the very Mote on both sides, strengthned not only with Lines of Communication, with Redoubts, and with multiplied Batteries, but the Water also began to be drained out of the Ditch, by a Canal made for the purpose. The Besieged seeing themselves so sorely pressed, amongst others made a Sally about three a Clock, with two hundred Men, and surprised a Redoubt, wherein there were three hundred of the Suabian Troops, who together with their Officers were all cut to pieces. The Turks were so joyed with this success, that they testified it by a consort of Musick, after their mode, that Night. The Besiegers had endeavoured to pass the Ditch in Boats, and so carry over their Minery, but the said Boats were sunk by the Defendants, and many slain; and now they begin to fill the said Moat with Faggots, and Sacks of Wool, and several Galleries were in making for the securer passage, but they were often burnt and broke by the Besieged, who omitted nothing in their defence. They set fire on the Bavarians Gallery with their Arrows, at the sharp ends whereof they had fastned a mixture of Sulphur and Pitch, which did not only burn it, but communicating its flames to the neighbouring Battery, burnt it quite down, with the Carriages of four of their battering Pieces, notwithstanding all the diligence and care to the contrary.

1685.

It was now the beginning of August, when the Besieged made a brisk Sally upon them that worked in the advanced Posts over against the Gate of Gran, killed fifty and hurt many, among which was Gallenfels Lieutenant Collonel, Pugerelli a Captain, and several other Officers. The disorder was so great, that the Dukes of Bavaria and Lorrain ran thither, the latter wounding some of the Run-aways to stay them, and ill treating their Officers for their negligence. Collonel Burgstorf was killed the Night following in the Approaches, and Count Souches dangerously wounded in his Neck. The Besieged had filled up the Canal which the Christians had made to drain their Moat, but it was opened again. And now the Approaches, the Galleries, and filling the Ditch had been carried on with such violence, that the Cannon of the Town were well-nigh all dismounted, and the infinite numbers of Bombs and Carkasses which had been thrown into it, had well-nigh consumed it. The Besieged had indeed made new Retrenchments in the attack'd Bastions, where they had re-mounted 1685. ted their Cannon, and uſed them with ſucceſs: but,

The Breach which the Chriſtians had made was great, and the Gallery was carried over. The Moat was filled equal with the largeneſs of the Breach, and the Mines were a compleating, the Traverſes of the Ditch were much enlarged, ſo that the Souldiers might go in a large front to the aſſault. And yet they finiſh another Battery upon the brink of the Moat, where they planted twenty-four Pieces of Cantion of twenty four pound Ball, to make the Breach yet larger and eaſier. And now all things being prepared for the aſſault, they were hindred for two or three days by the great Rains.

In the beginning of this Month, the Baſſa had deſired a Parley, but demanded, in caſe of ſurrender, that he might march away, not only with their Arms, but all ſorts of Ammunition and Cannon, and take with him all the Chriſtian Slaves, &c. which conditions the Duke would not hearken to. The Baſſa was indeed animated by hopes of relief from the Seraskier, who, he knew, was preparing for it, and had already in order to a diverſion beſieged Gran, which obliged the Duke of Lorrain with the Elector of Bavaria, and forty thouſand men, to riſe and go and meet him; leaving eleven thouſand Foot and five thouſand Horſe, with fifty-eight Pieces of Cannon, and eighteen Mortars, to continue the Siege under the command of Count Caprara, Marſhal General of the Field, and the Prince of Croy, General of the Artillery.

But to return to Newheuſel, the fatal 10th. of Auguſt being come, a reſolution was taken to aſſault the Town at Eleven of the Clock, to which end two Mines were ſprung that morning, one at the North Baſtion, and the other upon the neighbouring Curtain, which, though they had not their wiſhed effect, which was to ruine ſome retrenchments of the beſieged, yet they did much facilitate the paſſage, rendering the aſcent more eaſie, ſo that it was reſolved to aſſault the place at eight a clock, to this purpoſe three thouſand were ordered for the attack in two places, to each fifteen hundred, which were ſupported by a Reſerve of two thouſand. The Imperialiſts, had the Van on both ſides. Count Sherffenberg commanded the right, being followed by them of Lunenberg and Suabia, and Lieutenant Collonel Samogaski the left, with the Troops of Colen, Bavaria and Franconia. Being thus prepared, they fired from all their Batteries, and ſhowred in their Granado's and Bombs from nineteen Mortars, with that impetuouſneſs, that they put them within into ſuch a conſternation, that for ſome time they durſt ſcarce appear. During this Tempeſt, Count Sherffenberg firſt enter'd, and poſting himſelf upon the Baſtion, the Sieur Rummel about the ſame, puſhing at the new breach; the beſieged were forced to give way on all ſides, and retreating upon a Cavalier of their Retrenchments, did now the ſecond time lift up a white Flagg, demanding quarter, but in vain; for the Chriſtians ruſhing on, put all they met to the Sword; this rendred the reſt ſo deſperate, that four hundred of them precipitated themſelves into the Town-Diteh, who were all deſtroyed by the Horſe, ſo that of all the Garriſon which was yet twelve hundred at the beginning of the aſſault, ſcarce two hundred were ſaved. Haſſan Baſſa the Governour, deſperately wounded in the head and breaſt, was brought to the General, and ſome ten more of the chief Officers were ſaved; but the Governor dyed two days after of his wounds. This Haſſan was a Renegade, Native of Bohemia, though a man of extraordinary great parts and reſolution.

Is taken by Aſſault.

There were found in the place eighty Pieces of Ordnance, and a great quantity of Ammunition and Proviſion, ſo that the perpetual noiſe of their wants was a fable, the Governour having always a great Magazin of Victuals, as well as Ammunition, which he did not think fit to expoſe before the Siege. Of the Chriſtian Slaves there were but forty remaining, the Turks having conſumed the reſt in their works, expoſing them ſtill where the greateſt danger was. And although the Beſiegers did ſcarce loſe one hundred in the ſtorm; yet it is ſuppoſed, that during the whole Siege, the number of their ſlain did at leaſt equal, if not ſurmount that of their Enemies, yet with this difference, that the Turks loſt all, and they but an inconſiderable part of a potent Army: excepting the Prince of Wirtemberg, greatly lamented by the good and brave, and ſome other conſiderable Officers. 1685.

The Seraskier, not imagining the fate of Newheuſel ſo near, having with great induſtry gathered a conſiderable Army, eſtimated betwixt fifty and ſixty thouſand ſtrong, reſolved to attempt the relief of it, in order to which he would try the way of diverſion, as leſs hazardous, and upon that account marches to Gran, and though that very day of his arrival an additional reinforcement of five hundred men, ſent thither by the Duke of Lorrain, got into the Garriſon, yet he cauſed the Trenches to be opened, and began to attack the place with his Cannon and Mortars, from Batteries raiſed on St. George and St. Thomas hills. They alſo attackt the lower Town, but were repulſed with the loſs of two or three hundred men. Several other attempts were made upon the Out-works, but with loſs to the Undertakers, who underſtanding that the Enemy advanced, grew more remiſs, poſſeſſing themſelves of all the Hills by which the Chriſtians might attack them, and thereupon quitted the Siege.

Jul. 30. Gran beſieged.

On the 7th of Auguſt, the Duke of Lorrain, with forty thouſand men, paſſed the Danube, upon a Bridge near Comorra, and arrived the 12th at a Village that was burnt; where he found the Turks, who had abandoned the Siege of Gran, very advantageouſly poſted, having Mountains on each ſide, covered with thick Woods, and a Moraſs before them, which reached to the Danube. Upon the arrival of the Chriſtian Army, they ſkirmiſhed near the Moraſs, where ſeveral were killed and hurt on both ſides. The following Night the Chriſtian Army camped in Battalia, and continued ſo the 13th, but the Turks alarm'd them about noon, and ſkirmiſhed all the day with the Chriſtians right Wing, where the Hungarians were, many being ſlain and wounded on both ſides. About noon the Duke commanded ſome Pieces of Cannon to be planted on a Hill behind his Men, from whence they ſhot, and the Turks did the ſame with two great Pieces, from a height where the Janizaries were. The 14th, the Turks advanced their Camp to the very Moraſs, upon Mountains oppoſite to our advanced Guards, where they made three Batteries with great Cannon, ſhooting into our very Camp.

The 15th, a Poliſh Slave eſcaped out of the Turkiſh Camp, and gave advice, that the Seraskier, Ibrahim Baſſa, was perſwaded, that the Chriſtian Army did not exceed twenty thouſand, and thought of a retreat, ſo that he might eaſily rout them, if he ſuddenly fell upon them with his, that was ſixty thouſand ſtrong. Upon this advice, the Duke and the other Generals reſolved to feign a Retreat, and then, by drawing the 1685. the Enemy beyond the Moraſs, find a place to fight with them in a pitch'd Battel.

The ſame day the Turks advanced towards a place in the Moraſs where they might paſs with the Horſe, and took Poſt alſo in another, where they might make a Bridge for the Foot. As the Chriſtians had already reſolved to march the day following very early, towards the Bridge of Boats at Viſali, they let flie ſome Guns only to amuſe the Enemy. In the mean time the Orders for the march of the Army were given in the following manner. Firſt, that the Baggage ſhould part that evening. The left Wing having the Avaunt-Guard, followed by that of the right. Secondly, that the Army ſhould be ranged in Battalia before day, and march as the place would permit; the two Wings each in two Lines, but if the way would oblige them to file, that then they ſhould begin by the left Wing, and enlarge themſelves as the ground did permit, into their firſt order of Battel.

That the ſecond line ſhould have the Avaunt-Guard commanded by Count Dunewalt, which was to be followed by the firſt line in the ſame manner. At the right of the firſt line Count Styrum was to march upon the Mountains (which he had viewed the day before) with his Regiment, the Dragoons of Luneburg, and all the Huſſars, except thoſe of Zoborra, with ſome Field-pieces. That the Fauconets ſhould march before the firſt line, and every Regiment with its Field-pieces, as uſual. And finally, that the Squadrons and the Battalions poſted on the little Mountain on this ſide the Moraſs, as alſo thoſe on the Mountain to the right, commanded by Major General Tungen, ſhould march at the ſound of the Tymbals.

The Battel of Gran. Aug. 15. About ten at Night they had News that the Turks were paſſing the Moraſs, whereupon all the Generals took Horſe, Lorrain in the right, and the Elector of Bavaria in the left, and all being in order, they began to march at the ſound of their Trumpets, Tymbals, and Drums, which was continued till the Turks by Favour of the Night charged their left Wing; whereupon the whole Army facing about, they marched to ſuccour their engaged Troops, which done, they continued advancing, notwithſtanding the cries and howlings of the Turks, and their continual Skirmiſhing till it was break of day, when a great Miſt covered the whole Field, that nothing could be diſcerned. Both ſides made uſe of this accident, ranging their Armies to their uttermoſt Advantage.

After ſeven in the Morning, the Sun having diſpell'd the Miſt, the Turks advanced upon the Chriſtians, with the noiſe of their Drums and horrible Cries, diſcharging ſome Cannon upon their right Wing, charged it with great fury, but they were repulſed; the ſame happened on the Mountain where Tungen commanded, who was hurt there. At the ſame time the Turks attacked with their greateſt force, and principally their Foot, the heights on the Chriſtians right where Count Styrum was, but he was ſo ſeaſonably ſuccoured by ſome Imperial Battalions and other Troops of the ſecond line, that the Turks were forced to retire, being indeed chaſed and repelled in all the parts of the Army. Being fled by the Moraſs, the way they came, they ſeemed to make head again in their Camp, but upon the advance of the Chriſtians, who paſſed the Moraſs with their Foot and Horſe, the terror and conſternation was ſo great amongſt the Turkiſh Souldiers, that it was impoſſible for the Seraſquier, notwithſtanding all his endeavour to perſwade his Men to oppoſe the paſſage of the Moraſs. They alſo abandoned their Camp, Arms, Cannon, and other Inſtruments of War to the Purſuers, beſides forty Enſigns and ſome two hundred Priſoners which were taken. The Seraſquier was hurt in his Leg, and having left five thouſand upon the place, ſecured the reſt by a timely retreat. The two Armies ſeparating after the fight, the Chriſtians went back to Comorra, in order to their proſecution of the Siege of Newheuſel: and the Seraſquier having rallied his Forces, and puniſhed with ſtrangling ſome of his chief Officers, who had not well behaved themſelves in the Battel of Gran, and paſſed the Danube, declaring he would relieve Newheuſel whatever it coſt, but ſoon after he received the news, as the Chriſtians had at Comorra, that the place was taken by aſſault. 1685.

Gained by the Chriſtians.

The Seraſquier however having formed a new train of Artillery of twenty Pieces, which he took out of Buda, and being reinforced with ſeveral freſh Troops, he marched towards Vaccia, incamping betwixt that place and Peſt, but hearing of the approach of the Chriſtian Army, he abandoned Novigrade and Vaccia, taking the Cannon and Ammunition with him that was there, demoliſhing the ſaid places, and ſetting fire to them when he left them. He alſo ruined the Country about Peſt, and having ſent a Detachment to re-inforce the Garriſon of Agria, he repaſſed the Danube with the reſt of his Army at Buda.

And now the Turks do not ſeem averſe from Peace, the Seraſquier having ſent an Aga to the Duke of Lorrain with a Letter, wherein he acquainted his Highneſs, that he had full power from the Grand Seignior to treat and conclude a Peace, which he conjures him to promote by offers of great advantage, as abandoning Count Tekely, and delivering of the three Hoſtages, which were in the Grand Seignior's hands. But the Duke anſwered him, that he had no Orders to treat of Peace, and that a Victorious Army was not to be amuſed with ſuch Propoſals, but that he would acquaint his Imperial Majeſty with the Seraſquier's deſire.

The Seraſquier having paſſed the Danube, the few Tartars he had, not exceeding ſix thouſand, left him, and returned home. The Baſſa's of Agria, Temiſwar and Waradin were ſent back, with the Troops under their command, and went home to their reſpective Governments, the Seraſquier with the reſt of his Army poſting himſelf betwixt Buda and Alba-Regalis to obſerve the Chriſtians motion.

The Imperial Army had advanced in queſt of the Turks as far as Vaccia, but hearing that the Ottoman Army was ſeparated in ſeveral Bodies, and marched as above, as alſo towards the Frontiers of Styria and Croatia; the Duke reſolved likewiſe to ſend four thouſand men to re-inforce Count Leſley, and being the Forrage was deſtroyed, to return, having ordered a Detachment of five Regiments of Foot, one of Cuiraſiers, and two of Dragoons and Croats, to march unto upper Hungary, where Count Caprara was to command in Chief.

The Seraſquier had made ſeveral other Attempts for Peace, but the Emperour refuſing paſports to his Aga, thoſe overtures vaniſhed. There had alſo been an Armenian ſent in the beginning of this year with overtures of Peace, but he was ſent back with this Anſwer; That the Emperour will not enter into any Negotiation of Peace, but joyntly with the King of Poland, and Republick of Venice; inſomuch that finding all his Endeavours for a Treaty fruitleſs, he repaſſed the Bridge of Eſſeck, ſending part of his Forces 1685. Forces towards Zigeth, and the reſt towards Slavonia and Boſoria, whereby he alſo defeated Count Leſleys Deſign upon Poſſega.

To all the Miſeries of War was added that of the Plague, which raged much at Conſtantinople, which, together with the accompt they had of the loſs of Newheuſel, and the other ill Succeſſes of the Ottoman Army in Hungary, Morea, and indeed every where, had filled not only that City, but the Empire with Conſternation and Tumult; for the Janizaries, as is uſual in all great Misfortunes, mutined, threatned not only the Grand Viſier, but the Grand Seignior himſelf, and were not to be appeaſed without conſiderable Diſtributions amongſt them; it being alſo given out, that his Highneſs would himſelf command the Army in Perſon next Summer.

The Principal Armies of theſe potent Adverſaries being in Winter Quarters, we will leave them ſtrugling there to enlarge their Accommodations, and transfer our Pen to ſuch Actions as have been remarkable in other Parts.

The Conteſts in upper Hungary were various betwixt the Imperialiſts and Tekelites, General Schultz commanded the former, who had order to attack Ungwar, and afterwards to beſiege Eſperies and Caſſaw. Count Tekely thereupon paſſes the Tybiſcus, aſſembling what Troops he could together, ſending to the Neighbour Countries to cauſe their Militia to march and to joyn him, which Schultz endeavoured to hinder, eſpecially his joyning againſt the Turks. And now he lays cloſe Siege to Ungwar, which was defended with no leſs Valour than Obſtinacy, inſomuch that after the loſs of ſeveral Officers, and a conſiderable number of Men, he was obliged to raiſe the Siege. Some time after he laid ſiege to the City of Eſperies with eight thouſand men, where he found no leſs Oppoſition than at Ungwar; the beſieged ſeeming reſolved to defend the Place to the laſt extremity, notwithſtanding the offer made to the Rebels of a general Pardon, which was intimated to the Magiſtrates and Citizens of Eſperies by an Officer ſent from the General, but they, inſtead of taking advantage of the Emperour's Clemency, barbarouſly killed the ſaid Officer, which the General reſented ſo highly, that he cauſed a general aſſault to be given the place, but in vain, being beaten off with the loſs of ſeveral hundreds of their Souldiers. The place had already held out ſix Weeks, but General Caprara being ordered to command in chief in upper Hungary, and a Detachment of ten thouſand men being ſent to reinforce the Siege, it made them ſtoop, and deſire a Parley, which produced a Treaty, and then a Surrender, ſuch of the Garriſon as would being entertained in the Emperours Service, and the Magiſtrates and Citizens to enjoy their antient Priviledges, and the Places and Employments they at preſent poſſeſs.

Eſperies ſurrendred.

General Schultz marched from Eſperies to Caſchaw, and beleagured it, and General Caprara towards Tokay, with a Reſolution to take that place what ever it coſt, being it opened a paſſage betwixt Tranſilvania and Zatmar, nor did it make any remarkable Oppoſition, but with other leſſer Places ſurrendered without reſiſtance upon Conditions.

October 6. Count Caprara being come in Perſon before Caſchaw, Peterhaſi, one of Count Tekelies chief Officers, being ſent with ſix hundred horſe to reinforce the Garriſon, made a ſhew of accepting the general Pardon, and entering into the Emperours Service; but being come near the Town, put himſelf into it, with the ſix hundred men he had with him, which mainly encouraged the beſieged to defend the Place. Caprara ſent to ſummon them, but in vain, ſo that he was forced to uſe all the Formalities of a Siege. The Garriſon conſiſted of four thouſand, commanded by Count Tekeli's beſt Officers, who defended themſelves with great bravery, making very many ſharp Sallies into the Enemies Quarters. The Imperialiſts notwithſtanding carried their Trenches to the Town Ditch, and began to thunder upon the place from three Batteries. One of the Attacks being commanded by the Prince of Wirtemberg, who was ſlain there by a Cannon Bullet. But this Siege did not laſt long, though the Capital of upper Hungary, and provided with all things neceſſary for a long defence. But the Reaſons of their ſurrender, which hapned by a very ſurpriſing accident, is very excuſable. Count Tekely, ſollicitous for this Capital of this part of the Kingdom, having writ to the Baſſa of Waradin of the Conſequence and Danger of the Place, and to preſs him for ſpeedy Succour in order to relieve it. The Baſſa, admitting of his Reaſons, aſſured him he would give him all the aſſiſtance he could, only he had received ſome Orders from the Grand Seignior of great Importance to the common Cauſe, which it was not convenient to communicate to him by Letter; therefore deſired he would repair to him to Waradin, that he might inform him of the ſecret by word of Mouth. And for his greater Security the Baſſa ſent him a paſport. Upon this Invitation he reſolved to go thither, accompanied with Petroſſi, and ſome others of his principal Adherents, and five hundred Horſe. The Baſſa met him without the Gate, and received him with all the appearance of Kindneſs and Eſteem, and conducted him into the Town with ſome few of his Attendants, cauſing all the Cannon of the Place to be diſcharged, with other marks of Reſpects, and entertained him at Supper; but that being ended, an Aga with his Janizaries entred the Room, and having told Tekely he had Orders from the Grand Seignior to ſeize him, and carry him to Adrianople, cauſed Irons to be put upon his Hands and Feet. At the ſame time, the Baſſa told Petroſſi, that the Grand Seignior gave him the Principality and Commands which Tekely had had, and that he would aſſiſt him with all his Forces. Petroſſi, who was next to Tekely in Power, ſeemingly accepted of the Honour, but being got out of the place and Danger, he informed Tekelies party of what had hapned, exhorting them to return with him to their Duty to the Emperour, which they conſenting to, Petroſſi marched directly to the Camp before Caſchaw. Being kindly received by General Caprara, he was ſent into the Town, where he eaſily perſwaded the Garriſon to accept with him of the General Amneſtie, ſo that the place was immediately delivered up upon Articles. After this the General ſent alſo to the Princeſs Ragotzki, Count Tekely's Wife, to ſurrender her ſtrong Caſtle of Mongatz to the Emperour's Service, which, contrary to expectation, ſhe abſolutely refuſed to do. And this put an end to the Campaign in thoſe parts, except their Excurſions, beating up of Quarters, and Surpriſes, which were frequent on both ſides.

1685. Novem. 25. Count Tekely betrayed by the Baſſa of Waradin. Caſchaw ſurrendred.

Nor were the Turks more fortunate on the ſide of Croatia, where Count Leſley commanded the Imperialiſts, for he burnt the Suburbs of Caniſia, and deſtroyed the Countrey four Miles round; and now underſtanding that the Turks had left but three or four thouſand men to guard the Bridge at Eſſeck, the Seraſquier having taken the reſt with him to fight the Imperialiſts, he decamped from the Place of his Rendezvous

July 28.

1685. near the Drave, with a Reſolution, if poſſible, to burn the ſaid Bridge of Eſſeck. In order to this he left his Baggage at Turanowitz with a Guard of two thouſand Men, diſcamping with four thouſand Germans, and two thouſand Croats, all choice Men, each one being ordered to carry Proviſion with him for ten days, by reaſon of the ſcarcity of Victuals by the way. Michalovitz being ſurpriſed, expecting no Enemy, ſurrendred to his Avantcurrers upon his further advance, the Country being alarm'd, ſome Turkiſh Horſe appearing, ſkirmiſhed with the Avant-guard of Croats, and had treated them ill, if they had not been ſuccourred by the German Dragoons and Cuiraſiers who had the Guard; they however left a Captain-Lieutenant with near thirty Souldiers. They marched on, but no Turks oppoſed, ſcarce appeared before they came to the Plains of Eſſeck. Then there appeared a thouſand Turkiſh Horſe with ſome Foot at a diſtance behind them, which obliged the Chriſtians to range themſelves in Battalia, and the Turks ſuffered them to advance till they came within Musquet ſhot; they then begun to ſtir, and being charged on both Wings by the Croats, they were wholly broke and routed, and many of them ſlain in the purſuit. The Infantry ſaved themſelves in the Town, and afterwards in the Caſtle. The Chriſtians advanced in order to the Suburbs, which they took at firſt onſet, and afterwards the City, both which they miſerably pillaged and plundred.

Aug. 9. Count Leſley burns part of the Bridge of Eſſeck.

The City of Eſſeck is great and populous, having at leaſt five hundred ſhops of Merchants of in it, many Moſques and Hacars, which are great Inns for Paſſengers. All was crowded with Rice, Flower, Bread, Biſquet, Salt &c. as alſo Barley, Oats, and Forrage in abundance, enough to furniſh an Army. As ſoon as they were Maſter of the City, they placed a Guard againſt the Caſtle, whilſt the General went to ſee the Bridge, the like whereof is not in the World. On this ſide the Drave from Eſſeck to the ſaid River, it is about eleven hundred paces long, and on the other ſide more than eight thouſand, all of Oak Wood. It is twelve paces broad. The Drave is not large in this place, the Bridge being ſupported by only ſixteen Boats. The Turks brake it the preceeding day, letting the materials vogue with the ſtream into the Danube. Count Leſley cauſed thirteen fair Mills upon the Drave to be burnt, and having in vain attempted to burn the Bridge on the other ſide, conſumed that on this with Fire in few hours. The Imperialiſts knowing that the Inhabitants had ſaved their beſt goods in the Caſtle, they would alſo attempt that, but having loſt ſeveral Captains and other Officers, they deſiſted, and Leſley returned back to his Camp at Turanowitz.

The Affairs of Poland.

The Wars againſt Poland were carried on with more Succeſs, at leaſt Equality, by the Ottomans, who, together with the Tartars, made perpetual Incurſions into the Ukrain, and the confining Provinces, burning and ravaging the Villages and Countrey, carrying the alarm to the very Gates of Leopol. Nor were the Poles forward in their Preparations, moving but very ſlowly to their general Rendezvous, ſo that the King not going to the Field in Perſon, it was very late in the year before they were come together, however, entertained in the mean time with a very ſad account from Podolia, Volinia, and the leſſer Ruſſia, of the miſerable Devaſtations of thoſe Countries by the continued Incurſions of the Infidels.

The Grand Seignior had appointed Solyman Baſſa, now Seraskier, to command his Army againſt the Poles, which he endeavoured to raiſe and form with all imaginable Induſtry, being ſollicitous for Caminiec, which he took care by reiterated Convoys, though ſome ſometimes miſcarried, to provide for. He hearing of the Chriſtians advance towards the Nieſter, the Cham of Tartary being joyned with him, and both near forty thouſand ſtrong, poſted himſelf near the River to hinder the Poles from paſſing it. 1685.

And now the Armies drawing near, it was ſuppoſed they would not ſeparate without a Battel. The Poles paſſed the Nieſter with theirs, conſiſting of betwixt twenty and thirty thouſand men, on a Bridge they had made for that purpoſe, advanced into Moldavia, where they encamped; and now the whole Army being come up, the Crown General having ſummoned a Council of War, it was determined to go and find the Enemy, and force him to fight. The Army marched accordingly, and were three days paſſing the Woods and Streights of Boucovijia without any Intelligence of the Enemy. Being come into a Plain, their Van-Guard was preſently charged by a Body of Tartars. Ten Troops of Horſe were ſent to ſupport the Chriſtians, but being over-power'd, were forced to give way. The Prince of Courland advancing with three Battalions, and ſome Field-pieces, gave the Chriſtians Opportunity to rally, and returning to the charge, obliged the Tartars to retire to the Hill from whence they came. The next Morning the two Armies ſtood in view of each other, only ſome ſlight Skirmiſhes paſſing betwixt them. The third, the Seraskier deſigning to fall upon the Enemies right Wing with his main force, charged it briskly, but finding it ſtrengthned from the main body, retired and fell upon the main body it ſelf, but with the like ſucceſs. The Poles left Wing was charged by the Tartars with ſome advantage at firſt, but in the Concluſion were forced to retire. That day the Turks had been incommoded by the oppoſite Artillery, compoſed of thirty pieces of Ordnance, and the following day, having received Cannon from Camineck, they repayed them in kind. The Chriſtians continued encamped the two following days, ſecuring themſelves with Trenches and Redoubts. On the ninth day, the Chriſtian General being informed that a great Detachment was ſent to fall in the rear of the Army, and ſhut up the Paſſages of the Forreſt, he reſolved to retire; and that he might do it with leſs trouble, he cauſed all their Waggons that were not abſolutely neceſſary, to be burnt. It was next Morning before the Turks were aware of their march, when, deſcending into the Plain, they charged three Battalions of foot which had not yet entered the Wood, but they being well covered with turn Pikes, and each two Field-pieces, they received the Enemy with ſo great a Fire, that they forced them to retire. And yet they eſcaped by their Courage and Reſolution the danger that threatned them, forcing their Paſſage back to the Nieſter by a very orderly retreat, which they likewiſe paſſed, tho' the Turks were much ſtronger than they, and ſo were diſperſed into their Winter Quarters. 1685.

Nor were the Turks very unſucceſful in Dalmatia. The Chriſtians had beſieged Singn, but were forced to retire by the joynt Forces of the Turks in thoſe quarters with loſs of ſome hundreds of their men, two pieces of Cannon, and moſt of their Baggage. But the Wars being rather defenſive in thoſe parts, on both ſides, than otherwiſe, nothing of any very great Conſequence, beſides Incurſions and mutual Ravages, worthy of Memory did happen.

The

1685. The traverſes at Sea were of more noiſe and conſequence. The Turkiſh Fleet was affirmed to conſiſt of ſixty Gallies, and twenty men of War, who were at Sea, though ſuppoſed not well manned. On the other ſide, the Venetian Fleet was ſtronger, full of Sea-men, beſides thirteen thouſand Land-Forces of ſeveral Nations, all commanded by their General Moroſini, who ſailing for the Levant, landed his Forces in the Morea, at the Fortreſs of Calamata, which he took, and afterwards ſate down before Coron, where, having made large Breaches, and extremely annoyed the place with their Bombs, the Baſſa hung out a white Flag, but all Conditions, except ſurrendring upon diſcretion, being refuſed him, he put out a black Colours, intimating he would defend it to extremity, which he alſo did.

The Baſſa of Petraſſo marched with eight thouſand Men to his relief, but upon conſideration of the ſtrength of the Chriſtians, he durſt not attempt it; but contenting himſelf to re-inforce the Garriſon of Modon, and with falling upon the Greeks (that favoured the Venetians) he made a great ſlaughter of them. The Viſier of Morea, Kalil Baſſa, having got together a competent Army of neat ten thouſand, would re-attempt the relief of Coron; in order to which, he ſent a Party to attack a Redoubt ſomewhat diſtant from the Line of the Beſiegers, but were repulſed, but aſſaulting it again, they took it at the ſecond ſtorm. Hereupon the Chevalier de la Tour, a Knight of Malta, haſtening thither with twelve hundred Men, recovered it from the Turks, with the loſs of his own life, and many of his Men. A while after, the Viſier made an attempt upon the main Camp, but was beaten off with mutual loſs. In the mean time, the Chriſtian General finding the neighbourhood of the Turks troubleſome, and foreſeeing that his Troops would not be able to ſubſiſt, unleſs they had the Country open, reſolved to attempt their removal; in order to which, drawing ten Men out of a Company, to which were joyned fifteen hundred Volunteers, with one of the Regiments of Brunſwick, and that of Malta, they, marching before day, ſurpriſed, and fell upon the Enemy on all ſides; the action was ſo ſudden, that the Turks before they could recollect themſelves were driven out of their ſeveral Poſts, purſued, and quite diſperſed. Of the Enemy there were near a thouſand killed in the action and purſuit, of which number was the Viſier Kalil and Mehemet Baſſa. All their Cannon and Baggage were taken, with nine pieces of braſs Cannon, ſeventeen Colours, and the great Standard, with three Horſe-tayles hanging at it. This Victory was ſome days after completed by the taking of Coron, where the Chriſtians, forcing the way into the Town, through
Aug. 11. their very large Breaches, put all they met to the Sword. There were above three thouſand of the Turks ſlain in this ſtorm, and four or five hundred of the Chriſtians, among which were two Knights of Malta, Prince Phillip of Savoy, the Prince of Brunſwick, the Marquiſs of Courbon and St. Paul, beſides thirty Knights of Malta, with ſeveral other Perſons of Quality wounded. There were ſeventy-ſix Pieces of Braſs Cannon, beſides great ſtore of Ammunition and Proviſion, with Plunder, reckoned at above two Millions, found in this place.

Theſe Succeſſes encouraged the Greeks to ſubmit to the Venetians, and the Province of Maina being alſo diſpoſed to caſt off the Ottoman Yoak, were greatly encouraged to it by Moroſini, who ſending a Detachment with ſuch Maynots as were entred into the Service of the Re-publick, gave them orders to attack Zarnata, a Fortreſs built to keep that People in awe. In the mean time the Chriſtian Fleet ſailed towards Calamata, near which place the Forces landed. 1685.

The Captain Baſſa, hearing of the ill ſucceſſes of his Country-men in Morea, came with his Fleet to Napoli di Romania, where ſecuring the Ports with great Chains, he landed what Men he poſſibly could, and joyning with a great Body of Horſe and Foot, he marched towards Calamata, to keep the Mainotes from revolting to the Venetians. Zarnata had been threatned into ſurrender, ſix hundred Men that garriſoned it marching out with their Arms and Baggage, though the Aga that commanded it, diſtruſting his conduct, ſtayed in the Chriſtian Camp.

The Captain Baſſa being advanced, Moroſini being re-inforced with three thouſand Saxons reſolved to fight him. Being met, the Turkiſh Horſe fell upon the Chriſtians left Wing, and at the ſame time a great Body of their Foot advanced towards their right; but found ſuch brave reſiſtance, that they were forced to retire. They returned to the charge again, but with the ſame ſucceſs, and being preſſed, fell into diſorder and were defeated, though the loſs was not very great on either ſide. The Garriſon of Calamata hearing of this rout, fired their Magazin and quitted the place, leaving eleven Pieces of Cannon behind them, which was immediately garriſoned by the victorious. The Maynotes thereupon beſieged Porto Vitulo, the which with Chielifa and Paſſavia are the only places of ſtrength that the Turks poſſeſs in that great Province, but theſe likewiſe, as alſo Porto Vitulo, being forced by the Inhabitants to ſurrender, came all under the dominion of the Venetians, from whence, General Moroſini having put good Gariſons into thoſe places, marched towards Navazino. But the ſeaſon being too far advanced, having razed Calamata and Paſſava, as not very defenſible, he diſperſed his Army into Winter Quarters, ſailing himſelf with his Gallies to Santa Maura.

A Fleet under the command of the Seigniors Molino and Delfino, had cruiſed the whole Summer in the Archipelago, putting thoſe Iſlands under contribution, though no material action at Sea had paſſed betwixt the two Fleets of the Chriſtians and Turks.

The Captain Baſſa, after theſe misfortunes, ſhewed a great inclination to peace, ſignifying his deſire to ſet a Treaty on foot for that purpoſe, to which end he ſignified the ſame to Ge-Novemb. neral Moroſini by a particular Meſſenger, who referred him to his Superiours.

There had likewiſe been an Aga ſome time at Comorra, who declared, that the Grand Seignior did deſire to re-eſtabliſh a Peace or Truce betwixt the two Empires, deſiring that Commiſſioners might be appointed on both ſides for that purpoſe; that he had ordered the Baſſa of Buda to ceaſe from all Hoſtilities, and that he cauſed Count Tekely, the Author of the War, and the Evils that attended it, to be ſeized upon by his command. But all the anſwer he could get was, that the Emperour would enter into no Negotiation of Peace, without the participation of his Allies. And yet ſome Propoſitions were obliquely made in their names. The Emperour demanded reſtitution of all the Places that are poſſeſſed by the Turks in the Upper and Lower Hungary, and in Croatia. The Poles demanded Caminiec, and the whole Province of Podolia; and the Venetians the whole Country of Morea. To conclude, the Aga was ſent back Attempts for Peace prove fruitleſs.

1685. with this anſwer, That the Emperour and his Allies will receive no Propoſals, but ſuch as come immediately from the Grand Seignior himſelf.

The Cham of Tartary had alſo offered the King of Poland his Mediation by an Embaſſy, and at the ſame time made Propoſals of Peace, but his Majeſty anſwered roundly, that he would hear of no Overtures of accomodation without his Allies, the Emperour of Germany, and the Commonwealth of Venice.

Jan. 1686. And now all thoughts of quiet being laid aſide, all the great Parties made all imaginable preparations, by Leagues, by Levies, by amaſſing of Moneys as well as Men for the future Campain.

Thus ended this year 1685, and the following was no leſs active or turbulent. The Imperialiſts, as a prelude to their future Succeſſes, beat a Party of the United Garriſons of the Turks, conſiſting of about ſix thouſand near Arach, which place they alſo took, with eleven Colours, and three Kettle Drums, beſides much ſpoil.

Feb. 12. This ſucceſs was followed by others, St. Job being ſurrendred to Count Caraffa, the ſix hundred Men which compoſed the Garriſon of it, being conducted to great Waradin, and a Party from Comorra, Raab, Papa and Veſprin, took the Caſtle of Sehwar, betwixt Veſprin and Alba Regalis, which had much incommoded thoſe Garriſons, upon as eaſie terms; the beſieged being only allowed what they could carry upon their backs.

Diſorders at Conſtantinople. Jan. 23. Great were the diſorders and conſternation at Conſtantinople, and throughout the whole Ottoman Empire, for the late ill Succeſſes of their Arms in Hungary and Morea; and being to be unfortunate, is to be criminal in that Court, Cheitan Ibrahim, Seraskier, was condemned to loſe his head, the defeat at Gran, the loſs of Newheuſel, and the burning of the Bridge of Eſſeck, being laid all to his account. His eminent ſervices in the former Wars againſt the Crown of Poland, and his valorous defending of Buda in 1684 againſt the united powers of the German Empire, could not obtain his pardon, being he was likewiſe blamed for having diſcontented the Souldiers in defrauding them of their pay. Several other of the Chief Officers being accuſed of not having done their duty at the Battel of Gran, were ſtrangled with him; and Solyman Baſſa, who had ſo ſucceſsfully commanded the Army laſt year againſt the Poles, was by the Grand Viſier recommended to the Grand Seignior, as a Perſon very fit for that Employment in Hungary, which his Highneſs alſo approved of, but the Baſſa being ſurpriſed at the choice was made of him, ſenſible of the fate of his Predeceſſors, and the danger of the Employment, taking his opportunity, threw himſelf at the Grand Seignior's feet, and humbly prayed to be excuſed from ſo difficult a Province, being the Campaign would not probably end, under the circumſtances he was to undertake it, but with the loſs of his Head, which he would rather now ſacrifice at his Majeſtie's command, than dye hereafter in his diſpleaſure. The Grand Seignior wondering at what he heard, and that he ſhould ſcruple at ſo eminent a command, demanded his reaſons: He replied, that the misfortunes of the laſt Campaign were occaſioned by the ill payment of the Troops, many other things of great importance to his ſervice having been likewiſe omitted, not obſcurely hinting at the Grand Viſier, he would notwithſtanding take the command upon him, if his Majeſty, according to the example of his Predeceſſours, would himſelf appear at the head of his Forces. The frankneſs of this diſcourſe wrought ſo much upon the Grand Seignior, that he immediately ſent to the Viſier, who was, or pretended to be indiſpoſed, and conſequently kept his bed, to know whether he was in a condition of health to attend him into Hungary, where he purpoſed to go himſelf? But the Viſier excuſing it, by reaſon of his indiſpoſition, his Majeſty ſent to him for his Seal, which being delivered, he immediately gave it to Solyman Baſſa, making him by that eminent mark of dignity Grand Viſier in the others room, who yet had his life granted him, and part of his Eſtate to ſubſiſt upon, being now in his Houſe on the Canal of the black Sea, near Scutary.

The Treaſure of the Seraglio was opened, Officers were ſent into all the extent of the Empire, and the utmoſt diligence was uſed to raiſe men, not only to recruit their ſhattered Armies, but to make new Levies, but with the uſual fate that attends unſucceſsful Arms. So that notwithſtanding all their endeavours, the Chriſtians were in the Field before them, not only with the Imperial Troops, but the united Forces of all the German Princes. The general Rendezvouz was appointed on the 30*th* of May in the Plains of Barkam, though the Saxons, the Bavarians, the Brandenburgers, and them of the Circles could not get thither ſo ſoon by reaſon of their diſtant Marches. The whole Empire ſeemed to move, and the Danube was ſo covered with Barks and Barges full of men, proviſions, and all ſorts of Warlike Inſtruments, that it yielded a proſpect of terror and pleaſure.

The Chriſtian Army Rendezvouz's at Barkam. May 30. 1686.

The Forces being come together, the Sentiments of the General Perſons that compoſed it were very differing. Some propoſed the Siege of Alba Regalis, as being a place that had much annoyed them, by protecting the Seraskier under the Cannon of the place, when they beſieged Buda two years ago. Others would have Agria and Montgatz, the remains of Tekely's rebellion in Upper Hungary, attempted, and the reſt were for marching directly to the Bridge of Eſſeck, for ſecuring that important paſſage, and then to beſiege Buda. Others were of opinion, that theſe three deſigns ſhould be enterpriſed at once, by dividing their Army into two parts, for the two firſt Enterpriſes, and that General Schults ſhould with the Army of Croatia attempt the Bridge of Eſſeck. But they were very few that concluded poſitively for the Siege of Buda, which had already been abſolutely reſolved upon by the Emperour and the Duke of Lorrain, upon a certainty that the taking of that place would vaſtly inlarge their Quarters, and a ſuppoſition (though not ſo well grounded) that all Hungary would follow the fate of their Capital City.

Jun. 10. But this deſign was kept very ſecret, nor was it diſcovered until the arrival of Count Straatman, Great Chancellor to the Emperour, who having in a Council of War prudently compoſed the punctilio's and differences between ſo many General Officers about their commands, to all their ſatisfactions; he ſhewed them the Emperour's Commiſſion and Orders to begin the Campaign with the Siege of Buda, exhorting them to do their duty in an enterpriſe of ſuch great importance, whereon depended not only the conſervation of his Highneſs's Conqueſts, the ſecurity of his Crown, and the good of Chriſtendom, but alſo the ruine of the Ottoman Empire, being the loſs of this conſiderable place would be attended on with the ſurrender 1686. of the other Cities and Fortreſſes of Hungary, which would return to the Obedience of their natural Sovereign.

The Generals, who expected to begin with the Siege of Agria or Alb-Royal, were overjoy'd to underſtand that the deſign was upon Buda; and this News being ſpread amongſt the Officers and Souldiers of the Armies, they all teſtified their Satisfaction by their forwardneſs, and their deſire to ſee themſelves before a Place where they might ſignalize their Valour, and revenge the Death of their Comrades, who had been interred in the Trenches of the former Siege.

The Voluntiers, to the number of ſix thouſand, of all Quality and Conditions, which were come thither out of Germany, France, England, Spain, the Low-Countries, and other parts of Europe, to ſeek Honour in ſo pious a War, ſhewed much Ardour and Zeal to ſignalize themſelves in ſo glorious an undertaking. The Troops of the Circles were not yet come, and they of Brandenburg, who marched through Sileſia, and the Straits of Jabluncka, advanced but ſlowly by reaſon of the difficulty of their way, and could not come ſo ſoon as deſired. But the Armies, to loſe no time, diſcamped on the twelfth of June by break of day, the Duke of Lorrain taking his way by the Bridge of Oran, had paſſed it the thirteenth, the Troops of Saxony having the Vaunt-guard. The Elector of Bavaria marched on this ſide the Danube to poſſeſs the City of Peſt. Whilſt the two Armies were thus marching on both ſides the River, Count Rabatta, who was Commiſſary General, had cauſed a prodigious quantity of Gabions and Fagots, which the Souldiers had made as they came to the general Randezvouz, to keep them from Idleneſs, to be imbark'd and ſent by Water towards Buda, together with the Artillery, Ammunitions, Proviſions, Forrage, and other neceſſary things for the ſubſiſtence of Armies. The next day the Armies advanced, the great one near Vicegrade, and the other by Vaccia.

The fifteenth, the Imperial Horſe, followed by the Foot, and their Cannon and Baggage, paſſed Vicegrade, ſome Priſoners having been made by a party that the Duke had ſent to make Diſcoveries. Theſe unanimouſly declared, that they of Agria and Alba Regalis fearing a Siege had refuged all their beſt Moveables in Buda, and that this Capital City was, as well as the other Places, furniſhed with Troops and neceſſary Proviſions to ſuſtain a long Siege, in expectation of Relief.

Being come within an hour of the Town without any encounter, the Horſe made halt, as well to repoſe themſelves, as to expect the coming up of their Infantry and Artillery, and now they begin to lay a Bridge of Boats at the Iſle of St. Andrew for the Communication of the two ſides of the Danube.

The Siege of Buda.

On the eighteenth, the Baron of Diependal, General de Battalia, inveſted the City of Buda, whilſt the Infantry were marching up, and taking up their Poſts half a League from the place, they began to break Ground, and work at their Line of Circumvallation. A great party of Horſe and Foot appeared out of the Garriſon at the Vienna Port, but they returned again upon the advance of a Detachment of Imperial Horſe, who had Orders to charge them, contented to welcome the Aſſailants with eight Volleys from their Cannon, though they kill'd but one Pioneer, by reaſon of the too great diſtance.

The nineteenth, the Duke advanced with the Army as far as the hot Baths, the Turks having abandoned that Poſt the day before. The general Quarters were taken up within a quarter of a League of the Town. The ſame day the Elector of Bavaria ſeized upon the City of Peſt, which the Turks had quitted, retiring with their Cannon, Ammunitions and Proviſions into Buda, after they had broken part of the Bridge behind them. The Croats, who ſcouted about the Country, took a Turkiſh Chiaux, with a Convoy of forty Spahis, who was ſent with Letters from the Port to the Viſier of Buda. Being brought to the Camp, his Letters were examined, which contained rigorous Orders to the Viſier, to be very careful of the Places which depended on his Government, and to aſſure him of a quick and powerful relief in caſe he were attack'd. 1686.

On the twentieth, the Bridge over the Danube was finiſhed. The ſame day a party of Horſe ſallied out of the Town with deſign to ſurpriſe the Chriſtians advanced Guard, but the Duke being advertiſed of it in time, ſent four ſquadrons, to which many Volunteers joyned themſelves, with orders to charge them; but they upon their approach retired without any engaging. The Artillery being arrived, two Batteries were raiſed againſt the lower Town, where the Duke of Lorrains Attack was, and at Night the Trenches were opened. A Janizary who deſerted, reported much after the ſame manner that the Priſoners already mentioned had done; that there were but eight thouſand men of formed Troops in the Town. The Viſier having ſome time before ſent two thouſand Souldiers to Agria, and as many to Alba-Regalis, upon a ſuppoſition that the Chriſtians would not think of beſieging Buda, which had been ſo fatal to them but two years ago. This Run-away affirmed further, that the Place was abundantly furniſhed with all manner of Proviſions and Ammunitions to ſuſtain a very long Siege, that the Viſier Abdi Baſſa was no great Warrior, and therefore the leſs conſidered by the Souldiery; that he had aſſembled all the Officers and Souldiers of the Garriſon together, had exhorted them to do their Duty, and to ſupport with Honour the Glory of the Turbant, adding, that he had Orders from the Grand Seignior to defend the City with his Life, which he was reſolved to do, and expect the Succours which the Grand Viſier would infallibly bring them. To this the Janizaries and Spahis replyed, that they were ready to ſacrifice their Lives in his Highneſs's Service, and for defence of their Laws, upon Condition however, that the Viſier would immediately give them ten Crowns a Man, that the Souldiers and Officers that were detained in Priſon for what Crime ſoever ſhould be ſet at Liberty, and that he would not ſuffer things to come to the laſt extremity, leſt the ſame misfortune might happen to them, as did to thoſe of Newheuſel, all which the Viſier promiſed them to obſerve exactly.

I muſt acknowledge I am entring into a tedious Narrative, and ſomewhat againſt my Humour, which affects lucid brevity; but the Hiſtory of this Siege, perhaps circumſtantially the greateſt upon Record, full of ſuch ſtrange Events; of Emulation in the purſuit of Glory; of ſucceſsful Temerity, and an invincible Reſolution on the one ſide; as alſo the Fidelity, the Conſtancy, and the unfortunate Valour of the other, hurries me on to a deſcription of it in all its particulars, which I will do with that Candor, that the very indifferent Reader ſhall find nothing that may juſtly ſhock him, and the curious wherewith to content him.

The

1686. The Elector of Bavaria, having left a Garriſon at Peſt, and paſſed the Bridge of Boats at the Iſle of St. Andrew, came with his Army before the place, and took his Poſt in the ſame place where he had commanded in the preceding Siege, that is, on the Caſtle ſide, and the upper Town, to form the ſecond attack, the third being reſerved for the Brandenburgers, who were expected in a few days, and were to be reinforced with the Troops of Suabia and Franconia. That Night the Turks fired mightily upon them that worked in the Approaches and Batteries, whereof ſeveral were killed and hurt in the Lorrain Attack.

The Duke ſent all the Imperial and Bavarian Horſe, under the command of the Generals Palfi, Gondola, and others, to camp in the Neighbourhood of Alba Regalis, on purpoſe to conſume the Forrage, and keep that Garriſon in continual alarms, there remaining in the Camp but three thouſand Imperial and fifteen hundred Bavarian Horſe to ſecure the Trenches and Pioneers. The Night paſſed, the Battery againſt the lower Town was brought to perfection, and twelve Pieces of Cannon mounted upon it, which played all the following day with the loſs of five men ſlain, and ſeveral wounded, from break of day the Cannon continued firing with ſuch ſucceſs, that they made a breach in the Wall of the lower Town, which was found to be twenty paces large. In the mean time the Bavarians on their ſide carried their Approaches on with great diligence, and had alſo ſome killed and wounded.

The day following, the breach being enlarged, was aſſaulted towards evening, the Walls being eaſily gained, for the Defendants retired into the upper Town after the firſt diſcharge. The Chriſtians loſt a Captain of Foot, a Lieutenant of Granadiers, ſome Souldiers, and ſix Voluntiers in this attempt, beſides ſeven or eight hurt; and from that time they began to attack the Town in form, it being reſolved, that the Trenches ſhould be relieved every day by a Lieutenant General, and a Major General, as well in the Duke of Lorrain's attack, as in the Elector's. The 25*th* Count Souches and Diependal relieved the Trenches, but nothing was done beſides aſſuring the Lodgment upon the Wall of the lower Town, and opening the Gate which the Turks had ſhut up on the right, far enough from the breach where they took Poſt, and that the Labourers might be leſs incommoded, General Souches cauſed fire to be put in the neighbouring Houſes, where ſome Fuſeliers did lurk, who were burnt with them. The Bavarians finiſhed the ſame day a little Battery upon St. Gerards Hill, which the Turks had abandoned, from whence they threw ſome ſmall Bombs into the City to try experiments. They alſo finiſhed another great Battery to beat the great Rondel which joyns the Caſtle to the upper Town. The ſame day Count Budiani preſented ſome Standards to the Duke of Lorrain, taken from a party of Turkiſh Horſe, which convoyed fourteen or fifteen Barks loaden with the Wives and Children of the Officers of Buda, who retired with all their riches to Belgrade, and which his Heyduques and Huſſars, reinforced with ſome Imperial Dragoons, had ſurpriſed and beaten at the Iſland of St. Margaret. The booty was great, and ninety-two Women and Children taken, amongſt which was the Viſier of Buda's Wife.

The 26*th*, they made ſeveral traverſe Lines, and laboured to compleat the Approaches to ſecure their Quarters in the lower Town, which was furniſhed with two thouſand Souldiers, and a good number of Pioneers. The Earth being rude and ſtony, did much obſtruct the Labourers. The great Maſter of the Teutonick Order, which commanded the Trenches, obſerving that the Pioneers in the lower Town might be eaſily inſulted and beaten by the Beſieged, had upon his demand ſix Battalions ſent him, which were poſted along the Wall to countenance them. Two fugitives, who ſaid they were Hungarians, rendered themſelves, and confirmed that the Garriſon was but eight thouſand Combatants, who by order of the Viſier had begun to untile the Houſes, and unpave the Streets, to hinder the effect of the Bombs. In the evening betwixt ſix and ſeven a Clock, the Turks ſallied out with great Cries, to intimidate them who were poſted in the Rondel by the Water ſide, but they were ſo well received, that they retreated confuſedly. Marſhal Starenberg haſtned thither ſeaſonably with two Battalions of them that had been poſted the day before behind the Wall, without which Succour the Turks would have made a great Slaughter amongſt the Labourers. The Enemy was purſued, and the Souldiers cut off ſome Heads, which they preſented to the Duke, who gave them a golden Ducket for each Head. A Captain was hurt in this ſcuffle, and ten or twelve Souldiers killed, and as many wounded.

The Bavarians raiſed two Batteries for Bombs on the two ſides of their great Battery. They carried on their Trench above one hundred paces, and ran three traverſe Lines, with a place of Arms for the defence of their Battery. The Turks fired much with their Artillery, but killed only two Souldiers.

The 27*th*, the Chriſtians compleated the works they had made in the Night, new traverſes were made, ſome Musketiers were placed in the Moſque of the old Town, a Poſt was taken on the right near the Gate which makes the Angle of the Upper Town, the Lines were enlarged, and deepned, and the great Battery was well-nigh finiſhed, with the loſs only of one Man, and ſome few wounded. This Morning the Enemy appear'd where they had been yeſterday, ſeemingly diſpoſed to skirmiſh, but ſeeing that the Chriſtians were ready to receive them, they retired without attempting any thing. About Eleven a Clock they ſallied out, Horſe and Foot, with deſign to diſlodge the Beſiegers poſted on the right, but having ſtood a Volley; and ſeeing Count Hoffkirchen, Lieutenant Collonel to Dunewald, advancing with the Guards of Horſe, they returned into the City, leaving twenty of their men dead behind them. Of the Chriſtians there were but two killed, and five or ſix hurt. Another Deſerter came out of Town, who reported, that the Governour was greatly perplexed, in that he ſaw the inevitable fall of the City, which the Grand Seignior had committed to his charge, and that he loſt in the Sallies his beſt Souldiers, without being able to ruine the Enemies works; but that he reſented nothing equally with the captivity of his Wife, and thoſe of the Principal Officers of the Place, taken when they thought them paſt danger. In the Bavarian attack they finiſhed a battery to play upon the Caſtle, and the Rondel that joyns it to the City.

The 28*th*, in the Lorrain attack, a Line of Communication four hundred paces long was drawn from the Poſt at the Angle on the right to the middle Gate, and another Line was made to go to the new battery, upon which they planted twelve pieces of Cannon. A little one was like-

1686. likewiſe in hand for four Mortars which were carried thither that Night, with ſome Cart loads of Bombs. The beſieged began to ſhoot Bombs and Stones out of Town. A Captain and ſixteen Souldiers were wounded that Night, and ſome killed. The Duke of Lorrain, foreſeeing that Forrage would grow ſcarce in the Camp, ſent moſt of the baggage Horſes to the Meadows aſſigned them betwixt Gran and Newheuſel. General Dunewald, who commanded the Horſe, camped near Alb-Royal, advertiſed the Duke, that the Turks having abandoned the Caſtle of Bathyan upon the River of Zarvis, he had put men into it, and that he was going to make a tentative upon Palotta, a place of good ſtrength near Alb-Royal.

The twenty ninth, they continued to compleat their Works, and the Duke augmented the number of the Labourers with an addition of ſix hundred more. The beſieged made no Sallies theſe two days, but they plyed their Artillery more furiouſly than ordinary to ruine the Chriſtians great Battery. About five a Clock they ſallied upon the Bavarian attack, with two thouſand Horſe and Foot, with ſo much Succeſs, that they put the Beſiegers into much diſorder, and the Janizaries leaping into the Approaches, were buſie in throwing of them down, when Count Hoffkirch flying thither with the Guard of Horſe from the Duke of Lorrain's Quarter, and the Bavarian Generals with their reſerves, the fight was rude on both ſides, till the Turks were forced to retreat, being purſued even to the Gates of their City, notwithſtanding the continued fire from their Cannon and Muſquets from the Walls. Prince Eugenius of Savoy had his Horſe killed under him. Prince Lewis of Baden, and the Generals Fontaine and la Vargne ſignalized themſelves in this Action, as alſo the Voluntiers, and particularly the Prince of Commercy. Switterdael, a Bavarian Lieutenant-Collonel was ſlain, as alſo ſix Voluntiers, with thirty ſeven Souldiers, beſides ſixty two wounded, one Captain, two Lieutenants, and an Enſign. The loſs on the Turks ſide was greater, being the Chriſtians brought away ſixty of their Heads, beſides what a fugitive Raſcian reported, that the Turks had had near two hundred kill'd and wounded. That Evening the four Mortars placed by the great Battery began to play into the beſieged Works. Six Culverins were alſo planted upon the old Battery, wherewith they deſign'd to ſhoot into the Town Gate, to incommode the Sallies of the beſieged.

The thirtieth, the Troops of Suabia and Franconia arrived in the Camp, and took the Poſts deſigned for them; all the Night and Day were employed to advance the Works, which are ſo numerous, that they are ſcarce diſtinguiſhable. Count Souches, who commanded the Trenches that day, having ſent three Granadeers to diſcover the diſtance betwixt the Approaches and the Rondel, they brought word that it was no more than three hundred paces, and that the Turks were making a Ditch at the foot of the ſaid Rondel. Every Night great ſtore of Gabions, Fagots, Munitions, and Proviſions, arrived in the Camp, by the care of the Commiſſary General, Count Rabatta. Count Caprara parted from the Camp with the Suabian Horſe, to joyn thoſe encamped near Alb-Royal, and to command the whole in chief. Five Raſcian Shepheards, feeding their Sheep without under the Walls, ſlipt inſenſibly into the Bavarian Quarters with at leaſt four hundred, where they were well received and gratified. All they could ſay was, that the Conſternation was great amongſt the beſieged, who were yet reſolved to defend themſelves, in expectation of the Succours they were in hope for. They added, that the Bombs and Carcaſſes had fired the Town in ſeveral Places, though it had been luckily enough extinguiſhed. 1686.

The firſt of July, Count Starenberg ſhewed General Schoning, who commanded the Bradenburg Auxiliaries, and arrived in the Camp the Night before, the Approaches and the Attacks which were reſerved for his Troops, which was on the Water ſide on the left of the Imperialiſts, after which he was magnificently treated by the Duke of Lorrain, from whence he went to joyn his Troops which were expected the next, or the following day. This Morning the Imperialiſts began to ſhoot out of their new Battery, out of four Pieces which ſhot twenty four pound Bullets. The five Mortars by the great Battery continued to play upon the Rondel on the right, with ſuch Succeſs that the Defendants durſt not ſhew themſelves there. The Works were compleating, and there were two Redoubts made to ſecure the Communication with the great Battery. This Night there were but five hurt, and one killed, and this Morning an Adjoutant General was hurt in the Head with a Muſquet-ſhot, as he was carrying Orders into the Approaches. There hapned nothing in the Bavarian Quarters, where they only continued their Labour and their Batteries, made a Breach in the outward Rampart. The reſt of the Troops of Franconia, conſiſting in fourteen hundred Foot, arrived there, who were placed near the reſt of the ſame Circle.

The ſecond, the Lorrain Attack advanced within two hundred Paces of the Walls of the City. The battery of twelve Guns of twenty four pound Balls was finiſhed, and four other Mortars that played without ceaſing all the laſt Night, fired the Town near the great Church, which laſted till Morning; the Cannon was plyed all this day againſt the two firſt Rondels, which are in a manner defenceleſs. Two Battalions more were ſent to reinforce thoſe who were camped under the Wall of the old Town. The beſieged threw again many Bombs and Stones, but with little prejudice to the Beſiegers, killing them not above three or four Souldiers. The Troops of Suaben began to work at their line of Circumvallation, and purpos'd the following Night to raiſe a Battery upon a height which they poſſeſs'd. The Bavarians thundred furiouſly againſt the Caſtle and upper Town, and had thrown many Bombs which had kindled a fire that was not yet extinguiſhed. The Duke apprehending that the Turks might when it was dark, put, by the help of ſmall barks, Men, and Ammunition into the Town, went in Perſon to diſcover the ſuſpected Places about Peſt, commanding the Prince of Savoys Regiment of Dragoons to poſt themſelves there, to aſſiſt the Hungarians who were already there, and had Orders to raiſe ſome Sconces along the River ſide for their Security.

On the third of July, the Brandenburg Troops were ſeen to march on the other ſide of the Danube. The Duke of Lorrain went to viſit them, where he was received by General Schoning with a triple Salvo of all the Foot, ranged in battalia, with their Cannon at the head of the Infantry. His Highneſs was treated there with much Gallantry, and afterwards returned to his Quarters extremely ſatisfied to ſee ſuch a fine body of Men, ſo briſk, ſo well diſciplin'd, and provided with ſuch a good Train of Artillery. The Imperialiſts finiſhed another line for to defend their Ap-1686. Approaches. They made ſuch great fire with their Cannon and Mortars, that they did not only make a notable breach in the Wall, but ruined alſo the batteries upon the two firſt Rondels, ſo that there was no more ſhooting thence. The Bavarians carried their lines to the very Caſtle, and made a new battery on the right towards the Danube, upon which they placed nine Mortars with ſucceſs. They ſhot alſo three days together from another battery of ſeven Demy-Cannon upon the Rondel; whilſt they play'd from another with four Guns upon the Flanks. They moreover worked at another of eight Cannon to batter the left of the Rondel. In the Lorrain attack there were ſeven ſlain, and ſeveral hurt. Amongſt the reſt of the Deſerters, there was an Enſign of the Janizaries, who quitted the Town for having (as he ſaid) killed a Turkiſh Officer. He affirmed that there was but fifteen hundred real Janizaries in the place, but that counting the Spahi's, Albamans, and other Troops, they amounted to ſeven thouſand Combatants; He added, that the Bombs and Carkaſſes had already ruined many buildings, and occaſioned a great loſs of Men and Cattel. He further ſaid, that the beſieged were buſie in making Mines behind the breach on the Lorrain ſide, and that no body had hitherto entered into the place. General Dunewald had deſiſted from his deſign upon Pallotta, becauſe the place was provided with a good Gariſon. The Turks there killed ſome of thoſe who were ſent to diſcover. Thoſe of Alb-Royal attacked and diſordered alſo ſome Foragers of Horſe quartered in their Neighbourhood, and amongſt others killed Count Papenheim, a Captain of Horſe in the Troops of Bavaria.

July 4th, The Approaches of the Lorrain attack were run within one hundred paces of the breach in the Rondel to the right. The beſieged began to run a Line out of the ſaid breach, which they lengthned till within fifty paces of the Chriſtians, to render their approach more difficult; and however, they fired continually with their ſmall ſhot, and threw a multitude of ſtones, yet they killed and wounded but thirteen men. The beſiegers had now fourteen Mortars mounted, out of which they perpetually toſſed Bombs and Carkaſſes. There was nothing done at the Bavarian attack, but ſecuring the works, and heightning the batteries. A Pole, who had ſerved amongſt the Turks, came over this morning, and reported that the beſieged were reſolved to ſurrender, if they were not relieved in a Months time. Another Run-away came this Afternoon, and declared, that five Turkiſh Cavaliers were by the means of a little Bark landed on Peſt ſide, who were by ſeveral ways to endeavour to arrive where the Seraskier was, and preſs the Succours which had been promiſed them. The Duke of Lorrain diſpatched ſome Horſe towards Voitſar to conſume the Forage there, and watch the Enemies motion. A party of Tartars fell upon the Foragers on the other ſide the Danube, and took ſome Horſes, and two Grooms belonging to the Prince of Baden, out of the Iſland of St. Margaret: the following Night, ſixty Granadiers with ſome Workmen were ſent to ruine the Line which the beſieged had begun before the breach of the Rondel, which luck'd ſo well, that they filled the Ditch with the loſs of two Soldiers only. The breaches were every day enlarged, as well on the Lorrain as the Bavier attack, and what the Turks repaired in the night, was thrown down by day. All the Troops of Brandenburg are at preſent arrived in their Quarters. The Turks made a ſally upon them in the Night, who, though they were well received, and purſued even to the Town Gate, yet they killed many brave men of the beſieged, and amongſt the reſt Field-Marſhal General Dorfeling's Son, two Lieutenants, and twenty-ſeven Souldiers, with the like number wounded.

Jul. 6. A line of communication was made from the Lorrain attack to that of Brandenburg, which is but fifty paces from the Rondel of the middle Gate, and about ſixty from the breach on the right. This morning they ſhot the Cannon with that fury, that they quite threw down the two Rondels, and the Curtain, and at night throwing Bombs and Carkaſſes without ceaſing, they cauſed a fire to burn on the right of the Rondel, that could not be quenched in leſs than three hours time. The Brandenburgers advanced their works briskly, their Generals of Battalia's keeping alternatively in the Trenches. They had eight ſlain and ſix wounded, beſides a Captain of Granadeers, Lieutenant Collonel Fonk was alſo hurt in the Legg, and ſix more of the Lorrain attack, beſides two killed.

Jul. 7. The Night preceding, very many Bombs were thrown with ſucceſs, being they fired the Town in two places, but upon the arrival of the Engeneer Gonzales, it was preſumed the Town would be thundred with greater violence, he is expected in two or three days in the Camp, where the Cannon, Mortars, Bombs, Carkaſſes, and other artificial fire-works of his invention are already arrived: The beſieged made this morning a ſalley upon the Brandenburgers with Horſe and Foot, but to their prejudice, being beaten back with diſorder. Yeſterday the Miners began to work in the Lorrain attack to widen the breaches, and this Night the ſame will be done in that of Bavaria, where they have finiſhed two new Batteries, one of ten, and the other of ſeven Cannons, beſides a third on the Water ſide, to better the attack'd Rondel, and a Poſt by which the beſieged uſed to creep out into a covered way which they had made before the Rondel. Yeſterday the Bavarians had carried their approaches to the very foot of the Caſtle, ſo that they could come no nearer before the breach was enlarged. The works in the Lorrain attack were ſo near the Wall, that they could advance no further, but by lodging in the breach. There were about fifty killed and hurt in the three attacks. The beſieged ſhot a Bomb, which falling upon one of the out-Batteries into a Barrel of Powder, killed nine Cannoneers that attended there.

The 8th, Two new Batteries, each of three Demy-Cannon, were raiſed in the Lorrain attack nearer the Walls, and on the left, where they were equally advanced with the right, the approaches were advanced to the Wall of the Rondel; and as theſe Works were ſo near, there were twenty-five hurt and wounded, moſt with Stones and Granadoes, amongſt whom Major General Thungen was one, Major Biſchoſſhauſen had his Arm broke with a Muſquet, and ſome other Officers wounded. The Miners which were attack'd to the right of the Rondel, had not yet encountered the Enemies Mines. At night they will plant others to the left of the middle Rondel. Some Peaſants having found means to eſcape out of Town, came to the Camp, affirming, that there were ſtill above three hundred men which worked continually at the Mines and Retrenchments which the beſieged made behind their Walls, for their retreat in caſe of neceſſity.

July

1686. July the ninth, the whole Night was ſpent in ſhooting of Bombs and Carcaſſes into the City, to keep the beſieged in Action, and take away their deſire of repoſe, but theſe perceiving at break of day that the Enemy had made a Gallery of Planks to paſs the Miners to the middle Rondel, they rolled down many Bombs, threw many Granados, and other artificial Fire, with combuſtible ſtuff in ſuch abundance, that the Planks were burnt, and the Gallery reduced to Aſhes. At five in the Morning the beſieged ſprung a Mine ſome Paces from the Wall, betwixt the middle Rondel, and that at the Gate with Succeſs, being it overturned one of the Chriſtians Mines, with the loſs of ſeven or eight of the Miners. They ſeconded this with a ſharp Sally, diſordered the Workmen, ruined their Labours, and poſted themſelves betwixt the Imperialiſts and Brandenburgers, but the reſerve coming to their Aid from their place of Arms, they forced them back into the Town. There were above eighty of the two Attacks killed and wounded in this Adventure, one of their chief Cannoneers ſlain, and ſeveral ſubaltern Officers. The beſieged loſt as many; Notwithſtanding this check, the Works were continued with the ſame Vigour in the Approaches, Lines, and Galleries. On the Bavarian ſide they ruined the little Port from their Battery with ten demy Cannons, and the breach there was very ſpacious.

July the tenth, At the Lorrain Attack they work'd all Night to repair the Batteries and the Approaches which the beſieged had ruined in the former Sally, and to redreſs the Gallery which they had burnt, and the Miners were again fired that Night. At the Bavarian Attack the Miners worked under the Palizade of the Rondel, and under the Wall, with hopes of compleating their Mines in three days; ſeveral were ſlain, amongſt whom was Lieutenent-Collonel Wachtenheim. The Chriſtians had Intelligence by their Spies, that the Turks, to the number of ſeven thouſand, reinforced with ſome Tartars who ravaged the Country, had a deſign to introduce a new Commander, with a recruit of Troops into Buda, which obliged the Duke of Lorrain to command ſome Foot to poſt themſelves on the other ſide of the Danube, and upon occaſion to joyn with the Horſe that were there already, and meet and fight the Enemies.

July the eleventh, This evening five demy Cannons were mounted on the two new Batteries in the Lorrain Attack, and two Mortars planted in a little Fort, with the loſs only of two killed, and five hurt. The Brandenburgers plated three pieces in battery, and would plant more the Night following to ſhoot glowing Bullets into the City. The Bavarians fortified their Attack by two Redoubts. Yeſterday in the Evening four hundred Foot were ordered to raiſe ſome Defences on Peſt ſide near the Danube, to hinder leſt any thing ſhould paſs that way into Buda.

July the twelfth, All the Batteries of Lorrain and Brandenburg were compleated, and the firſt lines of theſe two Attacks were ſo joyned, that men could paſs from the one to the other undiſcovered, by the Enemies Fire. And now they were ſo near the Walls, the beſieged did perpetually throw hand Granadoes and Stones to incommode the Workmen, but without any great harm. The Miner on the left found himſelf much advanced under the Wall, but they met with more difficulty on the right, and ſo they would inlarge the breach by force of their Cannon. The Count de Souches inſpected the breach by order of the Field Marſhal Starenberg, and it was found ſpacious enough to be aſſaulted. 1686.
The Brandenburgers began to ſhoot their inflamed Bullets and Bombs out of twenty two Cannons, and two Mortars, but with no great Succeſs, being the Beſieged had uncoveted all their Houſes. The Bombs and Carcaſſes invented by the Franciſcan Frier were highly eſteemed. They now only plained and inlarged the Breaches, and prepared themſelves for the aſſault. There were nine hurt and three ſlain with Granadoes and Stones. The Breach in the great Rondel on the Bavarian ſide was large enough, and the Miner was at work under the Pallizade of the Ditch. The Duke having Intelligence that the Seraskier was advanced with ſome thouſands of Turks near Hatwan, commanded 3000 Horſe, and ſix Battalions of Foot, Imperialiſts, Brandenburgers, and Bavarians, under the Conduct of General Mercy, to paſs the Danube, and poſt themſelves on the other ſide of the Bridge, to hinder the Turks to put a recruit of Troops into the City, with the new deſigned Commander, Achmet Baſſa, who had the Reputation of being one of the beſt Officers that the Grand Seignior had in his Service.

July the thirteenth, This morning the beſieged ſprung a Mine under the middle Rondel near the Chriſtians Mine, which was already finiſhed, which Mine did what the beſiegers deſigned, by throwing down part of the Rondel, where they had no breach as yet. There were two hundred Turks ready to fly into the adverſe Works as ſoon as the Mine took, but ſeeing it had a contrary effect to what they deſigned, they retired. All things being diſpoſed for an aſſault, thereby to make a lodgment upon the Wall, Count Starenburg directed the attack in the manner following. Count Guydo Starenburg commanded on the right of the Rondel, Count Herberſtein the middle of the Curtain, and Count Aversberg, all three field Officers, on the left. They had each of them two hundred and eighty Souldiers; the Engineers, Granadeers, Fuſeliers, Carpenters, and Pioneers, were poſted betwixt two, and the reſt, to the number of two thouſand, were divided into three bodies of Reſerves to ſupport the Aſſailants: the Voluntiers who had demanded the point, mingled themſelves with the firſt. Betwixt ſeven and eight a Clock the ſignal for the Aſſault was given, by a diſcharge from all the Batteries, and a ſhower of Bombs and Carcaſſes which were diſcharged upon the City, and the Retrenchments which the beſieged had made behind the breach; and notwithſtanding all the reſiſtance of the beſieged, the Chriſtians mounted the breach, where the Combat was very rude and obſtinate on both ſides for three quarters of an hour, with all poſſible bravery. The beſieged ſprung a Mine under the Aſſailants firſt line, which buried Captain Kalkretter, and ſome Souldiers. But ſeeing they could not take poſt for want of Earth, that they could not force the Pallizado'd Retrenchment behind the breach, and that the chief Officers were already all hurt or ſlain, by the continual fire of the beſieged; it was thought expedient to make a retreat; five or ſix leap'd over the Turks Retrenchment, but being ill followed, got off with the reſt. The Regiments of Souches and Mansfeld ſuffered moſt in this Action, and that of Starenburg was alſo ill treated. There were more than four hundred kill'd and wounded, but the loſs of ſo many brave Officers and Voluntiers who loſt their Lives there, were particularly deplored: but few that were hurt eſcaped, which begot a belief that the Turks ſhot with envenomed Bullets. Amongſt the dead were Count Herberſtein, 1686. berſtein, Count Kuffſtein, and another Captain of the ſame Regiment, the Baron Rolle, three Captains more, and eight Lieutenants and Enſigns. Of Volunteers that were ſlain there, or died of their Wounds, the Duke of Vexar, a Grandee of Spain, who was one of the firſt upon the breach, was one, a Son of Prince Roberts, with another Engliſh Lord, the Baron of Scheyffer, the young Count of Coarmaillon, a Conte of Dona, and ſeven or eight more of Quality. Amongſt the wounded, as well Officers as Voluntiers, were reckoned Count Guydo Starenburg, Count Averſperg, the Prince of Veldens of the Houſe of the Palatinat, Prince Picolomini, two Engliſh Lords, the Duke of Eſcalona, a Grandee of Spain, the Marqueſs of Valero, Brother to the Duke of Vexar; the Prince of Commercy, and more than thirty other Perſons of mark. The Spaniards and the Engliſh diſtinguiſhed themſelves by a noble Emulation, oppoſing the greateſt Fury of the Turks. The Engliſh were ſo ill treated, that of twenty of them, all Perſons of Quality, there were but ſix of them that were not ſlain or wounded. The loſs of the beſieged was alſo great, for they had two hundred of their braveſt men wounded and killed. The Duke of Lorrain, and Marſhal Count Starenburg were preſent in this Action, giving Orders every where as occaſion required. It was believed that the Brandenburgers would have attempted ſomewhat on their ſide, but they excuſed it becauſe their breach was not large enough. On the Bavarian ſide there was a notable breach made in the Rondel and in the Wall that covers the Caſtle, which the beſieged repaired by Night with Gabions, Pallizadoes, and Fagots.

July the fourteenth, The whole Night and Day were imployed in inhuming the Dead, and repairing the Approaches, in planting more Cannon upon the Batteries, and in advancing the Mines. Two Galleries were likewiſe framed betwixt the ſecond and third Rondel. The Duke of Lorrain having alſo ſent for three Regiments of Horſe from Alba-Regalis to reinforce General Mercy, they paſſed the Bridge this Morning to go on Peſt ſide. The beſieged ſprung a Mine in the Bavarian Attack on the left of the Caſtle Rondel, which ſucceeded ill. His Electoral Highneſs having cauſed eight Parapets of thick Oaken Planks to be made, ſhod with Iron, of a new Invention, each capable of ſecuring a hundred armed Men, they were thought proper to be uſed in Attacks and Aſſaults. The ſame day the Bavarians diſcovered and diſappointed two Mines of the Enemies.

July 15*th*, They continued to work in their Lines, and being lodged cloſe to the Wall, the Beſieged were heard to work under the Breach. Gonzales the Spaniſh Engineer being now come, Bombs and Carcaſſes were thrown into the Town, which did great Execution. Upon the Advice that the Duke of Lorrain had, that the Turks that had paſſed the Tibiſcus near Segedin were ſtill encamped under the Cannon of Hatwan, he cauſed two Regiments of Horſe more to joyn Mercy to oblige the Enemy to repaſs the Tibiſcus.

July 16*th*, A new Battery was raiſed in the Lorrain Attack without the Wall of the lower Town to the right againſt the great Rondel, the which was alſo batter'd on the other ſide to render the Breach larger, and themſelves Maſters of it. A Raſcian, with Letters which the Governour of the Place had entruſted him to carry to him of Alb-Royal, came and delivered them to the Duke; but they being writ in the Armenian Language, and no Interpreter in the Camp, they were ſent to Vienna to be decyphered. Some Peaſants got out of the Town reported, that the Janizaries had begun to murmur againſt the Baſſa, as deſigning to hold out to the laſt extremity, but that he had by the Puniſhment of the moſt mutinous, by his Liberality, and the aſſurance he had given them of ſpeedy relief, reaſſured them to that degree, that they promiſed to hold out with their Lives. This Evening the Elector of Bavaria commanded 150 men, ſeconded by a greater number to go and attack the Palizado which was in the Ditch at the foot of the Rondel of the Caſtle. Lieutenant-General Count Fountain was on the right of the Attack, and General Count Aſpremont at the left. They uſed three of the above mentioned wooden Parapets for the firſt time with Succeſs, and they attack'd this Poſt ſo vigorouſly, that they carried it with their Swords in their Hands, cutting in pieces all them that defended it, but they ſold their Lives dearly, being the Aſſailants loſt Count Fountaine and 35 Souldiers, and Voluntiers. Count Aſpermont received a Contuſion in his Head by the ſtroke of a Muſquet which knock'd off his Steel Cap. The Captains Gottalinsky and Vaubon were dangerouſly hurt, with divers others. This Poſt gave acceſs to the Rondel.

July 17*th*, Yeſterday the Beſieged began to fire from a new Battery of four great Guns, which they had raiſed upon the inward Wall; but General Starenberg having commanded all the Cannon that could bear to ſhoot that way, they were quickly ſilenced and diſabled. About Noon twenty or thirty Janizaries appeared upon the Breach of the Rondel to the right, as if they had deſigned a Sally, but thoſe in the Trenches having given them a Volly, they quickly retired. The Brandenburgers and Bavarians did nothing but compleat their Works, beſides their continual firing from their Batteries.

July 18*th*, A new line was advanced to the right, the better to cover the Miners, and be of uſe in the ſubſequent Aſſault. The Brandenburgers augmented their great Battery with three pieces of Cannon. Nor were the Bavarians idle, their Miners working under the Wall behind the Pallizado Moat, of which they were in poſſeſſion. The Beſieged did not much appear by day, but in the Night time kept continual firing, killing a great many of the Beſiegers with their Stones and Granadoes, which they threw into their Works.

July 19. The Cannon was mounted upon the new Battery, and the Line was ſtrengthned with two ſmall Forts. Laſt night the Beſieged ſprung a Mine behind our Miners, who worked under the Wall, which endammaged our Mine, into which a new entry was to be made to make it ſerviceable. Some of the Chriſtian Miners were covered with earth, moſt of which were pulled out again, except Libert their Captain, who could not be found. Mr. Kerry, a Scotch Gentleman, with ſeven or eight Souldiers were killed in the approaches, beſides others wounded. The Duke of Lorrain, aſſiſted by the General perſons of his Army, held a Council of War this morning, but the reſult was kept ſecret. Some Deſerters aſſured the Duke, that the Beſieged reſolved to make no compoſition, but to expect the Relief which the Grand Viſier would bring them.

Jul. 20. The new Line in the Lorrain attack was compleated. There were three falſe alarms given to haraſs the Beſieged, by cauſing ſome Granadeers to run up the Breach, and throw their Granado's into the place, upon which the Turks haſtening to the defence, they were ſaluted 1686. ted with Volleys of Cannon, Bombs, and Carkaſſes, not without execution. Theſe kind of attacks were frequently uſed to keep the Enemy in continual alarms, and in ignorance of the time of the real Aſſault. In the mean time the Mines were vigorouſly carried on, and a certain German undertook a new one, which he undertook to finiſh in two or three days. In the attacks of Brandenburg and Bavaria, the Miners hoped to be the following Night under the Rondels, continuing to batter the Walls with great fury, and to ſhoot glowing Bullets, Bombs and Carkaſſes into the City, which produced much diſorder. Upon advice that the Turks diſpoſed themſelves to attempt to put relief into the Town, the Ditch of the Circumvallation was deepened, and fortified with certain Redoubts, the better to ſecure the Beſiegers, to which purpoſe 200 Heyducks were added to the number of Pioneers.

Jul. 21. The principal working was now at the Mines, which were made in three ſeveral places, and would ſuddenly be ready. Captain Libert, notwithſtanding all the diligence that had been uſed to dig and remove the earth to ſeek him, had not been found. He was a Walloon by Nation, and was regretted by all the Generals, and ſuch who had skill of his knowledge in conducting of Mines. The Miners were now within hearing of each other. A Battery was alſo raiſed for four Mortars, near the three Spaniſh Pieces which beat upon the Rondel on the right, and they reſolved to approach all the Cannon and Mortars nearer the Breaches, to batter them with more force, that they might inlarge them with more eaſe, and ruine the Enemies Defences, which were behind the ſaid Breaches. There were twenty-ſeven ſlain and wounded only at the Lorrain attack; amongſt the dead were Major Bacneburg a Dane, and Captain Lerneux the 5*th* of Starenberg's Regiment. Gonzales's Bombs and Carcaſſes had the Succeſs expected, and by report of a Fugitive, one of thoſe Bombs ſunck into a Houſe where a hundred Perſons of both Sexes were retired, who all miſerably periſhed in the Ruines of it. The Bavarians finiſhed their Battery near the Rondel, and began another on the Water ſide, to canonade the Flancks of the City on that ſide. At preſent, being the three Attacks were advanced as far as the Breaches, which were large enough, all things were diſpoſed for a general Aſſault, two thouſand Ladders being got ready for falſe and ſeeming Attacks by ſcaling the Walls, whilſt others mounted the Breaches.

July 22*th*, There hapned nothing at the Lorrain or Brandenburg Attack, the Turks ſprung two Mines this Morning, which did nothing but ruine a part of the Curtain, where there was no Breach. The new Battery of four Guns upon the brink of the Ditch of the Rondel in the Bavarian Attack being finiſhed, the Turks came there at break of day, and gave them a bloody Serenade, for a ſtrong party of them having ſlipped out by the Bridge on the right, they crept into the Ditch along the Paliſade, and being come to the Battery, before they were diſcovered, by favour of the Darkneſs, they began to howl and make terrible cries, nailing up three Cannon, and a Mortar, and ruining part of the Battery: The Saxons of the neighbouring Poſts ran to the noiſe, but were diſordered. The Regiment of Prince Lewis of Baden, which was upon the Reſerve, arrived ſeaſonably, and repulſed the Turks with the loſs of thirty men, which was but a ſorry compenſation conſidering the loſs on the other ſide, where above one hundred were killed and wounded, the moſt Saxons and Bavarians. Amongſt the ſlain, Collonel Lebel, a Saxon was one, beſides ſeveral Subalternes, and Geſchwint, Collonel of the Artillery, was dangerouſly wounded with a Cymitar. The Turks got no great advantage by this Sally, for the Nailes being eaſily drawn, they began in a very little time to play again, as if they never had been nailed. And the revenge which was returned was ſudden and fatal, for a Bomb of the Bavarians falling into the Magazine of Powder in the Caſtle, blew it up with ſuch a terrible deſtruction and noiſe, that the whole City did not only tremble with the blow, but alſo the whole Camp, and, as was afterward reported by ſome fugitives, more than one thouſand perſons of all ages were buried in the ruines, the ſtones being thrown up with the violence of the Powder in ſuch abundance, that they fell like Hail into the approaches, that many of the Beſiegers were hurt by them. The Caſtle is blown up. 1686.

Jul. 23. The Duke of Lorrain, his Mines being now all ready, and all things ready for an aſſault, ſent the Count of Koningſec with an Interpreter to the Beſieged to ſummon them to ſurrender. In this interval there was a ceſſation of Arms on both ſides, which was employed in burying the ſlain. The ſaid Count, after two hours ſtay, returned into the Camp with a Letter from Abdi Baſſa, in a Purſe of Crimſon Damask, which he delivered the Duke. The anſwer was fierce and arrogant, implying, that not being neceſſitated to ſurrender, he could not be capable of ſo abject a thought, that he fought for the glory of his Prophet, and the honour of the Muſſelmen; that he and his Garriſon were reſolved to try the utmoſt extremity, and to defend the place with their lateſt breath. That the Government had been intruſted to his care by the Grand Seignior, which he would preſerve for him, or loſe his life; that when the Duke ſhould come to wreſt it from him, he ſhould find him upon the Breach to diſpute his entrance, and that he might order the aſſault when he pleaſed, he would expect him there without ſtirring a foot. The Duke having read this brave anſwer, cauſed all the Batteries to fire with more fury than formerly, and all the preparatives for a general Aſſault to be made ready, for which purpoſe he ſent for ſome thouſands of Hungarian Foot, who had voluntarily offered to be the firſt that ſhould mount the Breaches.

So fierce an anſwer, and ſo brave a defence, makes it apparent, that the impreſſions which the Run-aways had at the beginning of the Siege given of Abdi Baſſa's conduct, were very falſe, affirming he was deſpiſed by the Souldiery, as being more a Merchant than a Man of War; and the Seraſquier was in the wrong in deſigning to remove him, for it is to be preſumed that ſcarce any other would have eluded the efforts of ſo great an Army ſo long time. A Pole was obſerved by the Guards in ſecret conference with two Turks, but upon his return to the Camp was ſeiſed upon, viſited and examined, and being found to be a Spy, he was immediately hanged. This evening a Bavarian Gunner was apprehended, as he was going over to the Enemy.

Jul. 24*th*, This morning about eight a Clock a great Mine was ſprung in the Lorrain attack, and 300 men were commanded to lodge upon the Breach, together with ſome hundreds of Hungarians, but the Mine had a contrary effect to what was deſigned, for it ruined and overthrew part of their own Approaches, and filled their Lines with Earth, beſides the ſlaughters of 100 men killed and wounded. The Duke upon this ill ſucceſs, cauſed the firings of the Batteries 1683. to be redoubled to enlarge the Breaches, to render them in a Condition to be mounted without any new Mines. The new Battery which the Bavarians rais'd by the Water ſide would be ready at Night, and that which they had already raiſed upon the brink of the Ditch, had made a great gap in the Wall on the right. By intercepted Letters he was alſo informed, that the Great Viſier highly encouraged the Beſieged to defend themſelves, aſſuring them that by the eighth or tenth of Auguſt he would come to their relief with a formidable Army. General Caraffa who commanded the Imperial Troops upon the River Tibiſcus, ſent an Officer to the Duke of Lorrain, and the Elector of Bavaria, with an acccount of a great Advantage which he had had over the Garriſon of Agria by the means of two Ambuſhes which he had laid for the Turks, which luck'd ſo well, that having drawn ſix hundred of the Garriſon into them, he quite defeated them, killed three hundred upon the Place, with Oſman Baſſa the Commander of Agria, and took forty Priſoners, together with the Vice Baſſa, who was dangerouſly wounded.

July 25*th*, The whole Night was ſpent in repairing the Works ruined by the Mine, which had been ſprung with ſo much diſadvantage. The Duke preſſed forward the Preparatives for the General Aſſault with all poſſible Vigour, having ordered the making of Places of Arms, or Parades, as were neceſſary, within the Lines and Approaches. Betwixt four and five the Beſieged put fire to a Mine on the right of the Rondel, in purſuance whereof they ſallied with two hundred Men, but were repulſed by the Guard that were in readineſs with the loſs of fourteen men. A little after, they ſallied again in greater numbers to the left, where the Brandenburgers were, who likewiſe repulſed them. They returned yet the third time with more Troops, and put the Brandenburgers Guards into diſorder, which obliged the Duke of Lorrain to order the Reſerve which was poſted at the Wall of the lower Town to advance, which General Souches, who commanded the Trenches, had divided into three parts, whereof one was placed to the left on the Water ſide, another in the Approaches, and the third was commanded to keep by the Moſque. The Duke moreover cauſed the Battalions of Mansfelt, Salm, Souches, and Lorrain, to advance to the right. The Skirmiſhing laſted a good time, the Turks retiring often, and as ſoon returning with great fury and out-cryes. The Hayducks after the firſt diſcharge did alſo charge the Turks, but gave way, occaſioning much confuſion amongſt them upon the left of the Moſque, from whence the Beſieged gave briſk fire with their Cannon, though without any great harm, ſo that ſeeing they could profit nothing by a longer ſtay, they retired into the Town. Count Starenberg, who had ſignalized himſelf, luck'd better than his Adjoutant, who had both his Legs ſhot off. The Battalions of Souches and Mansfelt were ill treated, and had moſt dead. The Baron of Aſthi was hurt in the Foot, and the Baron of Hoghenworth ſlain, and ſeveral ſubaltern Officers killed and hurt, beſides above a hundred private Souldiers. But the loſs on the Enemies ſide was much greater, as was reported by a Dutch Boy who run out of Town, where he had been ſince the Siege of Vienna, having been ſold by a Tartar to a Citizen of Buda. This Boy ſaid further, that the Turks made great Retrenchments within the Place, and that the Garriſon conſiſted ſtill of at leaſt five thouſand fighting men.

July 26*th*, Never was more Diligence uſed ſince the Siege began in carrying on the Lines and Approaches, than laſt Night, and all this Day to make the Places of Arms, which are finiſhed, and at preſent every thing is diſpoſed of for the general Aſſault, and poſting themſelves upon the Breaches, the Rondels, and the Walls, and conſequently to render themſelves Maſters of this important Place, which had coſt the Chriſtians ſo much Blood. The Beſieged made a little ſally on the Bavarian Attack, but having ſtood the firſt diſcharge, were forced to retreat as faſt as they came.

July 27*th*, Every thing being diſpoſed for the general Aſſault, and the Troops that were to be employed in it at their Rendezvouzes in all the three Attacks, it was reſolved that the Onſet ſhould be given at five a Clock in the Evening, to which end the Duke had diſtributed his Orders to all the Officers high and low, how they were to act. The Faggots, Gabions, Spades, Mattocks, Hatchets, and Sacks with Earth, were there in great abundance, as well to break the Enemies Retrenchments, as to cover the Aſſailants when they ſhould be Maſters of the Breaches. The ſignal was given from Peſt by ſome Cannon ſhot, and the Aſſault was carried on in manner following. Forty Granadeers under the command of a Captain, one Lieutenant, and one Serjeant, were at the head of the Rondel to the right hand, they were followed by fifty Fuſeliers and Souldiers, with Hatchets, commanded alſo by a Captain-Lieutenant, and a Serjeant, with a hundred men carrying Spades and Mattocks, ſupported by two Captains, two Lieutenants, two Serjeants, and two hundred Muſqueteers, all under the Conduct of the Prince of Newburg, Great Maſter of the Teutonick Order, who had the Direction of this Attack. That of the middle toward the Curtain was directed by Lieutenant General Souches; there were fifty Granadeers under a Captain, Lieutenant and Serjeant, a hundred Fuſeliers, two hundred men with Hatchets, and to ſecond them two hundred Muſqueteers, divided into two ſquadrons, which were followed with a hundred and fifty more, with Shovels and Mattocks: The Attack on the left of the little Rondel was ordered by the Brandenburgers after the ſame manner. Behind the Sacks filled with Earth, Wooll, and the like, in the ſecond line were poſted a party of choice Harquebuſiers, who were not to ſtir thence, but fire continually upon the Turks, who ſtood there themſelves in the Breaches. The Heyducks, commanded by the Lieutenant Governour of Raab, were poſted on the Water ſide, where a great part of the Wall had been thrown down by the fire of the Magazin already mentioned; they were only to make a falſe Attack, being ſeconded by a Major with ſome ſelect Companies. The chief Officers were diſperſed into ſeveral Poſts to execute the functions of their Employments; and thus Nigrelli, General of Battalia, Collonel Keth, Lieutenant Collonel Rederer, and the Major of Staremberg aſſiſted the grand Maſter of the Teutonick Order. General Souches had for Aſſiſtants Diependal, Count Oettingen, Lieutenant Collonel Jorger, and the Major of Crop's Regiment. There were above 1200 men of reſerves in the covered way, commanded by General Thungen, under twelve Captains, twelve Lieutenants, and other ſubaltern Officers, with all the other Lieutenant Colloneis and Majors, to ſucceed in the place of thoſe that ſhould be ſlain or wounded. The 1200 Muſqueteers were to advance in ſmall parties in the Lines as the other gained ground; the reſt of the Foot were at their Arms ready to engage,

and

1686. and all the Generals in the Trenches. In this order the Souldiers full of Hopes and Courage went to the Aſſault, and mounted the Breaches. They found great Oppoſition, particularly at the great Rondel where the Breach was high, and the Defendants very numerous and reſolute. The Chriſtians were beat back two or three times, but returning ſtill to the Aſſault, they at length took poſſeſſion of the Breach, and poſted themſelves in it. The Brandenburgers took the Wall of the little Rondel. The Combat laſted from five till nine a Clock with great effuſion of Blood, not ſo much by the Turks Arms as their Mines, and Powder which they had ſtrewed in great quantities in ſeveral places, which they ſucceſſively fired as they were forced from their Poſts. There could be nothing more lamentable than to ſee two or three hundred men at once toſſed up by force of the Mines, which were moſt killed, or grievouſly wounded. And yet the Beſieged could not terrifie the Chriſtians, nor hinder them by their obſtinate reſiſtance to lodge upon the Rondels and the Curtain. The Hayducks apprehending the fire, failed in their falſe alarming on the Water ſide. The Duke and General Staremberg were near the Great Maſter with their Swords in their Hands, encouraging the Officers and Souldiers to do well, and the Prince of Croy was in the middle near the Curtain, where he was hurt. The Night being come put an end to the fight, and it was ſpent in ſecuring their Lodgments with two Lines of Communication from the Approaches to the poſſeſſed Rondels, and the Miners were faſtned to the inner Wall or Retrenchment, where the Turks fortified themſelves. This Aſſault was one of the bloodieſt, the moſt hardy, and beſt diſputed that ever was ſeen, whether we conſider the bravery and intrepidneſs of the Aſſailants, or the obſtinate Valour of the Defendants. The number of the ſlain, amongſt whom was Adjoutant General Attein, was not very great, but that of the wounded very ſurpriſing, of which Catalogue were the Prince of Croy, the Prince of Commercy, General Diependael, General Thungen, the Baron of Aſti, the Major of Starenberg, Lieutenant Collonel Redere, Major Pini, Conte Schlick, Baron Gera, and many other Captains and ſubalterne Officers. On the Brandenburg ſide, Count Dona, Collonel of Foot was ſlain, Major Marwitz, and the Prince of Curland grievouſly wounded, with very many others.

At the Bavarian Attack the Elector had ordered the Aſſault in this manner. The Palizades upon the Breach having been burnt the day before by forty choice Souldiers, the Elector commanded a Lieutenant with 20 Fuſeliers, a Serjeant, ſix Voluntiers, and ten Granadeers, and a Corporal, with ſix Carpenters to cut the Palizadoes, an 100 Muſqueteers with their Officers were ordered to poſt themſelves at the Enemies Palizade, and to ſhoot without ceaſing to favoriſe the Pioneers to make the Lodgment upon the Rondel, amongſt which there were twenty five with Spades and Pickaxes and 75 with Hatchets commanded by a Captain, and ſeconded by a Lieutenant-Collonel, a Major and a Captain, with fifty men armed with half Pikes, Halberds, and Partizans, by a Lieutenant with thirty Granadeers, and by 200 Muſqueteers under two Captains and two Lieutenants. Things being thus diſpoſed as well on the right as the left, the two Neighbouring Redoubts were furniſhed each with thirty Harquebuſiers, and three Battalions of Imperialiſts, Bavarians and Saxons, were to ſecond the Aſſailants. The Gunners had order to fire from all the Batteries, and to throw Bombs and Carcaſſes without ceaſing into the Caſtle, and betwixt the two Walls on the Water ſide, as alſo to point their Cannon againſt the high Walls and Windows of the Caſtle. All things being thus ordered, and the ſignal given from Weſt, they advanced towards the Breach, however difficult to mount on the right and left of the Rondel, as alſo the Curtain, and that with ſo much Vigour, that they became Maſters of the Poſt, driving out the Beſieged for all their inceſſant firing, and a ſhower of Stones which they threw from their Caſtle Windows. They alſo took the Swingher, which is a great Place in form of a retreat betwixt the Walls and the Houſes, but this Place being commanded by the ſaid Walls, whence the Turks annoyed the Aggreſſors with Granadoes, Stones, and Bombs which they rolled down; the Elector cauſed thoſe that were there to retire, being content to ſecure the Lodgments upon the Rondel, and the Wall of the Caſtle by a Line of Communication from the Gate of the Bridge to that of the Swingher, ſo that the Bridge remained in their Power, which was further ſecured by traverſe Lines, and two Redoubts. The Elector eminently appeared in all this Action, and the Generals ſignalized their Courage, as did alſo the Voluntiers, Officers and Souldiers, who fought with all the bravery that was to be expected from men of Courage. Nor were the Turks leſs commendable for their Conſtancy and Fidelity, doing every thing that oppreſſed Valour could be capable of. They who defended the Rondel and the Swinger were for the moſt part killed and hurt. There were eight pieces of Cannon found there, and two Mortars turned now againſt the Beſiegeds ſecond Wall and Retrenchments. In this Aſſault, of the Bavarians there were ſlain two Majors, two Captains, four Lieutenants, one Enſign, but the wounded were many; one Collonel, two Lieutenant-Collonels, two Majors, 25 Captains, 16 Lieutenants, thirteen Enſigns. The Generals Lavergne, Rummel, and Aſpremont were of the number of the wounded, as alſo the Duke of Eſcalona, a Grandee of Spain, and ſome other Voluntiers of Quality, making up with the Officers and Souldiers the number of 117 ſlain, and 972 wounded. Of the Troops of Saxony, a Lieutenant-Collonel, and ſome under Officers were killed; one Lieutenant-Collonel, two Majors, two Captains, one Captain-Lieutenant, and three Enſigns were hurt; of the Souldiers there were ſeventy ſlain, and a hundred ninety nine wounded; ſo that the number of the ſlain and wounded in this Aſſault amounted to above three thouſand men.

July 28, In the three Attacks they were only employed in burying their dead, and ſecuring their Lodgments upon the Breaches. The Duke of Lorrain did alſo apply the Miner to the ſecond Wall, which was done in three ſeveral Places, as did alſo they of Bavaria and Brandenburg.

July 29. The three Mines in the ſecond Wall were ſprung with that Succeſs that they made a new Breach there, and filled part of the Ditch with the Ruins. The Bavarians advanced to the right of the Rondel, and ſeized two Mortars there, which they turned againſt the Beſieged. The great Cannon was advanced, and they pretended to batter the City with an 100 pieces of Ordnance, and forty Mortars, if the Turks continued in their Obſtinacy. The Beſieged howſoever made ſeveral Cuts and Retrenchments behind the ſecond Wall. The Duke ſeeing that well nigh all the Generals of the Infantry were hurt and in no Condition to act, order'd for the future that the Generals of the Horſe ſhould ſerve in the Approaches, to wit, the Count of Stirum, and the Conte of Lodron, and ſo the firſt mounted the Guard, 1686. Guard that Night with General Souches, and was to be relieved on the morrow by the grand Maſter of the Teutonick Order, and the Count de Lodron. A Battery of three Demy-Cannon, and another of four were finiſhed. Some Raſcians come out of the place, reported, that the beſieged were reſolved to defend themſelves to the laſt extremity, but that ſome began to waver, ſaying, the further effuſion of bloud ought to be prevented. A Council of War was held thereupon, and the reſult was, that the Duke ſhould ſend a ſecond Summons to the Commander of the place, to ſurrender whilſt it was time, and that he might do it upon honourable conditions, which if neglected he would not be anſwerable for the bloud that ſhould be ſpilt, if they came to the laſt extremity, being in that caſe they ſhould ſpare neither Sex nor Age. Abdi Baſſa civilly received his Highneſs's Letters, and demanded a Day to conſult with the other Officers of his Garriſon, which was granted him, with a ceſſation of Arms. The Deſerters, who eſcaped in great numbers, affirm'd that the Beſieged loſt in the laſt Aſſault, in the Bavarian attack, only 300 ſlain, and 700 hurt. They had that Night notice that 4000 Turkiſh Horſe were ſeen within four Leagues of the Camp, to enquire into the ſtate of the place, but fearing a ſurpriſe they preſently retired.

Jul. 31. At nine in the Morning the Count of Launberg, Adjoutant General, was commanded by the Duke of Lorrain to go with an Interpreter, and receive the Beſieged's anſwer, which was to this purpoſe, That he neither could nor would ſo eaſily ſurrender the City, it being the Key of the Ottoman Empire; but if they would make a general peace, they would give another equivalent. After noon the Beſieged demanded a ſuſpenſion of Arms at the Bavarian attack, and ſent two Aga's in Hoſtage to the Elector, who ſent the Baron of Creux Lieutenant Collonel of Baden's Regiment with an Interpreter. The Turks received them with great ceremony, and all imaginable civilities. He was not immediately conducted before the Baſſa, but to another Houſe, the ſtreets as he paſſed along were lined with Souldiers in very good order, though no great number. Being entered into the Houſe, he was preſented with Rice, a roſted Pullet, little Pyes, Coffee and Wine. The Baſſa excuſed himſelf, That he could not yet ſpeak with him, being he conſulted the other chief Officers upon the propoſitions he was to make to him. In this interval of time many Turkiſh Officers came to ſalute the Baron: half an hour after the Baſſa ſent him word, That he would take it for a favour if he would come over to him. Which he immediately did, accompanied with a great number of Turks, being taken by the arms by the two chiefeſt of them, according to the cuſtom of the Ottomans, who led him thus before the Baſſa, who was in a Lodge of Wood over-againſt his Houſe, very well furniſhed and hung with rich Tapiſtries. Having cauſed the Baron to ſit down, he uſed this diſcourſe to him, That he was ſorry to find himſelf in a place of that importance, that had been ſo often beſieged without ſucceſs, and was now ſo long abandoned without relief. On the contrary, that he found himſelf preſſed by the Emperour's Son-in-law, and the grand Viſier, that he wiſhed he were able to give his reſolution concerning the ſurrender, but that being an affair of the laſt importance, and as much as his life was worth, it was impoſſible for him to reſolve upon a ſurrender. Adding however, That if they would demand any other place in Hungary, he would cauſe it immediately to be evacuated for them: The Baron replied, That he had no Commiſſion to diſcourſe of conditions, but only to know from the Baſſa himſelf whether he would ſurrender or no. That he might pleaſe to conſider that the Chriſtians were already Maſters of the Walls of the City, that it would be too late to capitulate, if he ſtayed till another aſſault, that it would not be in the power of the Generals to reſtrain the fury of the Souldiers, or prevent this Siege from being as Tragical as that of Newheuſel. At this diſcourſe the Baſſa only lift up his ſhoulders, but the Baron being upon the point to take his leave, he deſired him to enter with him into his Cabinet, where, calling the Muſii and three other Turks of the firſt rank, he remonſtrated to him again, That he could not upon any conſideration do ſo great a prejudice to the Grand Seignior, as to ſurrender a place upon which depended two hundred Leagues of Country, and which is the Key of Turky, but offered again any Town in Hungary with its Appendances and Dependencies. Yet declaring finally, That if they would give him aſſurances of a general peace with the Port, he would yet reſolve to ſurrender Buda. The Baron having no Orders to treat, took leave of the Baſſa, telling him he would make report to the Elector and Duke of Lorrain, of the Declaration he had communicated to him, but that he could not aſſure him that things would be ſo concluded. The Baſſa deſired this Declaration might be publiſhed in Writing through the Camp, and invited him to ſtay all Night in the City: But the Baron excuſed the later, deſiring to be reconducted to the place from whence he came, which was done with great ceremony, he being accompanied with many Turkiſh Officers to the Gate. Nor the Baron, nor his Interpreter could ſufficiently demonſtrate the ruines occaſioned in the City by the Bombs and Carkaſſes which had beaten down the greateſt part of the Buildings. The Ceſſation which had been obſerved during this Parley was broke towards Evening, the Cannon beginning to fire with more fury than formerly. The Beſieged ſprang a Counter-mine in the Lorrain attack, to ruine the Chriſtians Mine made under their Battery, oppoſite to the great Rondel, but without ſucceſs. A while after, two of the Beſiegers Mines, which were deſigned to fill the Ditch, were fired with execution. Count Starenberg looking betwixt two Gabions was hurt with a Musket-ſhot, but without danger, 20 or 30 more were hurt and killed in this and the Brandenburg attack.

Aug. 1. A Battery was finiſhed in the Lorrain attack upon the Rondel, upon which two pieces of Cannon were planted. A Mine was ſprung in the Morning near this Rondel, and though it ſucceeded well, there was no other attempt made, becauſe the Moat was not ſufficiently filled, and ſo it was reſolved to fill it with Faggots, with Sacks of Earth, and the like Materials, which were carried in abundance upon the place. The Workmen perceived ſo great a ſtink in this Mine, that they could ſcarce endure it, two of them, who were ſuffocated with it, being carried out of it. About Noon, intelligence came that 7000 Turks were poſted at Sexaritwan thirteen Leagues from Buda, and that the Grand Viſier had begun to paſs the Bridge of Eſſeck with the Army that he had formed out of the Garriſons of Hungary, and the Neighbouring places, and with other Troops which he had got together, amongſt which there were 7000 men drawn out of Boſſina. It was further aſſured that the defection amongſt the Turks was very great, and that of 8000 Janizaries, which the Grand Viſier had brought from the middle of Turky, 3000 had deſerted upon the march: and yet he pretended his Army conſiſted of 50000 Combatants, reſolving to attempt the relief of Buda. General Dunewald returned this afternoon to the Camp, with the Regiments of Horſe with which he had been on the ſide of the Bridge of Eſſeck, to inform himſelf 1686. himſelf of the march of the Enemy. The Generals Caraffa and Heuſler arrived alſo from Zolnock in two days, with 5000 Horſe and ſome Hungarians.

All things were diſpoſed for to aſſault the ſecond Wall. The Bavarians had thrown down a great part of the Wall with their Cannon, and a Mine, rendering themſelves Maſters of the ſecond Zwinger, where they at the ſame time ſeiſed upon the Enemies Cannon and Mortars, which they turned againſt the City.

Aug. 2*d.* They continued to fill the Ditch: every thing was ready for the aſſault, which was deferred, becauſe of the continual rains. Upon the reiterated news brought in by Scouts of the Grand Viſier having paſſed the Bridge at Eſſeck, all neceſſary preparations were made to receive him well, in caſe he attempted to relieve the Town.

Aug. 3. A Run-away, who pretended to be a Domeſtick of one of the moſt conſiderable Officers in the Town, declared, that the Beſieged had prepared a Mine, and begun a ſecond in the Brandenburg attack: That they expected with great impatience their Succours, and that of all thoſe which the Baſſa had ſent out, not one had returned, which rendered him very uneaſie and chagrin, and that the number of ſerviceable Soldiers exceeded not 2000 beſides the Inhabitants. The Beſiegers could not finiſh their great Mine becauſe of a Rock they met. Some ſmall Banks and Parapets were made upon the Breach to ſecure the Souldiers firing during the aſſault, which was ordered in the manner following. At noon the Trenches were relieved, and thoſe that went off were appointed for reſerves. The firſt attack was to the right of the Rondel. Fifty Granadeers with a Captain, and Lieutenant, and a Serjeant followed by 20 men preceded, theſe were followed by 50 Fuſeliers Officer'd as the firſt, and 50 men which followed them with Hatchets. The ſame method was held by the Brandenburgers on the left, and the Hungarians fell upon the Curtain in the middle, preceded by 30 Germans, and followed by 60 with their neceſſary Officers. The aſſault began betwixt 5 and 6 a clock in preſence of all the Generals, the Great Maſter of the Teutonick Order commanding the Trenches. The deſign, by reaſon the Mine had not the deſired effect, was but feigned, but the Duke of Lorrain being advertiſed by an Adjoutant, that the Elector of Bavaria had already effectively began the aſſault, did alſo command the falſe attack to be converted into a real one. The Fight laſted two hours. There were 1000 Troopers on foot, 300 whereof were employed in the aſſault, who behaved themſelves well, as the Hungarians alſo did; but the Breach being of difficult aſcent, the Beſieged very well covered with Paliſado's, and defending themſelves like deſperate men, the Duke would not riſque more of his people, contenting himſelf to make a Lodgment at the right of the angular Rondel, where 40 men immediately intrenched themſelves. There were not many killed by the Beſieged's fire, but about 200 wounded by Stones and Arrows, which were ſhot in ſuch abundance that it reſembled a ſhower of Hail. Count Leopold of Herberſteyn, a Lieutenant Colonel, Major Biſchophamſen, &c. were of the number of the hurt. The Bavarians were not exempt from the ſame Artillery of Arrows and Stones, beſides Bombs which were rolled upon planks out of the windows of the Caſtle. The Prince of Savoy was hurt in the hand with an arrow, together with 3 Captains, ſome ſubaltern Officers, 7 or 8 Volunteers, and 90 Souldiers as well killed as wounded. Prince Lewis of Baden going in the morning to view the approaches, was ſhot with a Muſket-bullet which burnt his Coat, and made a great contuſion upon his Breſt, but his Arms being of proof ſaved his life. 1686.

Aug. 4. The firing from the Batteries was redoubled from the three Attacks to enlarge the breaches, and ruine the Defences of the Beſieged. The Line of Circumvallation was ſtrengthened, being furniſhed with many Redoubts and Forts to flank the whole work. All the heights and eminences about the place were intrenched and poſſeſſed by the Beſiegers. The Heyducks took their Poſt along the inner Wall of the lower Town, and ſo the attacks were continued with the ſame vigour as before. The Bavarians raiſed a Battery of nine Guns of 24 ball upon the Rondel of the Caſtle, wherewith they beat the Flanks and widened the Breach, but the Earth being very narrow and ſtreight, ſo that but few could paſs a breſt, the Beſieged might the better diſpute the acceſs of the Aſſailants.

The Scouts brought advice that the Grand Viſier had effectively paſſed the Bridge of Eſſeck, and that he had 20000 men with him, which with the Troops by Alba Regalis amounted to 40 or 50000, moſt old Soldiers, taken out of their Garriſons and Fortreſſes, into whoſe places they had put their new Levies. There came alſo advice, that the Baſſa of Agria, having aſſembled ſome thouſands of Turks out of the Garriſons of upper Hungary, was advanced near Hatzman, where he had commanded a great many Charets out of the Neighbourhood, to carry Pontoons to the Danube ſide, by means whereof he pretended to put relief into the Town, at the ſame time that the Grand Viſier ſhould attack the Lines on the other ſide. This advertiſement obliged the Chriſtian Generals to uſe ſuch neceſſary precautions which might ſecure them on Peſt ſide.

Aug. 5. In the Lorrain attack the approaches were advanced from the great Rondel towards the ſecond Wall, where they had poſted themſelves in the aſſault of the 3*d.* inſtant. The Miners were buſie at the right of the Breach, the better to attack the Enemy in flank, as alſo under the Curtain, to blow up the Beſieged's Retrenchments behind the Breach. A Gallery was begun on the right of the Battery, to go into the inward Ditch and the better to aſſure the attack the Flanks were paliſado'd. The beſieged ſpent the whole Night in throwing of Bombs, Granado's, and Stones, to incommode the contrary Workmen, but without much harm, ſave the killing of 3 Heyducks, and wounding 5, or 6 other Soldiers. This afternoon one of their Bombs falling into a Barrel of Powder upon the Beſiegers Battery, killed five, and hurt three.

Aug. 6. A new Battery of two Demy-Cannon was raiſed in the Lorrain Attack behind the great Rondel, by means whereof the Defence of the little Rondel was ruined, which the beſieged had hitherto uſed with great advantage. The Chriſtians continued to fill the inward Moat with Fagots, Tuns, Sacks with earth, and the like, and made a Redoubt behind the great battery to ſecure the Workmen. The Brandenburgers and Bavarians continued their attacks with vigour, nothing elſe conſiderable intervening.

Aug. 7. Laſt Night ſeveral falſe alarms were given, as if the Turks were come to attempt ſuccouring the place. The Chriſtians continued to deepen the Ditch about their Lines, and to fortifie their Poſts to make the Enemy deſpair of forcing their Camp. The Mines were alſo carried on with great induſtry, and would in 3 or 4 days be ready for execution. The Heyducks undertook to fill the Ditch of the ſecond Wall in 48

1686. hours time, upon the aſſurance of a recompence of 4000 livers, which was promiſed them by the Generals. The breach which was made in the ſecond Wall was very ſpacious, and as ſoon as the Mines were finiſht, they will again aſſault the ſecond wall. They found much difficulty in the Bavarian attack to render themſelves maſters of the Caſtles, by reaſon of the various Walls and Defences which were to be forced, and of the obſtinacy of the Defendants. This obliged the Elector to redouble the fire of his Cannon to throw down theſe Walls, and in effect they did little elſe, beſides beating the Caſtle from their ſeveral batteries, which plai'd upon the Flanks and Curtains with ſo much fury, that they hop'd in a few days to ſee them quite down. Thirty Huſſars meeting with as many of the Turks, killed one of them, and took 4 Priſoners, which they brought with them to the Camp. Amongſt theſe was an Aga, who four years ſince was ranſomed out of Raab, where he had been Priſoner, for 8000 Crowns. Theſe reported that the 6th inſtant the Seraſquier ſhould arrive at Alb-Royal with 26000 Horſe, and was to be followed by the Grand Viſier, who aſſembled his Army about Eſſeck, which was not to be inferiour in number to that which was laſt year imployed at the Siege of Gran. They added, that the Seraskier had expreſs Orders not to hazard a battel with the Chriſtians, for fear of loſing the City and Army at once, but to endeavour to put Supplies of Troops in the Beſieged Town one way or other, or to periſh in the attempt.

Aug. 8. Four thouſand Turkiſh and Tartarian Horſe appeared upon a Hill near the Bavarian quarter, and retired after ſome light Skirmiſhes with Count Budiani's Huſſars, reinforced by ſome commanded Men and Voluntiers. The Priſoners taken there depoſed, that the Seraskier was camped under the Cannon of Alba-Regalis with 20000 Combatants, and that the Grand Viſier with the Grand Army was expected there; but the Duke, by the report of his Spies and Scouts knew that the Grand Viſier was uncertain whether he ought to proceed with all the Army, or continue about the bridge of Eſſeck, with a great part of his Forces, capable to oppoſe the Croats, which might ruine the ſaid bridge, if he abandoned it, and ſo cut off his retreat. The mines in the Lorrain attack would be ready in two days. The fortification of the Camp was continued, as alſo the perpetual diſcharge of the Cannon and Mortars againſt the beſieged.

Aug. 9. Some thouſands of Turks poſted themſelves not far from the Camp, in an advantageous place, as if they deſigned to prepare themſelves there for ſome attempt; but the Generals had taken ſuch good meaſures, they apprehended nothing, and the Souldiers ſeemed full of courage. All the retrenchments about the Camp were near finiſhed, but being the Turks did frequently alarm them, the Duke ordered, that all the Foot that were not in the Approaches, ſhould be placed in the Lines, and particularly in the Spurs. This morning, a Bomb from the Town falling unhappily into a reſerve of Granado's, fired them, killing 3, and wounding 13. This evening ſome Turks did again appear upon an eminence to the right behind the Bavarian Camp, towards which two Squadrons of them did move in good order, to brave the Beſiegers, but ſome Voluntiers riding out to pickeer with them, they retired with the loſs only of one man ſlain.

Aug. 10. The Imperialiſts continued the finiſhing of their Mine, the two others of the two other Attacks being ready. The Duke cauſed the Hungarian Foot to be poſted along the Wall of the lower Town, from the Water Rondel to the very quarters of the Germans, where they intrenched themſelves with a Ditch and a good Parapet to ſecure them againſt ſurpriſes; and as the Danube is deep there, they ſunk two Barks full of ſtones, and made ſeveral Spurs of Paliſado's along the brink of the River, to take away all hopes of the Turks relieving of the Town that way. This morning the Infidels gave another alarm on the Bavarian quarters, whereupon all the Cavalry was commanded to Horſe, but the Enemy retired at the ſame time. It ſeems that their deſign was to make a paſſage that way, but the Bavarians were ſufficiently intrenched to hinder them. The Prince of Croy being recovered of his wounds, did reaſſume the exerciſe of his charge in the approaches. Four Huſſars very well mounted, advancing againſt ſome Turkiſh Horſe of the place, made as if they would charge them, but being come up with them they diſcourſed them and ſhook hands together, which being obſerved by the Musketiers of a neighbouring Redoubt, they ſallied out and gave fire upon the Huſſars, who ran away, hurt one, which they took, as alſo another of them, the third got away, and the fourth entered into the City. The Priſoners were examined, who ſaid they did nothing but enquire of the Turks, if they would not yet ſurrender the place, but they were to be interrogated more ſtrictly.

Aug. 11. Some Turkiſh Troops did again ſhew themſelves upon the Mountains on the Bavarian ſide towards the way of Alb-Royal. The preciſe number of the Turks is not yet known, ſome Spies certifie that there are 40000 Ottomans, and 20000 Tartars. In the mean time every neceſſary prevention is put in practice to receive them, if they will attempt to force the Camp. Preparations are made for a vigorous aſſault upon the ſecond wall, if the Mines will anſwer expectation.

Aug. 12. All things being ready for the aſſault, the three Mines on the Lorrain attack were fired, which had no other ſucceſs than the turning up of a few Paliſades, the Miners not having pierced deep enough under the Wall of the ſecond Rampart, which made it evident that they did not well underſtand their trade, although they had been ſent for from all quarters, to have good ones, for they were the Mines that contributed the moſt to the reducing of this important place. The aſſault that was deſigned if the Mines had taken, was deferred, and new ones were gone in hand with, in hopes of more favourable ſucceſs. In the skirmiſhes of this day, there was an Officer of the Turks killed, who doubtleſs had engaged himſelf to enter into the place, being they found Letters about him to the Baſſa of Buda, marking the order the Turks were to obſerve to relieve the beſieged; by which it appeared, that the Grand Viſier's deſign was to force a quarter, and ſo put in a Supply into the place without hazarding a battel; and that 8000 Tartars ſhould haraſs the Country as far as Gran, to cut off proviſions from the Beſiegers, and inteſt them with continual courſes. Upon this advice the Duke called a Council of War, where it was reſolved, to leave part of the Army in guard againſt the Town, and to march with the reſt of the Imperial and Auxiliary Forces againſt the Enemy, who according to the ſaid Letters were above 60000 ſtrong, although they had it from good hands, that they did not exceed 40000 Combatants.

Aug. 13. The whole Army marched out of the Lines the night paſt, except 20000 left there for the Guard of the Works, and to hinder the Enemy from putting Supplies into the Place. Oats and Forage were diſtributed for three days for the Horſe, and the Volunteers were formed into a fine

1686 one Body under good Officers. The Duke of Lorrain poſted himſelf out of the Camp in ſight of the Enemies, 4000 Huſſars and Heyducks having the Avant-guard. This night the Spies and ſome Deſerters aſſured them, that the following night they would be attacked in Battel-array upon break of day, which obliged the Chriſtians to diſpoſe of all things for the Battel.

Aug. 14. The Turks before Sun-riſing formed a Body of more than 8000 Janizaries and Spahi's, the moſt brave and moſt reſolute of the Army, who being divided into divers Troops, marched from 6 in the Morning till 8 a clock, curvetting behind the Mountains on the ſide of Alba Regalis, and entered into a Plain the better to approach the Camp by the favour of a Valley. The Duke of Lorrain having obſerved the Enemies countenance, commanded Count Dunewald, General of the Horſe, to take poſſeſſion of the ground to the left with nine Imperial Regiments, Cuiraſiers, Dragoons, and Croats, to which he added ſome Companies of Huſſars; and General Heuſler had order to poſt himſelf with his Detachment upon the height on the right. The Huſſars who were with General Dunewald charg'd firſt, and tho' they fought with all imaginable bravery, they were notwithſtanding forced to give way, but ſeeing themſelves ſupported by the Germans, they took heart and returned to the Charge again. The Turks ſeeing they had routed the Huſſars, thought to have had the others as good cheap; upon theſe hopes, they advanced with great fury and horrible cries againſt the Chriſtians, who received them without moving. Heuſler, who had placed himſelf upon the height mentioned, charged them ſmartly; ſo that the fight was rude and bloudy, and however the Turks ſaw themſelves charged in their Flanks and Front, they did not deſiſt to make uſe of ſeveral efforts to break through the Enemy, and have room to execute their deſign, but all was in vain, being every time repulſed, until they were at length broke and forced to fly. The execution was bloudy. The Janizaries being abandoned by the Spahi's, and environed by their Enemies, throwing away their Arms, ſought to ſave themſelves by flight, but were moſt of them ſlain. The Turks had above 3000 dead, moſt of them Janizaries, all choſen men, who had undertaken to force a quarter, and enter into the City, or periſh. The Grand Viſier had promiſed 20 Ducats to every one that ſhould enter into the City, whereof he gave each undertaker 5 in hand: every one carried beſides his ordinary arms 3 Hand-Granado's, a Mattock and Spade, to break the Retrenchments and fill the Ditches. The Priſoners were 500, there being alſo taken 30 Enſigns and Standards, 11 Pieces of Cannon, and 10 Waggons loaden with Ammunition. This great action coſt the Chriſtians but little, the ſlain not exceeding 60, and the wounded but 33. After this fight the Turks made ſeveral movements, and drew up in a Plain which lookt towards the Bavarian quarter, and keeping their Wings upon heights, they made meen as if they would come to a deciſive battel, or relieve the Place with all their Forces. Hereupon a Council of War was called, where it was reſolved to follow the Enemy; which was done by the Elector of Bavaria in the head of his Army, but the Turks apprehending an Engagement, retired. The Generals Dunewald and Heuſler purſued them beyond the Mountains, and the Huſſars had another skirmiſh with a great Party of Turks which ſtayed behind to amuſe the Chriſtians, and favour the retreat of their Army. The booty the Chriſtians got was conſiderable, for they had all the ſpoil of the Enemy, whereof there was not one that had not the 5 Duckets which the Grand Viſier had given him beſides his own moneys. The Beſieged thinking they were already relieved, made great fire upon them that kept the Approaches, and ſuppoſed they might ruine ſome of the Enemies works, but in vain, for they were ſo briskly received, that they loſt the deſire of risking further. They however made a very furious ſally on the Bavarian attack, which was fatal to them, for they were not only repelled by the Regiments of Baden and Aſpremont, but the retreat being cut off, there was great ſlaughter made of them. The Turks being retired without coming to a deciſive battel, the Army returned into their Lines, and immediately diſpatched young Count Palfi to the Emperour with the news of this great advantage, and to lay 28 Colours and Standards at his feet, that were taken in the late engagement. The reſt, for ſome were taken in the purſuit, were planted upon the great Rondel, to make the Beſieged comprehend the defeat of thoſe Succours that they had expected with ſo much impatience. 1686

Aug. 15. The Germans and Huſſars ſcouting abroad brought ſome Priſoners in, who all agreed in this, that the Grand Viſier notwithſtanding this check, would not deſiſt making other attempts to put relief into the Town, tho' with the hazard of his whole Army. And in effect, however he was retired, he did not ceaſe to alarm the Camp every night. This Afternoon a ſignal was made to the Beſieged for a Parley, to inform them by the Janizaries Priſoners of the rout of their Succours; but whether they perceived this within or not, they anſwered by the fire of their great and ſmall ſhot.

Aug. 16. The works of the three Attacks were purſued with vigour, and in the Morning the Beſieged's Palizadoes and Defences of Wood upon the Breach were fired in the Lorrain Attack, and partly conſumed by the Flames, notwithſtanding all the diligence of the Turks to extinguiſh them. In this Action they threw a prodigious quantity of Stones, Granadoes, Sacks with Powder, and other combuſtible matters upon the Aſſailants, inſomuch that four of them who fired them were burnt, twelve Crowns a man being given to each of thoſe who engaged themſelves in this Service as a recompence, and yet they could not clear the way for an Aſſault, the Beſieged having taken their time in the Night to plant other Palizadoes and repair their Defences. In the Bavarian Attack, the Caſtle and the great Tower were inceſſantly beaten, which were as it were overturn'd by the force of the Cannon.

Aug. 17. All things were ready for the Aſſault in the Lorrain Attack, but the Beſieged having repaired their Defences, and planted double rows of Palizadoes behind thoſe that were burnt yeſterday, they were obliged to defer it. The Priſoners that the Huſſars brought to the Camp reported, that the Grand Viſier was extreamly in choler againſt the Commander of the Spahi's, for not having done his duty in the fight on the 14*th* inſtant, by abandoning the Janizaries, and added, that of the ten thouſand men which were appointed for that enterpriſe, but very few returned to the Camp.

Aug. 18. The two great Mines in the Lorrain Attack were fired, but neither with that Succeſs that the Miners had promiſed, which extremely retarded the Reduction of this important Place. The Duke ſeeing they advanced but little by Mining, reſolved on Sapping, for which end, preparation of Faggots and Sacks of Earth were made to fill the Ditch, and certain Engines were deviſed to approach the Enemies with leſs peril, and drive them from their Poſt. A new Battery was raiſed on the right to beat down the Beſiegeds flanks of Palizadoes on the Breach; and to do it more effectually they were to ſhoot from the Battery on the Curtain with chained Bullets. A Fugitive from the Turkiſh Army reported amongſt other things, that the Grand Viſier was encamped at preſent at Ertſchin, 4 Leagues from the City, but that he would not deſiſt from attempting the relief of the Place, being only removed to that diſtance for want of Forrage. The Bavarians ſeized a Country Fellow who had ſwum the Danube, having Letters from the Governour to the Grand Viſier and the Aga of the Janizaries, in which he conjures them by the 1686 Law of Mahomet to ſucrour him, adding he would expect the laſt extremity.

Aug. 19. The Beſieged defending themſelves with obſtinate Valour, ſpent this whole day in thundring with their Artillery upon the new Lorrain Battery, which had been raiſed to beat upon the flanks of the Palizadoes, and whereon they had mounted 4 great Guns, which they ſo ruined that it was rendred uſeleſs for the preſent. The Detachments from the Grand Viſiers Army continued to alarm the Chriſtians Camp every Night, who to prevent Surprizes, were continually upon their Guard. General Scherfenberg was expected in few days with thoſe Troops he commanded in Tranſilvania. As ſoon as this body was arriv'd, they pretended to go and attack the Grand Viſier in his Camp, who by report of Priſoners and Run-aways, did not exceed 40000 men, whereof half were new raw Fellows without Diſcipline or Order. Strong parties were every day ſent out to obſerve the Enemies Countenance, who often ſhock with theirs, but always with Advantage.

Aug. 20. The Grand Viſier reſolved to make another attempt to introduce Supplies into Buda, would do it with fewer Troops than before, the better to paſs undiſcover'd, and be able to approach the Chriſtian Camp. He choſe for this purpoſe the braveſt Officers in his Army, who promiſed to execute his order or periſh. They began their march in the Night with 2000 Spahis, and the like number of Janizaries, who were mounted for the greater Expedition, and this Morning at break of day they appear'd in the Valley of St. Paul, where having been put in order without being perceived, ruſhed, as their manner is, with great Cryes upon the firſt Guard, which they defeated eaſie enough, and forced upon two ſquadrons of Horſe of Caprara and Heuſlers, who received them courageouſly, giving others time to haſten to their aſſiſtance, and chaſe the Turks, who fled. The Janizaries, whereof part had quitted their Horſes with deſign to traverſe the Trenches, and get into the City, were ill treated, they were purſued by General Heuſler to the very Gate, and met by the Guard of Bavarian Horſe, who haſtned to the allarm, ſo that their ſlaughter was there very great, and few had the fortune to enter into the City; and though ſome make them amount to 150, they were ſcarce 100 that got in, which may be eaſily judged by the abandoned Horſes, which did not ſurpaſs the ſaid number, ſo that this feeble ſupply was of no great uſe to the Beſieged, and if thoſe of the advanced Guard had done their duty, not one of them had paſſed the Trenches. The Turks had 400 ſlain, and the Chriſtians not above 15; and 26 hurt. General Heuſler, who behaved himſelf with his accuſtomed Gallantry, was hurt in the foot, but not dangerouſly. General Maigret was handled worſe, being ſeverely ſabled, and Marquis Santini, a Knight of Malta, was taken Priſoner in the firſt heat of the fight. The Beſieged, to teſtifie their Joy for the arrival of theſe Succours, flouriſhed three red Colours in token of Victory, and fired three Salvos with all their Artillery and ſmall ſhot, which gave the Beſiegers a gueſs at the ſmallneſs of their number, which the Renegadoes yet affirm ſurpaſs the number of 2000 ſerviceable men. During the late ſhock, ſome ſquadrons of thoſe of the Grand Viſier, who had followed the other to ſecond them, appear'd in Battalia towards the Bavarian Attack, as if deſigning to try their fortune that way, but they retired without engaging: and yet they returned about ten at night to the ſame place they had attempted the paſſage that morning, but they were repelled, and retreated in diſorder. In the Bavarian attack there was a new Battery raiſed of four Pieces: and the beſieged mounted a great Gun upon the high wall of the Caſtle, with which they beat all the covered way, as alſo the Battery of the Bavarians upon the great Rondel.

Aug. 21. Notwithſtanding the Grand Viſier cauſed 5000 Tartars to paſs the Danube, who ravag'd the other ſide of the River, and incommoded the adverſe [illegible] ragers by their courſes; All things are in abun[illegible] in the Camp, and the Convoys arrive there [illegible] by Water. General Scherfenberg is expected in 7 or 8 days with 10000 men, having orders to mount his Foot in Charets, for fear of tiring them with ſo long a march. Twelve hundred Swediſh Foot are likewiſe expected, being the remainder of the Troops which the King of Sweden is obliged to ſend, to aſſiſt the Emperour againſt the Infidels, upon account of his quota for thoſe Fiefs which he poſſeſſes in Germany. This morning a Redoubt was built in that place which the Turks forced yeſterday; it was further fortified with two pieces of Cannon, and Troops capable to defend the paſſage. There was alſo another Redoubt built on the Mountain on the left, where the Regiment of Lodron was camped. This day the Beſieged did yet give ſome Volleys of rejoycing, whereof the reaſon is not known, unleſs it be ſome particular feaſt. The Sieur Rummel, General of the Bavarian Troops, being in the approaches, was ſlain there with a Muſquet bullet. He is much regretted, having diſtinguiſhed himſelf in all the occaſions where he might acquire glory.

Aug. 22. The Elector of Bavaria cauſed the great Tower to be aſſaulted, which is in the middle of the Caſtle, and for the moſt part ruined by his Cannon. He took it with the loſs of 73 Soldiers, and the like number wounded, amongſt which, the Duke of Saxe-Mersburg was hurt in two places. Whilſt this aſſault laſted, there was a falſe alarm given on the Lorrain ſide to divert the enemy, and much firing there was with Cannon to ruine the Defences which they had made upon the breaches of the inner Wall. This evening about 10 a clock, a Turk, who had ſwum the River, was taken near the Iſle of St. Margaret, he had thrown his Letters into the water, and yet confeſſed that he had been ſent by the Baſſa, to give advice to the Grand Seignior of the ſtate of the place, and preſs for relief: adding, that another was alſo gone with the ſame condition.

Aug. 23. The beſieged made an attempt upon the Bavarian Attack, to recover the great Tower of the Caſtle, which they had yeſterday loſt by aſſault, but they were repelled and beat back to their Retrenchments. At the Lorrain Attack four pieces were planted upon the great old Battery, wherewith they began to batter the new Paliſades upon the Breach of the inner Wall. The Night paſt the Beſieged ſallied upon the Saxon's quarter, but they were ſo well received and repulſed by Lieutenant Collonel Pleitze, who was upon the Guard with 100 horſe, that they had much to do to recover their ſecond Wall, where this Officer was ſlain with two Musket-ſhot, and the Turks had yet the leiſure to drag his Corps into the City.

Aug. 24. The Turks appeared in two ſeparate Bodies, the one at the Lorrain, and the other at the Bavarian attack, but without attempting any thing, and retired about noon into their Camp, which they had advanced a League nearer the Chriſtians than they were before. A Renegado out of Town reported, that the Beſieged began to ſpeak with more licentiouſneſs againſt the Baſſa, who endeavoured to keep them to their duty, telling them, that the Grand Viſier expected one of the firſt Miniſters of State from the Port, with full power from the Grand Seignior, to treat and conclude a Peace with the Generals of the Chriſtians; and that upon his arrival there would be a ſuſpenſion of Arms; exhorting them not to degenerate from the bravery and vertue of true Muſſelmen, whoſe glory they had hitherto ſo generouſly ſupported, but to expect yet ſome few days before they talked of ſurrendring.

Aug. 25. The Duke of Lorrain being advertiſed, that the Turks might contrive a paſſage on the Danube ſide, behind the hot Baths, to put Succours into the Town, ordered ſome Squadrons of Horſe to ſecond the 1686 the Guards, which were at the ſame time reinforced, and to the end the acceſs might be rendred the more difficult for the Turks, he cauſed Paliſado's to be planted in the moſt weak places, and cauſed ſome Squadrons and Battalions of Germans and Hungarians to be poſted in ſuch manner, that if the Turks would make ſome other attempt, they might eaſily be tranſported and haſten to the Alarm. Some change was alſo made in two Batteries, the better to incommode the Beſieged, and deſtroy their Parapets, Paliſado's, and other defences which they had rais'd upon the breach of the inner Wall. In the Bavarian attack they got ground foot by foot, ſo that they will in a little time be Maſters of all the Caſtle, notwithſtanding the oppoſition of the braveſt Enemy imaginable, who never loſe an inch of ground without diſputing it, and endeavour to recover it by often repriſals, making uſe for this purpoſe of Bombs, Granado's, Stones, Sacks with Powder, Stink-Pots, and other arts which courage and deſpair are capable of inventing to break the meaſures of the Agreſſors, and obſtruct their violence; and as they have made divers holes and caverns under the places, in poſſeſſion of the Chriſtians, by which they play theſe ſorts of inventions, the other were conſtrained to fill them with earth, ſtones, and the very ruines of the Caſtle, to damp and hinder their operation, without which they could not maintain themſelves, but with great difficulty.

Aug. 26. The Priſoners brought in the Camp by Parties, and the Deſerters which ran away reported, that one of thoſe which was ſent to the Grand Viſier by the Baſſa of Buda with Diſpatches, in which he gave him an account of the ſtate of the place, which he can no more defend at preſent, that the Caſtle is well-nigh all in the hands of the Chriſtians, who on the firſt aſſault cannot fail to carry the place. That in the laſt aſſault of the Caſtle he had loſt more than 100 of his beſt Soldiers, that the Recruits that were ſent him were but little conſiderable, not mounting to 200 men, amongſt which, more than half were wounded, and conſequently unſerviceable. That for his part he had acquitted himſelf of his duty, by letting the Chriſtians ſee, that after a defence ſo obſtinate, during ſo long a Siege, puſhed on with ſo much fury and bravery both on the one ſide and the other, that the Muſſelmen knew well how to ſupport the cauſe of their Sultan, in doing whereof he pretended to his ſhare of glory, profeſſing finally that the Grand Viſier ought to give an account of the ill ſucceſs of the Siege, and be reſponſible for a loſs ſo conſiderable, which he could not avoid, if the Imperialiſts attempted another aſſault, no more than the bloud of his valorous Soldiers, and his own, if he delayed their relief any longer. The Baſſa did further mark the places in his Letter, which appear'd to him the moſt proper to attempt the relief by, and if he took his meaſures well, that he would ſucceed in his enterpriſe. Upon this advice the Duke viſited in perſon the place marked to the Grand Viſier, and gave orders for every thing to hinder the introducing of ſupplies. The Spies which were ſent to the Enemies Camp, reported, that the Grand Viſier had again promiſed 40 Crowns a man to all them who would undertake to put themſelves into the place, promiſing moreover that they ſhould be exempt from the War during their lives, and enjoy their ordinary pay without the obligation of any ſervice. At noon advice was given that the Turks advanced with 12 great pieces of Cannon, and a while after they were perceived in ſight of the Camp ranged in order of Battel, but as the Duke of Lorrain diſpoſed his Army to fight, they retired.

Aug. 27. The Lorrainers having finiſhed their work in form of a Bridg, it was extended to the adverſe Paliſades to be made uſe of in the aſſault. It was covered with earth to ſecure it from the fire, as had been done the day before in the Bavarian attack, which had obliged the ſaid Bavarians to retire, but this morning they recovered their Poſt again, and to ſecure them from the fire, they made uſe of Planks covered with Tin, and yet when they thought themſelves ſafe from this devouring Element, the Beſieged, who want no induſtry to their valour, threw towards evening an immenſe quantity of artificial and combuſtible matters with that ſucceſs, that they piereed even to the ſaid Planks, and reduced them to aſhes; they alſo flung ſuch a vaſt quantity of Granado's, Stones and Arrows upon the Bavarians, that they forced them to abandon this Poſt with the loſs of twenty Souldiers. 1686

Aug. 28. In the Lorrain attack, they thundred with extreme violence from their Cannon upon the Flanks of the great Breach, as did alſo the Brandenburgers to overthrow the Beſieged's defences. The Bavarians regained their Poſt, and covered themſelves ſo well in it, that the Enemy would be much troubled to dislodg them. Major Staben, who commanded the Aſſailants, was killed there, the ſlain and wounded not otherwiſe exceeding 20. Upon the Report of ſome Renegado's that the Grand Viſier was reſolved to come this Night with all his Forces, the Duke ordered all things for his reception, and all the Army ſtood in Battalia, but to no purpoſe, for no Enemy did appear.

Aug. 29. Being the Decollation of St. John Baptiſt, and a day which the Turks have always ſuperſtitiouſly obſerv'd as fortunate to their Empire, 1000 Spahi's and 2000 Janizaries commanded by two Baſſa's, and ſeconded by 1500 Tartars, came at break of day to make another trial on the Water ſide, but ſeeing the Poſt too well provided on that quarter, having received a diſcharge from the Muskettcers that kept the Walls, they retreated, and judged it eaſier to try the paſſage by the ſame way that the laſt Supplies entred; they went by the Valley of St. Paul, and charged fiercely with their accuſtomed ſhouts upon the Regiments of Marcy, Heuſſer, and Newburg, who received them with ſo much bravery, that they killed a great number of them, whereof ſome of the moſt determined were raſh enough to puſh through to the very Lines, where they were all ſlain except 4, who were lucky enough to get into the City. The number of the dead in this action amounted to 600, beſides the Priſoners, which were not many; and there were taken 25 Standards and Colours which were red, intimating thereby, that they would enter the City or periſh. On the other ſide ſome 30 were killed and wounded, Mercy was of the number of the laſt, but without danger, and his Adjoutant of the firſt. During this Tentative the Beſieged made a ſally upon the Bavarians, but the Heyducks attacking them in Flank, they had much a-do to retire, leaving 17 dead upon the place. The Grand Viſier ſhewed himſelf with his Army all day on the Bavarian ſide, ready to engage, but ſeeing 3 Regiments of Cuiraſiers, and two of Dragoons, being the Avant-Guard of General Scherfenberg's Army, he quickly retreated back to his Camp.

Aug. 30. Scherfenberg arrived this day with the reſt of his Body, proper men, who ſeem'd eager to ſignalize themſelvs. The Deſerters reported, that the want was great in the Grand Viſier's Army, and that the famiſhed Soldiers had plundered ſome Barks which had brought Proviſions, the Officers not being able to hinder them.

Aug. 31. The Lorrainers took a new Poſt in the Ditch before the Breach in the inner Wall, but 3 fadom diſtant from the Paliſade, and the place being very deep; the Turks could not much hurt them, where they had but 2 Soldiers wounded. This Morning the Duke of Lorrain went, accompanied with moſt of the Generals, to the Elector's quarters, where they held a Council of War, and having dined there, the Duke returned to his Quarters, after which the Works were ordered to be enlarged and deepned for the eaſier aſcent to the Aſſault, which was reſolved upon in a day or two.

Sept. 1. Three thouſand Turks appeared before day by Moon-light on the Bavarian ſide, but ſeeing the Chriſtians in good order and ready to receive them, 1686 they retired without any Engagement. The Great Chancellor, Count Straatman, being arrived yeſterday at the Camp with a ſecret Commiſſion, called a Council of War, in which the Duke of Lorrain, the Elector of Bavaria, and all the Imperial and Auxiliary Generals did meet. The Chancellor expoſed his Commiſſion, which contained his Imperial Majeſtie's deſires to put an end to this bloody Siege, and that they ſhould conſult on the means the moſt proper and expedient for the terminating of it. Two points were chiefly deliberated upon; whether they ſhould go with the greateſt part of the Army, leaving a ſufficient number to guard the Lines, to force the Grand Viſier, or ſhould make a General aſſault upon the place, and that with more Forces than had hitherto been employed. The latter was approved by moſt of the Generals, and it was reſolved to aſſault the place the next day, for which purpoſe every thing that was neceſſary was prepared, that the enterpriſe might not fail: and leſt the Enemy might know it, it was given out, that they would the next day go and fight the Grand Viſier, which cauſed great joy amongſt the Officers and Souldiers, deſirous of ſignalizing themſelves. The Cannon of all the attacks were in the mean time imployed to inlarge the Breaches, and caſt down the Enemies fences.

Sept. 2. All the Generals mounted on Horſeback, and the Troops put themſelves in order to quit the Lines, and go to their place of Arms, and march towards the Grand Viſier, making as if they would go and attack them in their Camp. The Duke of Lorrain, and the Elector of Bavaria, viſited their Quarters, encouragaing the Officers and Souldiers to maintain the cauſe of God, and the Glory of the Emperour. The Infantry was rayged into Battalions whilſt the firing in the three attacks was redoubled, and a vaſt quantity of Bombs and chained Bullets were ſhot againſt the beſiegeds defences, which were for the moſt part thrown down; and as the Troops were put in order to march towards the Grand Viſier, the motion of the Vanguard was inſtantly changed, and at three in the Afternoon the Infantry that compoſed the Rear-guard was commanded to mount to the aſſault, which was done in the three differing attacks of Lorrain, Brandenburg, and Bavaria, beſides which there were two falſe attacks to divert the Enemy. And however that all imaginary precautions were put in uſe to render the aſſault eaſie, they encountred ſo brave a defence in the beſieged, that they had much ado to ſurmount them; they defended themſelves for three quarters of an hour with Halbirds, Half-Pikes, Partizans, and threw ſuch a vaſt number of Stones, Arrows, and Granades, that they repulſed the Aſſailants more than once, until the Chriſtians, encouraged by the preſence of their Generals, returning with greater force, rendred themſelves at length Maſters of the Breach in all the three attacks. The Turks defended themſelves by retiring from Retrenchment to Retrenchment, ſo that the ſlaughter was very bloody; and to conclude, the beſieged being beaten from all their fences, the Aſſailants entred by force into the City, ran thro' the ſtreets, killed all they met with, ſparing neither Sex nor Age, ſo that all was filled with the dead bodies of theſe Infidels. The Bavarians, in purſuit of their point, attack'd 1000 Turks, who retired into a Redoubt at the foot of the Caſtle, where they defended themſelves with extream Obſtinacy, until deſpairing of their ſafety, they hung out a white Flag, and demanded quarter; but as they had ſlain many of the Aggreſſors, and had reſiſted two whole hours without ſubmitting, the Duke of Lorrain, and the Elector of Bavaria were of Opinion they ſhould have no quarter given them; but conſidering their number, that they might yet do much harm, that the Night was coming on, and that the Souldiers were wearied, and ought to reſt, that the Grand Viſier was not far off with a formidable Army, and that the fire was in ſeveral parts of the City, reducing all to Aſhes; it was reſolved they ſhould have their Lives given them; which being notified to them, they, miſerable [illegible] Bravos, threw down their Arms. There were about 1000 more, who being retired into Cellars and Caverns obtained the ſame grace. The number of the ſlain amounted to 3000, beſides the wounded, who were but few, ſo that the Garriſon was ſtronger than it had been reported by the fugitives to have been.

Abdi Baſſa died bravely in the Breach, where he fought valiantly with his Sable in his hand, without giving back or demanding quarter, not to degenerate from the glory and heroick Vertue of the antient Ottomans, nor falſifie the Oath which he made to the Grand Seignior to preſerve him the place, or to end his days glorioufly in it. The Vice Baſſa is alſo an Officer of great reputation, he had defended the Caſtle, and ſeeing that all was loſt, retired fighting into the already mentioned Redoubt at the foot of the Caſtle, where he thought to hold it out, and give the Grand Viſier leiſure to come and relieve him; but ſeeing that all was deſperate, he choſe rather to implore the Clemency of the Conquerours, than ſuffer himſelf and thoſe that were with him to be maſſacred without any advantage to his party, and ſo he was made a Priſoner with thoſe with him, by the Bavarians. The Aga of the Janizaries, and ſome chief Officers fell to the Duke of Lorrains ſhare, ſo that the number of Priſoners did not exceed 2000, of 13000 brave expert Souldiers, and the very Nerves of the Ottoman Empire, which were in the place at the beginning of the Siege. The Chriſtians loſs in this aſſault was inconſiderable, not above 400 ſlain, and halt as many wounded, in which number were many Voluntiers, but few Officers. Colonel Spinola, an Officer of good merit, was killed at the head of the Aſſailants, and Baron Aſti, who had been twice already hurt during the Siege, received now a third, which was feared would prove fatal.

The plunder which the Souldiers got was extraordinary, the riches of this City were vaſtly great, which thoſe of the other Cities of Hungary under the domination of the Turks brought thither, as to a place of refuge and impregnable. There were found Ammunition and Proviſions ſufficient for two Months longer. The Arſenal was full of all ſorts of offenſive and defenſive Arms to arm 30000 men, Harneſſes, Saddles, Boots, and other equipage for Horſes, beſides 400 pieces of Cannon and Mortars, whereof 170 were mounted, and no way prejudiced. It is impoſſible to particularize every thing, it may ſuffice to ſay, that a City could not be better furniſhed to ſupport a Siege vigorouſly than this was, nor defended by a more brave Garriſon. But if the oppoſition hath been ſurpriſing, ſo much greater is the glory of thoſe brave Officers, Voluntiers, and Souldiers, that ſignalized themſelves there in the forcing of it.

The Duke of Lorrain having put a ſtop to the ſlaughter, and ordered the Soldiers to return to their Colours, commanded the fire to be extinguiſhed, gave the command of the place to Baron Beck, till the Emperor's pleaſure was known, with a Garriſon of 5000 Foot and 1000 Horſe; He farther commanded 10000 Horſe and Dragoons with Badiani's Huſſars to purſue the Grand Viſier, who having ſeen the taking of Buda, diſcamped inſtantly with all his Army, to go cover the reſt of the Turkiſh Fortreſſes, put good Garriſons into them, and ſo ſecure the Bridge of Eiſeck, where it was reſolved to go and attack him, if they could not overtake him, for which end the Infantry was imbarked upon the Danube for their eaſier tranſport, whilſt the Cavalry marched by Land.

And thus this great and ſtrong City, after 145 years of Bondage under the Turkiſh Yoak, was now at length, after having been ſix times beſieged in vain, taken, and reſtored to the dominion of the Emperor. It had been of great ſervice to the Ottomans, as being their principal place of Arms, from whence they ſent their Forces and Munitions of War into the other Cities and Fortreſſes of their obedience, for they ſtill kept there a numerous Garriſon of 8 or 10000 Janizaries 1686 zaries and Spahi's, as in a Nurſery, and ready upon all occaſions.

A Detachment, as we ſaid, of 10000 Horſe being ſent in purſuit of the Grand Viſier by Land, and 10000 Foot, with 30 Cannon, Mortars, Ammunition, and all ſort of Proviſions, were ſent down the Danube in large Boats, with order to fortifie themſelves in ſome convenient Poſt near the Bridge of Eſſeck, whilſt orders were ſent to the Forces in Croatia to joyn them, in order to cut off the Enemies retreat. The main Army did alſo follow, but the want of Forrage in a waſted Country forced them to ſeparate, and to paſs the River ſome 12 Miles below Buda, with deſign to beſiege Segedin, whilſt the reſt continued their march towards Eſſeck, and joyn with the Croatian Forces, a Party of which had inſulted and burnt the Town of Quinque Eccleſiæ, or five Churches, forcing the Turks into the Caſtle.

The Duke of Lorrain having cauſed a Bridge of Boats to be laid over the Danube at Paxi, ſeveral Parties of Horſe were ſent out, who met with no Enemy, the Turks having abandoned the ſmall places they were poſſeſſed of on both ſides the River, after having removed their Cannon and ſtore, and laid theſe places in aſhes. Count Caprara is deſigned to beſiege Segedin, but the deſign upon the Bridge of Eſſeck could not be executed at this time, the Countrey being ſo extremely ruined, that the Troops were not able to ſubſiſt in their march thither. The Turks had likewiſe abandoned Tuln and Hatwan, the Garriſon of the laſt being removed to Erlaw or Agria, after it had been moſt miſerably deſtroyed. The Duke, upon freſh advice that the Grand Viſier had not paſſed the Bridge of Eſſeck as was reported, but had poſted himſelf very ſtrongly and advantageouſly on this ſide, with 20000 men, ſeemed to alter his mind, and to go and beat up his Quarters, before he were further recruited from Belgrade. He had put 8000 of his beſt men into Alba Regalis, having given a Horſe to every Janizary, the better to make excurſions upon the Chriſtians in the Winter. Prince Lewis of Baden was detached from the main Army, with 12 Regiments of Horſe and Foot, to go and beſiege Five-Churches, but the meaſures were ſo taken, that he might joyn his Forces to the Duke's in caſe it were requiſite, or that the Grand Viſier might be brought to a battel. He was encamped near the Bridge of Eſſeck, having the Fortreſs of Darda behind him, the Danube on his right, and the Hills on his left, and his Front covered with the River Sarwitz, over which the Duke of Lorrain had cauſed Bridges to be laid, to oblige the Turks to repaſs the Bridge of Eſſeck, or to ſtand a Battel. But the ſeaſon being too far advanced, he encamped at Tuln, and paſſing no farther, leaving part of the Army under Caprara, to paſs the Danube in order to the Siege of Segedin, he returned towards Buda, and being encamped with 10 Regiments not far from Peſt, ſent a Party to poſſeſs themſelves of Hatwan, intirely ruined, tho' the Turks had left 17 Pieces of Cannon, which they wanted time and conveniencies to carry away. The reſidue of the Foot were put into Buda to reinforce that place, weakened by the departure of the Brandenburg and Saxon Troops, whilſt the Duke himſelf after ſo glorious a Campain returned into Germany. The remaining Horſe and Dragoons were ſent under General Veterani to reinforce the Imperial Forces before Segedin, upon advice that Achmet Baſſa was marching with a Body of Turks and Tartars to relieve it. General Wallis, who commanded the Imperialiſts, hearing the Infidels advanced towards him, ordered Major General Veterani to march towards night with 7 Regiments of Horſe, the Croats of Lodron, and the Dragoons of Caſtelli and Magnè, which they did, and at break of day ſurpriſing the Tartars, eaſily routed them; nor did the Turks make any conſiderable reſiſtance, the ſpirit of that People formerly ſo martial, being actuated by ſuch a current of misfortunes into deſpondency. The Chriſtians, being upon their return to their Camp with their ſpoil, were attacked by the Grand Viſier himſelf at the head of above 12000 Turks, but with equal ſucceſs, theſe being likewiſe utterly defeated, without any extraordinary combating. Twelve pieces of Cannon, and all their Baggage, with 3000 Horſes were taken. The ſlain were eſtimated above 2000. Segedin, ſeeing their relief defeated, capitulated, being admitted to march with what they could carry, except their Arms, to Temeſwar. 1686

But the ſtrong Caſtle of Five Churches had not ſo good quarters. They had quitted the Town upon the arrival of the Chriſtians, and retired into the Caſtle, but after 4 days battery, ſurrendred it at diſcretion, the Women only and Children being conducted to Valpo, whilſt the Baſſa, 600 Janizaries, and 2000 others fit to bear arms, were made Priſoners of War. The Prince of Baden, having put a good Garriſon into the place, divided his Army into two Bodies, one marched with General Scherffenberg towards Syclos, deſigning, after having made himſelf Maſter of that place, to march towards the Bridge of Eſſeck. Nor did they of Syclos defend themſelves much better than the reſt, they only burnt the Town, not to keep the Caſtle ſcarce to terms of diſcretion. The Prince marched thence to Darda, which he, although it were ſtrong, being ſeated upon the Danube, and covering the Bridg on one ſide, found abandoned, the Turks being retired into Eſſeck, leaving only a few Horſe to obſerve the Enemy, who, upon their advance, fled immediately. The Prince, having taken poſſeſſion of Darda, ſent Parties out to burn the Bridg of Eſſeck with artificial fires, which they ſo happily executed, notwithſtanding the Turks played upon them all the time with their Cannon from Eſſeck, that they quite deſtroyed the Bridge from Darda to the Drave, as likewiſe the Bridg of Boats which the Turks had over that River. Oct. 22.

The Prince of Baden, after this exploit, marched back towards Capeſwar, with 1200 Priſoners of both Sexes and Ages, which place he purpoſed to poſſeſs, and had delivered upon demand, after which he reſolved for his Winter Quarters. The Croats alſo that had hitherto joyned him, did likewiſe return home with Booty, and ſtore of Priſoners. N:

And this was the end of this famous Campain in Hungary, ſo glorious to the Chriſtians, and ſo unfortunate to the Ottomans, ſo that theſe who uſed to give and ſell Peace at pleaſure formerly, became now earneſt Sollicitors themſelves for it, thinking themſelves in ſuch a condition, that nothing but a ſpeedy Peace could reſtore them. The Grand Viſier, being ſenſible of this, made ſeveral efforts to effectuate it. He had lately made Overtures to General Caraffa, who commanded the Imperial Forces in upper Hungary, but now Letters are ſent to Prince Herman of Baden, Preſident of the Council of War, telling him how deſirous the Port was of Peace, and with what advantage to the Emperour it might be concluded in this Conjuncture, propoſing further, that a Place might be appointed for Plenipotentiaries on both ſides to meet, and that Paſſports might be diſpatched for that purpoſe.

And 'tis no wonder the Turks were ſo earneſt for Peace, having been ſo unſucceſsful in War, and the diſorders it produced. 'Tis ſcarce imaginable what confuſion and terror the taking of Buda, and the ſlaughter of that Garriſon did produce through the whole Empire, eſpecially Conſtantinople. The People began to murmur, and the Chief of them to Cabal, which ſo ſtartled the Grand Seignior, that after having doubled his Guards, he ſent to them to know the meaning of their unuſual meeting; they anſwered, that ſeeing him and his Empire in ſuch danger, they thought it their duty to conſult together how they might preſerve both. They blamed the Mufti as an ill man, who had fomented the War, not without ſome reflection upon his Highneſs himſelf, as too Diſorders at Conſtantinople.

1686 intent upon his ſports, and too little mindful of this his chief City. The Grand Seignior thought it beſt to comply with theſe Reformers, in order to which he immediately depoſes and baniſhes the Mufti, chuſing Huſſin Effendi Codiliskr in his Place; and putting off a general hunting which he had appointed, cauſed all his Grey-hounds, the beſt his Empire afforded, to be turned looſe, a Prey to any that pleaſed; he daily now frequents the Moſques inſtead of the Campain, giving out that he will himſelf take the field next Spring againſt the Germans. This change, and the certainty of the Viſier Azems coming to aſſiſt at the great Council for regulating the next Campaign, did at preſent quiet the diſcontents of the People, tho' their fears ſeem'd incurable. There was alſo a great Reform made in the Seraglio, with a Retrenchment of the ſalaries and perquiſites of the principal Officers of it. There was alſo an extraordinary Council held in the preſence of the Grand Seignior to conſider of the way to put the Ottoman Forces, which are now extreamly broken, into a condition to oppoſe the further progreſs of the Chriſtian Arms. And being Mony is the principal ingredient, the Grand Seignior made offer of all his Treaſure to be imployed in the War. The Sultana Queen gave 4000 Purſes of 500 Crowns each, and the chief Officers of the Seraglio preſented great ſums. And yet all this cannot cure their fears, nor remove the Plague, ſweeping away 1000 a day in Conſtantinople and Galata, to which Calamities the ſcarcity of Proviſions may be added, occaſioned by the Coſſacks diſturbing the Commerce of the black Sea, and the Chriſtians that of the Alexandria and the Arches.

Nor was it with theſe hardſhips only that the Turks were to contend, they had yet no leſs powerful Enemies, the Poles and the Venetians, whoſe Hiſtories we have for method ſake referred to their proper Claſſes. What they did the laſt year, is diſtinctly related, and we ſhall be no leſs particular in the actions of this, which are of more noiſe, and no leſs lugubrious conſequence to the Ottoman Empire, eſpecially the latter.

The Affairs of Poland.

The Poles were much earlier in the field this year, and ſtronger than the laſt. Their Forces conſiſted of 20000 Poles 15000 Lituanians, and 10000 Coſſacks, with a great train of Artillery, and being met at their general Rendezvouz at Trembowla, marched toward the Nieſter with the King at the head of them. The Turks being inferior in their Preparations, had abandon'd Barr and Miedzibos, ſending thoſe Garriſons with all their ſtores to ſtrengthen Caminiec, where the Tartars had likewiſe lately conducted a Convoy.

July 14.

The King being come to the frontier of Moldavia, expected that the Hoſpodars of that Country and Walachia ſhould, as they had promiſed, joyn their Forces to the Army of the Crown, which they were inclin'd enough to do, but that they dreaded the Turkiſh Power. The Poles having paſt the River, they advanced to the Forreſt of Bucovina, where they had been engaged with the Turks laſt year; but to ſecure their paſſages now, the King cauſed ſeveral Redoubts to be built to guard the avenues of the Foreſt, and conſequently ſecure his retreat. Theſe being finiſhed, he marched towards Jaſſi, the Capital City of Moldavia, to give the Hoſpodar an opportunity to joyn his Forces with him, as he had promiſed. But this Prince, thinking it too ſoon as yet to declare, retired upon the News he had of the Kings approaching, notwithſtanding the aſſurances his Majeſty had given him of his Friendſhip and Protection. The King being come as far as Pererit in Moldavia, cauſed a Royal Fort to be built on the ſide of the River Prutti, to ſecure a Retreat, and the paſſage of Convoy, for it was very difficult to ſubſiſt in thoſe harraſſed Countries, which the Turks and Tartars had near ruin'd. Whilſt the Army was upon its march, the Hoſpodar ſent Deputies to the King to excuſe his retiring from Jaſſi, and his not joyning Forces with thoſe of his Majeſty, ſeeing he could not now openly declare without expoſing his Children to certain deſtruction, having been forc'd to deliver them as Hoſtages to the Turks. The King replyed, that he could never meet with a more favourable conjuncture to ſhake off the Ottoman Yoak than now, being he was come in Perſon to deliver him from it; he expected now the performance of his reiterated Promiſes, which if he did not make good, he ſhould be neceſſitated to treat him as a declared Enemy. The King continuing his march, came to Jaſſi, which he found not only abandoned by the Prince, but alſo the Garriſon and principal Inhabitants. Thoſe that remained opened their Gates to the Troops his Majeſty ſent thither, and furniſhed them with ſome Proviſions.

1686 Aug. 21

Some Tartars taken by a party, reported, that the Serauskier had paſſed the Danube near Axiopolis, with 15 or 16000 men, that he expected 6000 more, which when come up, he intended to march towards Beſſarabia to joyn the Tartars commanded by Sultan Nuraden, reported to be 30000 ſtrong. The Armies approaching each other occaſioned many encounters. The King continued his march on this ſide the River Prutti as far as Falſyn. The Court Marſhal, who commanded the Vauntguard of the Army, encountring with a party of Tartars of 8000, engaged them, both fighting with great Courage, but the Tartars being ſtronger, preſſed hard upon the Poles, and had worſted them if they had not been ſuccour'd by ſome freſh Troops, who adding new Vigour to their Companions, turned the Scales, forcing the Tartars to a diſorderly retreat, ſome hundreds of them were killed, and amongſt others a near Relation of Sultan Nuradons, for whoſe body he offered the liberty of 3 Poliſh Gentlemen; ſome Priſoners were likewiſe taken, and one of the Chams Standards, nor was this ſucceſs bloodleſs, divers of the Poliſh Officers and Souldiers being killed and wounded.

The King having cauſed a Bridge near that Place to be laid over the River, paſſed it with his Army, advancing into a great Plain with a Reſolution to enter into the Country of Budriac. But the Troops ſuffer'd much by exceſſive heat, which had cauſed a great drought, and burnt up all the Graſs, ſo that the Horſes were in great want of forrage. Chevalier Lubormiſki had likewiſe an advantageous onſet againſt the Tartars, but the News of the Moldavians having contrary to their promiſe joyned the Tartars, did not pleaſe. Theſe were alſo reinforced with further Detachments of Turks which had paſſed the Danube at Ken and Smil. Theſe Tartars had likewiſe taken a Convoy of 200 Waggons that were going to the Army, and together with the Turks made an attempt upon the Chriſtian Camp it ſelf, but finding the Troops in a condition to receive them, they made what haſte they could to retire, tho' not without ſome loſs.

Octob. 4. The Poles obtained a Victory againſt the Turks and Tartars, of whom ſome thouſands were ſaid to be killed upon the place, and 300 taken, with ſeveral of their principal Officers, for which ſucceſs Te Deum was ſung at Lemberg. The Poles alſo had 1500 ſlain, and amongſt them divers Perſons of Quality. After this, the King, weary of Moldavia, moſt commonly fatal to the Poles, repaſſed the Forreſt of Bucovina, in order to put his Troops into Winter-Quarters. He had not only quitted Jaſſi, which had been in part deſtroyed by an accidental fire, but had alſo cauſed the ſeveral Forts which he had built to ſecure the Paſſages of the Forreſt to be demoliſhed; from whence People concluded, that the King had no deſign to return in haſte that way again, but rather attempt Caminiec, ſo ruinous to that ſide of his Kingdom, and into which the Turks had newly put 500 Waggons laden with Proviſions, the Detachment of Horſe that was ſent to obſtruct their Paſſage coming too late. The Chriſtians being gon to quarters, the main body of the Tartars did ſo too, but ſome parties of them had lately made an incurſion into the Ukrain and Podolia, where they did much miſchief. The Turks who ſerved this Campaign againſt the 1686 Poles, repaſſed the Danube and the Hoſpodar of Moldavia returned to Jaſſi, from whence he had fled.

Poles

The Poles had been highly animated with the League Offenſive and Defenſive which they had made the beginning of this laſt Campaign with the Muſcovites, which, though it had been publiſhed with great ſolemnity on both ſides, the Muſcovites have not yet performed any one thing that was ſtipulated on their ſide. The Great Dukes were obliged by this Treaty to employ their Forces this laſt Summer againſt the Tartars, to divert them from joyning with the Turks; nor did they advance a ſtep in it, though they now (the Campaign being paſt) ſend Ambaſſadors to aſſure the King of their firm Reſolution to obſerve the Treaty of Confederacy ſo lately concluded at Moſcho, and yet they ſtart new points which do ſo far perplex the Court, that they begin to have a great Jealouſie that the Czars do not ſeriouſly mean to enter into the War.

The Wars of Venice. March 26.

Great were the Preparations the Venetians had made to carry on the War this Summer againſt the Ottomans, which they had been ſo ſucceſsful in the laſt; and the fleet being now ready, ſailed from Corfu under the Command of General Moroſini towards the Levant. In the mean time the Turks having got an Army together compoſed of 10000 foot and 1500 Horſe, ſat down before Chielefa, a Fortreſs of importance, tho' tamely delivered by them laſt year to the menaces of the Chriſtians. They now batter it with ſix great Guns, and had lain 10 days before it when the Army of the Venetians haſtning to its relief landed at Porto Vitulo, not far from it, and ſending a Detachment of 3000 Men, with 2000 Maynotes, the Garriſon which conſiſted of 1200 having orders at the ſame time to ſally in their favour; the Enemy, intimidated with the report of their advance, raiſed the Siege and marched ſilently away in the Night, yet not ſo, but that being purſued by the Chriſtians, they left their Cannon behind them, the 500 men that conducted them being alſo moſt ſlain and taken Priſoners. After this Defeat General Moroſini reimbarked his Porces at Porto Vitulo, and ſailed towards the Gulf of Calamata, and thence to Porto Clinno, where he was to joyn with General Koningſmark, Commander of the Land Forces, lately arrived there with a great Convoy that went from Venice. They had expected the arrival of the Auxiliary Gallies to open the Campaign, which being at length come, and a review of the Forces taken by General Moroſini, which were eſtimated at 25000 men, they ſailed the 25 of May from Porto Trepana with a fleet of above 100 ſail, conſiſting in 80 Ships, 14 Galeaſſes, and ſeveral Gallies and Galliots, taking their courſe towards Lepanto, feigning a deſign to attack that Fortreſs, near which the General cauſed 1000 men to be landed to allarm the Country, and leaving ſome Ships there to countenance the feint, ſailed the Night following towards Modon, then ill manned, the Turks having drawn moſt of their Forces towards Lepanto. But the Captain General thought fit to attack old Navarin, the Pylus of Ptolomy firſt, which he did, 12000 foot, and 1500 Horſe being landed for that purpoſe. This Town is built upon a height, at the foot whereof the Haven is capable of any number of Ships. The Garriſon of this place was weak, not exceeding 200, ſo that affrighted with the Fleet, the numbers, and the ſummons of the Chriſtians, they immediately ſurrendred, capitulating to march out with their Arms and Baggage, which they did, leaving behind them 20 pieces of Braſs Cannon, 23 of Iron, and 7 Mortars, beſides 200 Chriſtian ſlaves, who obtained their liberty.

Count Coningſmark marched from thence to New Navarino, ſeated on a Rock, and of very difficult acceſs. He circled it by Land as well as the place would permit, whilſt it was beaten from Sea with 20 pieces of Cannon and 18 Mortas. The Seraskier of Morea, being ſollicitous for this place, advanced with 10000 men for its relief, deſtroying all the Countries as he paſſed. The Chriſtians, to prevent his advance, leaving a body of men behind them to maintain the Works, marched to meet him, and endeavoured ſeveral times to engage him to a Battel, which he avoided by paſſing a River, and retiring to a very advantageous Ground. Count Koningſmark being reinforced thereupon to 14000, it was reſolved they ſhould paſs the River in two Places, and charge the Turks in Front and Flank, which was performed accordingly. The Victory was obſtinately conteſted for at leaſt two hours, but then the Turks being diſordered fled, leaving 1000 of their men ſlain, wounded, and Priſoners, with all their Tents, Cannon, and Baggage. The Chriſtians had ſcarce 100 killed and wounded. Triumphing with this Victory they returned to the Siege, where, upon a ſecond ſummons, the Beſieged ſeeing their hopes of Succour defeated, and their Baſſa ſlain, being blown up, with 150 of the Garriſon by a Bomb falling amongſt Powder, they likewiſe being 1200 Foot, and 200 Horſe, ſurrendred upon Conditions to march away with their Arms, Bag, and Baggage, which they did, leaving behind them 64 pieces of Cantion, and thirteen Mortars, with great ſtore of Proviſions. June 17. Navarino ſurrendred.

After the taking of Navarin, the General reſolved to beſiege Modon, tho' he knew the Seraskier had reinforced the Garriſon, and provided it with all things neceſſary for a juſt defence, with promiſe of certain Succours by a day. Modon is ſeated upon a Promontory of the Sea of Sapienza, Art and Nature having concurred to make it ſtrong, tho' it held out but a Siege of 13 days. It was indeed miſerably torn with Bombs and Carcaſſes, and the relief not appearing at the day appointed, the Baſſa thought fit to capitulate, and marched out with near 3000 men, which were to be tranſported to Alexandria. There were taken in the Caſtle and Town 90 Braſs Guns, 8 Iron ones, with 13 Mortars, and a great quantity of Ammunition and Proviſions. Jul. 7.

Moroſini having ſtayed ſome time at Modon, as well to repair the Fortifications as to refreſh his wearied Troops, having held a great Council of War, it was reſolved to beſiege Napoli di Romania, the better to ſecure the conqueſts which the Republick had already made in Morea. All things being made ready for ſo important an Enterpriſe, the Captain General ſailed from Modon with the Venetian Fleet and the Auxiliary Gallies, and at the ſame time ſent orders to the Captain Extraordinary of the Ships to approach towards that Coaſt with the Squadron under his command, that he may joyn the Fleet if there be occaſion. As a prelude to this enterpriſe, 8 Turkiſh Ships that had carried Men and Proviſions to Napoli de Romania, endeavouring to eſcape by night out of Port Malvaſia, were taken. In the mean time the General landed his Army at Ciara, ſix miles from Napoli, the Nauplia of the Antients, and poſſeſſed himſelf the next day of the Hill Palemada, within Muſquet ſhot of the Town. The Seraskier of Morea being encamped not far off with 8 or 10000 men, did put 300 Souldiers into the Town, the Garriſon before conſiſting of 2000 under the Command of Muſtapha Baſſa, and advanced himſelf towards the Chriſtians Camp; upon notice whereof, General Coningſmark marched with his Forces to meet him, leaving ſome to guard the works againſt the Town; After ſome light Skirmiſhes the Bodies engaged. The Turks ſcarce ſtanding their Ground, retired in much diſorder, leaving 400 of their men behind them. The loſs on the Chriſtians ſide was inconſiderable, not exceeding 50 men. General Koningſmark returning to the Siege, ſent ſome Troops to force the Caſtle of Argas which they found abandoned, and had that of Tenioni delivered upon demand. In the mean time the Siege was vigorouſly carried on, the Bombs and Carcaſſes occaſioning great Confuſion in the Town. But the Seraskier being reinforced with 3000 freſh men, raiſed their dejected minds, July 30. Aug. 6.

1686 who at the same time that the Seraskier approached the Christian Camp, made a great Sally upon the Besiegers, though they were beaten back with loss, and the Seraskier so warmly received by the Cannon from the Hill of Polameda, that he retired without making any attempt upon the Lines. The Besiegers by this were lodg'd in the Town-Moat, so that the Seraskier being reinforced out of the neighbouring Garrisons to 12000, resolved to make another attempt to relieve the place, by forcing the Camp. At the same time 1500 of their best men sallied out of the City, so that the Christians being hardly put to it, the Slavonians being overpower'd, were forced to give way, but General Koningsmark coming opportunely to their assistance with a strong Party, rallied them, and beat back the Turks. In that instant of time, General Morosini having landed 3500 men, charged the Enemy so seasonably in Front and Flank, that they disordered them, and forced them to retire, but they being much stronger in Horse, were not pursued far. The Turks lost in this action 1500 of their best men, besides 120 that were taken Prisoners, and on the Christians side near 400. The Garrison upon this defeat, upon consideration of the Mines and Breaches, and danger of standing out an Assault, surrendred upon the same terms as had been given to Navarino and Modon.

Napoli di Romania surrendered. Aug. 31

The Christians lost a great many Men by a Flux contracted by the heat, and eating too much fruit, and among others, a Nephew of General Koningsmark, the Captain of his Guards, and Count Bernabo Visconti a Milaneze Collonel.

The Bassa of Napoli di Romania, whether out of a consciousness of not having done his duty in defence of the City, or out of a resentment that to be unhappy is to be criminal, thought it securer to put himself into the protection of his Vanquishers, than to expose himself to the candor of his Compurgators at home. He therefore, with about eighty Turks more, having obtained leave of the General, were shipt for Venice, where they were honourably received by the Senate, presented, and permitted to take two fine Houses, with very fine Gardens belonging to them, where they and their Families live at present. After the taking of Napoli, above sixty small Towns and Burghs put themselves under the protection of the Venetians; and the General having setled affairs there, and dismissed the Auxiliary Gallies with their shares of the Booty to return home, sailed himself with the Gallies of Venice towards the Archipelag to put those Islands, which he also in a great measure did, under contribution. The Garrison and Inhabitants of Napoli being numerous, exceeding 10000, besides the Jews and Greeks who were made Tributaries, were by Articles to be transported to the Isle of Tenedos, which was also done in 12 Ships, commanded by Seignior Venier. This Fleet did not only alarm those parts, but Constantinople it self, affrighted with the report of a Venetian Armada so near the Dardanels: But upon their return they were met, and fought by the Captain Bassa, who had 20 Gallies and 10 Ships, but seeing he could do no good upon them, was obliged to quit the fight. The Seraskier, in the mean time, was retired to Corinth, from whence he sent some Troops to reinforce the Garrison of Petrassa, and very strong Parties, who by their incursions, keep the Greeks in continual alarms, and hinder them from openly declaring for the Republick. To this end, he hath seized upon divers of the Principal of them, keeping them as Hostages, but exercises all kinds of cruelty against such as he suspects to have any correspondence with the Christians. 1686

Cara Ibrahim, the late Visier, being stript of his Estate, was sent to Rhodes, where, within the compass of the year, he was strangled, by command of the Sultan, the Caimacan of Constantinople being at the same time put into the seven Towers, to satisfie the People. Mar. 18. Apr. 28.

Nor was the Venetian War confined only to Morea, and the Sea, though nothing extraordinary happened in the later, that wise Republick having sent Cornaro to command in Dalmatia, with such Forces as might endeavour to divert the Turks from sending Succours either to Hungary or Morea, which they also in some measure did. And yet scarce any thing worthy a place in History, which is only pleased with great events, did intervene, the Forces indeed of neither side being sufficient for great undertakings. Some inconsiderable Places were intercepted on both sides, and the incursions of Parties into each others Quarters were frequent; wherein the Morlaques, like the Tartars on the Frontiers of Poland, did signalize themselves. The Bassa of Scutari had drawn together 7 or 8000 Men, with a Resolution to attack the City of Budua, but they were ordered to march towards Hungary, so that that design vanished. But General Cornaro, and the Prince of Parma, who was Lieutenant General of the Foot, having drawn together 1000 Horse, and 3000 Foot, and 5000 Morlaques, commanded by the Chevalier Janco, with the Artillery and Ammunition necessary for a Siege, resolved to attack Sign, scituated upon a Rock, and fortified with a good Wall and strong Castle, but the Cannon opening a Breach, it was assaulted and carried by force, the Garrison which consisted but of 250 Turks, being cut in pieces. By taking of this place, the Venetians are become Masters of the fertile Province of Zettina. Sept. 23.

The Grand Visier, upon his repassing the Bridge of Essek, had sent home the Troops of Bossina, so that the Bassa of the said Province, thinking himself with this reinforcement, in a condition to make some attempt upon the Enemy, was accordingly preparing for it, tho' watched narrowly by Cornaro. The Bassa of Erzegovina had likewise got a competent Army together, and having burnt some Villages, retired towards Clin, to put a Convoy of Provisions into that place, Cornaro at the same time having taken his march towards Zsbenico and Sardona, to cover those places. And thus this year, and the Campain, were finished, except the usual excursions, both here, in Morea, in Poland, and in Hungary, where the Parties are always busie, and infest each other according to their power.

The desires of the Port for Peace were great. It was against their Maxims to wage War with so many powerful Adversaries at once, nor could they tell how to extricate themselves out of it. They had often attempted separate Treaties, but the Allies were not to be disjoyned, they therefore offer'd them Concessions they durst not have hoped for at the beginning of the War. They would yield to the Emperor all Hungary, as far as the Drave, to the King of Poland, Caminiec and all Podolia, and restore to the Venetians the Kingdom of Candia, on condition they would part with what they had gained in Morea.

To the Right Honourable

HENRY
Lord Arlington

His Majeſty's Principal Secretary of State.

MY LORD,

AFTER five Years reſidence at Conſtantinople, in Service of the Embaſſie of the Earl of Winchelſea, (my ever honoured Lord) and this my ſecond Journey from thence by Land into my own Country, I judged it a Point of my Duty, and of my Religion too, to dedicate this following Treatiſe, as the Fruits of my Travels, Negotiations, and Leiſure in thoſe remote Parts, to the Noble Perſon of your Lordſhip; as that Votiva Tabula, which many both in Ancient and Modern Times, after ſome ſignal Deliverance, or happy Arrival at their deſired Port, uſe to offer to their Gods, their Saints, or their Patrons. And truly, my Lord, this Diſcourſe treating chiefly of the Turkiſh Polity, Government, and Maxims of State, ſeems naturally to appertain to the Patronage of your Lordſhip, whoſe Faculties of Wiſdom and Vertue have given you the Bleſſing of your Prince's Favour, and the Reputation, as well Abroad as at Home, of an Eminent and Dexterous Miniſter of State.

It were a great preſumption in me to offer any Obſervations of my own in the Courts of Chriſtian Princes, to the Teſt of your Lordſhip's Experience and Judgment; who not only is acquainted with the Cuſtoms and Manners, but penetrates into the Deſigns, and knows the Cabinet-Councils of Neighbouring Principalities, with whom our divided World may poſſibly be concerned; but perhaps, without diſparagement to your Lordſhip's profound Wiſdom, or over-value of my own Abilities, I may confidently draw a rude Scheme before your Lordſhip, of the Turkiſh Government, Policies, and Cuſtoms; a Subject which Travellers have rather repreſented to their Country-men, to ſupply them with Diſcourſe and Admiration, than as a Matter worthy the Conſideration or Concernment of our Kings, or our Governors.

It hath been the happy Fortune of the Turk to be accounted Barbarous and Ignorant; for upon this Perſwaſion, Chriſtian Princes have laid themſelves open and unguarded, to their greateſt Danger; contending together for one Palm of Land, whilſt this Puiſſant Enemy hath made himſelf Maſter of whole Provinces, and largely ſhared in the rich and pleaſant Poſſeſſions of Europe.

This Contempt of the Turk on one ſide, cauſed the Emperor to be ſo backward in oppoſing that Torrent of the Ottoman Force, which in the firſt Year of the late War broke in upon him; and the ſuſpicion of Deſigns from France on the other, altered the Reſolutions and Councils of the Emperor for proſecution of the War; which then running favourably on the Chriſtians part, was no leſs than with the aſtoniſhment of the whole World, and of the Turks themſelves, on a ſudden underſtood to be clapt up with Articles of a diſadvantagious Peace; admiring to ſee the Emperor give a ſtop to the Current of his Victories, and relinquiſh the Game with a lucky Hand.

But this will ſeem no Riddle to thoſe who penetrate Affairs with the ſame Judgment that your Lordſhip doth, and conſider the unfirm Condition the Houſe of Auſtria was in, by a daily expectation of the Death or fall of ſo main a Baſis of it, as the King of Spain, and the Diviſion amongſt the Princes of the Empire; the League of the Rhine; the Freneh Practices to make the Duke of Enguyen King of Poland; and the extravagant Demands of the French and Rhiniſh League for Winter-quarters, and places of Strength, not only in Hungary, but alſo in Styria, and the adjacent Places; and at the ſame time look on the Factions in Hungary, and a conſiderable Army of French in the Bowels of Germany, who were ſuppoſed in thoſe Parts to have rather come with Deſign to overawe the next Diet, and force the German Princes to elect the French King for King of the Romans, than with ſincere and ſimple Intentions of oppoſing themſelves to the Enemy of the Faith: For then it will appear, that the beſt uſe the Emperor could make of his good Succeſs, was Moderation in Victory, and Reconciliation with his powerful Enemy. And hereupon Earl Liſle being diſpatched for Extraordinary Ambaſſador from his Imperial Majeſty to the Grand Signior; though the Turk was elevated with the thoughts of the Neceſſity the Chriſtians had of a Peace, did yet ſo happily manage his Charge and Employment, as created in the Turks an extraordinary Reverence towards his Perſon, and obtained ſuch Honours and Treatments from them, as the Turkiſh Court never beſtowed before on the Emperor's, or an other Chriſtian Ambaſſador; extorting this Complement from the Great Vizier, That he was more ſatisfied the Emperor had ſent ſo brave and illuſtrious a Perſon, than if he had ſought to reconcile his Affections with an hundred thouſand Dollars more of Preſent. And to do juſtice to this worthy Perſon, he hath brought a Reputation to the Britiſh Nation, above any in our Age, whoſe Vertues and Induſtry have acquired the higheſt Truſts and Preferments in Foreign Parts; and done the ſame Honour to his King, under whom he was born a Subject, as to the preſent Emperor and his Anceſtors, under whom he is, and hath always been a faithful Miniſter; having deſerved ſo eminently for ſaving the whole German Empire from the Treaſon of Walleſtein, by his own ſingle Act of Bravery, (a Story notoriouſly known to all the World) as can never in gratitude be forgot by that Nation, nor want its due Record and Place in the Hiſtory of that Country.

The Speculation of what is contained in this following Diſcourſe, may ſeem unworthy of your Lordſhip's precious Hours, in regard of that Notion of Barbarity with which this Empire is ſtiled; yet the knowledg hereof will be like a Turquoiſe, or ſome other Jewels ſet within the Roſe of thoſe many Gems of your Lordſhip's Wiſdom and Vertues.

This Preſent, which I humbly conſecrate to your Lordſhip, may be termed Barbarous, as all things are which are differenced from us by diverſity of Manners and Cuſtom, and are not dreſſed in the Mode and Faſhion of our Times and Countries; for we contract Prejudice from Ignorance and want of Familiarity. But your Lordſhip, who exactly ponderates the Weight of Humane Actions, acknowledges Reaſon in all its Habits, and draws not the Meaſures of Oeconomy, or Policy, from Eternal Appearances or Effects, but from the Fundamental and Original Conſtitutions; ſo that your Lorſhip will conclude, that a People, as the Turks are, Men of the ſame Compoſition with us, cannot be ſo Savage and Rude as they are generally deſcribed; for Ignorance and Groſſneſs is the Effect of Poverty, not Incident to happy Men, whoſe Spirits are elevated with Spoils and Trophies of ſo many Nations.

Knowing

Knowing (my Lord), that this Work which I have undertaken is liable to common Cenſure, I have choſen to ſhrowd my Name under the Patronage of your Lordſhip, to protect me from the ill-underſtanding and miſ-conceptions of our Country-men, both at Home and Abroad: againſt which I doubt not but to be ſufficiently armed in all parts where I travel, when the Countenance your Lordſhip affords me, is joined to the Authority of his Excellency the Earl of Winchelſea, His Majeſty's Ambaſſador Extraordinary, now actually Reſident at Conſtantinople, my ever honoured Lord; to whom I read, a long time before publiſhed to the World, the greateſt part of this following Treatiſe; and as I received his favourable Approbation and Aſſent to the Verity of moſt Matters herein contained; ſo I muſt ingenuouſly confeſs to have been beholden to that quick and refin'd Genius of his, who often rectified my Miſtakes, ſupplied me with Matter, and remembred me of many material Points, which I might otherwiſe have moſt unadviſedly omitted: And his Excellency knowing that in his abſence this Book might want a favourable Patron, left me to my ſelf to ſeek out one, who might concur with him in the ſame Innocent Defence. And as, my Lord, you are a Publick Perſon, and under our Gracious Sovereign, are one of thoſe Generous Spirits which have eſpouſed the common Intereſt of the Nation; ſo I preſume, on this preſent Occaſion, not to want your Protection alſo in a ſingle Capacity: For which exceſs of Favours, I ſhall ever pray for the Exaltation of the greater Glory of your Lordſhip, and for ever acknowledg my ſelf,

My Lord,

Your Lordſhip's moſt Humble, moſt Faithful, and

moſt devoted Servant,

PAUL RICAUT.

TO THE READER.

Courteous Reader,

I Preſent thee here with a true Syſtem or Model of the Turkiſh Government and Religion; not in the ſame manner as certain ingenious Travellers have done, who have ſet down their Obſervations as they have obviouſly occured in their Journeys; which being collected, for the moſt part, from Relations, and Diſcourſes of ſuch who caſually intervene in Company of Paſſengers, are conſequently ſubject to many Errors and Miſtakes: But having been an Inhabitant my ſelf, at the Imperial City, for the ſpace of five Years, and aſſiſted by the advantage of conſiderable Journeys I have made through divers parts of Turky, and qualified by the Office I hold of Secretary to the Earl of Winchelſea, Lord Ambaſſador, I had opportunity, by the conſtant acceſs and practice with the chief Miniſters of State, and variety of Negotations which paſſed through my hands in the Turkiſh Court, to penetrate farther into the Myſteries of this Polity, which appear ſo ſtrange and barbarous to us, than haſty Travellers could do, who are forced to content themſelves with a Superficial Knowledg.

The Computations I have made of the Value of their Offices, of the Strength and Number of their Souldiery, according as every City and Country is rated, are deduced from their own Regiſters and Records. The Obſervations I have made of their Polity, are either, Maxims received from the Mouth and Argument of conſiderable Miniſters, or Concluſions ariſing from my own Experience and Conſiderations. The Articles of their Faith, and Conſtitutions of Religion, I have ſet down as pronounced from the Mouth of ſome of the moſt learned Doctors and Preachers of their Law, with whom, for Mony, or Preſents, I gained a familiarity and appearance of friendſhip. The Relation of the Seraglio, and Education of their Youth, with divers other matters of Cuſtom and Rule, where tranſmitted to me by ſeveral ſober Perſons, trained up in the beſt Education of the Turkiſh Learning; and particularly, by an underſtanding Polonian, who had ſpent nineteen Years in the Ottoman Court.

If (Reader) the Superſtition, Vanity and ill foundation of the Mahometan Religion ſeem fabulous, as a Dream, or the Fancies of a diſtracted and wild Brain, thank God that thou wert born a Chriſtian, and within the Pale of an Holy and an Orthodox Church. If the Tyranny, Oppreſſion and Cruelty of that State, wherein Reaſon ſtands in no competition with the Pride and Luſt of an unreaſonable Miniſter, ſeem ſtrange to thy Liberty and Happineſs, thank God that thou art born in a Country the moſt free and juſt in all the World; and a Subject to the moſt indulgent, the moſt gratious of all the Princes of the Univerſe; That thy Wife, thy Children, and the Fruits of thy Labour, can be called thine own, and protected by the valiant Arm of thy fortunate King: And thus learn to know and prize thy own freedom, by compariſon with Foreign Servitude, that thou mayſt ever bleſs God and thy King, and make thy Happineſs breed thy Content, without degenerating into Wantonneſs, or deſire of Revolution. Farewel.

BOOK. I.

CHAP. I.

The Conſtitution of the Turkiſh Government, being different from moſt others in the World, hath need of peculiar Maxims and Rules whereon to eſtabliſh and confirm it ſelf.

Navis referent in mare te novi fluctus. Hor. 14. Od. Lib. 1.

I Have begun a Work which ſeems very full of Difficulty and Labour: for to trace the Footſteps of Government in the beſt formed and moulded Common-Wealths, (ſuch as are ſupported with Reaſon and with Religion) is no leſs than to unriddle and reſolve a Myſtery. For as a Common-Wealth, by many Authors, hath not been unaptly compared to a Ship, in divers reſpects, and proper Allegories; ſo principally the ſmall Impreſſion or Sign of Track, the floating Habitation leaves behind it on the Sea, in all the Traverſes it makes, according to the different Winds, to attain its Port, is a lively Emblem of the various Motions of good Government, which by reaſon of Circumſtances, Times, and multiplicity of Changes and Events, leaves little or no Path in all the Ocean of Humane Affairs.

But there muſt be yet certain Rules in every Government, which are the Foundations and Pillars of it; not ſubject to the Alteration of Time, or any other Accident; and ſo eſſential to it, that they admit of no change, until the whole Model of Polity ſuffer a Convulſion, and be ſhaken into ſome other Form; which is either effected by the new Laws of a Conqueror, or by inteſtine and civil Revolutions. Of ſuch Maxims as theſe, (obvious to all who have had any practice in the Ottoman Court) I have made a Collection, ſubjoining to every Head ſome Reflexions and Conſiderations of my own, which at my leiſure Hours I have weighed and examined, bringing them (according to the proportion of my weak Judgment and Ability) to the Meaſure and Teſt of Reaſon and Vertue; as alſo to a Similitude and Congruity with the Maxims of other Empires, to which God hath given the largeſt extent of Dominion.

But indeed, when I have conſidered ſeriouſly the Contexture of the Turkiſh Government, the abſoluteneſs of an Emperor, without Reaſon, without Vertue, whoſe Speeches may be Irrational, and yet muſt be Laws; whoſe Actions Irregular, and yet Examples; whoſe Sentence and Judgment, if in Matters of the Imperial Concernment, are moſt commonly corrupt, and yet Decrees irreſiſtible: When I conſider what little rewards there are for Vertue, and no Puniſhment for profitable and thriving Vice; how Men are raiſed at once by Adulation, Chance, and the ſole Favour of the Prince, without any Title of Noble Blood, or the Motives of Previous Deſerts, or former Teſtimonies and Experience of Parts and Abilities, to the weightieſt, the richeſt, and moſt honourable Charges of the Empire; when I conſider how ſhort their continuance is in them, how with one Frown of their Prince they are cut off; with what greedineſs, above all people in the World, they thirſt and haſte to be Rich, and yet know their Treaſure is but their Snare; what they labour for, is but as Slaves for their great Patron and Maſter, and what will inevitably effect their Ruin and Deſtruction, though they have all the Arguments of Faithfulneſs, Vertue, and moral Honeſty (which are rare in a Turk) to be their Advocates, and plead for them.

When I conſider many other things of like Nature, (which may more at large hereafter be diſcourſed of) one might admire the long continuance of this great and vaſt Empire, and attribute the ſtability thereof without change within it ſelf, and the increaſe of Dominions and conſtant progreſs of its Arms, rather to ſome ſupernatural Cauſe, than to the ordinary Maxims of State, or Wiſdom of the Governors; as if the Divine Will of the All-knowing Creator, had choſen for the good of his Church, and chaſtiſement of the Sins and Vices of Chriſtians, to raiſe and ſupport this mighty People. Mihi quanto plura Tacit. l. 3. An. plura recentium ſeu veterum revolvo, tanto magis ludibria rerum mortalium cunctis in negotiis obſervantur.

But that which cements all Breaches, and cures all thoſe Wounds in this Body Politick, is the quickneſs and ſeverity of their Juſtice, which not conſidering much the ſtrict diviſion and parts of diſtributive and commutative, makes almoſt every Crime equal, and puniſhes it with the laſt and extreameſt chaſtiſement, which is Death; I mean thoſe which have relation to the Government, and are of common and publick Intereſt. Without this Remedy, which I lay down as a principal Prevention of the greateſt Diſorders, this mighty Body would burſt with the Poiſon of its own ill Humors, and ſoon divide it ſelf into ſeveral Signories, as the Ambition and Power of the Governors, moſt remote from the Imperial Seat, adminiſtred them hopes and ſecurity of becoming Abſolute.

In this Government, Severity, Violence and Cruelty are natural to it, and it were as great an Error to begin to looſe the Reins, and eaſe the People of that Oppreſſion to which they and their Fore-fathers have, ſince their firſt original, been accuſtomed, as it would be in a Nation free-born, and uſed to live under the Protection of good Laws, and the Clemency of a vertuous and Chriſtian Prince, to exerciſe a Tyrannical Power over their Eſtates and Lives, and change their Liberty into Servitude and Slavery. The Turks had the original of their Civil Government founded in the time of the War: for when they firſt came out of Scythia, and took Arms in their Hands, and ſubmitted unto one General, it is to be ſuppoſed, that they had no Laws but what were Arbitrary and Martial, and moſt agreeable to the enterpriſe and Deſign they had then in hand, when Tangrolipix overthrew the Perſian Sultan, poſſeſſed himſelf of his Dominions and Power, and called and opened the way for his Companions out of Armenia; when Cutlumuſes revolted from him, and made a diſtinct Kingdom in Arabia: when other Princes of the Seleucian Family in the infancy of the Turkiſh Power had by Wars among themſelves, or by Teſtament made diviſion of their Poſſeſſions; when (Anno 1300.) Ottoman, by ſtrange Fortunes, and from ſmall beginnings ſwallowed up all the other Governments into the Oguſian Tribe, and united them under one Head, until at laſt it arrived to that greatneſs and power it now enjoys. The whole condition of this People was but a continued ſtate of War; wherefore it is not ſtrange, if their Laws are ſevere, and in moſt things arbitrary; that the Emperor ſhould be Abſolute and above Law, and that moſt of their Cuſtoms ſhould run in a certain Chanel and Courſe moſt anſwerable to the height and unlimited Power of the Governor, and conſequently to the Oppreſſion and Subjection of the People, and that they ſhould thrive moſt by ſervitude, be moſt happy, proſperous and contented under Tyranny, is as natural to them, as to a Body to be nouriſhed with that Diet which it had from its Infancy or Birth been acquainted with. But not only is Tyranny requiſite for this People, and a ſtiff reign to curb them, leſt by an unknown Liberty they grow mutinous and unruly, but likewiſe the large Territories and remote parts of the Empire require ſpeedy preventions, without Proceſſes of Law, or formal Indictment: jealouſie and ſuſpicion of Miſ-government being Licence and Authority enough for the Emperor to inflict his ſevereſt Puniſhments; all which depends upon the Abſoluteneſs of the Prince; which becauſe it is that whereby the Turks are principally ſupported in their Greatneſs, and is the prime Maxim and Foundation of their State, we ſhall make it the Diſcourſe and Subject of the following Chapter.

Ma Eſperati che gli hanno, eche cominciano ad eſſere in venerationne, &c. Machi. c. 6. del Prencipe.

CHAP. II.

The Abſoluteneſs of the Emperor is a great ſupport of the Turkiſh Empire.

THE Turks having (as is before declared) laid the firſt foundation of their Government with the Principles moſt agreeable to Militay Diſcipline, their Generals or Princes, whoſe Will and Luſts they ſerved, became abſolute Maſters of their Lives and Eſtates; ſo that what they gained and acquired by the Sword, with Labours, Perils and Sufferings, was appropriated to the uſe and benefit of their Great Maſter. All the delightful Fields of Aſia, the pleaſant Plains of Tempe and Thrace, all the Plenty of Egypt, and Fruitfulneſs of the Nile, the Luxury of Corinth, the Subſtance of Peloponneſus, Athens, Lemnos, Scio and Mutylene, with other Iſles of the Ægean Sea, the Spices of Arabia, and the Riches of a great part of Perſia, all Armenia, the Provinces of Pontus, Galatia, Bythinia, Phrygia, Lycia, Pamphylia, Paleſtine, Cœloſyria and Phœnicia, Colchis, and great part of Georgia, the Tributary Principalities of Moldavia and Walachia, Romania, Bulgaria, and Servia, and the beſt part of Hungary, concur all together to ſatiſie the Appetite of one ſingle Perſon; all the extent of this vaſt Territory, the Lands and Houſes, as well as the Caſtles and Arms, are the proper Goods of the Grand Signior, in his ſole Diſpoſal and Gift they remain, whoſe Poſſeſſion and Right they are; only to Lands dedicated to Religious uſes, the Grand Signior diſclaims all Right or Claim; and this he ſo piouſly obſerves (to the ſhame of our Sectaries in England, who violate the penetralia of the Sanctuary) that when a Baſhaw, though afterwards convicted of Treaſon, beſtows any Lands or Rents on any certain Moſch or Temple, that Grant or Gift is good and exempted from any Diſpoſal or Power of the Grand Signior. The Lands being thus originally in the Grand Signior, after the Conqueſts were made, and the Country ſecured, and in condition to be diſtributed, Diviſions were made of the Houſes, Manors and Farms among the Souldiery, whom they call Timars, as the Reward and Recompence of their Valour and Labour; in conſideration of which, every one proportionably to his Revenue and Poſſeſſion, is obliged to maintain Horſe and Men to be always ready when the Grand Signior ſhall call him forth to ſerve him in the Wars; by which means the whole Country being in the hands of the Souldiery, all places are the better ſtrengthened, and the conquered People more eaſily kept from Mutiny and Rebellion; not much unlike our Tenure of Knights-ſervice in England, and Lands held of the Crown, but with this difference, that we enjoy them by the Title of a fixed and ſettled Law, never to be forfeited but upon Treaſon and Rebellion; they enjoy them alſo by Inheritance derived from the Father to the Son, but yet as uſufructuary during the pleaſure of the Emperor, in whom the Propriety is always reſerved, and who doth often, as his Humor and Fancy leads him to pleaſe and gratifie gratifie a Stranger, diſpoſſeſs an ancient Poſſeſſor, whoſe Family hath for many generations enjoyed that Inheritance. Sometimes I have heard, with the Sighs of ſome, and the Curſe of others, how the Grand Signior, heated in his Hunting, and pleaſed with the refreſhment of a little cool and cryſtal Water, preſented him by a poor Paiſant, hath in recompence thereof freed the Tenant from the Rent of his Landlord, and by his ſole Word confirmed to him the Cottage he lived in, the Woods, Gardens and Fields he manured, with as ſound a Title, as our long Deeds and Conveyances ſecure our Purchaſes and Inheritances in England; and this the former Maſter dares not name Injuſtice, becauſe this Tenant is now made Proprietor by the Will of the Grand Signior, which was the ſame Title and Claim with his; Preſcription, Tenant-right, and Cuſtom availing nothing in this Caſe. For if the inheritance hath been anciently derived from Father to the Son, the more is the Goodneſs and Bounty of the Emperor to be acknowledged, that hath permitted ſo long a Succeſſion of his Favours to run in one Family, in whoſe Power it was to transfer it to others.

The abſolute and unlimited Power of this Prince is more evident by the Titles they give, as God on Earth, the Shadow of God, Brother to the Sun and Moon, the Giver of all Earthly Crowns, &c. And though they do not build and erect Altars to him, as was done to the Roman Emperors, when that People degenerated into a faſhion of deformed Adulation, wherein Italy is at preſent corrupted; yet the Conception they have of his Power, the Ray they conceive to be in him of Divine Illumination, is a kind of imagery and idolatrous Fancy they frame of his Divinity. It is an ordinary ſaying among the Turkiſh Cadees and Lawyers, That the Grand Signior is above the Law; that is, whatſoever Law is written, is controllable, and may be contradicted by him: his Mouth is the Law it ſelf, and the Power of an Infallible Interpretation is in him; and though the Mufti is many times, for cuſtom, formality, and ſatisfaction of the People conſulted with, yet when his Sentences have not been agreeable to the Deſigns intended, I have known him, in an inſtant, thrown from his Office to make room for another Oracle better prepared for the purpoſe of his Maſter.

Some maintain that the very Oaths and Promiſes of the Grand Signior are always revocable, when the performance of his Vow is a reſtriction to the abſolute Power of the Empire. And I remember when my Lord Ambaſſador hath ſometimes complained of the Breach of our Capitulations, and pleaded that the Grand Signior had no Power by ſingle Commands to infringe Articles of Peace, to which he had obliged himſelf by ſolemn Oaths and Vows; the Interpreters have gently touched that Point, and been as nice to queſtion how far the Power of the Grand Signior extended, as we ought to be in the ſubtile Points of the Divine Omnipotence, but rather in contemplation of the Grand Signior's Juſtice, Wiſdom, Faith and Clemency, inſinuated Arguments of Honour, Convenience and Juſtice in maintaining the League inviolate with the King of England. It was Juſtinian's Rule concerning the Prerogative of Princes, Etſi legibus ſoluti ſumus, tamen legibus vivimus: That is, although the Majeſty of Princes, and the neceſſity of having a Supreme Head in all Governments, did free and privilege them from all Puniſhment, and exempt them from the Cenſure and Correction of the Law, that no earthly Power could call them to account for their Errors or Diſorders in this World; yet it is neceſſary to the being of an abſolute Monarch, to be a ſevere Executioner of the Laws of his Country; and it is more his Intereſt and Security, than to act without Rule, and always to make uſe of the Power of Abſolute Dominion, which is to be applied like Phyſick, when the ordinary force of Nature cannot remove the malignancy of ſome peccant Humours.

The Grand Signior himſelf is alſo reſtrained by Laws, but without impeachment to his Abſolute Juriſdiction. For when there is a new Emperor, it is the cuſtom to conduct him with great Pomp and Triumph to a place in the Suburbs of Conſtantinople called Job, where is an ancient Monument of ſome certain Prophet, or Holy Man, whom the Turks, for want of knowledg in Antiquity and Hiſtory, ſtyle that Job, who was recorded for the mirror of Conſtancy and Patience. For they confound all Hiſtory in Chronology, ſaying, That Job was Solomon's Judg of the Court, and Alexander the Great, Captain of his Army. At this Place ſolemn Prayers are made, that God would proſper, and infuſe Wiſdom into him, who is to manage ſo great a Charge. Then the Mufti embracing him, beſtows his Benediction, and the Grand Signior ſwears and promiſes ſolemnly to maintain the Muſleman Faith, and Laws of the Prophet Mahomet; and then the Viziers of the Bench, and other Baſhaws, with profound reverence and humility, kiſſing the Ground firſt, and then the Hemm of his Veſt, acknowledg him their lawful and undoubted Emperor: And after this Form of Inauguration, he returns with the like Solemnity and Magnificence to the Seraglio (which is always the Seat of the Ottoman Emperors.) And thus the Grand Signior retains, and obliges himſelf to govern within the compaſs of Laws; but they give him ſo large a latitude, that he can no more be ſaid to be Bound or Limited, than a Man who hath the World to rove in can be termed a Priſoner, becauſe he cannot exceed the Incloſure of the Univerſe. For though he be obliged to the execution of the Mahometan Law, yet that Law calls the Emperor the Mouth and Interpreter of it, and endues him with power to alter and annul the moſt ſettled and fixed Rules, at leaſt to wave and diſpenſe with them when they are an Obſtacle to his Government, and contradict (as we ſaid before) any great Deſign of the Empire. But the learned Doctors among the Turks more clearly reſtrain the Imperial Power only to the obſervation of that which is Religious in the Mahometan Law, ſaying, That in Matters which are Civil, his Law is Arbitrary, and needs no other Judg or Legiſlator than his own Will. Hence it is that they ſay, the Grand Signior can never be depoſed or made accountable to any for his Crimes, whilſt he deſtroys carelefly of his Subjects under the number of an hundred a day. And in like manner hence it is, that though the Mahometan Law determines the Teſtimony of two Witneſſes of that Faith to be valid for the determation of all Caſes of Difference, yet by our Capitulation it is provided, that no Turkiſh Witneſſes, of what number or quality ſoever, can avail any of the Engliſh Nation, by reaſon that the Caſe being Civil, is diſpenſible by the Imperial Power; but I doubt, were any Matter in queſtion Criminal (as we have never, God be praiſed, had occaſion to put it to trial) the Capitulations would be forced to yield to the Mahometan Law, as being both Religious and Divine, with which the Sultan hath no power to diſpenſe.

Of what Conſequence and Benefit this Abſolute Power hath been to the Turks, is evident by the extent of their Empire, and ſucceſs of their Arms. For if the Sultan pleaſes the Souldiery, no matter how the People in this conſtitution is contented; and this was the concluſion of Machiavil upon this Government, in the 19th Chapter of his Book del Pincipe. And it muſt needs be a great advantage to a Commander, when the Utile and Juſtum are reconciled and made the ſame, and that he meets no contradiction or oppoſition at Home, which may retard or croſs the great Deſigns Abroad. The Emperor of Germany had doubtleſs ſooner encountred the Turks, and given a ſtop to his free entrance the firſt Year of the late War into Hungary, had he been Abſolute of the whole Empire, and not neceſſitated to expect the conſent of his ſeveral Princes, and the reſult of a Diet, when the Turks were even ready to enter Germany. For when many Heads or Hands are required, all Buſineſs moves ſlowly, and more Time is ſpent in agreement of the manner of Action, in Arguments and Debates (which are moſt commonly carried on by Faction) than in the moſt difficult Point of execution. It would ſeem a great Clog to the Grand Signior to be obliged to depend on the Bounty of his Subjects, when he would make a War, or on the Judgment of a Lawyer that ſhould contradict and cenſure the Actions of his Prince as irregular, and exceeding the Priviledges of his Prerogative. It is very difficult to underſtand how it is poſſible with theſe Fetters for any Country or City ever to arrive to that height, as to be termed the Miſtreſs of a great Empire, or a Prince be ſaid to have a long Arm, or embrace a large Compaſs of the Globe, who is pinion'd with the Bands of his own Laws. But I confeſs it is a Bleſſing, and wonderful Happineſs of a People, to be Subjects of a gracious Prince, who hath preſcribed his Power within the compaſs of wholſome Laws, acknowledged a right of Poſſeſſion and Propriety of Eſtate as well in his Subjects as himſelf, who doth not puniſh the Innocent with the Guilty, nor oppreſs without diſtinction, nor act the part of that King whom God gives in his Wrath. But then they muſt content themſelves with their own Borders, or ſome neighbouring Conqueſt, and this is better, and a greater Glory and Content, than the Honour of being Slaves to the Luſt of a Monarch, whoſe Titles comprehend the greateſt part of the World.

CHAP. III.

The Leſſon of Obedience to the Emperor is taught by the Turks, as a Principle of Religion rather than of State.

THE abſolute Power in the Prince implies an exact Obedience in the Subjects; and to inſtil and confirm that Principle, no Art or Induſtry is wanting in the education of thoſe who are placed in the Seraglio, with deſign of preferment to Offices and great Charges; ſo that even the Oath of Obedience, which Friars and other Religious Men vow to their Superiors at their firſt initiation into Eccleſiaſtial Orders, is not more exactly or devoutly obſerved or profeſſed by them, than this Doctrine of Submiſſion to the Will of their great Maſter, is carefully taught to his Young Scholars who ſtand Probationers and Candidates for all the Government of the Empire. To die by the hand or command of the Grand Signior, when the blow is ſubmitted to, with entire reſignation, is taught to be the higheſt point of Martyrdom; and whoſe good Fortune it is ſo to ſuffer, is immediately tranſported to Paradiſe. Kara Muſtapha Paſſaw (a great Viſier) after he had been ſo ſucceſsful in all Matters of his Charge, and proved ſo excellent an Inſtrument of Victories and Services to his Maſter, that he was applauded by all to be a moſt happy and fortunate Miniſter, was ſo ſenſible of his own Condition, and the favour of his Prince, that he confeſſed he was now arrived to the greateſt Glory and Perfection he could in this Life aſpire to, and only wanted the Holy Martyrdom, to die by the Order and Sentence of the Grand Signior, as the Reward of his Faithfulneſs, and the Conſummation of all his Honours.

Such as receive any Wages or pay, coming from the Exchequer, or any Office depending on the Crown, have the title of Kul, which is, the Grand Signior's Slave: ſuch is the great Vizier and all the Baſhaws of the Empire, and it is more honourable than the Condition and Name of Subject; for they have a priviledg over theſe, and can revile, beat and abuſe them with Authority; but the Subject cannot offer the leaſt injury to the Slave, without danger of ſevere puniſhment. Slavery amongſt the Turks denotes a condition of entire reſignation to the Will and Command of the Emperor, to perform whatſoever he ſignifies; or, if poſſible, what he conceives: though he command whole Armies of them to precipitate themſelves from a Rock, or build a Bridg with Piles of their Bodies for him to paſs Rivers, or to kill one another to afford him paſtime and pleaſure. They that have been where they have ſeen and known the manner of this blind Obedience, may well cry out, O homines ad ſervitutem paratos! And doubtleſs the flattery uſed in the Seraglio towards the Prince, by thoſe that are near his Perſon, is proportionable to this condition of ſlavery they profeſs, and cannot but fanſie a ſtrange kind of projected baſeneſs in all the deportment within the Walls of the Seraglio, when there appears ſo much condeſcenſion Abroad to all the luſts and evil inclinations of their Maſter; ſo that a generous Prince (as ſome have been found among the Ottoman Emperors) though he deſired not the publick Liberty, would yet be weary of this ſlaviſh compliance, and ſeek other counſel and means to inform himſelf of the true ſtate of his own and other Kings Dominions, than ſuch as proceed from Men unexperienced in any other Court or Country than that they live in. This flattery and immoderate ſubjection hath doubtleſs been the cauſe of the decay of the Turkiſh Diſcipline in the Time of Sultan Ibrahim, when Women governed, and now in this preſent Age of Sultan Mahomet, whoſe Counſels are given chiefly by his Mother, Negroes, Eunuchs, and ſome handſome young Moſayp or Favourite; ſeldom any from without being permitted, or have their Spirits emboldened to declare a Truth, or are called to give their counſel in Matters of greateſt importance. So that this Obedience which brave and wiſe Emperors have made uſe of in the advancement of noble Exploits, and enlargement of their Empire, is with effeminate Princes (delighted with flattery) the Snare of their their own Greatneſs, and occaſion of weak Counſels and Means in the management of great Deſigns. If a Man ſeriouſly conſider the whole compoſition of the Turkiſh Court, he will find it to be a Priſon and Banniard of Slaves, differing from that where the Galley-ſlaves are immured, only by the Ornaments and glittering out-ſide and appearances: here their Chains are made of Iron, and there of Gold and the difference is only in a painted ſhining ſervitude, from that which is a ſqualid, ſordid and a noiſome ſlavery. For the Youths educated in the Seraglio (which we ſhall have occaſion to diſcourſe of in the next Chapter) are kept as it were within a Priſon, under a ſtrange ſeverity of Diſcipline, ſome for twenty, thirty, others forty Years, others the whole time of the Age of Man, and grow gray under the correction of their Hogiaes or Tutors. The two Brothers of this preſent Grand Signior are alſo impriſoned here, reſtrained with a faithfull and carefull Guard, and perhaps are ſometimes permitted, out of Grace and Favour, into the preſence of their Brother, to kiſs his Veſt, and to perform the offices of Duty and Humility before their Prince. The Ladies alſo of the Seraglio have their faithful Keepers of the Black Guard to attend them, and can only have the liberty of enjoying the Air, which paſſes through Grates and Lattices, unleſs ſometime they obtain licence to ſport and recreate themſelves in the Garden, ſeparated from the ſight of Men, by Walls higher than thoſe of any Nunnery.

Nay, if a Man conſiders the Contexture of the whole Turkiſh Government, he will find it ſuch a Fabrick of ſlavery, that it is a wonder if any amongſt them ſhould be born of a free ingenuous Spirit. The Grand Signior is born of a Slave, the Mother of the preſent being a Circaſian, taken perhaps by the Tartars in their incurſions into that Country. The Viſiers themſelves are not always free-born by Father or Mother; for the Turks get more Children by their Slaves than by their Wives, and the continual ſupply of Slaves ſent in by the Tartars, taken from different Nations, by way of the Black Sea, (as hereafter we ſhall have occaſion to ſpeak more fully) fills Conſtantinople with ſuch a ſtrange Race, Mixture, and Medly of different ſorts of Blood, that it is hard to find many that can derive a clear Line from ingenuous Parents: So that it is no wonder that amongſt the Turks a diſpoſition be found fitted and diſpoſed for Servitude, and that is better governed with a ſevere and tyrannous Hand, than with ſweetneſs and Lenity, unknown to them and their Forefathers: as Grotius takes this Maxim out of Ariſtotle, Quoſdam homines naturâ eſſe ſervos; i. e. ad ſervitutem aptos; & ita populi quidem, eo ſunt ingenio, ut regi quam regere norint rectius. But ſince it appears that Submiſſion and Subjection are ſo incident to the Nature of the Turks, and Obedience taught, and ſo carefully inſtilled into them with their firſt Rudiments; it may be a pertinent queſtion, How it comes to paſs, that there are ſo many Mutinies and Rebellions as are ſeen and known amongſt the Turks, and thoſe commonly the moſt inſolent, violent and deſperate that we read of in Story. To let paſs the Mutinies of former Times in the Ottoman Camp, and the uſual, though ſhort Rebellions of ancient Days: I ſhall inſtance in the Cauſes and Beginnings of two notorious Diſturbances, or rather Madneſſes of the Souldiery, not mentioned in any Hiſtory, which being paſſages of our Age, deſerve greatly to be recorded.

This Obedience then that is ſo diligently taught and inſtilled into the Turkiſh Militia (as to the Spahees in their Seraglios, or Seminaries; the Janiſaries in their Chambers) ſometimes is forgot, when the Paſſions & Animoſities of the Court (by which inferior Affections are moſt commonly regulated) corrupt that Diſcipline, which its Reaſon and Sobriety inſtituted. For the affections of Princes are endued with a general Influence, when two powerful Parties aſpiring both to Greatneſs and Authority, allure the Souldiers to their reſpective Factions, and engage them in a Civil War amongſt themſelves; and hence proceed Seditions, deſtruction of Empires, the Overthrow of Common-Wealths, and the violent Death of great Miniſters of State. Spahees the Turkiſh Horſe.

And ſo it happened, when ill Government, and unproſperous Succeſſes of War, cauſed Diſobedience in the Souldiery, which ſome emulous of the Greatneſs of thoſe that were in Power, nouriſhed and raiſed to make place for themſelves or their Party. For in the time of Sultan Mahomet, the preſent Grand Signior, when the whole Government of the Empire reſted in the hands of one Mulki Kadin, a young audacious Woman, by the extraordinary Favour and Love of the Queen-Mother, (who, as it was divulged, exerciſed an unnatural kind of Carnality with the ſaid Queen) ſo that nothing was left to the Counſel and Order of the Vizier and grave Seniors, but was firſt to receive Approbation and Authority from her; the black Eunuchs and Negroes gave Laws to all, and the Cabinet-Councils were held in the ſecret Apartments of the Women; and there were Proſcriptions made, Officers diſcharged, or ordained as were moſt proper to advance the Intereſt of this Feminine Government. But at length the Souldiery (not uſed to the Tyranny of Women) no longer ſupporting this kind of Servitude, in a moment reſolved on a Remedy, and in great Tumults came to the Seraglio, where commanding the Grand Signior himſelf to the Kioſch, or Banquetting-houſe, they demanded, without farther Prologue, the Heads of the Favourite Eunuchs; there was no Argument or Rhetorick to be propoſed to this unreaſonable Multitude, nor Time given for delays, or conſultation; but every one of the accuſed, as he was entred into the Souldiers Roll or Catalogue, and required, being firſt ſtrangled, was afterwards thrown headlong from the Wall of the Garden, and committed to the farther ſatisfaction of their Enemies Revenge, by whom from thence they were dragged to the Hippodromo, and before the new Moſque cut into ſmall pieces, and their Fleſh roaſted and eaten by them. The day following, they apprehended Mulki, and her Husband Schaban Kalfa, both whom they put to Death; nor ended this Tumult here, until by means of diſſention between the Spahees and Janiſaries, the principal Miniſters found means and opportunity to interpoſe their Power; and having executed ſeveral of the Spahees, and performed other exemplary parts of Juſtice, reduced Matters to ſome kind of quietneſs and compoſure; and thus Order reſults often from Confuſion, and Tumults in corrupted Common-Wealths have operated good Effects to the redreſs of ſeveral Evils. But beſides this Inſurrection or Mutiny of the Janiſaries, have ſucceeded divers other; but becauſe there hath been no diſorder amongſt them ſo notorious and memorable, as that which occaſioned the Death of Kioſem, Grandmother to the preſent Sultan, we have thought fit to record the certain Particulars of it to all Poſterity.

CHAP. IV.

A True Relation of the Deſigns managed by the old Queen, Wife of Sultan Ahmet, and Mother of Sultan Morat, and Sultan Ibrahim, againſt her Grand-Child Sultan Mahomet, who now Reigns; and of the Death of the ſaid Queen and her Complices.

After the murther of Sultan Ibrahim, by conſpiracy of the Janiſaries, Sultan Mahomet, (eldeſt Son of the late deceaſed Emperor, a Child of nine Years old) ſucceeded in the Throne of his Father; and the Tuition of him, and Adminiſtration of the Government (during his minority) was committed to the old Queen, the Grandmother, called Kioſem; a Lady, who through her long experience, and practice in Affairs, was able, and proper for ſo conſiderable an Office; and ſo the young Sultan was conducted to the Moſch of Eiub, where with the accuſtomed Ceremonies, his Sword was girt to his Side, and he proclaimed Emperor through all the Kingdoms and Provinces of his Dominions.

For ſome time this old Queen governed all things according to her pleaſure, until the Mother of this young Sultan, as yet trembling with the thoughts of the horrid Death of her Lord; and fearing leſt the ſubtile and old Politician the Grandmother (who had compaſſed the Death of her Husband) ſhould likewiſe contrive the Murther of her Son, grew hourly more jealous of his Life and Safety; which ſuſpicion of hers was augmented by the knowledg ſhe had of the ambitious and haughty Spirit of the Grandmother, and the private Treaties, and ſecret Correſpondence ſhe held with the Janiſaries, which compelled her to a reſolution of making a Faction likewiſe with the Spahees, and Paſhaws, and Beyes, who had received their Education in the Seraglio, being a party always oppoſite to the Janiſaries. Theſe ſhe courted by Letters and Meſſages, complaining of the Death and Murther of the Sultan her Husband, the Pride and Inſolence of the Janizaries; and ſmall eſteem was had of her Son, their undoubted Prince; adding, that if they provided not for their own Safety, the old Queen would aboliſh both the Name and Order of Spahees. The Aſiatick Spahees awakened hereat, with a conſiderable Army, marched to Scutari, under the conduct of Gurgi Nebi, and demanded the Heads of thoſe who had been the Traytors and Conſpirators againſt the ſacred Life of their late Sovereign; all which were then under the protection of the Janiſaries, and ſupported by the powerful Authority of the Queen Regent. Upon this Alarm the Grand Viſier, (called Morat Paſhaw) who had had his Education among the Janiſaries, being adored by them as an Oracle, and engaged with them in the late Treaſon againſt the Sultan, ſpeedily paſſed over from Conſtantinople to Scutari, with an Army of Janiſaries, and others of his Favourites and Followers, tranſporting likewiſe Artillery and all neceſſaries for entrenchment; ſome Skirmiſhes paſſed between the Vanguard of the Spahees and the Deli (which are the Viſier's Guard) and thereby had engaged both the Armies; but that the two Chief Juſtices of Anatolia and Greece interpoſing with their grave and religious Countenances, preached to them of the Danger and Impiety there was in the effuſion of Muſſelmens or Believers Blood; and that, had they any juſt Pretences, their Plea ſhould be heard, and all Differences decided by the Law. Theſe, and ſuch like Perſuaſions made impreſſion on Gurgi Nebi and other Spahees: and the poſture they found their Adverſaries in, to give them battel, made them inclinable to hearken to Propoſals for accommodation; but eſpecially their Courages were abated by what the Juſtices had declared, that in caſe they repaired not to their own Homes, the Vizier was reſolved to burn all the Rolls, and proclaim a general Neſiraum through the whole Empire: which is an Edict of the King and Mufti, commanding all the Turks of his Kingdoms, from ſeven Years old and upward, to arm and follow him to the War.

The Spahees hereupon diſperſed themſelves; and from their Retreat, encreaſed the Pride of the Janiſaries Faction, and of their chief Commanders, viz. Bectas Aga, highly favoured by the Queen Regent; Kul Kiahia Lieutenant of the Janiſaries, and Kara Chiaus a follower of Bectas, who now eſteemed themſelves abſolute Maſters of the Empire. Theſe three now governed all Matters, contriving in their ſecret Councils the deſtruction of the Spahees; eſpecially thoſe famed for Riches and Valour; and as one of the firſt Rank, gave order to the Paſha of Anatolia, to take away the Life of Gurgi Nebi; whom accordingly he one day aſſaulted in his Quarters, and being abandoned by his Souldiers, ſhot him with a Piſtol, and ſent his head to Conſtantinople.

The Spahees, exaſperated hereat, entred into private Councils and Conſpiracies in Anatolia againſt the Janiſaries, drawing to their party ſeveral Beyes and Paſhaws of Aſia (and particularly one Ipſir a Circaſian born, but educated in the Seraglio, a Perſon of a courageous Spirit, and powerful in Men and Treaſure) aſſaulted many Quarters of the Janiſaries in Aſia, and cutting off their Arms and Noſes, miſerably ſlaughtered as many as fell into their hands.

On the other party Bectas Aga, ſecure in his condition, amaſſed Wealth with both hands, by new Impoſitions, Rapine, and other Arts; cauſing to be coined at Belgrade three hundred thouſand Aſpers, one third Silver, and two of Tin; theſe Aſpers he diſperſed amongſt the Tradeſmen and Artiſans, forcing others to exchange his falſe Metal for Gold, at the value of 160 Aſpers for the Hungarian Ducat. The people ſenſible of the Cheat, began a Mutiny in the Quarter of the Sadlers at Conſtantinople, which encreaſed ſo faſt, that the whole City was immediately in a general Uproar: This Tumult was violently carried to the place of the Mufti, whom they forced with the Seigh (who is the Grand Signior's Preacher) and the Nakib Eſrif, a Primate of the Mahometan Race, to accompany them to the Seraglio; where at the inward Gate of the Royal Lodgings, with Clamours and Out-cries, they made their Complaint. In this Danger the Grand Signior was adviſed by the Capi Agaſi, and Solyman Aga, the Kuzlir Aga or chief Eunuch of the Women, that this happy Conjuncture was to be embraced for the deſtruction of Bectas and his Complices; but fear, and too much caution hindred that Deſign for the preſent; only it was judged fit, for ſatisfaction of the Multitude, that Melek Ahmet Paſhaw (then Prime Vizier, and yet a Slave to the Luſts of the Janiſaries) ſhould be deprived of his Office; which was immediately effected; and the Seal taken from him, was delivered to Siaus Paſhaw, a ſtout and valiant Perſon. This Vizier being jealous of his own Honour, and jealous for the ſafety of the Empire, caſt about all ways to ſuppreſs the arrogance of Bectas and his Adherents; leſt the like ſhame and misfortune ſhould befal him, as did to Murad Paſham one of his late Predeceſſors in the Office of Vizier; who for diſſenting from Bectas in Opinion, had loſt his Life; had he not eſcaped his Fury by flying into Greece.

The times were alſo troubleſome, and full of danger; the Janiſaries kept Guard in the Streets, not ſuffering ſo much as two Citizens to walk together, for prevention of ſecret Conſultations: many Artiſans, or Handy-craftſmen, were impriſoned, as principally in the late Tumult, againſt the Conſent and Order of the new Vizier; the Court was alſo divided; The Sultan's Party contrived to ſurprize and kill the rebellious Commanders of the Janiſaries, and that the day following, the Lieutenant of the Baltagees, or Hatchetmen, ſhould encounter Kulchiachia as he came according to cuſtom to the Divan, and ſlay him; but the Old Queen being of a contrary Faction, with Threats and Menaces frighted that Officer from his deſign. The two Queens were exaſperated highly againſt each other; one to maintain the Authority of her Son, and the other her own: in the City the confuſion grew greater; the Janiſaries were not pleaſed with the election of Siaus Paſſa, knowing him to be averſe to their Faction; but yet conſidering the ſtate of the Times, they endeavoured, with fair Promiſes, to allure him to their Party. The old Queen, by Letters, adviſed Bectas of all Matters that were diſcourſed in the Seraglio, intimating that the young Queen was Author of all theſe Diſturbances, and that therefore, as a remedy of all theſe Evils, it was neceſſary that Sultan Mahomet ſhould be depoſed, and his younger Brother Solyman placed in his ſtead, who having a Mother, would be abſolutely ſubject to her Tuition: ſhe added likewiſe that Solyman was a luſty Youth, corpulent and Majeſtical, whereas Sultan Mahomet was lean, weakly and unable for the Crown. Bectas having received this Meſſage from the Queen Regent, aſſembled a Council at Orta-giami (that is the Janiſaries Moſch) where was a great and ſolemn appearance both of the Souldiery and Lawyers, (which latter are of the Spiritual Function amongſt them) ſome out of friendſhip to their Party, and others for fear of their Power; only the Vizier was wanting, whom they ſent to invite, out of an Opinion that he might be drawn to their ſide; and in caſe they found him oppoſite, then not to ſuffer him to eſcape alive from their Councils. It was then two hours in the Night, when this Meſſage came to the Vizier; and though it was againſt the State and Gravity of a Vizier to go to any, but his Maſter; yet he thought it now time to diſſemble, and overcome the greatneſs of his Mind; and ſo with a private Retinue went to the Moſch, where the firſt he encountred, was a Guard of Ten thouſand Janiſaries, armed with their Muskets and Matches lighted, which at firſt ſo diſmayed him, that he had ſome thoughts of returning, but afterwards recovering himſelf, and taking Courage, reſolved to proceed; and coming to the Moſch, Bectas vouchſafed not to meet him, but ſent another to perform that Ceremony; at which neglect, though the greatneſs of his Spirit could ſcarce contain it ſelf, yet ſuppreſſing his choler, he addreſſed himſelf to the Feet of Bectas, who ſcarce ariſing, gave him a faint welcome; and ſetting him on his left hand (which is the upper hand with the Turkiſh Souldiery) began to propound to him his new Deſigns; and firſt, That it was neceſſary, that the preſent King ſhould be depoſed, and Solyman Crowned in his place. That the Canons of the Imperial Seraglio ſhould be reformed; and that whereas the Children of divers Nations were yearly collected for the Service of the Grand Signior, none ſhould for the future have admiſſion there, but the Sons of Janiſaries. The Vizier conſented to all that was propoſed, profeſſing a ſincere affection and reality to them and their Party, ſwearing upon the Alchoran, with the moſt horrid Imprecations on himſelf, and his Family, if he were not faithful to Him and his Deſigns; which gave Bectas that ſatisfaction, that he began to perſuade himſelf that the Vizier was really a confiding Perſon, and one affectionate to their Intereſt; and ſo partly from this conſideration, and partly out of a confidence of his own ſtrength, and inability of the Vizier to hurt him, fairly took his leave of him, and ſo diſmiſſed his Kalaba Divan, or his confuſed Council.

But the Chiachia Bei (or Lieutenant-General of the Janiſaries) and Kara-Chiaus reproved very much Bectas for permitting the Vizier to eſcape with his Life, ſaying, he had done ill in ſuffering the Bird to eſcape out of the Cage; that he had releaſed one, and permitted him to carry his Head on his Shoulders, who would ſhortly take off theirs; with many words of the like effect. But Bectas ſlighted their Reproof, as proceeding from want of Courage, and the Ignorance of their own Power; and that the time until morning was ſo ſhort, that ſhould the Vizier intend to countermine them, he was wholly unable, being unprovided both of Power and Council. The Vizier being got free, went apace to the Seraglio, with two Men only, thanked God as he walked, that he was freed from the Hands of thoſe Tyrants and Villains; and coming to the Iron-gate, intending to paſs through the Garden, he found it open, contrary to the cuſtom; and enquiring of the Boſtangees, or Gardiners, the reaſon, he could learn nothing farther from them, than that it was the order of the old Queen: who (as it appeared afterwards) expected her Confidents who might withdraw her that Night into ſome retirement where ſhe might remain ſecure from the Dangers of the enſuing Day. The Vizier being entred, went ſoftly to the Sultan's Apartments, and in his way, by good chance, met with the Kuzlir Agaſi, Solyman Aga, the chief Eunuch of the Women, who in the dark was making his rounds about the old Queen's Lodgings; by the Vizier's voice Solyman knew who he was, but was amazed at his unſeaſonable viſit; yet underſtanding the Buſineſs, thanked him for his Vigilance; adding, that he had alſo obſerved that the old Queen, contrary to her cuſtom, was not yet gone to Bed, who did at other times at two hours in the Night diſpoſe her ſelf to reſt, only this Evening ſhe had entertained her ſelf in company of her Eunuchs, and Favourites, with Muſick, Singing, and other unuſual Delights. Wherefore, after ſome ſhort deliberation, the Vizier, Solyman Aga, and others of the King's Eunuchs, went to the quarters of the old Queen, and offering to enter forcibly, were repulſed by the Queen's Eunuchs; but Solyman Aga being a ſtout Man, drew his Dagger and ſtruck the chief Chamberlain Baſh Kapa Oglar on the Face; upon which the other Eunuchs who accompanied Solyman entred tred furiouſly with their Daggers, at which the Eunuchs of the Queen flying, ſhe remained alone in the Chamber, where ſhe was committed to the cuſtody of the King's Eunuchs. The fugitive Eunuchs would immediately have eſcaped out of the Seraglio, but the Gates were firſt ſhut by order of Solyman Aga, ſo that they, with all other Favourites of the ſaid Queen, were taken and ſecured in ſafe hands. This Victory was ſo ſecretly obtained, that they received no Alarm in the Royal Lodgings, though near adjoining; ſo that the Vizier and Solyman Aga went to the Chamber where the King ſlept, and lifting up the Antiport, made a ſign of ſilence to the Ladies of the Guard, commanding, by dumb motions, that the young Queen ſhould be awakened (for it is the cuſtom in the Grand Signior's Court to ſpeak by ſigns, to prevent noiſe, and as if there were ſome point in it of Majeſty and Decency, they have practiſed this mute Language ſo fully, that they are able to recount Stories in it.) The Ladies hereupon gently rubbing the Queen's Feet, raiſed her out of her ſleep, and gave her to underſtand the Solyman Aga would ſpeak with her; whereat the Queen ſurprized, leapt from her Bed to ſpeak with him, and was ſcarce informed of the Buſineſs, before ſhe became ſo affrighted, that ſhe could not contain her ſelf within the Bounds of Moderation or Silence, but with great Cry ran to take her Son as one diſtracted, and catching him up in her Arms, cried out, O Son! thou and I are dead; the Grand Signior likewiſe as a Child bewailed himſelf, and falling at the feet of Solyman Aga, ſaid, Lala, Lala Kurtar-beni, which is, Tutor, Tutor ſave me: He not without Tears took his Lord into his Arms, and with the Vizier encouraged the Child and his Mother, proteſting that they would rather die, than live to behold ſo horrid a ruine; and ſo accompanied him, (ſome Ladies carrying before Torches lighted in their hands) to the Hozoda, which is the Preſence Chamber, or place where the principal Officers of the Court attend. Upon the approach of the Torches, the Guard which watched in this Chamber was amazed, and walking towards the light to diſcover what there was, perceived that the Grand Signior was coming thither, and thereupon returned again with all haſte to awaken their Companions, and calling them immediately to repair to their due ſervice.

The Grand Signior being ſeated on a Throne, which is always remaining in the Preſence Chamber; the Officers hereof (which are in number forty) preſented themſelves before him, deſiring to know if his Majeſty had any thing wherein to employ their Fidelity and Service. Hereat Solyman Aga ſaid, He that eats the King's Bread, ſhould apply himſelf to the King's Service; we ſuffered the Traitors to deſtroy Sultan Ibrahim, and now they would alſo take this out of our hands; To you it belongs, who are his Majeſty's Principal Servitors, to afford him your utmoſt aſſiſtance. Eiguſi Muſſapha Paſſa, Sword-bearer to the Grand Signior, and chief of the Preſence Chamber, a Man of a Lion's Heart, and undaunted Reſolution, underſtanding ſomething formerly of the Bad inclinations of the old Queen towards the King, readily replied, Great Maſter, be not troubled, to morrow you ſhall ſee (God willing) the Heads of your Enemies at your Feet. The Vizier and others in the mean time after a ſhort Conſult fell to act, the exigency of their Affairs admitting no delays; and in the firſt place, Pen and Ink being brought, an Order was preſented to the Grand Signior, to be ſubſcribed for the arreſting the Boſſangi-Paſha as a Traitor, for having, againſt the rule of the night, kept open the Gate of the King's Garden. This was done in an inſtant, he removed from his Office, and another conſtituted in his place; and at the ſame time the Oath of Allegiance was adminiſtred to him, who calling together the Gardiners, in number, about 500, cauſed them alſo all to ſwear faithful Obedience to the Grand Signior, and to remain all that Night, keeping good Guard at the Gates and Walls of the Gardens. In the next place the Ichoglans were called up (who are the Grand Signior's Pages) and to proceed with the more privacy and leaſt confuſion, they went firſt to the Chamber of the Capa Agaſi (who by his Office is over all the Youth of the Seraglio) and knocking gently at the Window, the Guards came at the noiſe, and demanded what the matter was? they anſwered, Awake the Capa Aga, and let him ſpeak to us at the Window. But the Capa Aga would firſt know who they were that would ſpeak with him: and when it was told him that it was the Vizier and the Kuſlir Aga, he anſwered, I am indiſpoſed and cannot riſe, but utter what you have to ſay at the Window; ſo they ſaid, By his Majeſty's Order, go and raiſe all the Ichoglans in the Seraglio, upon an important occaſion; and yet the Capa Agaſi would not ſtir, ſo that ſome believed him confederate in the Conſpiracy; but the truth was, he was an ancient Man of 90 Years, and unhealthful in his Body. Wherefore Solyman Aga cried out with a loud voice, Aga raiſe the Ichoglans, our King is ready to be taken out of our hands; but the Capa Aga perſiſted that he would not raiſe the Ichoglans or Pages, unleſs he brought a Command in writing from the King. In the interim the Servants of the Capa Aga awakened, and hearing this diſcourſe, could not contain themſelves, but with without farther Order ran to both the greater and leſſer Chamber of the Pages; the Butler came to that which is called the greater Chamber; it was then five hours in the night when he entred in, and running to the middle of the Chamber, which was 80 Paces in length, he made a ſtop and clapped his hands together; (To make ſuch a noiſe in the Seraglio at night was a high Miſdemeanor) at which ſome being awakened, raiſed up their Heads, and ſtartled at ſuch an unuſual Alarm, enquired the reaſon of it; at which he again clapping his hands, and crying out, Ariſe the Grand Signior is like to be taken out of our hands, the whole Chamber was raiſed; ſo that you might have ſeen all the Ichoglans in number above 800 to ariſe and run in a confuſed manner, ſome without Cloaths, ſome without Arms to fight, ſome ſuppoſing the Janiſaries were already entred the Seraglio. In this amaze came a Guard of Black and White Eunuchs to the Door, adviſing them to arm themſelves with what Weapons were next at hand, and there to remain until they received farther Orders. All the other Chambers of the Pages and Officers were in the ſame confuſion, and were commanded in the like manner to arm themſelves.

The Grand Signior fearing all this while he ſhould be put to death as his Father was, could not be pacified untill Muſtapha Paſha his Sword-bearer taking him by the hand ſhewed him his Attendants all armed, and ready at his command; and paſſing by one of the Windows of the Lodgings, was deſcried by a young Man, who cried out with a loud voice (God grant our King Ten thouſand Years of Life) at which all the Chamber ſhouted, * Allah, Allah; this Acclamation clamation rang through all the Seraglio, ſo that it reached the more remote quarters of the Drogiſts, Cooks, Pole-axe-men, Faulconers, and others; who being ready and armed as the others, anſwered with the like ſhout.

* A Shout uſed by the

Theſe Preparations were not only in the Seraglio, but likewiſe without; for the Vizier had given order to all the Paſhaws and Beglerbegs, and other his Friends, that without delay they ſhould repair to the Seraglio with all the force they could make, bringing with them three days Proviſion, obliging them, under pain of Death, to this Duty. In a ſhort ſpace ſo great was this concourſe, that all the Gardens of the Seraglio, the outward Courts, and all the adjoining Streets, were filled with armed Men: from Galata and Tophana came Boats and Barges loaden with Powder and Ammunition, and other Neceſſaries; ſo that in the morning, by break of day, appeared ſuch an Army of Horſe and Foot in the Streets, and Ships and Gallies on the Sea, as adminiſtred no ſmall terrour to the Janiſaries; of which being adviſed, and ſeeing the concourſe of the People run to the aſſiſtance of the King, they thought it high time to beſtir themſelves; and therefore armed a great company of Albaneſes, Greeks, and other Chriſtians, to whom they offered Mony, and the Title and Privileges of Janiſaries, promiſing to free them from Harach, or Impoſitions paid by the Chriſtians; which Arguments were ſo prevalent, that moſt taking Arms, you might ſee the Court and City divided, and ready to enter into a moſt dreadful confuſion of a Civil War.

In the Seraglio all things were in good order, the Morning Devotions being finiſhed, the Baltagees, (who are a guard that carry Poleaxes) called to the Pages to join with them, and accompany them to the Preſence Chamber. Theſe Baltagees were in number about 200, ſtrong, of large ſtature, and of admirable agility; at whoſe beck the Pages ran with all alacrity to the door of the Chamber, where they at firſt received a repulſe from the Maſter of the Chamber who was an Eunuch, and one faithful to the old Queen's Intereſt, who to yield all poſſible furtherance towards the protection of her Perſon, reproved the inſolence of the Rout in coming ſo boiſterouſly to the Royal Lodgings; to which they unanimouſly anſwered, that they would ſpeak to his Majeſty, that it was their deſire to have the old Queen (Enemy to the King, and the Mahometan Faith) put to Death; at which words he being enraged, and relying on his Authority, reproved them with Terms of Rebels and Traitors to their Maſter. What have you to do with the Queen, ſaid he? Are you worthy to open your Mouths againſt her ſerene Name? He reiterating theſe and the like words, one of this Rabble ſaid, Kill that Cuckold, for he alſo is an Enemy of the Faith. And whilſt one lifted up his hand to ſtrike him, he fled by the way of the Tarras into the Garden, whither being purſued by five or ſix of them, he was overtaken, and catching him by the Collar, would have cut his Throat, but that at his earneſt entreaty, they gave him ſo much liberty as firſt to caſt himſelf at the Feet of the Sultan: whither being dragged, he delivered to the King a Seal and a Key of ſecret Treaſure, and being about to ſay ſomething in his own behalf and defence of his Life, a bold Youth of theſe Baltages, called Jalch-Leferli ſtruck him on the Head with his Ax, and cleft it in two pieces; the others ſeeing this firſt blow given him, fell on him with their Scimiters and cut him to pieces; his Blood and Brains were daſhed on the rich Carpets, which moved fear in many, who were ſecretly of the Conſpiracy with the old Queen. The young King himſelf, ignorant of the good Intentions of his Servants, at the ſight of blood-ſhed, being yet tender-hearted, cryed, and cloſely embraced the Selihtar who then held him in his Arms; but upon the removal of the Corpſe out of his ſight, and ſome ſmooth words, as that it was a Sacrifice of Love to him, and the like, his childiſh Tears were ſoon wiped away.

In this interim the new created Mufti, and Kenan Paſha, one of the Viziers of the Bench, and Balyzade Efende, who was formerly Lord Chief Juſtice, and well affected to the Spahee's Party, entring the Hazoda, or Preſence-Chamber, perceiving a Tumult in his Majeſty's preſence, with different Voices and Languages, for ſome cryed in Georgian, others Albanian, Boſnian, Mengrelian, Turkiſh and Italian, remained in great confuſion how to proceed with Order and Reaſon in this important Affair; for the Mufti, and others, were of Opinion, that the Sentence againſt the old Queen was not raſhly to be pronounced, and ſo the Matter might calmly be debated, and if poſſible, an expedient might be found for ſaving her Life, and ſecuring the Sultan: But the Rabble impatient of Delay, cryed out, defer not the Sentence; for otherwiſe we ſhall eſteem thee as one of her Adherents.

By this time news was come to the young Queen, that there had been a Fight in the Streets; who as yet doubtful of the ſucceſs, and fearing if the Janiſaries ſhould gain the Advantage, Beſtas would revenge the Blood of the old Queen by her Death, came covered with a Veil into the Preſence-Chamber, ſaying, as ſhe paſſed, Is this the Reverence you owe to the King your Lord? Do you know the place where you are? What would you have of a Woman? Why do you buſie your ſelves in the King's Affairs? Some preſently apprehended that this was only a Plot of the young Queen to make the World believe ſhe would rather aſſiſt the Grandmother, than contrive againſt her; which made the Pages the more importunately to perſiſt with the Mufti for the Fetfa or Sentence againſt her. But one of the Pages ſuſpecting that this Woman ſo veiled, might be the old Queen her ſelf, cried out, This is ſhe you ſeek for, ſhe is in your Hands, take your Revenge upon her. At which ſome beſtirring themſelves to ſeiſe her, ſhe ran to the Feet of her Son, and laying hold on him, cryed out, No, no, I am not the Grandmother, I am the Mother of this his Majeſty; and wiping the Tears from the Eyes of her Son with her Handkerchief, made ſigns to keep back, which reſtrained the forwardneſs of ſome who preſſed to lay violent hands upon her. The Mufti, who obſerved the carriage of the Rout, and their earneſt deſires which could not be reſiſted, feared, if he gave not his concurrence, he himſelf ſhould be killed, and the rather becauſe he over-heard the old Kenan Paſha diſcourſe with the Vizier to the like effect. So that after ſome pauſe and conſultation with the other chief Miniſters, it was reſolved to ſupplicate his Majeſty for his conſent; which was done in theſe words; Sir, The Will of God is, that you conſign your Grandmother into the hands of Juſtice, if you would have theſe Mutinies appeaſed; a little Miſchief is better than a great One; there is no other Remedy, God willing the end ſhall be proſperous. Pen and Ink being brought, the Mufti wrote the Sentence, and the Grand Signior ſubſcribed it, which was, that the the old Queen ſhould be ſtrangled, but neither cut with Sword, nor bruiſed with Blows. The Writing was delivered into the hands of one of the Chamberlains, to whom, by word of Mouth, it was ordered that they ſhould carry the Queen out by Cuſhana, (or the Gate of the Birds) ſo as ſhe might not die in ſight or hearing of the Grand Signior. The Ichoglans advancing the Royal Command on high with their hands, went out of the Preſence with a great ſhout, crying, Allah, Allah, to the Door of the Womens Lodgings, where they met ſome black Eunuchs keeping Guard, who upon the ſight of the Imperial Firme, and the command of Solyman Aga, gave them admittance, upon condition that twenty Perſons only ſhould enter the Chambers. Thoſe who were beſt armed went in, and paſſing through the Chambers of the Virgins, were met by the Queen's Buffone with a Piſtol in her hand, who demanded what they would have? they anſwered, the King's Grandmother; ſhe replied, I am ſhe, and with that offered to diſcharge her Piſtol, but it took fire only in the Pan; with that the Ichoglans laid hold on her, ſuppoſing her to be the Queen; but being better adviſed by Solyman the Kuzlir Aga, and directed to the Chamber where the Queen was; the Door being opened, they perceived the Room to be dark (for the Womens quarters in the Seraglio for the moſt part are made obſcure and cloſe, and Lights are burnt in them Day and Night) and the old Queen had at the approach of theſe Officers extinguiſhed her Candles and got into a great Preſs, and there covered her ſelf with Quilts and Carpets; but Torches being brought in, they looked all about and deſcryed nothing; at which they were enraged againſt Solyman, and would have killed him, ſaying, That he was the cauſe the Queen had eſcaped. But Solyman adviſing them to ſearch more narrowly, one called Deli Dogangi, got upon the Preſs, and removing the Clothes, diſcovered the Queen, who had thruſt her ſelf into a corner; at which ſhe ſhortly thus entreats him, O brave Man be not cruel unto me; and promiſed ſhe would give to every Ichoglan five Purſes a Man (each Purſe conſiſting of 500 Dollars) if they would ſave her life. It is not the time of Ranſome, Traitor, ſaid he; and taking her by the Feet, drew her forth: the Queen riſing up, put her hand into her Pocket, and threw out handfulls of Zaichins, hoping that whilſt they were ſcrambling for the Gold, ſhe might have an opportunity to eſcape; ſome of the young Men gathered up the Mony, but the Dogangi, like a Dog of the Game, left her not, and at length, though ſhe were heavy, caſt her down. The others offered at her Life, and particularly an Albaneſe, called Ali Boſtangi, who ſeeing two great Jewels at her Ears, immediately catched at them, and tore them thence. They were two Diamonds of the bigneſs of Cheſnuts cut angularly, and beneath each Diamond was a Ruby to ſet it off. Thoſe Earings were given her by Sultan Achmet in the time of her moſt flouriſhing Age, and his greateſt affection. 'Tis ſaid, that ſuch Jewels cannot be found in all the Great Turks Treaſure, and were eſteemed by the moſt skilful Jewellers, worth a Years Revenue of Grand Cairo. This Ali ſhewed the Jewels to his Camrade, demanding the value of them, and his counſel whether to reveal or conceal them: but the Camrade prized them at that rate that the ſtout young Man could not ſleep Day nor Night, being always in fear leſt the Jewels ſhould not be kept hid; and apprehending that they became none but the Grand Signior to wear, went and delivered them to Solyman Aga, who in recompence thereof, preſented him with ſixteen Zaichins, which he accepted, deſiring alſo to be admitted into the Chamber of the Treaſury, which was granted him. Others alſo plucked her, ſome by the Hands, others by the Feet; ſome riſed her Clothes, for ſhe was furniſhed throughout with things of great value ſewed in her Garments, and eſpecially in her Sable Furs, which contain'd alſo certain Magick Spells, by which ſhe conceived ſhe had tied the Tongues of all the Emperours living in her Time. The perſon who gave me this Relation, informed me, that he had ſeen a certain Lock admirably made, and engraved with the Names of Murad and Sultan Ibrahim; it was made by a famous Gindgi, a very ignorant Fellow, but a ſuperſtitious crafty Liar, by which Arts finding acceſs, in ſhort time he became a chief Favourite of Sultan Ibrahim, and from a poor Student called by the Turks a Softa, he grew ſo rich in two Years that none in Conſtantinople was comparable to him.

But to return to the Queen now aſſaulted by furious young Men, greedy of Riches; ſhe was in a moment deſpoiled of her Garments; her Furs were torn off into ſmall pieces; and being ſtript of her Rings, Bracelets, Garters and other things, ſhe was left naked without a Rag to cover her, and dragged by the feet to the Chuſhana: and being at the Place of her execution, the young Officers found themſelves unprovided of a Cord to ſtrangle her, ſo that crying out for a Cord, one ran to the Royal Chappel, and thence took the Cord that upheld the great Antiport of the Moſch, which being twined about the Queen's Neck, the aforeſaid Dogangi getting upon her back, pitched her neck with his hands, whilſt the others drew the Cord. The Queen, though ſhe were by this time beſides her Senſes, and worn out with Age, being above 80 Years old, and without Teeth; yet ſhe with her Gums only did bite the Thumb of his left Hand, which by chance came into her Mouth, ſo hard, that he could not deliver himſelf until with the haft of his Poniard he ſtruck her on the Forehead near her right Eye. There were four that ſtrangled her, but being young Executioners, laboured long to diſpatch her, till at length the Queen leaving to ſtruggle, lay ſtretched out, and was ſuppoſed to be dead, and ſo crying (Uldi, Uldi) ſhe is dead, ſhe is dead, ran to carry the news thereof to his Majeſty; but being ſcarce out of ſight, the Queen raiſed her ſelf up, and turned her Head about; upon which the Executioners being again called back, the Cord was a ſecond time applied, and wrung ſo hard with the haft of a hatchet, that at length ſhe was diſpatched, and the News carried to the Royal Chamber. The black Eunuchs immediately took up the Corpſe, and in a reverend manner laid it ſtretched forth in the Royal Moſch, with about 400 of the Queen's Slaves encompaſſing it round about with Howling and Lamentations, tearing the Hair from their Heads after their barbarous faſhion, moved compaſſion in all the Court.

This Work being over, the Vizier having given thanks to the Ichoglans, or Pages, for their pains, gave order to produce the Banner of Mahomet, which is carefully and reverently kept in the Treaſury; which being produced, obliges all of that Faith, from ſeven Years and upward, to arm and come under it. The Banner being brought forth, with a rich Covering, was advanc'd vanc'd with great ſhouts of Allah, Allah: and carried by the Ichoglans out of the chief Gate of the Seraglio, where it was ſhewn to the People, who with wonderful admiration and devotion, beheld their glorious Standard; order was alſo given to proclaim, through the whole City, the Proceſſion of the Heavenly Banner; for they ſay, that the Angel Gabriel brought it to Mahomet in the time of a great War made againſt the Chriſtians, as an infallible Sign and Evidence of Victory.

The opinion of this ſuperſtitious Flag ſo prevailed, as it brought, not only the Young and Healthful to fight under it, but Sick and Old; and Women judged themſelves obliged to run to the defence of this Holy Enſign. The news hereof, and the death of the old Queen coming to the old Chamber of the Janiſaries; ſeveral of them, and thoſe alſo of the principal Heads, began to murmure, that it was now neceſſary to lay aſide their private Intereſts, and have a reſpect to their Faith and their Souls; for ſhould they oppoſe the Heavenly Banner, they ſhould run themſelves into the State of Gaurs and Infidels, and become liable to the ſame cenſure or puniſhment which is inflicted upon unbelievers. But in the new Chambers Bectas endeavoured to remove this apprehenſion from the mind of his Souldiers, by large Preſents both of Gold and Silver, perſwading them to uphold their Fame and Reputation; for that the Grand Signior and his Mother were Enemies to their Name and Deſigns, and reſolved to abaſe or deſtroy the order of that Militia; and with aſſurance of Victory and encouragement againſt a People unarmed and undiſciplined, animated them to fight; and to make the buſineſs more eaſie, adviſed them to fire the City in ſeveral parts, that ſo the People might be diverted and divided for ſafety of their own Goods and Dwellings. But this propoſition took not with the Officers and Souldiers, who had many of them Houſes and Poſſeſſions of their own in Conſtantinople, but put them into great Diſtractions and Diviſions in their Counſels. In this pauſe, came an Officer from the Grand Signior (who to venture his life, had the promiſe of a good Reward) with a command in Writing which he threw in amongſt them, and galloped away as faſt as he could; crying out as he rode, He that comes not under the Banner of the Prophet, is a Pagan, and his Wife divorced. The Writing was taken up and carried to the preſence of the principal Officers, which being opened and read, was to this purpoſe; Bectas Aga, I have made Paſha of Boſna, Kara-chiaus I have made Captain-General of the Sea; Kul-kahya I have made Paſha of Temiſwar; and Kara Haſſan Ogle I have made Janiſar Agaſi; and I require, at ſight of theſe Preſents, that every one of you, upon pain of Death, and ruine of his Family, repair to his Duty and Station.

In this inſtant came news that the old Chamber of Janiſaries had left their ſtation, and were run under the Banner without Arms, and had refuſed Bectas's Mony, and deſerted his Cauſe; and that the Spahees in great Troops, and the Jebegees (who command the Ordnance) approached with Artillery to beat upon their Chambers. The Spahees came thundring in upon the Janiſaries in remembrance of their paſt Injuries, and had certainly cut them off, had not the Vizier, with his Sword in his hand, by good and bad words, reſtrained them, and appeaſed their Animoſity. The Janiſaries of the new Chamber proclaimed their new Commander, and viſited him with their uſual form of Congratulation, running afterwards confuſedly under the Banner. Kara Haſſan the new elected Aga of the Janiſaries, went to the Seraglio to thank the Grand Signior for the Honour done him, and with ten of his principal Friends was admitted to the Grand Signior's Preſence; who humbly kiſſing the Ground, received the accuſtomed Veſts, and with ſome Admonitions, was fairly diſmiſſed, and ordered to reduce his Janiſaries to better Obedience.

By this time Bectas, Kulkahya, and Kara Chiaus, with ſome of their Favourites, remained wholly abandoned, looking one upon the other, full of Complaints and Railings, each at other, for the miſcarriage of the Action. But ſince it was not now time to condole, but to ſave their Lives, every one made to his Houſe. Firſt, Bectas fled to his Home, where having ordered his Affairs, he clothed himſelf in the Albanian faſhion, and eſcaped to the Houſe of a poor Man formerly his Friend and Confident; but the next day being diſcovered by a Youth, was taken, and being ſet on a Mule, was with the ſcorn and deriſion of the People conducted to the Grand Signior's Seraglio, and there ſtrangled. This Perſon was held in ſo much deteſtation by the common People, that after his Death, the Cooks and inferiour ſort of Servants, run Spits and Pitch-forks through his Body; and plucking the Hairs out of his Beard, ſent them for Preſents to their acquaintance through all Conſtantinople, ſaying, Theſe are the Hairs of that Traitor, who gloried, that before he would loſe his Head, there ſhould be raiſed a Mountain of Heads as high as St. Sophia. But Kulkahya being come to his Houſe, filled his Portmantles with Gold and Jewels, and accompanied with ſixty Horſe, reſolved to fly to the Mountains of Albania, places ſo inacceſſible, that they have never yielded to the Turkiſh Yoke: but finding himſelf hotly purſued in his Journey, and that it was impoſſible to eſcape with ſo great a Number, freely diſtributed a great part of his Gold upon his Retinue, and thanking them for their Affection, and good Intentions, diſmiſſed them all excepting one Servant, with whom he journied with four laden Horſes, with Gold, Jewels, and other Riches; and perceiving that this alſo was too great an incumbrance, they buried a Treaſure to the value of 600 thouſand Dollars in the Country as they travelled; which was afterwards found out by certain Shepherds, who diſagreeing about the diviſion thereof, the Matter came to be known to the Judg of that Country, who ſeiſed upon it all, and ſent it to the Grand Signior's Treaſury. But Kulkahya travelling ſtill farther with his ſingle Page, came to a Town, where wanting Bread, and forced for the Paiment of it to exchange Gold, fell into a ſuſpicion of being one of thoſe Rebels lately eſcaped from Conſtantinople; which news being brought to a Captain of Horſe that Commanded the place, he came immediately with ſome Men to take him; but Kulkahya reſolving not to fall into their hands alive, reſiſted them until he was killed by a Musket-ſhot, and ſo his Head being ſevered from his Body, was ſent to the Grand Signior.

Kara Chiaus in this interim being with two hundred Men retired into his Garden, was aſſaulted by an Aga of the Spahees (called Parmakſis) with 500 Men; but that this Enterpriſe might be acquired with a little Blood, a Perſon was ſent ſecretly to adviſe that Party, that if they oppoſed the Royal Command, they ſhould every one be put to death; at which the People fled and diſperſed themſelves. At that inſtant came in this Aga and took him, and yet comforted him with the Clemency and Mercy of the Grand Signior, promiſing alſo himſelf to intercede for him. And ſo bringing him to the Seraglio by the Garden Gate, his Majeſty had notice of it, and looking out of the Window, and ſeeing him upon his Knees begging pardon, the Grand Signior gave a Sign to the Executioner to ſtrangle him, which was accordingly performed. The new Janiſar Aga who knew all the Officers, formerly affected to the rebellious Party, for ſeveral Nights cauſed ſome or other of them to be ſtrangled, to the number of thirty eight Perſons; which ſtruck ſuch a terrour into the Janiſaries, that for a long time after they kept themſelves within the bounds of Humility and Obedience. And thus concluded this Tragedy, remarkable, as well for the Diſpatch, as for the Action it ſelf, being but the work of fourteen Hours. And in this manner it is apparent, how the leſſons of Obedience which are ſo carefully taught, and inſtilled into the Minds of thoſe who ſerve and depend upon the Grand Signior are corrupted; and by the Pride, Diſcord, and Faction of the Governours, ſeduced from their natural Principles.

By the Premiſſes we may conſider more generally, that it hath always been the misfortune of unlimited Powers to be ſubject to Dangers and Violence, ariſing from the Diſcontents and Unconſtancy of the Souldiery: for they coming to be ſenſible of their own Strength, and knowing that the Power of the Emperor is but fortified with their Hands and Heart, like unruly Beaſts throw their Riders, and ſhew that the Principles of Obedience taught them, are eaſily corrupted and defaced by evil Perſwaſions, or Sedition in a Commander or common Souldier. Thus we ſee in the time of the latter Roman Emperors, who uſurped Power unknown in the days of the pure and happy Conſtitution of that Common-Wealth, and governed all by the Sword and their own Luſts; few of them ended their days fortunately, or died in their Beds in Peace, without becoming a Sacrifice to the ſame Power that firſt proclaimed them Emperors. And though the Mutinies and Rebellions in the Turkiſh Militia can hardly operate any durable alteration in the State (as we ſhall more at large hereafter diſcourſe) yet doubtleſs the Tyranny in the Ottoman Emperors, had provoked the People long ſince to have proved the benefit of another Race, but that there is a ſtrange kind of Devotion and Religion in their Minds as to the Ottoman Blood, which having been the Original of their Empire and Greatneſs, will ever be maintained in high Reverence and Honour. Nor is it likely that the fair Speeches and Allurements of a rebellious Slave, will ever prevail to perſwade this People from their Religion to this Prince, or that their Arms can ever be proſperous under the Enſign and Conduct of an Uſurper.

And may all Chriſtians learn this Leſſon from the Turks, and add this Principle to the Fundamentals of their Religion, as well as to their Laws. None can more experimentally preach this Doctrine to the World than England, who no ſooner threw off her Obedience and Religion to her Prince, but (as if that Vertue had been the only bar to all other Enormities and Sins) ſhe was deprived of all other Eccleſiaſtical and Civil Rights, and in all her Capacities and Relations deflowred and prophaned by impious and unhallowed Hands.

And thus having given a Relation of the Turks Religion, and firſt Principles in order to their Obedience to their Prince, let us proceed a little into the penetralia of the Seraglio, and there ſee what farther care is taken of the Youth, in all Points of their Education, to fit and prepare them for the management and performance of the higheſt and weightieſt Offices of State; which I judg to be one of the chiefeſt of the Turkiſh Polities, and is certainly an extraordinary Support and Security of the Empire.

CHAP. V.

The Education of young Men in the Seraglio, out of which thoſe who are to diſcharge the great Offices of the Empire are elected. It being a Maxim of the Turkiſh Polity, to have the Prince ſerved by ſuch whom he can raiſe without Envy, and deſtroy without Danger.

IT is a ſpecial point of Wiſdom in Princes, to provide and prefer Men of deſerving Parts and Abilities, to the diſcharge of the great and important Offices of State, not ſuch whom Chance and Fortune caſually throws on them, becauſe they will not take the pains of a narrow and ſevere Scrutiny to ſeek Men able and fit for Truſt; nor ſuch whom Flattery, Riches, Gifts or Nobility promote, but thoſe whom the Prince, by his own experience of their Wiſdom, Vertues, and Diligence, or the Teſtimony of his Councellors and other Confidents, judges capable to improve their Advancement to the Honour of the King, and the Bleſſing of their Country: and not like vaſt Mountains which hide their Heads in the Clouds, and yet remain without Fruit or Herbage; whoſe barrenneſs makes their height accurſed. Some wiſe Princes, and great Miniſters of our Modern Times, have kept Rolls and Regiſters of the moſt eminent Men famed for their Vertue, and Knowledg in any parts, with an account of their Family, Lineage and Condition, out of which (if in their own juriſdiction) they culled and elected ſuch, proper for their Occaſions and vacant Offices.

Bolzac de la Cour, leur ſterilité fait manudire leur elevation. Cardinal Richlieu.

The Turk is no leſs careful in the choice of his Officers, and loves to be ſerved by his own, ſuch as to whom he hath given Breeding and Education, and are obliged to employ thoſe Parts in his Service which he hath beſtowed, whoſe Minds he hath cultivated with Wiſdom and Vertue, as well as nouriſhed their Bodies with Food, until they arrive to a mature Age, that renders the profit of his Care and Expence; ſuch as theſe he is ſerved by, whom he can raiſe without Envy, and deſtroy without Danger.

The Youths then that are deſigned for the great Offices of the Empire, called by the Turks Ichoglans, muſt be ſuch as are of Chriſtian Parents, taken in War, or preſented from remote parts; as I have obſerved that the Algierines, always amongſt other Gifts, preſent ſome Youths whom they have taken by Piracy; the Policy herein is very obvious, becauſe the Sons of Chriſtians will hate their Parents being educated with other Principles and Cuſtoms; or coming from diſtant Places, have contracted no acquaintance, ſo that ſtarting from their Schools into Government, they will find no Relations or Dependences on their Intereſts than that of their great Maſter, to whom they are taught, and need compels them to be faithful.

Magnaqu' eſt comitum æmulatio, quibus primus apud principem ſuus locus, & Principum cui plurimi & acerrimi cometes. Hæc dignitas, hæ vires, Magnò ſemper electorum juvenum globo circumdari, in pace decus, in bello præſidium.

In the next place, theſe Youths muſt be of admirable Features, and pleaſing Looks, well ſhaped in their Bodies, and without any defects of Nature; For it is conceived, that a corrupt and ſordid Soul can ſcarce inhabit in a ſerene and ingenious Aſpect; and I have obſerved, not only in the Seraglio, but alſo in the Courts of great Men, their perſonal Attendants have been of comely luſty Youths, well habited, deporting themſelves with ſingular Modeſty and Reſpect in the preſence of their Maſter: So that when a Paſcha, Aga, Spahee travels, he is always attended with a comely Equipage, followed by flouriſhing Youths, well cloathed and mounted in great numbers, that one may gueſs at the greatneſs of this Empire, by the Retinue, Pomp, and number of Servants which accompany Perſons of Quality in their Journies; whereas in the parts of Chriſtendom, where I have travelled, I have not obſerved (no not in Attendance of Princes) ſuch oſtentation in Servants as is amongſt the Turks, which is the Life and Ornament of a Court. And this was always the cuſtom in the Eaſtern Countries, as Q. Curtius reports, Lib. 6. Quippe, omnibus barbaris in corporum Majeſtate veneratio est, magnorumque operum non alios capaces putant animos, quàm quos eximiâ ſpecie donare natura dignata eſt. But theſe Youths before they are admitted, are preſented before the Grand Signior, whom according to his pleaſure he diſpoſes in his Seraglio at Pera, or Adrianople, or his great Seraglio at Conſtantinople, which is accounted the Imperial Seat of the Ottoman Emperors. For theſe are the three Schools or Colledges of Education. Thoſe that are preferred to the laſt named, are commonly marked out by ſpecial deſignation, and are a nearer ſtep to Degrees of Preferment, and are delivered to the charge of the Capa Aga, or chief of the White Eunuchs.

The Eunuchs have the care of theſe Scholars committed unto them, whom they treat with an extraordinary ſeverity; for theſe, being the Cenſores morum, puniſh every ſlight Omiſſion or Fault with extreme Rigour. For Eunuchs are naturally cruel, whether it be out of envy to the Maſculine Sex which is perfect and entire; or that they decline to the diſpoſition of Women, which is many times more cruel and revengeful than that of Men; they will not let ſlip the ſmalleſt Peccadillo without its due chaſtiſement, either by blows on the ſoals of the Feet, or long Faſting, Watchings, or other Penance; ſo that he who hath run through the ſeveral Schools, Orders and Degrees of the Seraglio, muſt needs be an extraordinary mortified Man, patient of all Labours, Services and Injunctions, which are impoſed on him with a ſtrictneſs beyond the diſcipline that Religious Novices are acquainted with in Monaſteries, or the ſeverity of Capuchins, or Holy Votaries. But yet methinks theſe Men that have been uſed all their lives to Servitude and Subjection, ſhould have their Spirits abaſed, and when licenſed from the Seraglio to places of Truſt and Government, ſhould be ſo acquainted how to obey, as to be ignorant how to Rule, and to be dazled with the Light and Liberty, and overjoyed with the ſenſe of their preſent Condition and paſt Sufferings, paſſing from one extreme to another, that they ſhould loſe their Reaſon, and forget themſelves and others. But in anſwer hereunto the Turks affirm, That none know ſo well how to govern, as thoſe who have learned how to obey; though at firſt the ſenſe of their freedom may diſtract them, yet afterwards the Diſcipline, Lectures and Morality in their younger Years, will begin to operate, and collect their ſcattered Senſes into their due and natural places.

But to return from whence we have a little digreſſed; Theſe young Men, before they are diſpoſed into their Schools, which are called Oda, their Names, Age, Country and Parents are Regiſtred in a Book, with their allowance from the Grand Signior of four Aſpers a day; the Copy of this Book is ſent to the Teſterdar, or Lord Treaſurer, that ſo quarterly they may receive their Penſion. Oda ſignifits a Chamber.

Being thus admitted, they are entred into one of the two Schools, that is to ſay into the Bojuck Oda, which is the great Chamber, or the leſs; the former commonly contains 400, and the other about 200 or 250. Theſe two Schools may be ſaid to be of the ſame Form or Rank; and what is taught in one, is likewiſe in the other, neither of them hath the precedency, all of them equally near to Preferment: Their firſt Leſſons are Silence, Reverence, humble and modeſt Behaviour, holding their Heads downwards, and their Hands acroſs before them. Their Maſters the Hogias, inſtruct them in all the Rights, Diſcipline and Superſtition of the Mahometan Religion, and to ſay their Prayers, and underſtand them in the Arabick Language; and to ſpeak, read, and write Turkiſh perfectly. Afterwards having made proficiency in the former, they proceed in the ſtudy of the Perſian and Arabick Tongues, which may be of benefit to them if their Lot chance to call them to the Government of the Eaſtern parts, and is a help to the Improvement of their Knowledg in the Turkiſh, which being of it ſelf barren, is beholden to thoſe Tongues for its copiouſneſs and enrichment. The two Odaes.

Their Cloathing is good Engliſh Cloth and Linen, neither fine nor courſe; their Diet is chiefly Rice, and other wholſom Meats which become the Table of Scholars, where there is nothing of ſuperfluity, as there is nothing of want: Their Manners and Behaviour are ſtrictly watched by the Eunuchs their careful Guardians, ſo as they cannot be familiar one with another at any time, without Modeſty, and reſpect to the Preſence they are in: If they go to perform the neceſſary Offices of Nature, or to the Bath, they are never out of the Eye of an Eunuch, who will admit none of their neareſt Relations to ſpeak with them, or ſee them, unleſs ſpecial Licence be obtained from the Capa Aga, or chief of the Eunuchs. Their Bed-chambers are long Chambers, where all Night Lamps are kept burning; their Beds are laid in ranks one by another, upon Safrawes or Boards raiſed from the Ground; and between every five or ſix lies an Eunuch, ſo as conveniently to ſee or over-hear if there be any wanton or lewd behaviour or diſcourſe amongſt them. Cloathing and other neceſſaries. Their Retirement. Bed-chambers.

When they are arrived to ſome proficiency, and almoſt to Man's Eſtate, and ſtrength of Body, fit for Manly Exerciſes, they are trained up in handling the Lance, throwing the Iron Bar, drawing the Bow, and throwing the Gerit or Dart. In all theſe Exerciſes they ſpend many hours, being conſtant in all or ſome of them, and are ſeverely corrected by their Eunuchs, if they ſeem to be remiſs or negligent therein: Many of them ſpend much time principally in drawing the Bow, in which they proceed from a weaker to one more ſtrong, and by continual exerciſe and uſe, come at laſt to draw Bows of an incredible ſtrength, more by Art and Cuſtom, than of pure Force; and thus by conſtant bodily Exerciſe, they become Men of great Strength,

Health, and Agility, fit for Wars, and all active Employments. Amongſt their other Exerciſes, Horſemanſhip is a principal Leſſon, both to ſit in a handſom poſture, and to manage their Horſe with dexterity; to draw the Bow on Horſeback, forwards, backwards, and on either ſide; which they learn with that agility and pliantneſs of their Joints, in the full carriere or ſpeed of the Horſe as is admirable. They learn alſo to throw the Gerit or Dart out of their hands on Horſeback; which becauſe it is a Sport or Recreation the preſent Grand Signior delights in above all others, every one in hopes of Preferment, and in emulation one of the other, endeavours to be a Maſter in it; and moſt are become ſo dextrous, that they will dart a Stick of above three quarters of a yard long, with that force, that where it hits, it will endanger breaking of a Bone. The Grand Signior every day paſſes his Time with ſeeing his Pages exerciſed in this Sport, in which ordinarily one knocks another from his Horſe; and ſeldom a day paſſes, in which ſome receive not Bruiſes or deſperate Wounds. This Sultan doth many times appoint days of Combat between the Black Eunuchs, and ſome of his White Pages on Horſeback, in this manner with the Gerit; and then happens ſuch a Skirmiſh with ſuch emulation, each ſide contending for the honour of his Colour, Race, and Dignity, with that Heat and Courage, as if they contended for the Empire; this Paſtime ſeldom concluding without ſome Blood. But it is to be noted, that none of theſe Exerciſes are performed by any of thoſe that belong to the two Chambers, unleſs within the Walls of the Seraglio: the other Pages who accompanied the Grand Signior abroad, are ſuch as are preferred to farther and higher Chambers, as hereafter we ſhall diſcourſe.

Horſmanſhip.

The Dart or Gerit.

To the former Leſſons of School-learning, and Exerciſe abroad, are added ſome other accompliſhments of a Trade, Handy-craft, or Myſtery, in which a Man may be uſeful to the Service of the Grand Signior, as to ſew and embroider in Leather, (in which the Turks exceed all other Nations) to make Arrows, and embroider Quivers and Saddles, and make all ſorts of Furniture for Horſes; ſome learn to fold up a Turbant, others to fold up, clean and bruſh Veſts; to waſh and clean in the Bath, to keep Dogs and Hawks; others to excel in the Turkiſh manner of Muſick, and all other Services which may keep them from Idleneſs, and wherein they may be of future uſe to their great Maſter. And according hereunto Paſhaes and great Men have been denominated and ſurnamed after their departure from the Seraglio, to their places of Office and Truſt.

Such as have before made good proficiency in their Studies, and attained to a dexterity in their bodily Exerciſes, are tranſplanted to the firſt ſtep of Preferment, which is the waſhing the Grand Signior's Linnen; and here they firſt change their Cloth for Satten Veſts and Cloth of Gold, and their Pay and Sallery is augmented from four or five Aſpers a day, to eight or more; thence they paſs, as places fall, to the Hazna-Oda, or Chamber of the Treaſury, or to the Kilar or Diſpenſatory, where the Drugs, Cordials, and rich Drinks for the Grand Signior's Service are kept; out of thoſe two Chambers they are elected, in order to the higheſt and ſupreme place in the Seraglio, which is called the Haz. Oda, which conſiſts of forty Pages; theſe attend immediately on the Perſon of the Grand Signior, and amongſt them twelve hold the chief Offices of the Court, viz.

1. The Selictar-Aga, the King's Sword-bearer.
2. The Chiohadar-Aga, he who carries his Cloak or Veſt for rainy Weather.
3. The Rechimbar-Aga, he that holds his Stirrup.
4. The Ebricdar-Aga, he that carries his Water to drink or waſh.
5. The Tulbentar-Aga, he that makes up his Turbant.
6. The Kem Hufar-Aga, he who keeps the Wardrobe; and overſees the waſhing the Linen.
7. The Cheſneghir Baſhee, the chief Sewer.
8. Zagergee Baſhee, the chief over the Dogs.
9. Turnackgee Baſhee, he who pairs his Nails.
10. Berber Baſhee, chief Barber.
11. Muhaſebegee Baſhee, the chief Accomptant.
12. Teskeregee Baſhee, his Secretary.

There are alſo two other Officers in the Court of great reſpect, which are the Dogan Baſhee, or chief Falconer; and the Humaungee Baſhee, or chief over the Baths; but theſe have their Offices and Lodgings apart; and not entring into the Royal Chamber, are not capable of higher Preferment.

There are nine alſo are called Ars Agalar, who have the privilege of preſenting Petitions, like Maſters of the Requeſts; of theſe, four are of the Haſoda, as the Shiletar-Aga, Tcohadar-Aga, Rikiabrar-Aga, Tulban Oglanii; and the others are of different Offices, as the Hazna Kiahaiaſi, who is the ſecond Officer of the Treaſury; Kiler Kiahaiaſi, who is Overſeer of the Proviſions of Sherbets, Sugar, Sweetmeats, &c. Dogangi Baſhi, or chief Falconer; the Hazodabaſchi, or principal Commander of the Royal Chamber; and Kapa Agaſi, or chief Commander of the Pages; all which are firſt and neareſt to Preferment, and to be employed Abroad, in the Office of Pacha, as Places are void.

Thoſe that are thus, through the Grace and Favour of the Sultan, arrived to the Dignity of being of the Royal Chamber, where they enjoy the Honour and Privilege of being conſtantly in his Eye and Preſence, are often preſented by him with Swords, Veſts, Bows, and the like; and are permitted to take Rewards, for the Interceſſions and Applications they make in behalf of others. Sometimes he ſends them on Meſſage to Paſhees; ſometimes for the confirmation of the Princes, either in Tranſilvania, Moldavia, or Walachia; ſometimes to carry Preſents to the Vizier and great Men: In all which Employments they are greatly entertained, both with Mony, Jewels, and rich Furniture for Horſes; ſo that very few of theſe Forty, but in a ſhort time gain Eſtates of their own, fit to equippe and furniſh them to enter into any Office of the Empire.

As Offices fall in order, Supplies are made out of theſe, others ariſing from lower Chambers ſucceſſively in their places; whether it be to the four moſt conſiderable Governments, which are Cairo, Aleppo, Damaſcus, and Buda; or if none of theſe Places be void, to be Beglerbegs of Natolia, or of Natolia; to be Aga of the Janizaries, Spaheeler Agaſee, or General of the Horſe, or to ſome ſmall Paſhalicks or Governments ſcattered in ſeveral places of the Empire.

The degrees of Succeſſions greatly obſerved.

But we ſhall not here need to diſcourſe of the particular Offices and Dignities within the Power and Gift of the Grand Signior, intending to make a diſtinct Chapter of the ſeveral Offices, Governments, Dignities and Places, from whence whence the Grand Signior's Profits ariſe, that ſo we may the better deſcribe the Wealth of this Empire, and the Importance of thoſe Offices, for diſcharge of which young Men are educated with the care beforementioned.

But before the concluſion of this Chapter, it will be neceſſary to add, that none, unleſs by ſpecial Grace, are advanced from the Seraglio, until the Age of about forty Years, by which time they are ripe and mature for Government, and the wantonneſs and heat of Youth allayed. Before their departure to their places of Truſt, they are courted and honoured by all with Preſents; the Queen-Mother, the Sultanaes, the rich Eunuchs, the Great Vizier, and Officers Abroad, concur all to adorn them with Gifts and Riches at their Advancements, as undoubted Conſequents of the Grand Signior's Favour. And at the farewel, with much ſubmiſſion they viſit the Capa Aga, or chief of the Eunuchs, and other principal Officers of the Seraglio, recommending themſelves, in the time of their abſence, to their good Grace and Favour, deſiring to live in their good Opinion and Friendſhip; and this is done with as much Ceremony and Complement as is exerciſed in the moſt civil Parts of Chriſtendom. For though the Turks, out of Pride and Scorn, comport themſelves to Chriſtians with a ſtrange kind of barbarous haughtineſs and neglect, they are yet among themſelves as courtly and preciſe in their own Rules of Complement and Civility, as they are at Rome, or any other parts of the civilized World.

CHAP. VI.

Of the Method of the Turkiſh Studies and Learning in the Seraglio.

WE have rather ſhewed in the foregoing Chapter, the Education of young Scholars, in reference to exerciſe of Body, and dexterity in Arms, than the method of their Studies and Speculations, according to the manner of our Seminaries and Colledges, which more reſpect the cultivation of the Mind, with the Principles of Vertue and Morality, and the Notions of ſublime Reaſon, than the Improvements of the Body by aſſiduity of Exerciſe, which makes them become active, and begets an agility in the management of Arms. And though the latter is a Buſineſs moſt attended to by ſprightly and ingenious Spirits, who know Preferments in the Ottoman Court have always depended, and ſtill do, on the virtue of the Sword; yet Speculation and Knowledg in Sciences are not wholly eſtranged from their Schools, which we ſhall in brief touch upon to ſatisfy the curioſity of our Academies, who I know would gladly be reſolved what ſort of Phyſical or Moral Philoſophy, what Tongues and Sciences fall within the contemplation of that barbarous Ignorance of the Turks. To dilucide which the moſt clearly as I can, according to the beſt information of the Learned Turks; it is reported by the Kalfaes, or Pedagogues of the Seraglio, that their chief Deſign is to inſtruct their Scholars in reading and writing, ſo as they may have ſome inſpection into the Books of their Law and Religion; eſpecially the Alchoran, whereby may be produced in their Minds a greater reverence to them. For being once paſſed from the firſt form of their A, B, C, and joyning Syllables, they are then inſtructed in the Arabian Tongue, wherein all the Secrets and Treaſure of their Religion and Laws are contained, and is a neceſſary accompliſhment of a Paſha, or any great Miniſter, in relation to the better diſcharge of his Office, being thereby enabled to have an inſpection into the Writings and Sentences of the Kadees, or other Officers of the Law within his Juriſdiction, as well as furniſhed with Knowledg and Matter of Diſcourſe concerning Religion. And to adorn theſe young Candidates of the Grand Signior's Favour, with more Polity and ingenious Endowments, the next Leſſon is the Perſian Tongue, which fits them with quaint Words and Eloquence, becoming the Court of their Prince, and corrects the groſſneſs, and enriches the barrenneſs of the Turkiſh Tongue, which in it ſelf is void both of Expreſſion, and ſweetneſs of Accent. It teaches them alſo a handſome and gentle deportment, inſtructs them in Romances, raiſes their thoughts to aſpire to the generous and vertuous Actions they read of in the Perſian Novellaries, and endues them with a kind of Platonick Love each to other, which is accompanied with a true Friendſhip amongſt ſome few, and with as much gallantry as is exerciſed in any part of the World. But for their Amours to Women, the reſtraint and ſtrictneſs of Diſcipline, makes them altogether ſtrangers to that Sex; for want of Converſation with them, they burn in Luſt one towards another; and the amorous diſpoſition of Youth wanting more natural Objects of Affection, is tranſported to a moſt paſſionate admiration of Beauty whereſoever it finds it, which becauſe it is much talked of by the Turks, we will make it a diſtinct Diſcourſe by it ſelf.

The Books they read commonly in the Perſian Language, are Daniſten, Schaibdi, Pend-attar, Giuliſtin, Boſtan Hafiz, and the Turkiſh Books called Mulemma, or a mixture of the Arabian and Perſian words, both in Proſe and Verſe, facetious and full of quick and lively Expreſſions. Of theſe ſorts of Books, thoſe moſt commonly read are called Kirkwizir, Humaiunname, or delile we Kemine, El fulceade, Seidbatal, and various other Romances: theſe are uſually the ſtudy of the moſt aiery and ingenious Spirits amongſt them. Thoſe others who are of a Complexion more melancholick, and inclinable to contemplation, proceed with more patience of Method, and are more exact in their Studies, intending to become Maſters of their Pen, and by that means to arrive to Honour and Office, either of Reſt Efendi, or Secretary of State, Lord Treaſurer, or Secretary of the Treaſury, or Diſpenſatory, &c. or elſe to be Emaums, or Pariſh Prieſts of ſome principal Moſchs of Royal Foundation, in which they paſs an eaſy, quiet, and ſecure Life, with a conſiderable competency of livelihood. Others aim in their Studies to become Hazifizi, which ſignifies a Conſerver of the Alchoran, who get the whole Alchoran by Heart, and for that reaſon are held in great eſteem, and their Perſons as ſacred as the place which is the Repoſitory of the Law.

Thoſe who are obſerved to be more addicted to their Books than others, are named by them Talibulilmi, or lovers of Philoſophy; tho very few amongſt them arrive to any Learning really ſo called, yet they attain to the degree of Giuzchon, or Readers of the Alchoran, for Benefit and Relief of the Souls of thoſe departed, who for that end have bequeathed them Legacies. At certain Houſes, they read Books that treat of the Matters of their Faith, and render them out of Arabick Arabick into Turkiſh, and theſe Books are, Schurut, Salat, Mukad, Multeka, Hidaie, &c. which they diſcant upon in an Expoſitory manner; inſtructing the more ignorant and of lower form, by way of Catechiſm. They have alſo ſome Books of Poetry, written both in Perſian and Arabick, which run in Rhime and Meeter, like the Golden Verſes in Pythagoras, containing excellent Sentences of Morality, being directions for a Godly Life, and contemplation of the Miſeries and Fallacies of this World, which many of them do commit to memory, and repeat occaſionally as they fall into diſcourſe.

For other Sciences, as Logick, Phyſick, Metaphyſick, Mathematicks, and other our Univerſity Learning, they are wholly ignorant; unleſs in the latter, as far as Muſick is a part of the Mathematicks, whereof there is a School apart in the Seraglio. Only ſome that live in Conſtantinople, have learned ſome certain Rules of Aſtrology, which they exerciſe upon all occaſions, and buſy themſelves in Propheſies of future Contingencies of the Affairs of the Empire, and the unconſtant Eſtate of great Miniſters, in which their Predictions ſeldom divine grateful or pleaſing Stories. Neither have the wiſeſt and moſt active Miniſters or Souldiers amongſt them, the leaſt inſpection into Geography, whereby to be acquainted with the ſituation of Countries, or diſpoſition of the Globe, tho they themſelves enjoy the poſſeſſion of ſo large a proportion of the Univerſe.

Their Seamen, who ſeldom venture beyond ſight of Land (unleſs they be thoſe of Barbary, who are Renegadoes, and practiſed in the Chriſtian Art of Navigation) have certain Sea-Charts ill framed, and the Capes and Headlands ſo ill laid down, that in their Voyages from Conſtantinople to Alexandria, the richeſt place of their Trade, they truſt more to their Eye and Experience, than the Direction of their Maps; nor could I ever ſee any Chart of the Black Sea, made either by Turk or Greek, which could give the leaſt light to a knowing Seaman, ſo as to encourage him, according to the Rules of Art, to lay any confidence thereon in his Navigation.

The Art of Printing (a Matter diſputable whether it hath brought more of Benefit or Miſchief to the World) is abſolutely prohibited amongſt them, becauſe it may give a beginning to that ſubtilty of Learning, which is inconſiſtent with, as well as dangerous to the groſſneſs of their Government, and a means to deprive many of their Livelihood, who gain their Bread only by their Pen, and occaſion the loſs of that ſingular Art of fair Writing, wherein they excel or equal moſt Nations: The Effect of which is evident amongſt the Weſtern People, where Printing hath taken footing. And though there be few Hiſtorians among them who have any knowledg of paſt Times, or the being of other Empires before the Ottoman, mixing all Stories in confuſion together (as we have ſaid before) without diſtinction of Perſons, or reſpect of Chronology; yet as to the Succeſſes and Progreſs of Affairs in their own Dominions, they keep moſt ſtrict Regiſters and Records, which ſerve them as Preſidents and Rules for the preſent Government of their Affairs.

And thus the Reader may ſound the depth of the Turks Philoſophy; who tho they reach not thoſe Contemplations of our profound Sophies, have yet ſo much Knowledg, as neither to be over-reached in their Treaties with the Wits of the World, nor for want of good Conduct of Affairs loſe one inch of their Empire.

CHAP. VII.

Of the Affection and Friendſhip the Pages in the Seraglio bear each other.

SInce in the foregoing Chapter we have made mention of the amorous Diſpoſition that is to be found among theſe Youths each to other; it will not be from our purpoſe to acquaint the Reader, that the Doctrine of Platonick Love hath found Diſciples in the Schools of the Turks, that they call it a Paſſion very laudable and vertuous, and a ſtep to that perfect Love of God, whereof Mankind is only capable, proceeding by way of Love and Admiration of his Image and Beauty enſtamped on the Creature. This is the colour of Vertue, they paint over the deformity of their depraved Inclinations; but in reality this Love of theirs, is nothing but libidinous Flames each to other, with which they burn ſo violently, that Baniſhment and Death have not been Examples ſufficient to deter them from making Demonſtrations of ſuch-like Addreſſes; ſo that in their Chambers, though watched by their Eunuchs, they learn a certain Language with the motion of their Eyes, their Geſtures, and their Fingers, to expreſs their Amours; and this Paſſion hath boiled ſometimes to that heat, that Jealouſies and Rivalties have broken forth in their Chambers, without reſpect to the ſeverity of their Guardians, and good Orders have been brought into confuſion, and have not been again redreſſed, until ſome of them have been expelled the Seraglio, with the Tippets of their Veſts cut off, baniſhed into the Iſlands, and beaten almoſt to death.

Nor is this Paſſion only amongſt the young Men each to other; but Perſons of eminent degree in the Seraglio, become inveigled in this ſort of love, watching occaſions to have a ſight of the young Pages that they fanſy, either at the Windows of their Chamber, or as they go to the Moſque, or to their Waſhings or Baths; offer them Service and Preſents, and ſo engage them, as to induce them to deſire to be made of the Retinue of him that uſes this Courtſhip towards them, which they many times obtain; and being entertained in the Service of a Maſter who ſo highly fancies and admires them, they become often ſharers with him in his Riches and Fortune.

The Grand Signior's themſelves have alſo been Slaves to this inordinate Paſſion. For Sultan Morat became ſo enamoured of an Armenian Boy, called Muſa, as betrayed him, though otherwiſe a diſcreet Prince, to a thouſand Follies; and at another time preferred a Youth for his Beauty only from the Novitiate of Galata, to be one of the Pages of his Haz Oda, or Chamber of his Royal Preſence, and in a ſhort time made hime Silahtar Aga, or Sword-bearer, one of the greateſt Offices in the Seraglio. And this preſent Sultan became ſo enamoured of a Conſtantinopolitan Youth, one of the Pages of his Muſitians School, called Kulogli, or Son of a Slave, that he made him his chief Favourite, never could content himſelf without his company; cloathed him like himſelf, made him ride by his ſide, commanded all to preſent and honour him, in the ſame manner as if he had made him Companion of the Empire.

This Paſſion likewiſe reigns in the Society of Women; they die with amorous Affections one to the other; eſpecially the old Women court the Young, preſent them with rich Garments, Jewels, Mony, even to their own impoveriſhment and ruin; and theſe Darts of Cupid are ſhot through all the Empire, eſpecially Conſtantinople, the Seraglio of the Grand Signior, and the Apartments of the Sultans.

CHAP. VIII.

Of the Mutes and Dwarfs.

BEſides the Pages, there is a ſort of Attendants to make up the Ottoman Court, called Bizebani, or Mutes, Men naturally born deaf, and ſo conſequently, for want of receiving the ſound of words, are dumb: Theſe are in number about forty, who by Night are lodged amongſt the Pages in the two Chambers, but in the day time have their Stations before the Moſque belonging to the Pages, where they learn and perfect themſelves in the Language of the Mutes, which is made up of ſeveral Signs, in which by cuſtom they can diſcourſe and fully expreſs themſelves; not only to ſignify their ſenſe in familiar Queſtions, but to recount Stories, underſtand the Fables of their own Religion, the Laws and Precepts of the Alchoran, the name of Mahomet, and what elſe may be capable of being expreſſed by the Tongue. The moſt ancient amongſt them, to the number of about eight or nine, are called the Favourite Mutes, and are admitted to attendance in the Haz Oda; who only ſerve in the place of Buffoons, for the Grand Signior to ſport with, whom he ſometimes kicks, ſometimes throws in the Ciſterns of Water, ſometimes make fight together like the Combat of Clineas and Dametas. But this Language of the Mutes is ſo much in faſhion in the Ottoman Court, that none almoſt but can deliver his ſenſe in it, and is of much uſe to thoſe who attend the Preſence of the Grand Signior, before whom it is not reverent or ſeemly ſo much as to whiſper.

The Dwarfs are called Ginge; theſe alſo have their Quarters among the Pages of the two Chambers, until they have learned, with due Reverence and Humility, to ſtand in the Preſence of the Grand Signior. And if one of theſe have that benefit, as by Natures fortunate Error, to be both a Dwarf and Dumb, and afterwards, by the help of Art, to be caſtrated and made an Eunuch; he is much more eſteemed, than if Nature and Art had concurred together to make him the perfecteſt Creature in the World; one of this ſort was preſented by a certain Paſha, to the Grand Signior, who was ſo acceptable to him and the Queen-Mother, that he attired him immediately in Cloth of Gold, and gave him liberty through all the Gates of the Seraglio.

CHAP. IX.

Of the Eunuchs.

THis libidinous flame of depraved Nature, is ſo common a Diſeaſe among the Turks, and ſo ancient a Vice, that both for State, and prevention of this unnatural Crime, it hath not been eſteemed ſafe or orderly in the Courts of Eaſtern Princes, to conſtitute others for the principal Officers of their Houſhold than Eunuchs: The like is obſerved in the Seraglio of the Grand Signior, where two Eunuchs eſpecially have the principal Command, and are Perſons of the higheſt and eminenteſt eſteem, viz. the Kuzlir-Agaſi, who is Superintendent over the Women, and is a Black Eunuch.

The other is Capa Agaſi, or Maſter of the Gate, who is White, and commands all the Pages, and White Eunuchs reſiding in the Court; under him are all the Officers that are Eunuchs; as firſt the Haz Odabaſchi, or Lord Chamberlain, who commands the Gentlemen of the Bedchamber.

2. The Serai Kiahaiaſi, Lord Steward of the Houſhould, who overſees the Chambers of the Pages, and the Seferli Odaſi, or the Chambers of thoſe Pages who are deſigned to follow the Grand Signior upon any Journy, and of theſe he hath care to ſee them provided of Cloaths and all other Neceſſaries for the Service they undertake.

3. The Haznadar Baſhi, or Lord Treaſurer of the Seraglio, who commands thoſe Pages that attend the Treaſury; I mean not that which is of preſent uſe, as to pay the Souldiery, or ſerve the publick and preſent Occaſions of the Empire, for that is in the Hand of the Tefterdar; but that Riches that is laid apart for the Expences of the Court, and that which is amaſſed and piled up in ſeveral Rooms of the Seraglio, of which there have been Collections and Additions in the Time almoſt of every Emperor, diſtinguiſhed and divided by the Names of the Sultans, through whoſe induſtry and frugality they had been acquired; but this Wealth is conſerved as Sacred, not to be uſed or expoſed, unleſs on Occaſions of extreme Emergency.

4. The Kilargi Baſhi, that is, the Chief Commander over the Pages, to whoſe care the charge of the Diſpenſatory is committed, or Expences for the daily Proviſions.

Other Officers there are of Eunuchs, as he that is firſt Maſter of Scholars for their Books, called Ikingi Capa Oglani, and his Uſher; the chief Miergidgi or Prieſt of the Grand Signior's Moſque; under whom are two other Aſſiſtants, for cleanſing and well ordering of the Moſques.

Theſe are the only Officers of the White Eunuchs, the others are of Commonalty, which are in number about fifty, and have ordinarily twelve Aſpers a day pay, which alſo are augmented according to the Wakfs or Legacies of the Deceaſed.

Thoſe that are Curates of the Royal Moſques, and have Pluralities of Benefices of that nature, have ſometimes a Revenue of 100 Chequins a day: among theſe alſo due order is obſerved, the Younger, or Juniors in the Seraglio, always giving reſpect and reverence to Seniority.

Of the Black Eunuchs.

THE Black Eunuchs are ordained for the ſervice of the Women in the Seraglio; as the White are to the attendance of the Grand Signior, it not ſeeming a ſufficient Remedy by wholly diſmembring them, to take the Women off from their inclinations to them, as retaining ſome relation ſtill to the Maſculine Sex; but to create an abhorrency in them; they are not only caſtrated, but Black, choſen with the worſt Features that are to be found among the moſt hard-favoured of that African Race.

The

The prime Officer of them all, as we have ſaid before, is the Kuzlir Aga, or Maſter of the Maids or Virgins.

2. Valide Agaſi, the Eunuch of the Queen-Mother.

3. Sehahzadeler Agaſi, or the Eunuch to whoſe charge is committed the Royal Progeny, and in whoſe cuſtody at preſent are three Sons of Sultan Ibrahim, Brothers to the preſent Emperor, viz. Solyman, on whom the Turks at preſent found their principal Hopes and Expectation; Bajazet and Orchan, the Mother of which two laſt is ſtill living, and confined to the old Seraglio in Conſtantinople, which is the Monaſtery of the decayed Wives and Miſtreſſes of former Grand Signiors, from whence there is no Redemption, until either their Sons die, or by good fortune one becomes Emperor.

4. Is Fazna Agaſi, or the Eunuch that is Treaſurer to the Queen-Mother, and commands thoſe Damſels that are Servants in the ſaid Chamber.

5. Kilar Agaſi, or he that keeps the Sugar, Serbets, and Drugs of the Queen-Mother.

6. Bujuck Oda Agaſi, Commander of the greater Chamber.

7. Kulchuk Oda Agaſi, Commander of the leſſer Chamber.

8. Baſh Capa Oglani, the chief Porter of the Womens Apartment.

9, & 10. Two Meſgidgi Barchi, or the two Emaums or Prieſts of the Royal Moſque belonging to the Queen-Mother, ordained for the Womens Prayers.

The Apartments of the Women.

AND ſince I have brought my Reader into the Quarters of theſe Eunuchs, which are the Black Guard of the ſequeſtred Ladies of the Seraglio, he may chance to take it unkindly, ſhould I leave him at the Door, and not introduce him into thoſe Apartments, where the Grand Signior's Miſtreſſes are lodged: And though I ingenuouſly confeſs my acquaintance there (as all other my converſation with Women in Turkey) is but ſtrange and unfamiliar; yet not to be guilty of this diſcourteſie, I ſhall to the beſt of my information write a ſhort Account of theſe Captivated Ladies, how they are treated, immured, educated and prepared for the great Atchievements of the Sultan's Affection; and as in other Stories the Knight conſumes himſelf with Combats, Watching, and Penance, to acquire the love of one fair Damſel; here an Army of Virgins make it the only ſtudy and buſineſs of their Life to obtain the ſingle nodd of invitation to the Bed of their great Maſter.

The Reader then muſt know, that this Aſſembly of fair Women (for it is probable there is no other in the Seraglio) are commonly Prizes of the Sword; taken at Sea and at Land, as far fetched as the Turk commands, or the wandring Tartar makes his Incurſions, compoſed almoſt of as many Nations as there are Countries of the World, none of which are eſteemed worthy of this Preferment, unleſs Beautiful and undoubted Virgins.

As the Pages before mentioned are divided into two Chambers, ſo likewiſe are theſe Maids into two Odaes, where they are to work, ſew and embroider, and are there lodged on Safawes, every one with her Bed apart, between every five of which is a Kadun or grave Matron laid to overſee and hear what Actions or Diſcourſe paſſes either immodeſt or undecent. Beſides this School, they have their Chambers for Muſick and Dancing, for acquiring a handſome Air in their carriage and comportment, to which they are moſt diligent and intent; as that which opens the Door of the Sultan's Affections, and introduces them into Preferment and Eſteem.

Out of theſe the Queen-Mother chuſes her Court, and orderly draws from the Schools ſuch as ſhe marks out for the moſt Beauteous, Facetious, or moſt correſponding with the harmony of her own Diſpoſition, and prefers them to a near attendance on her Perſon, or to other Offices of her Court. Theſe are always richly attired and adorned with all ſorts of precious Stones, fit to receive the Addreſſes and Amours of the Sultan: over them is placed the Kadun Kahia, or Mother of the Maids, who is careful to correct any immodeſt or light Behaviour amongſt them, and inſtructs them in all the Rules and Orders of the Court.

When the Grand Signior is pleaſed to dally with a certain number of theſe Ladies in the Garden; Helvet is cry'd, which rings through all the Seraglio; at which word all People withdraw themſelves at a diſtance, and Eunuchs are placed at every Avenue, it being at that time death to approach near thoſe Walls. Here the Women ſtrive with their Dances, Songs, and Diſcourſe, to make themſelves Miſtreſſes of the Grand Signior's Affection, and then let themſelves looſe to all kind of laſciviouſneſs and wanton Carriage, acquitting themſelves as much of all reſpect to Majeſty, as they do to Modeſty.

When the Grand Signior reſolves to chuſe himſelf a Bed-fellow, he retires into the Lodgings of his Women, where (according to the Story in every place reported, when the Turkiſh Seraglio falls into Diſcourſe) the Damſels being ranged in order by the Mother of the Maids, he throws his Handkerchief to her, where his eye and fancy beſt directs, it being a Token of her election to his Bed. The ſurpriſed Virgin ſnatches at this Prize and good Fortune, with that eagerneſs, that ſhe is raviſhed with the Joy before ſhe is deflowered by the Sultan, and kneeling down, firſt kiſſes the Handkerchief, and then puts it in her Boſom, when immediately ſhe is congratulated by all the Ladies of the Court, for the great Honour and Favour ſhe hath received. And after ſhe hath been firſt waſhed, bathed, and perfumed, ſhe is adorned with Jewels, and what other Attire can make her appear Glorious and Beautiful; ſhe is conducted at Night with Muſick and Songs of her Companions chanting before her to the Bed-chamber of the Sultan; at the Door of which attends ſome Favourite Eunuch, who upon her approaching, gives Advice to the Grand Signior, and permiſſion being given her to enter in, ſhe comes running and kneels before him, and ſometimes enters in at the Feet of the Bed, according to the ancient Ceremony, or otherwiſe, as he chances to like her, is taken in a nearer way with the Embraces of the Grand Signior.

This private Entertainment being ended, ſhe is delivered to the care of the Kadan Kahia, or Mother of the Maids, by whom ſhe is again conducted back with the ſame Muſick as before, and having firſt waſhed and bathed, hath afterwards the lodging and attendants that belongs to Hunkiar Aſa-kiſi, that is, the Royal Concubine: if it be her good Fortune to conceive and bring forth a Son, ſhe is called Haſaki Sultana, and is honoured with a ſolemn Coronation, and Crowned with a ſmall Coronet of Gold beſet with precious Stones. Other Ladies who produce like like Fruits from the Grand Signior's Bed, have not yet the like Honour, but only the Name of Baſh Haſaki, Inkingi Haſaki, the firſt and ſecond Concubine, and ſo forward.

The Daughters that are born from the Grand Signior, are oftentimes at four or five years of Age wedded to ſome great Paſha, or Beglerbeg, with all the Pomp and Solemnities of Marriage, who from that time hath care of her Education, to provide a Palace for her Court, and to maintain her with that State and Honour as becomes the Dignity of a Daughter to the Sultan. At this tenderneſs of Age, Sultan Ibrahim, Father of the preſent Grand Signior, married three of his Daughters; one of which called Gheaher Han Sultan, hath had already five Husbands, and yet, as is reported by the World, remains a Virgin; the laſt Husband deceaſed was Iſhmael Paſha, who was ſlain in the paſſage of the River Raab; and is now again married to Gurgi Mahomet Paſha of Buda, a Man of 90 Years of Age, but rich and able to maintain the greatneſs of her Court, though not to comply with the youthfulneſs of her Bed, to which he is a ſtranger like the reſt of her preceding Husbands.

After the death of the Grand Signior, the Mothers of Daughters have liberty to come forth from the Seraglio and marry with any Perſon of Quality; but thoſe who have brought forth Sons, are tranſplanted to the old Seraglio, where they paſs a retired Life without Redemption; unleſs the Son of any of thoſe Mothers, by death of the firſt Heir, ſucceeding, releaſe his Mother from that Reſtraint, and make her ſharer with him in all his Happineſs and Glory.

CHAP. X.

Of the Agiam-Oglans.

WE have hitherto ſpoken of the Ichoglans, or Pages, Mutes, Dwarfs, Eunuchs, and the Feminine Court; it will now be neceſſary to ſpeak of the under Officers and Servants called Agiam-Oglans, who are deſigned to the meaner Uſes of the Seraglio: Theſe are alſo Captives taken in War, or bought of the Tartar, but moſt commonly the Sons of Chriſtians taken from their Parents at the Age of ten or twelve Years; in whom appearing more ſtrength of Body than of Mind, they are ſet apart for labour and menial Services: Theſe are,

1. Porters.
2. Boſtangies, or Gardiners.
3. Baltagies, or Hatchetmen, who cut and carry Wood.
4. Aſgees, or Cooks, with all the Offices of the Kitchin.
5. Paicks and Solacks.
6. Butchers.
7. Holvagees, or Confectioners.
8. The Attendants of the Hoſpital of ſick Pages.

And all other ſet apart for ſervile Offices.

Theſe are ſeldom the Sons of natural born Turks, but yearly collected (as I ſaid) from the increaſe of poor Chriſtians in the Morea and Albania; by which means thoſe Countries are greatly diſ-peopled; the yearly number of thoſe thus collected, amount moſt commonly, as I am given to underſtand, to about 2000, which being brought to Conſtantinople, are firſt preſented before the Vizier, who (according as his Humour directs him) are placed in divers Stations, either in the Seraglioes of Galata, Okmedon, or Adrianople; others are put forth to learn divers Trades in the City; others to be Seamen, and learn Navigation; others eſpecially are placed in the great Seraglio, where they are made to ſerve in the Stables, in the Kitchin, to dig in the Gardens, to cleave Wood, to row in the Grand Signior's Barge, and to do what other Services they are commanded by the Superiors ſet over them, called Odabaſhees, who are Men of Ancienter ſtanding than the reſt, having about fifteen Aſpers a day Salary, two Veſts of Cloth a Year, and two pieces of Linen Cloth for Shirts and Hankerchiefs, &c. and theſe are ſubject to the Boſtangi Paſha, who is the Head and abſolute Commander of all thoſe who have the Name of Boſtangees, or Gardiners, of which there may be 10000 in and about the Seraglioes and Garden of the Grand Signior.

Of theſe Boſtangees, ſome are raiſed to a higher degree, and called Haſaki, which ſignifies Royal, and attend only to Meſſages ſent by the Grand Signior himſelf, and are Men of ſpecial Authority. Their Habit or Cloathing nothing differs from the Boſtangees, unleſs in the fineneſs of their Cloth.

The Power of the Boſtangi Paſha is very great; for though he himſelf aroſe but from the Agiamoglans, and wore a felt Cap, yet he hath the command of all the Grand Signior's Gardens and Houſes of Pleaſure; overſees all his Waterworks, and hath Power and Juriſdiction along the Boſphorus, unto the Mouth of the Black Sea; commands alſo the Country at a large diſtance from Conſtantinople; having power to puniſh all Debaucheries and Extravagancies in and about the Country Villages, and is capable, by the Grand Signior's Favour, to become Paſha of Grand Cairo, Babylon, Buda, &c. and of the firſt degree, which is Vizier Azem.

The Agiamoglans who are deſigned to the Grand Signior's Seraglio, are of the choiceſt amongſt the whole number, the ſtrongeſt Bodies, and moſt promiſing Aſpects, and are diſtributed into ſeveral Companies as they want to make up their Complement. This Diſcipline is very ſevere and ſtrict, ſo that they are taught Obedience, and readineſs to ſerve, with Watchings, Faſtings, and other Penances.

Their Cloathing is of courſe Cloth made at Salonica, anciently called Theſſalonica; their Caps of Felt, after the form of a Sugar-loaf, of a Hair colour. Some of them are taught to Read and Write, who are eſteemed the moſt acute and fit to receive ingenious Learning: but the moſt part are exerciſed in activity of Body, in Running, Leaping, Wreſtling, throwing the Iron Bar, and other Agility, wherein the ſtrength and activity of Body is beſt practiſed. Their Lodgings are under ſeveral Pent-houſes or Sheds, built under the Walls of the Seraglio; their Dyet is Fleſh and Rice, ſufficient, though not luxurious.

Out of theſe belonging to the Seraglio, none are drawn out for Janiſaries, but are ſometimes preferred to ſervice of Paſhaes for their Fidelity or good Deſerts, and by thoſe Maſters ariſe to conſiderable Riches, and commodious manner of Livelihood; others of theſe, in great numbers, are made uſe of for attendance on the Grand Signior's Tents, when he goes to the Wars, and in other Journies are uſeful for the management of the Grand Signior's Carriages and travelling Neceſſaries. Such Agiamoglans (as we have ſaid before) that are diſtributed into other Quarters beſides the Royal Seraglio, are principally deſigned, as they grow ripe, and of ſtrength of Body, to be made Janiſaries in the place of the deceaſed; ſo that their principal Education is in order thereunto, of whom we ſhall ſpeak more largely when we treat of the Militia.

The Names of the Agiamoglans are written in a Book, with the Places where they are diſtributed, their ſeveral Pays of two, three, or five Aſpers a Day, which Book is under-written by the Grand Signior, and conſigned to the Teſterdar, or Lord Treaſurer, who pays their Salaries every three Months, being obliged at that time to enquire who is dead or removed, and ſo accordingly to make a true report to the Grand Signior.

And thus I have given you a brief account of the Grand Siginor's Seraglio, and the Regiment of it, which, if well conſiderd and weighed, is one of the moſt Politick Conſtitutions in the World, and none of the meaneſt Supports of the Ottoman Empire: which Relation I had from the Mouth of one who had ſpent nineteen Years in the Schools of the Seraglio. I muſt confeſs I have not treated ſo amply thereof as the Subject might require, becauſe the Rules and Oeconomy obſerved among the Women, Mutes, Eunuchs, and other of the retired Apartments, I conceive to be a kind of digreſſion from my purpoſe, my intention being principally to deſcribe the Government, Maxims, and Polities of the Turk. And therefore I proceed to treat of the diverſities of Offices, and Places of great Riches and Truſt, which remain in the power of the Sultan to confer on thoſe Favourites, Minions, and Creatures, whom thus at his own Charge he hath nouriſhed, like a Father, from their Infancy, to inveſt in their riper Years with great Honours, for ſecurity of his own Perſon, and flouriſhing Eſtate of his Dominions.

CHAP. XI.

Of the Vizier Azem, or, Prime Vizier, his Office, the other ſix Viziers of the Bench, and of the Divan or place of Judicature.

THE Prime Vizier, called in Turkiſh Vizier Azem, is as much as chief Counſellor; he is ſometimes termed the Grand Signior's Deputy or Repreſentative, or Vicarius Imperii, becauſe to him all the Power of the Sultan is immediately devolved; there is no other Solemnity, as I know of, in the creating a Vizier, than the delivery of the Grand Signior's Seal, which he always carries about him in his Boſom, on which is engraven the Emperor's Name, by which he becomes inveſted in all the Power of the Empire, and can, without the formality and proceſs of Law, remove all Obſtacles and Impediments which hinder the free ſway of his Government. It hath always been the Policy of the great Princes of the Eaſt, to erect one as Superintendent over all the reſt of their Miniſters; ſo Daniel was conſtituted by Darius over the Preſidents and Princes, becauſe of the admirable Spirit and Wiſdom that was in him: and Joſeph was made chief Governor and abſolute Commander over all Egypt; and by this means thoſe Princes who gave themſelves much over to ſoftneſs and luxury, could with more eaſe demand account of Miſcarriages in the Rule of their Empire, it being their Policy to conſtitute one on whom all the blame of Miſcarriages in Government might be thrown.

The firſt conſtitution that we meet with in Hiſtory of the firſt Vizier, was in the time of Amurath the third, King of the Turks, who paſſing into Europe with his Tutor called Lala Schabin, he made him his chief Counſellor, and committed to him the Charge of his Army, with which he won Adrianople, formerly called Oreſtias, and ever ſince the Grand Signior hath continued to maintain that Office of Vizier, uſing that common appellation of Lala, which ſignifies Tutor, whenſoever in familiar Diſcourſe he ſpeaks to him.

There are beſides the firſt, commonly ſix other Viziers, who are called Viziers of the Bench, that have no Power nor Authority in the Government, but only are grave Men, that have perhaps had Charges and Offices, and are knowing in the Laws, and ſit together with the firſt Vizier in the Divan or Court, where Cauſes are tryed, but are mute, and cannot give their Sentence or Opinion in any Matter, unleſs the firſt Vizier pleaſe to demand their Counſel or Judgment in point of Law, which he ſeldom does, not to diſparage his own Reaſon and Experience. Their Pay proceeds from the Grand Signior's Treaſury, and is not above 2000 Dollars a Year: any of theſe ſix can write the Grand Signior's Firme or Autogra upon all Commands or Decrees that are ſent abroad; and becauſe their Riches are but moderate, and the Office they are in treats not much with the dangerous Parts of State, they live long without Envy or Emulation, or being ſubject to that inconſtancy of Fortune and Alteration, to which greater degrees of Place are expoſed. And yet when any great Matter is in conſult, and of conſiderable Importance, theſe ſix, with the firſt Vizier, the Mufti and Caddeeleſcheers, or Lord Chief Juſtices, are admitted into the Cabinet-Council, and are often permitted freedom to deliver their Opinions on the matter of Queſtion.

The State and Greatneſs the Prime Vizier lives in, is agreeable to the Honour of him whom he repreſents, having commonly in his Court about 2000 Officers and Servants; when he appears in any ſolemnity or publick Show, he carries on his Turbant before two Feathers, as the Grand Signior wears three, ſet on with a handle of Diamonds, and other rich Stones; and before him are carried three Horſe Tails, called the Tugh, upon a long Staff, upon the top of which is a gilded Knob; the like diſtinction of Honour is permitted only to the three other principal Paſhaes within their Juriſdiction, viz. the Paſha of Babylon, of Cairo, and of Buda; the other inferior Paſhaes have only one Horſe Tail carried before them, without other Diſtinction or Badg of Authority; and theſe three forementioned Paſhaes have a right to be Viziers of the Bench, and can take their places in the Divan, when the Time of their Offices are expired, and any of them found at the Court in entire Grace and Favour.

The Prime Vizier, as he is the Repreſentative of the Grand Signior, ſo he is the Head or Mouth of the Law; to him Appeals may be made, and any one may decline the ordinary courſe of Juſtice, to have his Caſe decided by his Determination, unleſs the Vizier, through the multiplicity of his Affairs, and a ſmall conſiderati-on of the Caſe, thinks fit to refer it to the Law. And that he may evidence his care of the Publick Good, he is alwayes preſent at the Divan, four times a Week, that is, Saturday, Sunday, Monday, Tueſday, and the other days (excepting Fridays) keeps Divan in his own Houſe; ſo diligent and watchful are theſe Men to diſcharge the Acts of Juſtice, and their own Office.

He is attended to the Divan, which is the Chamber of the Seraglio, by a great number of Chiauſes, and their Commanders in chief, who are a ſort of Purſevants, and other Officers, who only ſerve to attend him to the Divan, called Muta-faracan, and may be termed Serjeants or Tipſtaffs; as he deſcends from his Horſe, and enters the Divan, or upon his return goes into his Houſe, he is with a loud Voice of his Attendants, prayed for, and wiſhed all happineſs and long Life; not unlike the Salutations the Roman Souldiers uſed to their Emperors; Cum ſub auſpiciis Cæſaris omnia proſpera & felicia precabantur. When he is ſet upon the Bench, all Cauſes are brought before the Caddeleſcheer, who is Lord Chief Juſtice, and by him all Judgments paſs, unleſs the Prime Vizier ſhall think the Cauſe proper for his Cogniſance, or ſhall diſapprove at any time the Sentence of the Judg; and then by virtue of his unlimited Power, he can reverſe the Verdict, and determine as he pleaſes. All Officers in the Divan wear a ſtrange ſort of dreſs upon their Heads, called in Turkiſh Mugevezee.

The Lord Chief Juſtices which ſit with the Grand Vizier, are two of Romelia and Aſia, called Kadileſcher, or Judges of the Army. And this ſhall in ſhort ſerve for what is neceſſary to ſpeak of the Divan in this place, in regard we only touch upon it for the better explanation of the Vizier's Office.

The Prime Vizier hath his Power as ample as his Maſter who gives it him, except only that he cannot (though he is the Elder Brother of all the Paſhaes) take off any of their Heads without the Imperial Signature, or immediate Handwriting of the Grand Signior; nor can he puniſh a Spahee or Janiſary, or any other Souldier, but by means of their Commanders, (the Militia having reſerved themſelves that Privilege, which ſecures them from ſeveral oppreſſions) in other Matters he is wholly Abſolute, and hath ſo great a Power with the Grand Signior, that whomſoever he ſhall think fit of all the Officers in the Empire to proſcribe, he can ſpeedily obtain the Imperial Hand to put it in execution.

Whatſoever Petitions and Addreſſes are made, in what Buſineſs ſoever, ought firſt to paſs through the Hands of the Vizier: but yet when a Party hath ſuffered ſome notorious Injury, in which the Vizier is combined, or hath refuſed him Juſtice, he hath liberty then to appeal to the Grand Signior himſelf, which is permitted by an ancient cuſtom; the aggrieved Perſon putting Fire on his Head, enters the Seraglio, runs in haſte, and can be ſtopt by no Body until he comes to the preſence of the Grand Signior, to whom he hath licence to declare his wrong. The like was done by Sir Thomas Bendyſh, when Ambaſſador at Conſtantinople, putting Pots of Fire at the Yard-Arms of ſome Engliſh Ships then in Port, and came to an Anchor near the Seraglio. The reaſon thereof was, the violent ſeizure of the Merchants Goods, as ſoon as arrived in Port, for the Service of the Grand Signior, without Bargain or Account of them; which being taken up by thoſe Officers and great Perſons who were out of the reach of Law, forced the worthy Ambaſſador at that time Reſident to repreſent his Grievances with much reſolution, ſignifying them to the Grand Signior, by Fire on the Yards of eleven Engliſh Ships then in Port, which were drawn off from the Scale, where they uſually lay, to the ſide of the Seraglio; which coming to be diſcovered firſt to the Vizier, before the Grand Signior had notice thereof, he immediately extinguiſhed thoſe Fires by a fair Accommodation, before they burſt into a more dangerous Flame, by the knowledg of the Grand Signior, who might juſtly deſtroy him for ſuffering ſuch notorious Injuſtice to run to that publick and known extremity.

The Perſians in like caſes put on a Veſt of white Paper, ſignifying, the aggravation of their Injury is not to be deſcribed in as much Paper as can cover their Bodies.

This great Office of Charge and Truſt, as it is the higheſt, ſo it is the neareſt to Jove's Thunder-bolt, and moſt expoſed to Envy and Emulation; ſtrange Stories are read and confirmed by Eye-witneſſes in our days, concerning the unexpected riſe and aſcent of unworthy Men, on a ſudden, without degrees, ſteps or approaches, to this mighty Power and Glory, and as ſoon have been thrown down, and been the Subject of the Peoples Cruelty and Revenge; ſome have been the Sons but of a few days growth, and the Sun hath ſcarce ſet, before their Greatneſs and Glory hath declined; others have continued but a Month, ſome a Year, others two or three; and withal, even in thoſe who have lived longeſt and happieſt, Fortune ſports with that wantonneſs and inconſtancy, that it may ſerve to be the Mirror and Emblem of the World's Vanity, and uncertain Riches: It is the Fate of great Favourites, with barbarous Princes, to be but ſhort-liv'd. For either the Prince delights to exerciſe his Power in debaſing ſome, and advancing others, or hath beſtowed ſo largely, that his Bounty is at a ſtop, and begins to be wearied with heaping of Favours, as the other is glutted and ſatiated with receiving them; Fatò potentiæ raro ſempiternæ, an ſatias capit aut illos cum omnia tribuerunt, aut hos quod nihil reliquum eſt quod capiant. Tacit. Lib. 3. Emulation and Flattery are likewiſe great, and the Factions are commonly many in the Ottoman Court, whereby the State of the firſt Miniſter is endangered. Inſita mortalibus natura recentem aliorum felicitatem ægris oculis introſpicere, modumque fortunæ à nullis magis exigere, quam quos in æquo vident. Tacit. Lib. 3. Sometimes the Queen-Mother rules, ſometimes the Kuſlir Aga commands; perhaps a beautiful Woman is Miſtreſs of the Power, as well as of the Affections of the Sultan; every one of theſe have ſome Favourites, ſome or other who watch Preferments, and are intent to obſerve all Miſcarriages of State, which may reflect on, or queſtion the Judgment or Honeſty of the firſt Author, by which means the unhappy Vizier, either by the Sultan's immediate Command, or Tumults of the Souldiery raiſed by the powerful Factions afore-mentioned, yields up his Life and Government together; whoſe Power and Greatneſs being only borrowed from his Maſter, and depending on another's Pleaſure, by its ſhort continuance and mutability, verifies that true ſaying of Tacitus, Lib. 12. Nihil rerum mortalium tam inſtabile & fluxum eſt, quàm fama potentiæ non ſuâ vi nixa.

But it doth nor always happen that the Prime Vizier, becauſe he is deprived of his Office, ſhould therefore loſe his Life; for many times, eſpecially if he be a Man whoſe Diſpoſition is not greatly ſuſpected of Malice or Revenge to the Contrivers of his Fall, or be not of a generous Spirit, and great Abilities and Popularity, whereby he may be venturous and capable of raiſing Rebellion or Mutiny, he is permitted calmly to retire, and quietly to deſcend from his high Throne of Honour, to enter into a lower Region and Air of a ſmall and petty Government of a Paſha; as not many Years paſt the Predeceſſors of Kuperli, Father of this preſent Vizier, being degraded, had the Paſhalick of Kaniſia (which is accounted one of the meaneſt of all the Governments which are ſubject to a Paſha) conferred on him; and here I cannot tell whether ſuch a Vizier hath not more reaſon to bleſs and congratulate his Fortune, than accuſe it; for in this condition he is more free from Cares and Dangers, and much more happy, if his Ambition and greatneſs of Spirit render not his Repoſe and Eaſe leſs pleaſing, becauſe it is not in the higheſt Lodgings of Honour and Command. But it is ſeldom ſo among the Turks, for with them it is eſteemed no diſgrace to be tranſplanted from the Mountains to the Valleys; they know their Original and Compoſition partakes not much of Heavenly Fire, and that the Clay they are framed of, is but of common Earth, which is in the Hand of the Grand Signior, as the Pot to frame and mould, as is moſt agreeable to his Pleaſure and Will. And as it is no diſparagement to decline and go backward in Honour amongſt the Turks, ſo it is no new thing, or Abſurdity in their Politicks, to ſee Menriſe like Muſhromes in a Night, and from the meaneſt and moſt abject Offices, without Degrees or convenient Approaches, at once leap into the Seat and Quality of the Prime Vizier: I ſhall inſtance in one Example worthy of Record, which was of late days, and as yet that I know of, hath had no place in Hiſtory. It happened that in Conſtantinople, there was either great ſcarcity of Fleſh, or the negligence of the Butchers had made it ſo; ſo that they who were not ſo early abroad as to watch their uſual time of making their days Proviſion, or came any thing late, were neceſſitated to paſs that day with a Lenten Diet; among thoſe who had miſſed one morning their common proportion of Fleſh, was one Derviſe, a Cook of a Chamber of Janizaries; this Man knew the Blows and Puniſhment he was to ſuffer from the chief of the Chamber; that through his ſloth and want of care, the whole Company ſhould that day paſs without their Dinner, which cauſed him in great paſſion, with loud Exclamations, as he paſſed the Streets, to accuſe the ill Government, and little care was had to rectify theſe common Abuſes: It fortuned that at that time that Derviſe was lamenting his Caſe to all the World, and curſing the principal Officers, that the Grand Signior in diſguiſe paſſed by, and ſeeing a Man in ſuch diſorder of Mind, came in a courteous manner to demand the Reaſon of his Paſſion; to whom the Derviſe replied, 'It was vain for him to be inquiſitive; or for me, 'ſaid he, to inform you what you are able to afford no Remedy unto; for none but the Grand 'Signior himſelf is of ſufficient Power to redreſs 'that for which I have ſo much cauſe to be trou-'bled. At laſt, with much importunity, he told, 'what great Abuſe there was in the Butchery, 'that the Shambles were ill ſerved, that he had 'miſſed the uſual proportion of Fleſh that morn-'ing for his Janiſaries Chamber; and what Pu-'niſhment he was likely to ſuffer, for having come 'ſhort only one moment of his due time. He added further, 'That the Vizier, and other Officers, were negligent in rectifying theſe mean 'and low Diſorders, being wholly taken up in 'enriching themſelves, and intent to their own 'Intereſt: But if I were firſt Vizier, I would not 'only cauſe great plenty of Fleſh in this City, 'but at all times of the day it ſhould be found 'by thoſe who wanted it. And now, what be-'nefit have either you, ſaid he, by hearing this 'Story, or what releaſe am I like to have of Pu-'niſhment by repeating it to you?

The Grand Signior afterwards returning Home, and conſidering of the Diſcourſe the Janiſaries Cook had made him, whether to prove the Abilities of the Man, or becauſe he conceived Providence had offered this Encounter; or that Princes delight to exerciſe their Power in creating great Men from Nothing, he ſent immediatly for the Derviſe; who being come into his Preſence, and ſenſible of the familiar Diſcourſe he had made him, trembling, caſt himſelf down at his Feet, ſuppoſing that the free Language he uſed of the Vizier and the Government, was the cauſe he was now to loſe his Life. But it happened quite contrary, for the Grand Signior encouraging him to lay aſide his fear, told him, he was reſolved to make him firſt Vizier, to try an Experiment, whether he was able to amend thoſe Abuſes he complained of. And that herein he might not tranſgreſs the Degrees whereby he was gradually to paſs, he firſt made him chief of his Chamber, the next day Captain, the day following Aga or General of the Janiſaries, and thence with one ſtep to be great Vizier, who not only remedied the Abuſe in the Shambles, according to his promiſe, but proved a famous and excellent Miniſter of State. And though Examples of the like nature are frequent among the Turks, yet this may ſerve at preſent to ſhew in part the Fortune and Fate by which Men are raiſed, and the unconſtancy of Greatneſs and Glory amongſt the Turks, above any other part of the World beſides.

It was a hard Problem in the Turkiſh Policy, which as a wiſe Prime Vizier propoſed to certain Paſhaes, amongſt other Queſtions, What courſes were poſſible to be found out for a firſt Vizier to maintain and continue his Office, and acquit this ſo dangerous Charge, from the hazard and uncertainty to which it is liable; For you ſee, Brothers, ſaid he, how few enjoy or grow Old herein; their Vertue, their Care, and their Innocence are no protection; ſome remain a Day, a Week, a Month; others protract the Threed to a Year or two, but at length they are (to uſe our own Proverb) like the Ape, to whom God gives Wings for their ſpeedier deſtruction. The Paſhaes were for a while all ſilent, not knowing what Reply to make, or how to reſolve ſo difficult and knotty a Point, until Kuperli (who was then the moſt ancient, and perhaps the wiſeſt Paſha, as the Actions of his following Life have ſufficiently teſtified) firſt replied, That in his Opinion, the only and moſt probable Means for a tottering Vizier to ſecure himſelf, is to divert the Mind of the Grand Signior, and other working Brains, upon ſome Foreign War; for Peace is that which corrupts the Diſpoſitions of Men, and ſets them on work to raiſe themſelves with Inteſtine and Civil Evils; when War buſies their Spirits, and employs them to gain Renown and Glory by Martial Actions, by which means Plots and Treachery are droven from our own Homes; Conſiliis & aſtu res externas moliri, arma procul habere. Tacit. Lib. 6. And it is poſſible that Achmet the Son of Kuperli, who began the laſt War with Germany, might go upon this Maxim of his Fathers; for in all Matters ters of his Government, he is obſerved to walk by the ſame Rules and Directions, which were bequeathed to him as well as his Inheritance.

And yet for all this doubtful Eſtate of the Prime Viziers, ſome have been known to manage this Office eighteen or nineteen Years, and afterwards wearied with Care and Pains, to acquit it by a natural Death; from whence this Queſtion may ariſe, Whether the Favour or Diſpleaſure of the Prince depends on the Deſtiny or Fortune we are born to, or whether humane Counſel can aſſign a way between Contumaciouſneſs and Flattery, wherein to ſteer free from Danger and Ambition? Unde dubitare cogor, fato & ſorte naſcendi, ut cætera, ita Principum inclinatio in hos, offenſio in illos, an ſit aliquid in noſtris conſiliis, liceatque inter abruptam contumaciam, & deforme obſequium pergere iter, ambitione & periculis vacuum. Tacit. Lib. 4. But we find but few Examples of this kind; for if Viziers have been Evil, their own Cruelty and Covetouſneſs have haſtned their Fate; if Good, their Merits have been their Ruin; leſt the great Benefits their Merits have procured to their Prince ſhould ſeem to want Reward, or be dangerous or difficult to requite; Beneficia eouſque læta, dum videntur exſolvi poſſe; ubi multum antevenere, pro gratia odium redditur. Tacit. Lib. 4.

The Revenues of the firſt Vizier, which iſſue immediately from the Crown, and are certain appendages to the Office, are not great, being not above 20000 Dollars yearly, which ariſe from certain Villages in Romelia; the reſt of the Immenſe Riches which accrues to this Charge ſo full of Cares and Danger, flows from all the Quarters of the Empire. For no Baſhaw, or Miniſter of Truſt, enters his place without his Preſent and Offering to the firſt Vizier, to obtain his Conſent, and purchaſe a continuance of his Favour. Thoſe that have Governments abroad, have always their Agents at Court, who with Gifts continually mollify the Vizier's Mind, entreating him to repreſent their Service to the Grand Signior in an acceptable and grateful manner. And though at the Equinoctial in the Spring, all Paſhaes, and any that have Governments of note, are obliged to make their Preſents to the Grand Signior of conſiderable value, at which time the firſt Vizier neither will not want his own acknowledgments, he is yet farther treated by all Perſons with Sums of Mony, as the Nature of their Buſineſs is, which is not ſecretly, but boldly and confidently demanded, and the Bargain beaten as in matters of Merchandize and Trade; and Juſtice and Favours made as vendible, and ſet as publick to ſale, as Wares and Commodities are in the Shops and Places of common Mart; ſo that if the firſt Vizier proves covetous, (as commonly they do who are raiſed from nothing, and uſed always to thrift, and reſolves to loſe nothing of what he may get) his Income is incredible, and may equal that which is the Rent of the Grand Signior, and in a few Years amaſs immenſe Riches and Wealth. But of this the Prince and the Turkiſh Policy is not ignorant, and accordingly provides Remedies to drain the Inundations of the Vizier's Coffers; at firſt, by extorting great Sums of Mony from him at his entrance to the Charge; then, under colour of Friendſhip and Favour, the Grand Signior makes him Viſits, in requital whereof, rich Preſents are made him, as gratitude for ſo much Honour; next, he many times ſends to him for a Gift of 100000 Dollars, for Jewels, Horſes, and other things of great value; and in this manner ſeveral Contrivances are uſed to turn theſe Rivulets to pay their Tribute to the great Ocean; amongſt which this preſent Grand Signior Mahomet the Fourth, hath found out one way amongſt the reſt, putting the Vizier often to the charges of his Dinner, ſending to his Kitchin for twenty Diſhes of Meat, which is the uſual proportion of the Grand Signior's ordinary Table, and by inviting himſelf to a Banquet many times at the Vizier's Expences; and this being done ſo frequently, gives the World occaſion to believe, that he demands it out of no other Deſign than narrowneſs of Soul to ſave the Charges of his own Dinner; and the rather it is ſo believed, becauſe this Emperor is reputed of a covetous Diſpoſition, and of no affinity with Solyman the Magnificent. But the Ways and Means by which the Grand Signior comes in the end to be poſſeſſed of the Gains and Profits collected by his Vizier, and other Officers, requires a particular Diſcourſe apart, which ſhall in its due time and place be treated of; and this ſhall for the preſent ſuffice to have ſpoken concerning the Prime Vizier and his Office.

CHAP. XII.

The Offices, Dignities, and ſeveral Governments of the Empire.

HE that will deſcribe the Polities of a Country, muſt endeavour, eſpecially in the moſt exact and punctual manner poſſible, to declare the ſeveral Offices, Dignities, and Riches of it, that ſo a more eaſy computation may be calculated of its Strength, numbers of Men, Fortifications, Forces by Sea, where beſt defended, and where moſt eaſily vulnerable and expoſed.

The next to the Vizier Azem, or the firſt Vizier, are the ſeveral Beglerbegs (which may not unaptly be compared to Arch-dukes in ſome parts of Chriſtendom) having under their Juriſdiction many Sangiacks or Provinces, Beyes, Agaes, and others: To every one of theſe, the Grand Signior in honour beſtows three Enſigns (called in Turkiſh Tugh) which are Staves trimmed with the Tail of a Horſe, with a Golden Bull upon the top, and this is to diſtinguiſh them from Baſhaws who have two Enſigns; and the Sanziach-beg, who hath alſo the name of Paſcha, and hath but one.

When a Paſcha is made, the Solemnity uſed at the conferring his Office, is a Flag or Banner carried before him, and accompanied with Muſick and Songs by the Merialem, who is an Officer for this purpoſe only, for inveſtiture of Paſhaes in their Office.

The Government of Beglerbegs, who have ſeveral Provinces called Sangiacks under their Command, are two ſorts; the firſt is called Has ile Beglerbeglik, which hath a certain Rent aſſigned out of the Cities, Countries, and Signiories allotted to the Principality; the ſecond is called Saliane Beglerbeglik, for maintenance of which is annexed a certain Salery or Rent, collected by the Grand Signior's Officers with the Treaſure of the whole Government, out of which are paid alſo the Sangiack Beglers, that is, the Lords of the ſeveral Counties, Towns, or Cities, and the Militia of the Country.

It is impoſſible exactly to deſcribe the Wealth and ways of Gains exerciſed by theſe potent Governors to enrich themſelves; for a Turk is ingenious to get Wealth, and haſty to grow Rich;

Rich; howſoever we will ſuccinctly ſet down the certain Sums of Revenue which are granted them by Commiſſion from the Grand Signior, aſſigned them out of every particular place of their Government; beſides which, they have the Profits of all Wefts and Strays, goods of Felons, ſale of vacant Church-Offices, Mules, Horſes and Cattel, which by Mortality, or other Accidents, have no certain Maſter; to which may be added the benefit of their Avanias or falſe Accuſations, whereby they invade the Right and Eſtates of their Subjects; as alſo of the Robberies of their People and Strangers, by their own Slaves and Servants, whom they ſend abroad with that deſign; and having committed the Robberies themſelves, under pretence of diſcovery of the Crime, and doing Juſtice, they ſeize the Innocent People, torture and impriſon them, and perhaps put ſome to death for expiation of their own Offences.

To come nearer to this purpoſe; The Beglerbegs of the firſt ſort are in number 22, who have their Revenue allotted them in the places that they Govern, collected by their own Officers according to Commiſſion, of which the firſt is of Anatolia, anciently called Aſia Minor, afterwards Anatolia, ἀπὸ τῆς Ἀνατολῆς, from its more Eaſtern ſituation in reſpect of Greece; the yearly Revenue of which, in the Grand Signior's Books, called the Old Canon, is a Million of Aſpers, and hath under its Juriſdiction 14 Sangiack Kiotahi, where the Beglerbeg reſides, in Phrygia Major, Sarahan, Aidin, Kaſtamoni, Hadanendighiar, Boli, Menteſche, Augora, otherwiſe Ancyra, Karahyſar, Teke ili, Kiangri, Hamid, Sultân Vghi, Kareſi, with the command of twenty two Caſtles.

An Aſper is about the value of an Halfpenny.

2. Caramania, anciently called Cilicia, and was the laſt Province which held out belonging to the Caramanian Princes, when all places gave way to the flouriſhing progreſs of the Ottoman Arms; The Revenue hereof is 660074 Aſpers, and hath under its Juriſdiction ſeven Sangiacks, viz. Iconium, which is the Court of the Beglerbeg in Cappadocia, Nigkde, Kaiſani, otherwiſe Ceſanca, Jeniſcheheri, Kyrſchehri, Akſchehri, Akſerai: And in this Principality are three Caſtles, at Iconium one, at Larende and Mendui, under the Paſha's immediate Command, and 17 others in ſeveral Sangiacks.

Which ſignifies a free command.

3. Diarbekir, otherwiſe Meſopotamia, hath a Revenue of a Million two hundred thouſand and ſix hundred and ſixty Aſpers, and hath under its Juriſdiction 19 Sangiacks, with five other Governments called Hukinmet in Turkiſh; eleven of which Sangiacks are properly belonging to the Ottoman Royalties, and eight are Curdian Countries, or of the People called Kurts; for when Curdia was conquered, the Country was divided, and diſtinguiſhed into the Nature of Sangiacks; but with this difference, of right Inheritance and Succeſſion to the Goods and Poſſeſſions of their Parents, and ſucceed as Lords of Mannors, or to other petty Governments by Blood and Kindred. And as other Lords of Sangiacks, Timariots, or Barons, pay the Grand Signior's Duties, and hold their Lands in Knights Service, or other Tenure, whereby they are obliged to attend and follow their Commanders to the Wars, whenſoever they are called thereunto by the Grand Signior's Summons: theſe that are regiſtred for Hukiumet, have no Timariots or Lords to command them, but are free from all Duties and Impoſitions, and are abſolute Maſters of their own Lands and Eſtates. Thoſe Sangiacks which are properly belonging to the Ottoman Royalties, are C. Harpu, Ezani, Syureck, Neſbin, Chatenghiſ, Tchemiſchekrek, Seared, Muſarkin, Aktchie, Kala, Habur, Sangiar, otherwiſe Diarbekir, which is the place of reſidence of the Beglerbeg. Thoſe Sangiacks which are entailed upon Families, are Sagman, Kulab, Mechrani, Tergil, Atak, Pertek, Tchifakichur, Tchirmek.

4. Of Scham, otherwiſe Damaſcus, the certain Revenue of which is a Million of Aſpers, and hath under it Sangiacks ſeven with Has, where the Contributions by the Beglerbeg's Officers are collected upon the Country, and are Kuddeſcherif, alias Jeruſalem, Gaza, Sifad, Nabolos, alias Naples in Syria, Aglun, Bahura and Damaſcus, the City where the Beglerbeg reſides. He hath farther three with Siliane, for account of which he is paid by the King's Officers, and thoſe are Kadmar, Saida, Beru, Kiurk, Schubeck, where are no Timariots, but the Inhabitants are true and abſolute Maſters of their own Eſtates, in the ſame manner as the Curdi are, which we have before-mentioned; the Caſtles here are for the moſt part demoliſhed, and ſcarce worthy our notice.

5. Is of Siwas a City in Armenia Major, hath a Revenue of Nine hundred thouſand Aſpers, and hath under his Dominions ſix Sangiacks, viz. Amaſia, Tchurum, Buradick, Demurki, Gianick, Arebkir, the Caſtles of which are nineteen.

7. Is the Government of the Paſcha of Wan, or Van, a City in Media, hath a Revenue of a Million one hundred and thirty two thouſand two hundred and nine Aſpers, and commands 14 Sangiacks, viz. Adilgiwar, Ergiſch, Muſch, Barkiri, Kiarkian, Kiſani, Eſpaird, Agakis, Ekrad, Benikutur, Kalaibaierid, Berdea and Edegick.

8. Is the Government of the Paſcha of Tchildir on the Confines of Georgia, hath a Revenue of Nine hundred twenty five thouſand Aſpers, and commands nine Sangiacks, viz. Olti, Hartus, Ardnug, Erdehamburek, Hagrek, Puſenhaf, alias Puſenhal, Machgil, Igiare, Penbeck, Pertekrek.

9. Is the Government of Scheherezul in Aſſyria, the Paſcha of which hath a Revenue of a Million of Aſpers, and commands 20 Sangiacks, viz. Surutkuk, Erbil, Kiuſchaf, Schekribazar, Chahkiule, Gebihamrin, Hezurd Merd, Dulchuran, Merghiaue, Haninudevin, Agiur, Neitutari, Sepenzengire, Ebruuan, Tauudan, Badeberend, Belkas, Vicheni, Garikalo, Renghene.

10. Is the Government of Halep, or Aleppo, hath Eight hundred and ſeventeen thouſand ſeven hundred and ſeventy two Aſpers Revenue, and commands ſeven Sangiacks with Has, and two with Saliane: Of the firſt ſort are Adana, Ekrad, Kelis, Beregek, Mearre, Gazir, Balis: Of the other are Matick and Turman which is Turcomania, of theſe at this day the Revenue is farmed, and are not called Sangiacks, but Agalik, for in them are no Timariots, but every Man is Lord and Maſter of his own Lands. This Government hath five Caſtles.

11. Is the Government of Maraſch near the River Euphrates, ſituated between Meſopotamia and Aleppo, otherwiſe called by the Turks, Zulkadrie, hath a Revenue of 628450 Aſpers, and commands four Sangiacks only, viz. Malatia,

Aſ

Aſab, Kars, and Samſad, and hath four Caſtles.

12. Is the Government of Kibros, otherwiſe called Cyprus, hath a Revenue of Five hundred thouſand ſix hundred and fifty Aſpers, and commands ſeven Sangiacks, viz. four with Has, and are Itchili, Tarſus, Alaine, Schis; the other three with Saliane, are Kenine Baf Mauſa, Lefkuſcha or Larnica, the place of the Paſcha's reſidence is Nicoſia.

13. Is the Government of Tarabolos Scham, otherwiſe Tripoly of Syria, hath a Revenue of Eight hundred thouſand Aſpers; at this place the Paſcha reſides, and hath under him four Sangiacks, viz. Hams, Hama, Gemele and Selemie, and hath only one Caſtle in the Sangiack of Hams called Faſtulekrad.

14. Is the Government of Terbozan, otherwiſe Trabezond, encompaſſed with a ridge of Mountains, according to a Poet born in that place, Vertice Montano Trapezus incluſa receſſit.

Formerly the Imperial Seat of the Comneni reigning over Cappadocia, Galatia, and the parts of Pontus founded by Alexius Comnenus, who upon the taking of Conſtantinople by the Weſtern Chriſtians fled to this place, which flouriſhed until taken by Mahomet the Great; it is ſituate on the Euxine or Black Sea, and ſtill a place of conſiderable Traffick, eſpecially made rich for the Fiſhing, out of which and the Cuſtoms, the Paſcha, though he hath no Sangiacks under his Government, hath yet a Revenue allotted of 734850 Aſpers, with fourteen Caſtles to defend the City, and the Dominions belonging thereunto.

15. The Government of the Paſcha of Kars, a City near Erzrum, hath a Revenue of Eight hundred twenty thouſand ſix hundred and fifty Aſpers, and commands ſix Sangiacks, viz. Erdehankitutchuk, Gingewan, Zarnſchan, Chegran, Kughizman, Paſin.

Theſe are all the Governments which are in Aſia with Has; let us now paſs into Europe.

18. Is the Government of the Paſcha of Rumuli, otherwiſe Romania, which is the moſt honourable Turkiſh charge in Europe, hath a Revenue of a Million and one hundred thouſand Aſpers, the ſeat of the Paſcha is Sofia, and commands 24 Sangiacks, viz. Kioſtendit otherwiſe Juſtiniana, Mora otherwiſe Morea, Skenderi, Tirhala, Siliſtra, Nigeboli, Uchri, Awlona, Janina, Ilbrazan, Tchirmen, Selanik otherwiſe Salonica, Wize, Deluniia, Uskiup, Kirkkeliſa, Dukakin, Wedin, Alagehizar, Serzerin, Waltcharin, Bender, Akkerman, Ozi, Azak; But it is to be obſerved, that though Morea, according to the ancient Canon, was under the juriſdiction of the Paſcha of Romania, yet now it is divided and made part of the Revenue of the Valede or Queen-Mother, where a Farmer of her Rents and Incomes now reſides.

19. Is the charge of the Kupudan, otherwiſe Captain Paſcha, or as the Turks call him, General of the White Seas, hath a Revenue of 885000 Aſpers; he is Admiral of the Grand Signior's Fleet, and commands as far as the Turkiſh Power by Sea extends; and commands 13 Sangiacks, viz. Galipoli, which is the proper place of the Paſcha's reſidence, Egribuz otherwiſe Negropont, Karlieli, Ainebahti, Rhodes, Midillu or Metilene, Kogia Eli, Betga, Siſta, Mezeſtra, Sakis, or the Iſland of Scio, Beneksche or Malvatia; ſome others add Nicomedia, Lemnos, and Nixia.

20. Is the Government of the Paſcha of Budun, otherwiſe Buda in Hungary, hath a Revenue and commands 20 Sangiacks, viz. Agri, Kanyſia, Samandra, Petchui, Uſtumubilgrad or Stultwiſſemberg, Oſtrogon or Strigonium, Sekdin, Chatwan, Semutum, Sirem, Kupan, Filek, Sekitwar, Sektches, Setchre, Novigrad, Seksard, Belgrade or Alba Regalis. And now lately in the Year 1663, that Wiwar or Newhawſel was taken, a new Sangiack is ſince added.

21. The Paſcha of Temeſwar in Hungary, hath a Revenue and hath under his command 6 Sangiacks, viz. Lipona, Tchanad, Ghiola, Mudava, Waradin, to which alſo Janova is added, conquered in the Year 1663.

22. Is the Government of the Paſcha of Boſna, which is part of Illyrium, divided formerly into Liburnia and Dalmatia, now called Sclavonia; his Revenue is a and commands 8 Sangiacks, viz. Herſek, Kelis, Ezdernick, Puzga, Feraigne, Zagine, Kirka, Rahvige.

There are other Paſchas of Coffa, Theodeſia in Taurica Cherſoneſus, which having no Sangiacks, no Timariots, nor Ziamets under them, but only a few beggarly Villages which we ſhall purpoſely omit, as not worthy the notice. And ſo much ſhall be ſaid for the Paſchaes or Beglerbegs with Has, or with the Revenue impoſed upon Countries under their command, collected by their own Officers.

Thoſe that are with Saliane, or paid out of the Grand Signior's Treaſury, are:

1. The Paſcha of Grand Cairo, called by the Turks Miſir, hath a Revenue of Six hundred thouſand Scheriffs or Zechins a Year, which he may juſtly and honeſtly pretend to; as much is the Tribute yearly paid the Grand Signior from that place; which is moſt commonly brought ſince the War with Venice upon Camels backs by Land, with a guard of 500 Men, not to expoſe it to the danger of being intercepted at Sea; another Sum of Six hundred thouſand Zechins yearly goes to the payment of the Turks Forces in Egypt; beſides the vaſt Sums of Mony this Paſcha extorts with inſupportable Avarice and Tyranny from the Natives of the Country, during the ſpace of his three Years Government; by which means he grows exceſſive rich, and able to refund a good ſtream into the Grand Signior's Coffers at his return, as hereafter ſhall be the ſubject of our more large diſcourſe; he commands 16 Sangiacks as is reported, but not being regiſtred in the King's Book, I let them paſs without naming them.

2. Is the Government of Bagdat, otherwiſe Babylon, and hath a Revenue of a Million and ſeven hundred thouſand Aſpers, and commands 22 Sangiacks, viz. Dertenk, Gezan, Gewazir, Renk, Aidiie, Gelle, Semwar, Remaiie, Beiare, Derne, Debare, Waſit, Gebkiule, Gedide, Kefend, Kaſrſchirin, Ghiilan, Karag, Anne, Aſebah, Demarkapn, Deirberhiie, Karaniie.

3. Is the Government of the Paſcha of Temen, which is in Arabia Felix, whoſe place of Reſidence dence is at Adem upon the Red Sea; which Place and Country being recovered for the moſt part again from the Turk by the Arabians, it is neither needful to mention the Revenue, nor the Sangiacks it formerly commanded.

4. The Paſha of the Abiſſines hath his Reſidence at Saquen, a ſmall Iſle in the Red Sea, and commands the Ports of Meſauna and Erkiko, which the Turks lately took from the Abiſſines, but this Paſha being very poor, and far diſtant from the Succours of the Turks, we cannot aſſign any Sangiacks, or render any thing certain of his Eſtate.

5. In the Government alſo of Boſra, on the Confines of Perſia, were reckoned 26 Sangiacks, but now not held by the Turk, who hath no other Power there, nor Benefit thence, excepting only that Prayers are made conſtantly for the Sultan.

6. In the Government of Lahſa, on the Confines of Ormus in Perſia, are accounted ſix Sangiacks, viz. Aiwen, Sakul, Negniie, Netif, Benderazir, Giriz; but theſe Countries are poor, and have ſcarce any place in the Grand Signior's Regiſters.

To theſe we ſhould add the Governments of Algiers, Tunis, and Tripoly in Barbary; but that being much fallen off from the Turks Obedience, and become almoſt independent of them, we ſhall paſs by the Diſcourſe of them, eſpecially becauſe of late Years the mutual Treaties with Barbary, and interchanges of War and Peace with thoſe Countries, hath made the State and Condition of that People well known and familiar in England.

The uſe of the particular Catalogue foregoing, is to demonſtrate the Greatneſs and Power of the Ottoman Empire, which hath ſo many conſiderable Governments and Principalities in its Poſſeſſion, wherewith to encourage and excite the endeavours of Heroick Spirits to an ambition of great and noble Enterprizes, whereby to merit the Rewards which remain in the Power of the Sultan to gratify them with. And alſo to help in the juſt computation of the number of Men the Turk can bring into the Field, every Paſcha being obliged, for every 5000 Aſpers Rent, to bring a Souldier to the War; though notwithſtanding, they often appear, for oſtentation and gain of the Grand Signior's Favour, with more Men than their own Complement: as in the laſt War with Germany, the Beglerbeg of Romania brought 10000 effective Men into the Field.

Of theſe Beglerbegs, five have the Titles of Viziers, which ſignifies as much as Counſellors, viz. the Paſcha's of Anatolia, Babylon, Cairo, Romania and Buda; which are charges of the greateſt Riches, Power, and Fame; the others have their pre-eminence, rank or order, according to the priority of Conqueſt, and Antiquity in the poſſeſſion of the Turks.

Theſe are all the great Governments of the Empire, in whoſe reſpective Juriſdictions are always three principal Officers, viz. the Mufti, the Reis Efendi, otherwiſe called Reis Kitab, which is, Lord Chancellor, or Secretary of State, or rather thoſe two Offices united into one; the third is Teſterdar Paſhaw, or Lord Treaſurer. Theſe three Officers are near Councellors and Attendants on their Paſhaws; and ſo alſo they are on the Prime Vizier, whoſe Mufti, Reis Efendi, and Teſterdar, have a Superiority and dignity above others, and are to them as the Original to the Copy.

Of the Mufti we ſhall ſpeak in due place. The Reis Efendi, which ſignifies chief of the Writers or Book-men; (for the Turks call always Men of the Law, and Profeſſors of the Pen, and Parochial Prieſts by the Title of Efendi) is always preſent and attending on the Vizier, for paſſing Orders, Decrees, Patents and Commiſſions into all parts of the Empire; which are daily diſpatched in thoſe Numbers into all Places, as is incredible; for the Turks governing more by their Arbitrary Power, and according to the Exigencies of Affairs, than by a ſet Rule or Form, every Buſineſs requires its diſtinct Order; and the very Courts of Juſtice are moderated according to the Commands and Directions they receive from Above; by which means the Reis Efendi's Hands are filled with ſuch a multitude of Buſineſs, as employs great numbers of Writers; and conſequently brings in Riches flowing to his Coffers; ſome in which Office, who by their Parts, Induſtry, and Courage, have gained Authority and Reſpect, have amaſſed Wealth, which might compare with the Riches and Treaſure of Princes; We ſhall here inſtance in one of late years, famous in Turky, for his Knowledg and Riches, called Samoz.ade; one who had piled thoſe heaps of all things that were rich and curious, as were too tedious and long to inſert in a Catalogue in this place. It may ſuffice, that being executed in the time of the laſt Wars againſt the Emperor of Germany, for ſome Conſpiracy againſt the Great Vizier, ſuch a Treaſure was found appertaining to him (all which was confiſcated to the Grand Signior) as was ſufficient to have enriched and raiſed his Prince, had he been impoveriſhed, and in a declining condition.

The other great Officer, is the Teſterdar or Lord Treaſurer, who receives the Revenue of the Grand Signior, and pays the Souldiery, and makes other publick Diſburſements; this Office is different from the Treaſurer of the Seraglio (of whom we have already ſpoken) who attends to nothing elſe but the Expences of the Court, and to gather in the accidental Profits and Preſents paid to the Grand Signior; which is ſo conſiderable, that every Sultan (for the moſt part) amaſſes a particular Treaſure of his own, which after his death is incloſed in a certain Chamber, and ſhut with an Iron Gate, and the Key-hole ſtopped with Lead; and over the Port is writ, in Golden Letters, The Treaſures of ſuch a Sultan. And this ſhall ſuffice to have been ſpoken of the Offices and Dignities of the Empire.

CHAP. XIII.

Of the Tartars and Tartar Han, and in what manner they depend upon the Turks.

THE Tartars may very well be accounted amongſt the other Princes ſubject to the Ottoman Power; I mean not the Aſiatick Tartars, or the Tartar of Eubeck (though ſo much Mahometan as to wear green Turbants, and to deduce their Race from the Line of Mahomet himſelf) for having conquered China, and poſſeſſing a greater Empire than the Ottoman, they are far from acknowledging any ſubjection or degree of Inferiority to the Turk: nor are all the European Tartars Subjects to the Sultan; for the Kalmuk and Citrahan Tartars (Men of ſtrange barbarity, and countenance different from all the other Race of Mankind) though Profeſſors of the Mahometan Religion, are yet faithfully and piouſly obedient obedient to the Duke of Muſcovy their lawful Prince.

But the Precopentian Tartar, which inhabits Taurica Cherſoneſus, now called Crim, the principal City of which is Theodoſia, now Cafa, and the Nagaentian Tartar, which inhabits by the Palus Meotis, between the Rivers of Volga and Tanais, are the People which may be accounted amongſt the Subjects, or at leaſt Confederates of this Empire; though only the City of Cafa, of all thoſe Dominions, is immediatly in Poſſeſſion and Government of the Turk, which in my opinion appears to be a cautionary Town and Pledg for their Obedience; and though the Han, or Prince of the Country, is Elective, yet he is choſen out of that true Line, and confirmed by the Grand Signiors, who have always taken upon them a Power to depoſe the Father, and in his place conſtitute the Son, or next of the Lineage, when found remiſs in affording their Auxiliary helps to the War, or guilty of any diſreſpect or want of Duty to the Ottoman Port.

This preſent Han which now governs, called Mahomet Ghirei, (for that is the Sirname of his Family) remained, during the Life of his Father (according to the cuſtom of the eldeſt Son of this Prince) a Hoſtage to the Turk in Janboli, a Town in Thrace, four days journey diſtant from Adrianople, ſituate on the Euxine or Black Sea; but from thence, upon jealouſy of too near a vicinity to his own Country, was removed to Rhodes, where he paſſed an obſcure and melancholy Life until the Death of his Father; and then being recalled to Conſtantinople, had there his Sword girt on, ſwore Fealty to the Grand Signior, with all other Formalities performed according to their Cuſtom of Regal Inauguration: But being ſetled in his Kingdom, and mindful of his Sufferings at Rhodes, he had ever ſtomached the Pride of the Ottoman Emperor; by which, and the diſſuaſion of the Polonians, and the other Neighbouring Tartars, as a thing diſhonourable to ſo ancient and powerful a People, to reſign the Heir of their Kingdom a Hoſtage to their Neighbours; this preſent Prince hath refuſed this part of Subjection, which the Vizier Kupriuli often complained of; but not being in a condition to afford a Remedy unto it, thought it prudent to diſſemble.

But yet theſe People are eſteemed as Brothers, or near Allies with the Turk, to whom, for want of Heirs Male in the Ottoman Line, the Empire is by ancient Compact to deſcend; the expectation of which, though afar off, and but almoſt imaginary, doth yet conſerve the Tartar in as much obſervance to the Turk, as the hopes of an Eſtate doth a young Gallant, who is allured to a complacency and obſequiouſneſs, with the petulant Humour of a Father that adopts him, who is reſolved never to want Heirs of his own Family. And thus the Tartar is as obedient as other Subjects; and though the Turk exerciſes not his Power there by Commands, as in other places of his Dominions, but treats all his Buſineſs by way of Letters; yet theſe Letters ſerve in the place of Warrants, for the ſignification of the Grand Signior's Pleaſure, and are as available as the * Autogra, and other Formalities of the Imperial Edict, are in other places (in ſubjection to the Turk).

When the Sultan writes to the Cham of Tartary, he uſes this ſtyle,

To the Government wherein flouriſhes the Maſs, and Original of Regency, on which Fortune depends, and by which Felicity is obtained. Poſſeſſor of Excellent Power, and Eſtabliſhed Glory, elected by the Favour of that King from whom Succours are to be demanded. The King of Grim, Gian, Begh, Ghirai Chaw, whoſe Heighth be for ever maintained.

After reſpect had to thoſe Bleſſings, which are freighted with Amber, and Salutations perfumed with Narciſſus, proceeding from the Imperial Grace. Be it known unto you, &c.

By ancient Compact between the Empire and the Kingdom of Tartary, it is agreed, that whenſoever the Grand Signior goes in Perſon to the Wars, the Tartar Han is to accompany him in Perſon, with an Army of one hundred thouſand Men; but if the Vizier, or ſome other General be in the Field, then is he only obliged to ſend forty or fifty thouſand under the command of his Son, or ſome principal Officer of his Kingdom, who are paid and maintained out of the Booty and Pillage they acquire.

In the Year 1663, the Tartar called on occaſion of the War in Hungary, to the aſſiſtance of the Turk, they made ſuch Incurſions into that Country, Moravia and Sileſia, ſacking and burning all Cities and Towns, that they carried away One hundred and ſixty thouſand Captive Souls in one Year; which preciſe number I am informed from thoſe who had received good information of the Pengick or Certificates that were given upon every Head; for the Tartar being an abſolute Free-booter, makes prize of all that comes within his Power; and leſt he ſhould prey on the Subjects of the Turk, they are bound to take out Atteſtations from certain Regiſters, of the Names, Countries, and Age of their Captives, leſt they ſhould deceive the Turk with the ſale of thoſe, who are already their own Subjects and Slaves.

The Tartar is to the Turk, as the Giacal to the Lion, who hunts and finds the Prey for the Lion to overcome and feed: And ſo the Tartars make Incurſions into the Neighbouring Countries round about, and paſs in great Bodies, ſometimes ten or twelve days, without doing the leaſt damage or ſpoil in their Journey outward; but as ſoon as they turn their Faces Home, they rob, ſpoil, burn, and carry all the Inhabitants, of what Age or Sect ſoever, like a Torrent before them; and every one of them leading three or four Horſes apiece, on which they mount their Captives, and load their Prey, make a running march Day and Night with few hours intermiſſion for natural Repoſe, too faſt for any orderly Army to overtake; and any other, that is not ſo, is not able to give them Battel. Such of their Slaves as in their journey are wounded and infirm, and not able to accompany the Camp, they kill; thoſe which they bring ſafe into their own Country they ſell to the Turks, who come thither to trade for this Merchandiſe, which is the moſt profitable Commodity that Tartary affords. Young Boys and Girls are rated at the higheſt Price, the latter of which being beautiful are like Jewels held at an unknown value; but few of them eſcape the luſt of the Tartars, who deflower them even in the Years of their very infancy. This ſort of People were by the Ancients called Sarmati, and were always famous for their exploits on Horſeback, but heavy and ignorant of Foot-ſervice; which Character Tacitus gives of them, Lib. 1. Hiſt. Omnis Sarmatum matum virtus quaſi extra ipſos, nihil ad pedeſtrem pugnam, tam ignavum ubi per turmas advenere, vix ulla acies obſtiterit, iners videtur ſudore acquirere, quod poſſis ſanguine parare, mirâ diverſitate naturæ cum iidem homines ſic ament inertiam, & oderint quietem: They live very hardly, and feed eſpecially on Horſe-fleſh, which dying in their march, they never examine his Diſeaſes, whether ſurfeited or overheated; but diſtributing his Fleſh amongſt their Companions, place it under their Saddles: and thus baked between the heat of the Man and the Horſe, chafed with that day's labour, is a night judged ſufficiently prepared, as a Diſh fit for the Table of their Prince.

And as the Men are nouriſhed with a Diet of raw Fleſh, Herbs and Roots, or ſuch as the Earth naturally produces, without the concoction of the Fire to prepare it for their Stomachs, ſo alſo their Horſes are of a hardy temperament, patient of Hunger and Cold; and in the ſharp Winter of thoſe Countries, when the ground is covered with Snow, nouriſh themſelves with the Barks of Trees, and ſuch Herbage as they can find at the bottom of the deep Snow.

Their Towns or Villages conſiſt of Huts rather than Houſes, or Hurdles made with Sticks and covered with a courſe hair-Cloth; of which Villages there are accounted Two hundred thouſand, ſo that taking one Man out of every Village (as their cuſtome is when they go to the War) they ſpeedily form an Army of Two hundred thouſand fighting Men. But now having carried great Riches out of Poland, and gained a conſiderable Wealth by the Market of their Slaves, ſome of them throw off their homely Plads to wear Sables, and ſome more frugal, employ their Mony for building Houſes; the riotous and diſſolute are addicted to ſtrong Waters, and a drink called Boza made of a certain Seed (which drank in a great quantity doth intoxicate, and is now much in uſe amongſt the Turks) and give themſelves up to a gluttony, as brutiſh, as that which is natural unto Swine, having no art of Sauces to provoke their Appetite, but reſt delighted with the mere contentment of Idleneſs and a full Stomach.

But this ſhall be ſufficient to have ſpoken of the relation the Tartars have to the Government of the Turk, and their ſubjection to this Empire, their Cuſtoms and Manners being more amply and fully deſcribed in other Books.

CHAP. XIV.

Of the Tributary Princes to the Grand Signior, viz. Moldavians, Walachians, Tranſylvanians, Raguſeans, &c.

THE Power and Puiſſance of an Empire is not more judged of by the many Governours, the rich Offices it can diſpoſe of, the multitude of Provinces it contains in Obedience, and the neceſſity it can impoſe on other Princes to ſeek its confederacy (which we have already treated of) than it is by the many Tributaries which to redeem the remainder of their worldly Goods, willingly ſacrifice the beſt part to appeaſe his Fury, in whoſe Power it is to maſter all: and ſo theſe diſtreſſed Nations, long wearied out with tedious Wars, oppreſſed between the Emperor of Germany, the Polander, and the Turk, and more damaged by their own Civil Diſſentions, and Domeſtick Perfidiouſneſs, than vanquiſhed by the Force of Arms, were forced at laſt to ſurrender up their fruitfull Provinces to the devotion of the Turk, which are now haraſſed and oppreſſed beyond all expreſſion, and are the meereſt Slaves to the Turk of all other his Subjects; and may well be compared to the induſtrious Bee and profitable Sheep, whom he cares for and maintains alive for the ſake of their Honey, and the intereſt of their Wool; and as if all this were too little, when it ſhall be ſo thought fit, he opens the Gate to the Incurſions of the Tartar, who having gained a conſiderable booty of Goods and Captives, ſells to the Turks for Slaves, thoſe which were before his Subjects. Theſe three poor Provinces formerly called the Daci, which withſtood ſo long the Roman Arms, were always eſteemed a valiant and warlike People, according to that of Virgil, lib. 8. Æn.

Indomitique Daca, & pontem Indignatus Araxes.

Et Juvenal. Sat. 5.
Dacius & ſcripto radiat Germanicus antro.

Which Countries have been the Graves and Cemeteries of the Turks, and in theſe modern Times been the Stage on which ſo many Tragedies of War have been acted, being defended with as much valour and variety of Succeſſes, as could humanely be expected in ſo unequal a Match as was between thoſe Provinces ſingly and the Ottoman Empire. But now at laſt they are forced to yield, and become not only Tributaries, but Slaves and Subjects to the Turk, who having deprived them of the true Line of their natural Princes ſucceeding in a lawful Inheritance, place over them ſome Chriſtians of the Greek Church, without conſideration of their Conditions or Riches, or Qualifications; nay rather chuſe to give the Standard (which is the ſign of the Grand Signior's Confirmation of the Prince) to ſome inferiour Perſon, as Taverners, Fiſhmongers, or other meaner Profeſſions, purpoſely to diſparage the People with the baſeneſs of their Governours, and expoſe them to the oppreſſions of Men of no Worth or Dexterity in their Office. It hath ſeveral times been under the conſideration of the Turks, at length to reduce theſe three Provinces to the command of ſo many Paſhaws; contrary to the Original Capitulations agreed on at the time that theſe People firſt ſubmitted to the Ottoman Yoke: but as yet it hath been carried to the contrary, as more profitable, and better ſerving the Ends of the Empire; for hereby Chriſtians become the Inſtruments of Torment to their own Brethren; Outrages and Spoils may be the more boldly acted; more Turkiſh Officers employed on every ſlight Occaſion on gainful Meſſages; and the People, by long Oppreſſions, living under the Juriſdiction of a Prince, who can rather ſpoil than protect, may be reconciled more willingly to the Turkiſh Government, and learn to value the Gentleneſs and Power of a Paſha, compared with the remembrance of their former Agrievances. But of this Government they will rather let them imagine the Eaſe and Sweetneſs, than enjoy it; for were a Paſhalic the Governor, the Power of a Turk would be concerned for their Protection, he would eſteem himſelf their Patron, and his Honour engaged in their Defence, by which Means theſe Countries would be relieved in a great meaſure of Extortions and Violences, which is not ſo beneficial to the Turk, as the preſent miſerable Eſtate in which they remain.

Moldavia

Moldavia.

Moldavia called by the Turks Bugdan, was firſt made Tributary to the Turks by Mahomet the Great, but under the ſmall Tribute of 2000 Crowns per Annum; afterward Bogdanus, Vayvod thereof, Anno 1485, fearing to become abſolute Vaſſal to the Turk, taking to his Aſſociation the Kingom of Poland, took up Arms againſt Selymus the Second, by whom being drawn out from his Country, John a Moldavian born, but one who had embraced the Mahometan Superſtition, was preferred by Selymus to the Principality; but no ſooner was he ſetled therein, but he returned to his former Religion, for which cauſe the Turk taking into his aſſiſtence the Province of Walachia, made War upon Moldavia; but John the Vayvod by treachery loſing his Life, this Province fell totally into the Power of the Turk, and was united to his Empire in the Year 1574. The Tribute in thoſe days of this Province is recorded in the Turkiſh Hiſtory to have been 40000 Zechins, or 80000 Dollars; but now whatſoever may be reported, the Tribute of theſe Countries is, or was, the Reader may take this following Account for what is certainly paid, being related to me from one who had many Years been employed for Vayvod, both in Moldavia and Walachia by the Turk, viz. the yearly Tribute of Moldavia is,

The word Vayvod ſignifies as much as Præfectus Militiæ, or the General of an Army.

Its Annual Tribute.

1. To the Grand Signior, 120 Purſes of Mony; each Purſe containing 500 Dollars, makes 60000 Dollars.
2. Ten thouſand Okes of Wax, each Oke being two pounds and a half Engliſh weight.
3. Ten thouſand Okes of Honey.
4. Six hundred Quintals of Tallow for the Arſenal.
5. Five hundred Ox Hides.
6. Five hundred Pieces of Canvas for Cloathing, and Shirts for the Slaves, and others Services for the Gallies.
7. One thouſand three hundred and thirty Okes of Wax, for the ſervice of the Arſenal.
8. To the chief Vizier ten Purſes of Mony; or 5000 Dollars, and a Sables Fur for a Veſt.
9. To the Viziers Kahija, or chief Steward, one Purſe, or 500 Dollars.
10. To the Teſterdar, or Lord Treaſurer, the ſame as to the Kahija.

This is the ordinary and annual Tribute this Country acknowledges to the Supremacy of the Sultan; and it were well and happy for this People were it all; but there are ſo many accidental Expences, Pretenſions, and Artifices of the Turks, framed and contrived Meſſages merely to extract Mony and Preſents from this oppreſſed and haraſſed People, as do more than equal, and ſometimes double the charge of their yearly Tribute.

To which you may add the Price paid for the Principality, which is every three Years ſet to ſale, and is,

The Price of the Principality.

To the Grand Signior 150 Purſes, or 75000 Dollars.

To the Valede or Queen-mother 50 Purſes, or 25000 Dollars.

To the Grand Signior's Favourite, who is commonly ſome handſome young Youth, 10 Purſes, or 5000 Dollars.

And to the Kuſlir Aga or chief Black Eunuch, who is Superintendent over the Ladies in the Seraglio, 10 Purſes of Mony.

And laſtly, To the Prime Vizier and other Officers, for as much as they can beat the Bargain.

All which Mony is taken up at Intereſt at 40 or 50 per Cent. and ſometimes on condition to be doubled; and this is done by Men, who having no Eſtates of their own, the Debt comes to be charged on their Country, which is pillaged and poled for it to the very Bones, firſt to ſatisfy the Price of the Principality with the Intereſt-mony, for what it is valued, then to pay the annual Tribute, then to ſatisfy the multitude of covetous Turks, who like ſo many Vultures purſue after the Skeleton of this conſumed Carkaſs.

And laſtly, the Prince himſelf muſt take his Accounts, and take his Meaſures to be capable for the future, after he hath laid aſide the Ornament of his Office, to live in ſome proportion agreeable to his paſt Condition; and this is neither done moderately nor modeſtly, but with a covetouſneſs and greedy Appetite, commonly incident to the nature of Men born of mean Parentage, and educated with the parſimony of a ſcanty Houſe; who alſo thereunto add many grains of allowance to the limits of ther Gains, in conſideration of the yearly Gratuities they muſt make to reconcile the Friendſhip of the Turkiſh Miniſters, whereby they may enjoy protection for their Perſons and Eſtates.

The State and Condition of the Province of Walachia is not better, but rather worſe, and more afflicted than that of Moldavia; for this Country, is now equally with the former in the ſole and entire diſpoſal and poſſeſſion of the Turk, to whom it became firſt Tributary under their own Princes in the time of Sultan Bajazet; Afterward in the Year 1462, Mahomet the Great undertook the entire Conqueſt of it, then governed by its Vayvod Wladus, whoſe younger Brother ſupported by the Turk, and Factious Party in that Country, poſſeſſed himſelf of the Principality, contenting himſelf to be Vaſſal to the Turkiſh Empire; afterwards in the Year 1595, Michael the Vayvod thereof joining himſelf with Sigiſmund of Tranſylvania, and with the Vayvod of Moldavia, waged a long and terrible War againſt the Turks, until Revolutions, Unquietneſs and Factions have ſo ſpent them, as that they are at length become another addition to the Empire of the Turks, who now impoſe on them a heavy Yoke and ſtrait Curb, not to be imputed to any thing more than to Divine Juſtice, which takes occaſion to exerciſe a hand of Severity againſt the unſeaſonable negligence, Sedition, and Variance of Chriſtians amongſt themſelves, at a time when the common Enemy to their profeſſion attended only the opportunity of their own Diſſentions, to enter and devour them.

The Tribute of Walachia to the Grand Signior was formerly 120 Purſes of Mony, or 60000 Dollars yearly, according to that of Moldavia, and ſo ſtill continued, had not lately Mathew the Vayvod about the Year 1655, grown rich, and therefore forgetful of his Condition (having by Friends and large Preſents at the Port, procured a continuation of his Office for the ſpace of nineteen or twenty Years) rebelled againſt the Turk, taking falſe meaſures of his Wealth and Power, as able to encounter with the puiſſance of the Ottoman Empire; but being ſoon put to the worſt, and forced to yield, his Life was ſpared and the ſafety of his Country redeemed upon the augmentation of their Tribute; ſo that now, that which was yearly paid, being 120 Purſes of Mony,

1. Is become to the Grand Signior 260 Purſes, or 130000 Dollars. Every Oke is two pounds and an half Engliſh.
2. There is paid 15000 Okes of Honey.
3. Nine thouſand Okes of Wax.

4. To the Prime Vizier ten Purſes of Mony, or 5000 Dollars, and a Veſt of Sables.

5. To the Tefterdar, or Lord Treaſurer, one Purſe of Mony, or 50 Dollars, and a Veſt of Sables.

6. To the Kuſlir Aga, or chief Eunuch of the Women 12000 Aſpers.

7. To the Vizier's Kahija or Steward 500 Dollars, and a Veſt of Sables.

The other Charges and Value ſet on this Province, when triennially ſold, is no leſs than that of Moldavia; the Method and Art uſed for extorting Mony from thence are the ſame, the Oppreſſion in every point equal, unleſs the remembrance of the extravagant diſorder of Matthew the Vayvod ſtill kept in mind, emboldens the Turk, with more confident Pretences, to work more Deſolation and Impoveriſhment in this Province.

Now lately a Prince was ſetled there by Order of the Grand Signior, in the Year 1664, called Stridia Bei by the Greeks, which ſignifies a Lord that had gained ſome Fortune from ſelling Oyſters and Fiſh; this Perſon ſucceeded Gregorafco the late Prince, who fearing the Anger of the Prime Vizier for returning Home with his Army without Licence, defeated by General Suſa near Lewa, fled for ſafety of his Life into the Dominions of the Emperor. The Turks, who always avenge the Crimes of the Governours on the People, or of the Subjects on the Governours, raiſed the Price of the Principality to a higher value, cauſing Stridia Bei (as I am confidently informed, who was contented to accept it at any Rate) to pay for it 800 Purſes of Mony, or 400000 Dollars; to which being added the Intereſt before-mentioned, the Sum may eaſily be computed that this new Vayvod engulfed himſelf in; and I leave the Reader to imagine with what glad Hearts and Bleſſings the People of that Country went forth to receive their Bankrupt Prince.

Nor is Tranſylvania wholly exempted from the Oppreſſion of the Turk; for after ſeveral Revolutions, from the time of Huniades made Vayvod by Vladiſlaus the fourth King of Hungary, Anno 1450, a great Defender of his Country againſt the Infidels, until the time of Stephen the Seventh, ſirnamed Ragotzki, Patronized by the Turks, Anno 1650. This Principality remained ſometimes at the Devotion and Diſpoſal of the King of Hungary, of Poland, of the Emperor, and ſometimes of the Turk; until by the growing greatneſs of the Ottomans, the Turks became Maſters of the beſt part of this Country. But yet Tranſylvania is more tenderly and more honourably treated than the other two Provinces, their Tribute being much leſs, and their Princes choſen for the moſt part more regularly from the ancient Line, or at leaſt from the honourable Houſes of the Boyars or Nobility, who have an affinity or alliance with the true Blood of the former Vayvods. Their ancient Tribute was only 6000 Zechins yearly, but afterwards were added 9000 more annually, for acknowledgment of certain Caſtles which Ragotzki had taken from Poland, which the Turk demanded to have reſigned into his poſſeſſion, were for that Sum redeemed, and ſtill detained in the Hands of the Tranſylvanians; over and above which they only pay 300 Dollars and two Silver Bowls to the ſeven Viziers of the Bench: And this is all the acknowledgment they make to the Turk, who demonſtrates more reſpect always to this Prince and his Meſſages, than thoſe of the Neighbour Provinces, by reaſon that that Country is not totally in his Power (certain ſtrong Fortreſſes being in the hand of the Emperor of Germany) for whoſe ſake this People is more gently dealt with, leſt too much ſeverity ſhould occaſion them to revolt; and this conſideration induced the Turks to treat modeſtly with Michael Apaſi the Prince of this Country in the late Wars in Hungary, by truſting much to his Conduct, by uſing him like an honourable Confederate, by permitting him freely to poſſeſs Zekelhyd after its voluntary Surrender in a Mutiny, without the controllment or ſuperintendency of a Turk as his Superiour; and for his farther encouragement, gave out, that when the Sultan had totally ſubdued Hungary, thoſe parts which were not ſubject to Paſhaws, ſhould be annexed to his Dominions, and he honoured with the Title of King of Hungary.

Theſe Princes of the three foregoing Provinces, are farther obliged to ſerve the Grand Signior in his Wars, whenſoever ſummoned thereto; but with what number, and in what manner, we reſerve for its due place in the Treatiſe of the Turks Militia and Auxiliaries.

The City and ſmall Dominion of Raguſi, is alſo another Tributary to the Turk; which is a petty Common-Wealth, not vouchſafed the Title of a Republick, neither by the Venetians, nor the Pope, and only ſtyled la Communità di Raguſi, which is a Town in Dalmatia, commanding over a narrow and barren Territory of a few Villages, which for the ſpace of 150 miles extends it ſelf along the Sea Coaſt, and ſome little Iſlands of no great conſideration: It was anciently called Epidaurus (of which name there were two other Cities in Peloponneſus) but that being razed by the Goths, the Inhabitants after their departure rebuilt again this City of Raguſi, giving it a new Name, as well as a new Foundation. The Government of it, in the nature of a Common-Wealth, is more ancient than that of Venice, having preſerved it ſelf more by Art and Submiſſion to ſome powerful Protector, than to its own Force; which cauſed them to court the Friendſhip of the Turk, before he was Maſter of any part of Europe; and as their Records report, it was upon the Advice of a Holy Nun, eſteemed a great Saint amongſt them, who propheſying of the future greatneſs of the Turkiſh Empire, aſſured them, That the only Means to preſerve, for many Ages, their Common-Wealth free and happy, was, to ſubmit themſelves to one of the moſt proſperous of Princes, to whoſe Dominion the beſt part of the World ſhould be ſubdued. Whereupon two Ambaſſadors were diſpatched to the City of Pruſa, (then the Regal Seat, before the utter ruin of the Grecian Empire) with Preſents to the Sultan Orchanes, deſiring to become his Tributaries; and in conſideration thereof to ſtrengthen their weak Common-Wealth with aſſiſtance, under the ſhadow of his prevalent Protection. There is no doubt, but the Sultan then received them the more courteouſly, and promiſed the maintenance of a former League, by how much the diſtance they were at as yet, gave them the leſs cauſe to fear his Arms; wherefore the Tribute being agreed on, of Twelve thouſand and five hundred Zechins yearly, they were returned Home with all demonſtrations of Courteſy, and aſſurances of Defence: Orchanes entred into Articles with them, beſtowed on them a Grant of all the Immunities and Priviledges they deſired, the which he ſigned with the form of his whole hand wetted in Ink, and clapped on the Paper, which was all the Firm and Seal in thoſe days, and is now reverenced amongſt the Turks with the ſame eſteem, as the Jews do the Tables of Moſes, or we the moſt Sacred and Holy Reliques; ever ſince that time this Tribute hath yearly continued, and been brought always in the month of July by two Ambaſſadors, who reſide at the Turkiſh Court for the ſpace of a Year, the former returning Home; theſe are relieved at the ſame Seaſon of the following Year, by the acceſſion of two others with the like Tribute; which with the Preſents they alſo bring to the Prime Vizier, chief Eunuch of the Women, the Queen-Mother and other Sultans, with the Charges and Expences of the Embaſſy, is computed to amount yearly to the Sum of twenty thouſand Zechins.

They were in Times paſt, before the War between the Republick of Venice and the Turk, very Poor, and put to hard Shifts and Arts to raiſe the Turkiſh Tribute; but this War hath opened their Scale, and made it the Port for tranſmitting the Manufactures of Venice, and all Italy into Turkey, which yields them ſuch conſiderable Cuſtoms, as thereby their Tribute is ſupplied with Advance, and other Neceſſities provided for: So that now the old Ornaments of the Ambaſſadors, as their black Velvet Bonnets, and Gowns of Crimſon Satten, lined heretofore with Martins Fur, but now with Sables, are not laid up in the common Wardrobe for the Ambaſſadors of the ſucceeding Year, but a new Equipage and Accoutrements are yearly ſupplied at the common Charge: and thus they paſs honeſtly and in good eſteem at the Ottoman Court, being called the Dowbrai Vendick by the Turks, or the Good Venetian.

This petty Republick hath always ſupported it ſelf by ſubmiſſion, and addreſſes for Favour and Defence to divers powerful Princes, courting the Favour of every one, never offering Injuries, and when they receive them, patiently ſupport them; which is the cauſe the Italians call them le ſette Bandiere, or the ſeven Bannerers, ſignifying that for their Being and Maintenance of the name of a free Republick, they are contented to become Slaves to all parts of the World. And it is obſervable on what a ſtrange form of jealous Policy their Government is founded; for their chief Officer, who is in imitation of their Doge at Venice, is changed every month, others weekly; and the Governour of the principal Caſtle of the City, is but of 24 hours continuance; every night one is nominated by the Senate for Governor, who is without any Preparation or Ceremony taken up as he walks the Streets, having a Handkerchief thrown over his Face, is led away blindfold to the Caſtle, ſo that none can diſcover who it is that commands that Night; and by that means all poſſibility of Conſpiracy or Combination of betraying the Town, prevented.

Theſe People, in former Times, were great Traders into the Weſtern Parts of the World; and it is ſaid, that thoſe vaſt Caracks called Argoſies, which are ſo much famed for the vaſtneſs of their Burthen and Bulk, were corruptly ſo denominated from Ragoſies, and from the Name of this City, whoſe Port is rather forced by Art and Induſtry, than framed by Nature.

The Tributaries of Georgia and Mengrelia.

Some of the Provinces alſo of Georgia, formerly Iberia, but now ſuppoſed to be called from St. George the Cappadocian Martyr, and the poor Country of Mengrelia, are alſo Tributaries to the Turk, who every three Years ſend Meſſengers with their Sacrifice to the Grand Siginior of ſeven young Boys, and as many Virgins a-piece, beſides other Slaves, for Preſents to great Men; this People chuſe rather this ſort of Tribute than any other, becauſe Cuſtom hath introduced a forwardneſs in the Parents, without remorſe, to ſell their Children, and to account Slavery a Preferment, and the miſeries of Servitude a better Condition than Poverty with Freedom. Of the whole retinue which theſe Beggarly Ambaſſadors bring with them, (for ſo the Turks called them) being about ſeventy or eighty Perſons, a crue of miſerable People are all ſet to ſale, to the very Secretary and Steward, to defray the Charge of the Embaſſy, and bring back ſome Revenue to the Publick Stock; ſo that the Ambaſſadors return without their Pomp, reſerving only the Interpreter as a neceſſary Attendant to their Voyage home.

The Emperor of Germany may alſo not improperly be termed one of the Tributaries to the Ottoman Empire, (whom for Honour's ſake we mention in the laſt place in ſo ungrateful an Office) being obliged, according to the Articles made with Solyman the Magnificent, to pay a yearly Tribute of 3000 Hungars; but it was only paid the firſt two Years after the concluſion of the Peace; afterwards it was excuſed by the Germans, and diſſembled by the Turks; until taking a reſolution to make a War on Hungary, made that one Ground and Occaſion of the Breach: for upon the Truce made for eight Years, between Sultan Solyman, and the Emperor Ferdinand, as Augerius Busbeck reports in thoſe Capitulations, that the Tribute is made the Foundation of the Accord. Cujus concordiæ, pacis ac confœderationis hæ conditiones ſunto primò, ut tua dilectio quotannis ad aulam noſtram prò arra induciarum 30000 Hungaricos Ducatos mittere teneatur, una cum reſiduo, quod nobis proxime præterlapſum biennium reſervetur.

CHAP. XV.

The Deſolation and Ruin which the Turks make of their own Countries in Aſia, and the Parts moſt remote from the Imperial Seat, eſteemed one cauſe of the conſervation of their Empire.

THIS Poſition will appear a Paradox at firſt ſight to moſt Men who have read and conſider'd the Roman Conqueſt, whoſe Juriſdiction and Dominions were far larger than this preſent Empire; and yet we do not find that they ſo ſtudiouſly endeavoured to diſpeople, and lay waſte the Nations they ſubdued, but rather encouraged induſtry in Plantations, gave Privileges to Cities meanly ſtored, invited People to inhabit them, endeavoured to improve Countries rude and uncultivated, with good Husbandry, and Maritime Towns with Traffick and Commerce; made Citizens of their Confederates, and conferred on their conquered Subjects oftentimes greater Benefits than they could expect or hope for under their true and natural Princes; and certainly the Romans thrived, and were richer and more powerful by their Policy; and therefore why the Turk might not proceed in the ſame manner, and yet with the ſame advantage, is worth our conſideration.

For the Solution of which Difficulty, it will be neceſſary to conſider, that theſe two Empires being compared, there will be found a vaſt difference in the Original, Foundation, Progreſs and and Maxims each of other. For the Romans built their City in Peace, made Laws, by which the Arbitrary Will of the Prince was corrected; and afterward, as their Arms ſucceeded, and their Dominions were extended, they accommodated themſelves often to preſent Neceſſities and Humours, and Conſtitutions of the People they had conquered, and accordingly made Proviſion, and uſed proper Arts to keep them in Obedience; and next, by their Generoſity and Wiſdom, won thoſe Nations to admire and imitate their Vertues, and to be contented in their Subjection.

But the Turks have but one ſole Means to maintain their Countries, which is the ſame by which they were gained, and that is the cruelty of the Sword in the moſt rigorous way of execution, by Killing, Conſuming, and laying deſolate the Countries, and tranſplanting unto parts where they are neareſt under the Command and Age of a Governor; being wholly deſtitute and ignorant of other refined Arts, which more civilized Nations have in part made to ſerve in the place of Violence. And yet the Turks made this courſe alone anſwer to all the Intents and Ends of their Government.

For the Subjects of this Empire being governed better by Tyranny than Gentleneſs, it is neceſſary, that courſes ſhould be taken, whereby theſe People may remain more within compaſs and reach of Authority; which they would hardly be, were every part of this Empire ſo well inhabited to afford entertainment within the Fortifications of its vaſt Mountains and Woods, to the many unquiet and diſcontented Spirits that live in it. And this may be one cauſe, that ſo rarely Rebellions ariſe amongſt the Turks, though in the remoteſt parts of Aſia; and when they do, are eaſily ſuppreſſed. This alſo is one Cauſe, why great Men ſo eaſily reſign themſelves up to the Will of the Grand Signior to Puniſhment and Death, whether the Sentence be according to Law, or only Arbitrary: This is the reaſon that Fugitives and Homicides cannot eſcape; for having no place for flight, neither the inhabited Cities, which are immediately under the Eye of a vigilant Commander, will afford them refuge, nor can the deſolate Countries entertain them; and Chriſtendom is ſo abhorred by them, that they will never take it for their Sanctuary. And thus deprived of all means of Safety, they wholly attend to pleaſe and ſerve their Great Maſter, in whoſe Favour and Hands alone is the Reward and Puniſhment.

Another Advantage, and that not inconſiderable, that this manner of diſpeopling the Country brings to this Empire, is the difficulty an Enemy would find in their March, ſhould they with a Land Army attempt to penetrate far into the Country; for without great quantities of Proviſion they could not poſſibly be ſuſtained; from the Country none can be expected; what little it affords, the Inhabitants will conceal or carry away, and leave all Places as naked and barren of Food for Man as the Sea it ſelf.

And though it is known often, that in Aſia the Troops of ſome diſcontented Bei or Aga, to the number of three or four hundred Men, in the Summer-time, having their retirements in the Woods and Mountains, aſſault Caravans, and rob all Paſſengers from whom there is any hope of Booty; yet in the Winter they are diſperſed, becauſe they have no Quarters againſt the Weather, nor Proviſions for humane Suſtenance, every one ſhifting for himſelf in ſome place where his Condition is the leaſt known or ſuſpected.

And it may not be here from our Purpoſe to admoniſh the Reader, that as the Turks account it one good part of their Policy, to lay a conſiderable part of their Empire deſolate; ſo on the contrary, they obſerve in their new Conqueſts to fortify, ſtrengthen and confirm, what they have gained, by numbers of People, and new Colonies of their own; and when they have reduced any conſiderable Country to their ſubjection, they commonly are inclined to make Peace with that Prince from whom they have won it, ſo as to have time to ſettle and ſecure their new Conqueſts; for Countries over-run in haſte, are almoſt as ſpeedily again recovered, and are like Tempeſts and ſudden Storms, which are the ſooner diſperſed for being violent. Auguſtus Ceſar, who was a wiſe and judicious Prince, conſidering the extent of the Roman Empire, wrote a Book, ſaith Tacitus, which was publiſhed after his Death, wherein he deſcribed the publick Revenue, the number of Citizens and Confederates liſted for the War, the Fleets, Kingdoms, Provinces, Tributes, Cuſtoms, &c. Addideratque inſuper Conſilium coercendi intra terminos imperii, incertum, (ſaith that Author, Tac. Lib. 1. Annal.) metu, an per invidiam: Which doubtleſs this wiſe Emperor meant of a moderate, and not a precipitate progreſs of their Arms, as well as of preſcribing fixed limits to the ultimate Confines of the Empire, beyond which a Statute ſhould be made of Non plus ultra, notwithſtanding the moſt promiſing Deſigns and Incitements that could offer.

CHAP. XVI.

All Hereditary Succeſſion in Government, as alſo the preſervation of an Ancient Nobility, againſt the Maxims of the Turkiſh Polity.

HAving formerly entred into Diſcourſe of the ſeveral great Officers of State, it will be neceſſary to declare what care the Turks take to preſerve the Body of their Empire free of Faction and Rebellion: for there being many Provinces in the Sultan's Gift, which are remote, rich, and powerful, and ſo adminiſter temptation to the Governors to throw off the Yoke of their Dependance, and make themſelves and their Poſterity Abſolute; great care is taken to prevent this Miſchief by ſeveral Arts, none of which hath been more effectual amongſt the Turks, nor more ſedulouſly practiſed, than the deſtruction of an Ancient Nobility; and admitting no ſucceſſion to Offices of Riches, but only in the direct Ottoman Line, as my Lord Verulam ſays, Eſſay 14. A Monarchy, where there is no Nobility at all, is ever pure and abſolute Tyranny, as that of the Turks; for Nobility attempers Sovereignty, and draws the People ſomewhat aſide from the Line Royal. By which means it comes to paſs, that Paſhaws Education in the Seraglio, (in the manner as we have ſaid before) without knowledg of their Blood or Family, and without the ſupport of powerful Relations or Dependencies, being ſent abroad to Foreign Governments, where they continue but for a ſhort ſeaſon, have no opportunity or poſſibility of advancing any Intereſt of their own above that of the Sultan.

And

And though ſome have, out of an aſpiring and ambitious Spirit, aſſumed a blind Confidence of renting away part of the Empire; as Aſan Aga Paſhaw of Aleppo of late Years, with a ſtrong and powerful Army, marched as far as Scutary, threatning the Imperial City; and the Turkiſh Hiſtory tells us of the revolt of ſeveral Paſhaws; yet all theſe Rebellions have been but of ſhort durance; the Grand Signior never deſigning, by open Force and Dint of Sword, to try his Title to the Empire with his own Slaves, but only by ſome ſecret Plot and Stratagem, getting the Head of the Rebel, he is aſſured of the Victory without other hazard or diſpute of War: for immediately thereupon the whole Army diſperſes, and every one ſhifts by flight to ſave himſelf from the Sultan's Anger. Nor is it imaginable it can be otherwiſe; for theſe Men are but Strangers and Foreigners in the Countries they ruled; have no Relations there, or Kindred, to ſecond or revenge their Quarrel, have no ancient Blood or Poſſeſſions which might entitle their Heirs to the Succeſſion, or out of Affection or Pity, move their Subjects to intereſt themſelves in their behalf; but being cut off themſelves, all falls with them, which affords the ſtrangeſt Spectacle, and Example of Fortune's unconſtancy in the World; for a Turk is never reverenced but for his Office, that is made the ſole Meaſure and Rule of his Greatneſs and Honour, without other conſiderations of Vertue or Nobility. And this is the Reaſon the Turks value not their great Men when taken by the Enemy; for not otherwiſe looking on them than on ordinary Souldiers, they exchange them not with Commanders and Perſons of Quality on the Chriſtians; for the Favour of the Sultan makes the Paſhaw, and not the Noble Blood or Vertues; ſo that the Paſhaw impriſoned, loſing the influence of his Sovereign's Protection and Greatneſs, loſes that alſo which render'd him noble and conſiderable above other Perſons.

There are notwithſtanding ſome Paſhaws of petty Governments, who have obtained to themſelves, through ſome ancient Grace and Privilege from the Sultan, an Hereditary Succeſſion in their Government, and as I can learn, thoſe are only the Paſhaws of Gaza, Cordiſtan, and three Sangiacks formerly mentioned under the Paſhaw of Damaſcus and Matick, and Turcman, under the Paſhaw of Aleppo.

And ſince I have mentioned the Paſhaw of Gaza, it will be but requiſite to recal to mind the Memory of one lately of that place, with much Honour and Reverence, being one whoſe Actions and Devotion to the Chriſtian Worſhip might conclude him not far from the Kingdom of God: for beſides his favourable inclination in general, to all who profeſſed the Chriſtian Faith, he was much devoted to the Religious of Jeruſalem, to whom he often made Preſents, as Proviſions of Rice and other Supplies for their Monaſtery; and when once the Father Guardian of the Holy Sepulchre came to make him a Viſit, with great reſpect and reverence, he met him at a good diſtance from his Houſe, giving him a reception much different from what the Turks uſually beſtow on any, who profeſs other than the Mahometan Faith: and might deſerve the Character that Tacitus gives of L. Voluſius, that he was, Egregia fama, cui Septaginta quinque anni ſpatium vivendi, præcipuæque opes bonis artibus, inoffenſa tot Imperatorum malitia fuit. And yet this good Man having for Seventy five Years lived innocently in that Government, and received the Inheritance from his Father, was by promiſe of fair Treatment allured to the Port; where without farther Proceſs, or any accuſation, his hoary Head was ſevered from his Body, for no other Reaſon, than leſt the Permiſſion and Indulgence to this long continuance and ſucceſſion in Office, ſhould prove too ample a deviation from the Rules of the Turkiſh Polity.

And that all means of attaining ancient Riches, which is the next degree to Nobility, may be cut off, the Turk obſerves this Maxime of Machiavel, à reprimere la inſolenſa di uno, non vie piu ſicuro, emeno ſcandoloſo modo, che preocuparglı quelle vie, per le quale viene quella potenza. And ſo the Grand Signior ſuffers no poſſibility of arriving to ancient Wealth; for as eldeſt Brother to great Men, he makes ſeiſure of the Eſtates of all Paſhaws that die, who having Children, ſuch part is beſtowed on them for their maintenance as the Grand Signior ſhall think fit and requiſite. If a Paſhaw dies that is married to a Soltana, which is the Grand Signior's Siſter, Daughter, or other Relation, her Kabin or Dowry is firſt deducted from the Eſtate (which is commonly 100000 Dollars) and the remainder accrues to the Sultan, as Heir to the reſt; and by this means all ancient Nobility is ſuppreſſed, and you ſhall find the Daughters of ancient Greek Houſes eſpouſed to Shepherds and Carters, and the ancient Reliques of the Noble Families of Catacuzeno and Paleologi, living more contemptuouſly at Conſtantinople, than ever Dionyſius did at Corinth.

But not only in Paſhaws and great Men is care taken to clip their Wings, which may hinder them from ſoaring too high, but alſo in the Ottoman Family it ſelf greater ſeverity and ſtrictneſs is exerciſed than in others, to keep them from growing great in Offices or Wealth, whereby to have poſſibility of aſpiring to the Supreme Power; and therefore by the Original and Fundamental Laws of the Turks, the Children of a Soltana married to a Paſhaw are not capable of any Office in the Empire, and at moſt cannot riſe higher, than to be in the quality of a Capugiba-ſhee, which is one of the Porters of the Grand Signior's Gate. They that are of this Race never dare vaunt of their Pedigree, it is a contumaciouſneſs and almoſt Treaſon to name it; nor have I learned that there is any Family amongſt the Turks of this Line, of any account or eſteem, but one alone, who is called Ibrahim Hun Ogleri, or the Off-ſpring of Sultan Ibrahim, their Father being a Son of the Grand Signior's Siſter, and married to a Sultana (and are ſaid to be of the Race of the Tartars) ſo that proceeding by the Womens ſide only, the leſs notice is taken of their Blood: their Rent or Revenue is yearly about 70000 Dollars, Quibus magna opes, innocenter parta, & modeſte habita, which they manage with prudence and diſcretion, live honourably without Oſtentation, ſeek no Office, or intermeddle in the Affairs of State; by which means they hitherto have preſerved themſelves from envy and ſuſpicion in the revolutions of the Turkiſh Government.

The Grand Signior, many times, when he fears the Greatneſs of any Paſhaw, under colour and pretence of Honour, prefers him to the Marriage of his Siſter, or ſome other of his Feminine Kindred; by which means, inſtead of increaſing Power and Glory, he becomes the miſerableſt Slave in the World, to the Tyranny and Pride of an inſulting Woman: For, firſt, he cannot refuſe the Honour, leſt he ſhould ſeem to neglect and contemn the Sultan's Favour; then before the Eſpouſals, he muſt reſolve to both conſtant to Her alone, and not ſuffer his Affections to wander on other Wives, Slaves, or Diſtractions of his Love: If he hath a Wife whom he loves, whoſe long Converſation and Children ſhe hath brought him, have endeared his Affections too far to be forgotten; he muſt yet baniſh Her and all other Relations from his Home, to entertain the embraces of his unknown Sultana. Before the Eſpouſals, what Mony, Jewels or rich Furs ſhe ſends for, he muſt, with complement and chearfulneſs, preſent, which is called Aghirlick; beſides this, he makes her a Dowry called Kabin, of as much as Friends that make the Match can agree; when the Kabin is concluded and paſſed before the Juſtice in form or nature of a Recogniſance; the Bridegroom is conducted to the Chamber of his Bride by a Black Eunuch, at whoſe entrance the cuſtome is, for the Sultana to draw her Dagger, and imperiouſly to demand the reaſon of his bold Acceſs, which he with much ſubmiſſion replies to, and ſhews the Emmeri Podeſhaw, or the Imperial Firm for his Marriage; the Sultana then ariſes, and with more kindneſs, admits him to nearer familiarity. The Eunuch takes up his Slippers and lays them over the Door, (which is a ſign of his good Reception) then he bows with all reverence before her to the ground, and retires a few paces back, making ſome brief Oration to her full of Complement and Admiration of her Worth and Honour; and remaining afterwards a while ſilent, in an humble poſture, bowing forward with his hands before him, until the Sultana commands him to bring her Water, which he readily obeys, taking a Pot of Water provided for that purpoſe, and kneeling before her, delivers it to her hand; then ſhe takes off her red Veil from before her Face, embroidered with Gold and Silver Flowers, and ſo drinks; in the mean time her Serving-maids bring in a low Table, on which are ſet a pair of Pigeons roaſted, and a Plate of Sugar-candy; the Bridegroom then invites his coy Spouſe to the Collation, which ſhe refuſes, until other Preſents are brought her, which lie prepared in the outward Room; with which her Modeſty being overcome, and her Stomach brought down, ſhe is perſwaded to the Table, and ſitting down, receives a Leg of a Pigeon from the hand of her Bridegroom; taſtes a little, and then puts a piece of Sugar-candy into his Mouth; and ſo riſing up, returns to her place. All the Attendants then retire, and leave the Bridegroom alone with his Soltana for the ſpace of an hour to court her ſingly; that time being paſt, the Muſick ſounding, he is invited forth by his Friends to an outward Room where having paſt moſt of the Night with Songs and Sports, at the approach of the Morning, the Soltana weary of her paſtime, retires to her Bed, which is richly adorned and perfumed, fit to entertain Nuptial Joys: The Bridegroom adviſed hereof by the nod of the Eunuch, creeps ſilently into the Bride-chamber, where ſtripping himſelf of his upper Garments, he kneels a-while at the feet of the Bed, and then by little and little turning up the Cloaths, gently rubs her feet with his hand, and kiſſing of them, aſcends higher to the embraces of his Spouſe, which ſhe willingly admits him to, and wiſhes her ſelf and him a happy Bedding: in the morning betimes the Bridegroom is called by his Friends to the Bath; at whoſe call ariſing, he is preſented by the Bride with all ſorts of Linen to be uſed in Bathing. After theſe Ceremonies are paſt, they are better acquainted, yet in publick ſhe keeps him at a diſtance, wears her Haniarre or Dagger by her ſide, in token of her Superiority; and ſo frequently commands Gifts and Riches from him, until ſhe hath exhauſted him to the bottom of all his Wealth.

Nor is this eſteemed ſufficient to mortify theſe poor Slaves by Womens Tyranny, but they are always put forward upon deſperate attempts, as lately Iſhmael Paſhaw, who was killed paſſing the River Raab, in the overthrow given the Turks by the Emperor's Forces under Montecuculi: and others I could name in like manner; leſt the honour of their Marriage in the Royal Family, without the croſſes and mortifications which attend it, ſhould puff them up with the ambition and proud thought, which is not lawful for them to imagine.

The reaſon why Ahmet Paſha late Vizier, ſucceeded his Father Kuperlee in the Government.

But it may well be objected how it came to paſs that the preſent Prime Vizier, called Ahmet, ſhould ſucced his Father Kuperlee in the Government of the Empire. 'Tis true, it was a ſtrange deviation from the general Rule of their Policy, and perhaps ſuch a Preſident as may never hereafter be brought into Example; but Accidents concur oftentimes to the Fortune of ſome Men without Order or Reaſon; and yet Kuperlee the Father, had ſo well deſerved of the Sultan, and his whole Dominions, for having by his own Wiſdom and Reſolution ſaved the Empire from being rent in pieces by the Faction and ambition of ſome aſpiring Perſons, and by the Blood of thouſands of Mutinous and Rebellious Heads, had cemented and made firm the Throne of his Maſter, that no Honour could be thought ſufficient to be paid to his Ghoſt, unleſs it were the ſucceſſion of his Son in his place; which the more unuſual and irregular it was eſteemed, the greater Glory it was to that Family; and herein alſo this ſubtile Fox plaid his Maſter-piece, by repreſenting the ſtate of Affairs to remain in that poſture, as was neceſſary to be carried on with the ſame Method as begun; which he had entruſted to the knowledg of his Son; and this was the Reaſon why this young Vizier then ſcarce arrived to thirty Years, and but an ordinary Kadee or Juſtice of the Law, was both, as to his Age and Relation, thus irregularly preferred to the Office of Vizier.

Nor hath Hereditary Succeſſion, nor long continuance in Authority, been only avoided amongſt the Turks; but we find that the Romans often changed their Governors, and never ſuffered them to continue long in one Province. And ſo the King of Spain doth at preſent in the Government of Flanders, the Indies, the Kingdom of Naples, and other parts, the ſpace of three Years being commonly allotted them for their Reſidence.

But amongſt the Turks there is no fixed term of Time appointed to their Paſhaws, but only they remain as Tenants at Will of the Grand Signior; who, according to his Pleaſure, and as he ſees Reaſon, cuts them off, recalls them, or tranſplants them to another Province; only the Paſhaw of Grand Cairo in Egypt, hath a certain ſpace of three Years appointed, to which his Government is confined; and there may be very good reaſon for it, for it being a place of great Truſt, Riches, and Power, in which Paſhaws grow in a ſhort time vaſtly wealthy, it cannot be wiſdom to continue them long there; the Revenue of which we have had occaſion already to diſcourſe of. And therefore the Grand Signior doth often, not only abbreviate their time, but alſo at their return ſhares in the beſt part of the Prizes they have made.

The

The Romans had that Opinion of the Wealth and Power of Egypt, that Auguſtus made a Decree, and held it inter alia dominationis arcana, that it ſhould not be lawful for any, without particular Licence to enter Egypt, and expreſly forbids Senators and Gentlemen of Rome, without Order from the Prince, or for the Affairs of State, to viſit thoſe Parts. And Tacitus gives this reaſon for it; Ne fama urgeret Italiam quiſquis eam Provinciam, cluſtraque terra ac maris, quamvis levi præſidio adverſum ingentes exercitus inſedisſet. Lib. 1.

Another Danger to the Empire, which the Turks ſeduloufly avoid, beſides Hereditary Succeſſion in Office, is Rivalry among Princes of the Blood, during the time of their Father's Life; for afterwards the Succeſſor takes care to ſecure his Brethren beyond poſſibility of competition. The Story of Selymus and Bajazet, the Sons of Solyman the Magnificent, is a perfect Experiment of the Feud and Diſſention which is bred in the Deſires of Barbarous Princes; ſo that when they arrive to any maturity of Age, they are always tranſplanted to different Seraglio's Abroad, where they keep their Courts diſtinct, and cannot enter within the Walls Conſtantinople, during the Life of their Father; leſt by interview with each other, their Minds ſhould be moved with Emulation, or inhabiting in the Imperial City, ſhould be provided with Means before their Time to attempt the Throne of their Father. And for this Reaſon the Grand Signior hath ſcarce performed the Ceremonies of his Inauguration, before he hath ſeaſoned his entrance to his Throne with the Blood of his Brothers; which barbarous cuſtom began in the time of Sultan Bajazet.

But if the Brothers are but few, and the Grand Signior of a diſpoſition more naturally inclined to Clemency than Cruelty, he ſecures them in the Seraglio, under the tuition of Maſters, and care of a faithful Guard; differing nothing from Impriſonment, but in the Name, prohibiting them the Socity and Converſation of all: and thus the two Brothers of this preſent Sultan Mahomet, live in as much obſcurity and forgetfulneſs, as if they had never been born, or having paſt a private Life, were departed to the place where all things were forgotten.

It is no great digreſſion from our purpoſe here, to take notice of two ſorts of Governments purely popular; the one hath already had its Period, and the other is of late beginning, and at preſent flouriſhes; and thoſe are the Common-Wealths of Egypt under the Mamalukes, and the other in our days in the Dominions of Algier: The firſt not only depoſed the whole Family of their Prince from having Power in the Government, and from all Succeſſion, but alſo made it an immutable Law, that the Sons of the Mamalukes might ſucceed their Father in the Inheritance of their Eſtates, as Lands and Goods, but could not aſſume the Title or Government of a Mamaluke; nor not only ſo, but that all that were born in the Mahometan or Jewiſh Faith, were uncapable, ipſo facto, of the Order of a Mamaluke; and only ſuch preferred thereunto, who had been Sons of Chriſtians, and become Slaves, inſtructed and educated in the Mahometan Superſtition; or elſe Men of mature Age, who having abjured God and their Country, were come thither to ſeek Preferment in that Kingdom of Darkneſs. And this ſlaviſh and ſtrange Conſtitution of Government, flouriſhed for the ſpace of two hundred ſixty ſeven Years, until overthrown in the Year of our Lord 1517, by the Arms of Selimus that victorious Emperor of the Turks.

The perſent Government of Algier is but of a few Years; the firſt Original of which was by one Barbaroſe a famous Pyrat, and afterwards by the acceſſion of great quantities of Turks out of the Levant, the Protection of the Grand Signior was craved, and a Paſha received from the Port; but now the Paſha remains without any Power: the whole Government being tranſferred to the Scum of the People, who fearing leſt the Power ſhould at laſt become ſubject to the Natives, have made it a Law, that no Sons of a Turk born in that Country, whom they call Cololies, can be capable of an Office in their Common-Wealth, but only ſuch, who having been born Chriſtians, are perverted to the Turkiſh Sect, or elſe ſuch who come from parts of the Turkiſh Dominions, to be Members of their Republick.

And thus much ſhall ſerve to have declared how much the Turks are jealous of all Succeſſions in Office and Authority, which may prejudice the Abſolute Monarchy of their great Sultan.

CHAP. XVII.

The frequent Exchange of Officers, viz. the ſetting up of one, and degrading another, a Rule always practiſed as wholſome, and conducing to the Welfare of the Turkiſh State.

HE that is an Eye-witneſs, and ſtrict obſerver of the various changes in Greatneſs, Honours, and Riches of the Turks, hath a lively Emblem of Contemplation before him, of the unconſtancy and mutability of Humane Affairs; Fortune ſo ſtrangely ſports with his People, that a Comedy or Tragedy on the Stage, with all its Scenes, is ſcarce ſooner opened and ended, than the Fate of divers Great Men, who in the Day-time being exalted to high Sublimity, by the powerful Rays of the Sultan's Favour, in the Night fall, or vaniſh like a Meteor.

The Reaſon hereof, if duly conſidered, may be of great uſe as Things ſtand here, that is, to the Power of the Grand Signior; for in this Conſtitution, the Health and Benefit of the Emperor is conſulted, before the Welfare of the People: And the Power of the Emperor is in no Action more exerciſed and evidenced, than by withdrawing and conferring his Favours; for by theſe Means, having many whom he hath educated and prepared for Offices, and ſtand Candidates to receive them, his Power would ſeem to be at a Nonplus, and appear like an inconſiderable Father, who had ſpent more Mony in the breeding of his Sons, than the Patrimony amounted to he had to beſtow upon them: and therefore the Grand Signior, to imitate the Sun, benights ſome part of the World to enlighten others, that ſo, by a general influence and communication of his Beams, he may be acknowledged the common Parent of them all.

And this Courſe doth not evidence the Power of the Grand Signior, but likewiſe encreaſes it; for none are advanced in theſe times to Office, but pay the Grand Signior vaſt Sums of Mony for it, according to the Riches and Expectations of Profit from the Charge; ſome pay, as the Paſhaws of Grand Cairo and Babylon, three or four hundred thouſand Dollars upon paſſing the Commiſſion; others one, others two hundred thouſand, ſome fifty thouſand, as their Places are more or leſs conſiderable: and this Mony is moſt commonly taken up at Intereſt, at forty or fifty per Cent. for the Year, and ſometimes at double, when they are conſtrained to become Debtors to the Covetous Eunuchs of the Seraglio; ſo that every one, upon his firſt entrance into Office, looks on himſelf (as indeed he is) greatly indebted and obliged, by Juſtice or Injuſtice, right or wrong, ſpeedily to disburthen himſelf of the Debts, and improve his own Principal in the World; and this Deſign muſt not be long in performance, leſt the haſty Edict overtake him before his Work is done, and call him to account for the improvement of his Talent.

Think then (taking all Circumſtances together of the covetous Diſpoſition of a Turk, the cruelty and narrowneſs of Soul in thoſe Men commonly that are born and educated in want) what Oppreſſion, what Rapine and Violence muſt be exerciſed to ſatisfy the Appetite of theſe Men, who come famiſhed with immenſe Deſires, and ſtrange Conſiderations to ſatisfy! Diu fordidus repente dives, mutationem fortunæ male regit, accenſis egeſtate longa cupidinibus immoderatus. Tac. Lib. 1. Hiſt. So that Juſtice in its common courſe is ſet to ſale; and it is very rare, when any Law-Suit is in Hand, but Bargains are made for the Sentence, and he hath moſt Right who hath moſt Mony to make him rectus in Curia, and advance his Cauſe. And it is the common courſe for both Parties at difference, before they appear together in preſence of the Judg, to apply themſelves ſingly to him, and try whoſe Donative and Preſent hath the moſt in it of temptation; and it is no wonder if corrupt Men exerciſe this kind of Trade in Trafficking with Juſtice; for having before bought the Office, of conſequence they muſt ſell the Truth.

Vendere jure poteſt, emerat ille prius.

Add hereunto a ſtrange kind of Facility in the Turks, for a Trifle or ſmall Hire to give falſe Witneſs in any caſe, eſpecially, and that with a word, when the Controverſy happens between a Chriſtian and a Turk, and then the Pretence is for the Muſſelmanleck, as they call it; the Cauſe is Religious, hallows all Falſeneſs and forgery in the Teſtimony; ſo that I believe in no part of the World can Juſtice run more out of the Current and Stream than in Turkey, where ſuch Maxims and Conſiderations corrupt both the Judg and Witneſſes. Turcæ magna pietatis loco ducunt dicere falſum teſtimonium adverſus hominem Chriſtianum; non expectant ut rogentur; injuſſi adſunt ſeque ultro ingerunt.

Busbeq; Ep. 4. de Leg. Tur.

This Conſideration and Practice, made an Engliſh Ambaſſador, upon renewing the Capitulations, to inſert an Article of Caution againſt the Teſtimony of Turks, as never to be admitted nor pleaded in any Court of Turkiſh Juſtice, againſt the Engliſh Intereſt; and nothing to be admitted as evidence in that Caſe, but only a Hoget, which is the Nature of a Recognizance made before a Judg, or a Bill or Writing under the Hand of him on whom the Demand is made; which Article, as it was very adviſedly, and with great Prudence and Wiſdom obtained, ſo it hath proved of admirable Conſequence and Security to the Trafique, and Merchants Eſtates; which before being liable to the Forgeries and falſe Pretences of every diſſolute Turk, hath now this Point as a Defence and Fortification, by which falſe Pretences and Suits for conſiderable Sums of Mony, and Matters of great value have been blown away, and decided with great Facility and little Expence.

Turkiſh Hiſtory in the Reign of Bajazet the fourth King of the Turks.

In the time of Bajazet, the fourth King of the Turks, the Courts of Juſtice were in like manner corrupted, as at preſent; for reformation of which, the Prince reſolved to execute a great Number of the Lawyers, until it was pleaſantly repreſented by his Jeſter, (to whom, between Jeſt and Earneſt, he had given liberty to ſpeak the Truth, which ſoberer Men durſt not) that all the cauſe of Bribery and Corruption in the Judges, proceeded for want of Stipends and neceſſary Maintenance: Whereupon Bajazet growing cooler, and ſenſible of the Cauſe of that Evil, applied a Remedy, by granting their Pardon, allowing them Salaries and Stipends, with additional Fees of twenty Aſpers in all Cauſes exceeding a Thouſand; and twelve Aſpers for every Writing and Inſtrument out of Court.

And in the Times of the beſt Emperors, when Vertue and Deſerts were conſidered, and the Empire flouriſhed and encreaſed, Men had Offices conferred for their Merits, and good Services were rewarded freely and with bounty, without Sums of Mony, and Payments, to be a foil to the luſtre of their better Parts: But now it is quite contrary, and all Matters run out of courſe; a manifeſt Token, in my Opinion, of the declenſion and decay of the Ottoman Empire, as Livy ſaith, Omnia proſpera ſequentibus Deos, adverſa autem ſpernentibus. Howſoever in part this ſerves the great End of the Empire, for Paſhaws and great Men, having a kind of neceſſity upon them to oppreſs their Subjects, the People thereby loſe their Courages; and by continual Taxes and Seiſures on what they gain, Poverty ſubdues their Spirits, and makes them more patiently ſuffer all kinds of Injuſtice and Violence that can be offered them, without thoughts or motion to Rebellion: And ſo the Lord Verulam ſays in his Eſſays, That it is Impoſſible for a People over-laden with Taxes, ever to become Martial or Valiant; for no Nation can be the Lion's Whelp, and the Aſs between Burthens: By which means the Turk preſerves ſo many different ſort of People, as he hath conquered, in due Obedience, uſing no other help than a ſevere hand joined to all kind of Oppreſſion: but ſuch as are Turks, and bear any Name of Office or Degree in the Service of the Empire, feel but part of this Oppreſſion, and live with all freedom, having their Spirits raiſed by a Licence, they attain to inſult over others that dare not reſiſt them. Eſſay 29.

But the Iſſue and Concluſion of the Spoils theſe great Men make on Subjects, is very remarkable; for as if God were pleaſed to evidence his juſt Puniſhment more evidently and plainly here, than in other Sins; ſcarce any of all thoſe Paſhaws who have made haſte to be Rich, have eſcaped the Grand Signior's Hands, but he either deveſts them of all, or will ſhare the beſt part of the Prey with them. Amongſt which I have obſerved none paſſes ſo hardly as the Paſhaws of Grand Cairo, becauſe it is the richeſt and moſt powerful of all the Governments of this Empire; and ſo either in his Journey home, or after his return, he loſes his Life by publick Command, or at leaſt is rifled of his Goods as ill got, which are condemned to to the Grand Signior's Treaſury: And it is ſtrange to ſee, yet with what heat theſe Men labour to amaſs Riches, which they know, by often Experiences, have proved but Collections for their Maſter; and only the Odium and Curſes which the oppreſſed Wretches have vented againſt their Rapine, remain to themſelves; Rebus ſecundis avidi, adverſis autem incauti. Tac. And this is like the Policy that Ceſar Borgia uſed, otherwiſe called Il Duca Valentine, who the better to reduce Romagna, lately ſubdued to Obedience, made one Meſſer Romiro d' Orco his Deputy, a Man of a cruel and tyrannical Diſpoſition, who by Rigour and Force reduced Affairs to the Will and Order of his Prince: And the Work now done, and the People remaining extraordinarily diſcontented, the Duke thought it time to purge the Minds of his People of the ill apprehenſion they had of his Government, by demonſtrating that the former hard uſage proceeded from the bad Inclination of his Miniſter; commanding the ſame Romiro d' Orco, at Ceſanna to be cut in pieces, and expoſed to the publick view of the People, with a piece of Wood, and a bloody Knife by his ſide. This ſaith Machiavil, Lib. del Principe, cap. 7. Fece aquelli popoli in un tempo remanere ſtupidi & ſodiſfatti; and the Turk underſtands well how profitable in the ſame manner it is for the conſtitution of his Eſtate, to uſe evil Inſtruments, who may oppreſs and poll his People, intending afterwards for himſelf the whole Harveſt of their Labours; they remaining with the hatred, whilſt the Prince, under colour of performing Juſtice, procures both Riches and Fame together.

If it be ſuſpected that any great Man intends to make Combuſtion or Mutiny in his Government, or that his Wealth or natural Abilities render him formidable; without farther inquiſition or ſcrutiny, all diſcontent of the Grand Signior is diſſembled, and perhaps an Horſe, a Sword, or Sables Veſt is reported to be preſented, and all fair Treatment is counterfeited, until the Executioner gets the Bow-ſtring about his Neck, and then they care not how rudely they deal with him: juſt like the Birds in Plutarch, who beat the Cuckow, for fear that in time he ſhould become a Hawk.

Lib. 6. Apoth.

And to make more room for the multitude of Officers who crowd for Preferments, and to act the cruel Edicts of the Empire with the leaſt noiſe; times when a great Perſonage is removed from his place of Truſt, and ſent with a new Commiſſion to the Charge, perhaps, of a greater Government; and though he depart from the Regal Seat with all fair demonſtrations of Favour, before he hath advanced three days in his journey, triumphing in the multitude of his Servants, and his late Hopes, the fatal command Overtakes him; and without any Accuſation or Cauſe, other than the Will of the Sultan, he is barbarouſly put to death, and his Body thrown into the Dirt of a foreign and unknown Country, without ſolemnity of Funeral or Monument; that he is no ſooner in the Grave, than his Memory is forgotten. And this methinks is ſomewhat agreeable to the crafty Policy of Tiberius, who ſometimes would commiſſionate Men for Government of Provinces, to whom beforehand he had deſigned not to permit licence to depart the City; Poſtremò eò provectus eſt, ut mandaverit quibuſdam provincias quos egredi urbe non erat paſſurus.

Hence are apparent the Cauſes of the decay of Arts amongſt the Turks, of the neglect, want of care in manuring and cultivating their Lands; why their Houſes and private Buildings are made ſlight, not durable for more than ten or twenty Years; why you find no delightful Orchards and pleaſant Gardens and Plantations; and why in thoſe Countries, where Nature hath contributed ſo much on her part, there are no additional labours of Art to complete all, and turn it to a Paradiſe; for Men knowing no certain Heir, nor who ſhall ſucceed them in their Labours, contrive only for a few Years enjoyment. And moreover, Men are fearful of ſhewing too much oſtentation or magnificence in their Palaces, or ingenuity in the pleaſures of their Gardens, leſt they ſhould bring on them the ſame Fate that Nabal's Vineyard occaſion'd to his Maſter: and therefore Men neglect all application to the Studies of Arts and Sciences, but only ſuch as are neceſſary and conducing to the mere courſe of living; for the very Fear and Crime of being known to be Rich, makes them appear outwardly Poor, and become naturally Stoicks and Philoſophers in all the points of a reſerved and cautious Life. And here I am at a ſtand, and cannot conclude this Chapter without contemplating a while, and pleaſing my ſelf with the thoughts of the Bleſſedneſs, the Happineſs, the liberty of my own Country; where Men, under the protection and ſafe influence of a gratious and the beſt of Princes in the World, enjoy and eat of the Fruit of their own Labour, and purchaſe to themſelves, with ſecurity, Fields and Manors, and dare acknowledg and glory in their Wealth and Pomp, and yet leave the Inheritance to their Poſterity.

CHAP. XVIII.

The ſeveral Arts the Turks uſe to encreaſe their People, is a principal Policy, without which the greatneſs of their Empire cannot continue nor be encreaſed.

THere was never any People that laid Foundations and Deſigns of a great Empire, but firſt thought how to make it populous, and by which means they might beſt ſupply them with People, not only ſufficient for the Sacrifice and Slaughter of the War, but for the Plantation of Colonies, Poſſeſſion and Security of what the Sword hath conquered. We never underſtood how one People alone that was Martial, and by ſucceſſes in War had framed a large Empire, was able, from the mere original of its own Stock, to abound with iſſue of natural Subjects, to bear proportion with the ſtronger Nations; nor how a handful of People, with the greateſt Policy and Courage in the World, was able to embrace a large extent of Dominion and Empire: It is true, that Alexander did with an Army, for the moſt part, compoſed of Macedonians, as it were in a Rant, make a Conqueſt of the beſt part of the Eaſtern World; but this Empire, like a Ship that had much Sail, and no Ballaſt, or a fair Tree over-charged with Boughs too heavy for its Stem, became a Windfall on a ſudden.

The Turks therefore, during the continuance of their Empire, have not been ignorant of this Truth; for no People in the World have ever been more open to receive all ſorts of Nations to them, than they, nor have uſed more Arts to encreaſe the number of thoſe that are called Turks; and it is ſtrange to conſider, that from all parts of the World, ſome of the moſt diſſolute and deſperate in Wickedneſs, ſhould flock to theſe Dominions, to become Members and Profeſſours of the Mahometan Superſtition; in that manner that at preſent, the Blood of the Turks is ſo mixed with that of all ſorts of Languages and Nations, that none of them can derive his Lineage from the ancient Blood of the Saracens.

The Romans, who well knew the benefit of receiving Strangers into their Boſome, called this freedom they gave Jus Civitatis, whereby Foreigners became as lawful Poſſeſſours of Eſtates and Inheritances, and had as much right to the common Priviledges, as any that were born in the Walls of Rome; and this Jus Civitatis was given to whole Families; ſo that, as Sir F. B. ſays well, that the Romans did not over-ſpread the World, but the World it ſelf. The Engliſh call it Naturalization, the French Enfranchiſement, and the Turks call it Becoming a Believer; for they joining with it a point of Religion, not only the Proffers of the Goods of this World, but alſo of Delights in the World to come, make the Allurements and Arguments the more prevalent; and it being an Opinion amongſt them, as over all the World, that it is a Meritorious Work to create Proſelytes, ſcarce any who hath Mony to purchaſe a Slave, but will procure one young and fit for any Impreſſion, whom he may name his Convert, and gain Reputation amongſt his Neighbours of having added to the number of the Faithful. Of all this Number, which yearly are added to the Profeſſors of Mahomet, none can retreat on lower Terms than Death and Martyrdom for Chriſt; which cauſes may whoſe Conſciences, though touched with the ſenſe of the denial of their Saviour; yet having not Grace or Courage to aſſert their Faith on ſo hard a Leſſon, grow deſperate or careleſs, and die in their Sin. This ſort of People become really Turks, and ſome through Cuſtom and their own Luſts, are really perſwaded of the truth of this Profeſſion, and have proved more inveterate and fatal Enemies to Chriſtianity, than the natural Turks; which will appear, if we conſider, that all the Succeſſes they have had, and Exploits they have done at Sea, have been performed by ſuch who have denied the Chriſtian Faith, as namely Chigal, Ogli, and others.

Eſſays.

It was the cuſtom formerly amongſt the Turks, every five Years, to take away the Chriſtians Children, and Educate them in the Mahometan Superſtition; by which means they encreaſed their own People, and diminiſhed and enfeebled the Force of the Chriſtians; but now that cuſtom, in a great part, is grown out of uſe, through the abundance of Greeks, Armenians, Jews, and all Nations where the Iron Rod of the Turks Tyranny extends, who flock in to enjoy the imaginary Honour and Priviledge of a Turk. And indeed it is no wonder to humane Reaſon, that conſiders the Oppreſſion and Contempt that poor Chriſtians are expoſed to, and the Ignorance in their Churches, occaſioned through Poverty in the Clergy, that many ſhould be found who retreat from the Faith; but it is rather a Miracle, and a true verification of thoſe words of Chriſt, That the Gates of Hell ſhall not be able to prevail againſt his Church, that there is conſerved ſtill amidſt ſo much Oppoſition, and in deſpight of all Tyranny and Arts contrived againſt it, an open and publick Profeſſion of the Chriſtian Faith; which next to God's Providence, conſidering the ſtupid Ignorance of the Greek and Armenan Churches, their conſervation of their Faith is not to be attributed to any inſtance more, than to the ſtrict obſervation of the Feaſts and Faſts of their Churches; for having rarely the helps of Catechiſms or Sermons, they learn yet from theſe outward Ceremonies, ſome confuſed Notions and Precepts of Religion, and exerciſe with ſeverity and rigour this ſort of Devotion; when through Cuſtom, Confuſion, and ſcarcity of knowing Guides, all other ſervice is become obſolete and forgotten amongſt them.

The Turks have another extraordinary ſupply of People from the Black Sea, ſent them in by the Tartars, who with their light Bodies of Horſe make incurſions into the Territories of the neighbouring Chriſtians, and carry with them a Booty of whole Cities and Countries of People, moſt of which they ſend to Conſtantinople to be ſold, and is the chief Trade and Commodity of their Country (as we have already diſcourſed.)

It is ſad to ſee what numbers of Saykes, or Turkiſh Veſſels, come ſailing through the Boſphorus, fraighted with poor Chriſtian Captives of both Sexes, and all Ages, carrying on the Maintop a Flag, either as a Note of Triumph, or elſe as a Mark of the Ware and Merchandiſe they carry.

The number of the Slaves brought yearly to Conſtantinople is uncertain; for ſometimes it is more, and ſometimes leſs, according to the Wars and Succeſſes of the Tartars; but a it is apparent in the Regiſters of the Cuſtoms at Conſtantinople only, one Year with another at the leaſt 20000 are yearly imported; amongſt which the greateſt part being Women and Children, with eaſie Perſuaſions, and fair Promiſes become Turks; the Men being ignorant, and generally of the Ruſſian or Moſcovite Nation (who are reported not to be over-devout, or of famed conſtancy and perſeverance in Religion) partly by Menaces and Fear, partly by good word and allurements of Reward, deſpairing of Liberty, and return to their own Country, renounce all Intereſt in the Chriſtian Faith.

Of this ſort of Metal moſt of the Turks are in theſe days compoſed, and by the fecundity of this Generation, the Dominions of this Empire flow; for the Turks of themſelves, though they have the liberty of Polygamy, and freer uſe of divers Women allowed them by their Law, than the ſeverity of Chriſtian Religion doth permit, are yet obſerved to be leſs fruitful in Children, than thoſe who confine themſelves to the chaſt embraces of one Wife. It is true, we have heard how in former Times there have been particular Men amongſt the Turks, that have ſeverally been Fathers to an hundred Sons; but now, through that abominabe Vice of Sodomy, which the Turks pretend to have learned from the Italians, and is now the common and profeſſed ſhame of that People, few fecundious Families are found amongſt them; eſpecially amongſt the Perſons of the greater Quality, who have Means and Time to act and contrive their filthineſs with the moſt deformity. And in this manner the natural uſe of the Women being neglected amongſt them, as St. Paul ſaith, Men burning in luſt one towards another; ſo little is Mankind propagated, that many think, were it not for the abundant ſupplies of Slaves, which daily come from the Black Sea (as before we have declared) conſidering the Summer-ſlaughters of the Plague, and deſtructions of War, the

the Turk would have little cauſe to boaſt of the vaſt Numbers of his People: and that a principal Means to begin the ruine of this Empire, were, to prevent the taking of ſo many Captives, or intercept thoſe numbers of Slaves which are daily tranſported to nouriſh and feed the Body of this great Babylon; by which means, in time, they would not only find a want of Servants, but a decay and ſcarcity of Maſters; ſince as it is before-mentioned, theſe Slaves becoming Turks, are capable of all Priviledges, and being commonly Manumiſed by their Patrons, through the help of Fortune, arrive equally to Preferments with thoſe who are of the ancient Mahometan Race: This is the true Reaſon the Turk can ſpend ſo many People in his Wars, and values not the lives of Ten thouſand Men to win him but a ſpan of Ground, and yet almoſt without any ſenſible diminution of his People; and on the contrary, the invention, of an Inquiſition, and the diſtinction between Chriſtianos vicios, and Nuevos in Spain and Portugal, have cauſed that decay and ſcarcity of People in thoſe Countries, as hath laid the beſt part of thoſe fruitful Soils deſolate, and forced them both to a neceſſity of entertaining a mercenary Soldiery.

It is no ſmall inducement to the vulgar People, who is moſt commonly won with outward Allurements, to become Turks; that when they are ſo, by a white Turbant, or ſuch a particular Note of Honour, they ſhall be diſtinguiſhed from other-like Sects, (all People amongſt the Turks being known by their Heads, of what Religion or Quality they are) and ſo may the better be directed where they may have a priviledge to domineer and injure with the moſt impunity.

If we conſider how delightful the Mode is in England and France, eſpecially to thoſe who are of a vain and gay Humour, and that nothing ſeems handſome or comely, but what is dreſſed in the Faſhion and Air of the Times; we ſhall not wonder, if the ignorant and vain amongſt Chriſtians, born and educated in thoſe Countries, ſhould be catched and entrapt with the fancy and enticement of the Turkiſh Mode, and be contented to deſpoil themſelves of the Garment of Chriſtian Vertues, to aſſume a dreſs more Courtly and pleaſing to the Eyes of the World; for ſo the Britains, and other Nations, after Conquered by the Romans, began to delight themſelves in their Language and Habit, their Banquets and Buildings, which they accounted to be Humanity, and refinement of their Manners; but Tacitus ſaith; Pars ſervitutis erat, a ſignal Symptom of their ſubjection.

De Vita Agric.

And it is worth a wiſe Man's obſervation, how gladly the Greeks and Armenian Chriſtians imitate the Turkiſh Habit, and come as near to it as they dare; and how proud they are, when they are priviledged, upon ſome extraordinary Occaſion to appear without their Chriſtian diſtinction. And thus the Turk makes his very Habit a bait to draw ſome to his Superſtition; Riches to allure the Covetous; Rewards and Hopes, to rule the Ambitious; fears and terrours of Death, the cowardly and timorous; and by all means works on the Diſpoſitions and Humours of Men, to make additions to his Kingdom. Such as adhere to the Chriſtian Faith, the Turk makes no account of, and values no otherwiſe in the place of Subjects, than a Man doth of his Ox or Aſs, merely to carry the Burthens, and to be uſeful and ſervile in ſlaviſh Offices: they are oppreſſed, and are ſubject to all advantages and Pretences; and their Goods and Eſtates gained with Labour, and the Sweat of their Brows, liable to the Rapine of every great Man; they are diſarmed, and never exerciſed in War, by which means they become Effeminate, and leſs dangerous in Rebellion: only the People of Tranſylvania, Moldavia and Walachia, under the conduct of their reſpective Princes, that the Grand Signior ſets over them, ſerve him in their Perſons in the War, and are the firſt thruſt forward in all deſperate Enterpriſes; ſo that the oppreſſion of the poor Chriſtians under the Turk, is worthy our compaſſion, how poor they are become, how their former Wealth is exhauſted, how the fatneſs of their rich Soil is drained, and made barren by poiſonous Suckers; ſo that it is evident that the Turks Deſign is no other, than by improveriſhment and enfeebling the Intereſt of Chriſtianity, to draw Proſelytes and Strength to his own Kingdom.

Wherefore ſome ſort of poor Chriſtians, either actually Subjects to the Turkiſh Tyranny, or Borderers on them, who often feel the miſery of their Incurſions, being fearful of their own conſtancy in the Faith, have contrived ways to preſerve themſelves from any other Profeſſion: wherefore in Mengrelia, the Chriſtians, at the Baptiſm of their Children, make a Croſs on their Hands; and in Servia their cuſtome is to make it on their Foreheads, with the Juice of a certain Herb, the ſtain of which never wears out; ſo that ſome of theſe Nations, who become Renegadoes to the Chriſtian Faith, bear always a Badge and Note of deſignation about them to a Holy Profeſſion, which may ſerve to upbraid their Perfidious deſertion of the Faith; the Croſs on their Forehead appearing for a ſhame and diſcountenance to the White Turbant on their Heads. By which pious Art, many of theſe diſtreſſed Chriſtians have, notwithſtanding fear and deſpair of Liberty, and promiſes of reward, through the apprehenſion of this incongruity between the Croſs and the Banner of Mahomet, preſerved themſelves firm to their firſt Colours.

CHAP. XIX.

The manner of Reception of Foreign Ambaſſadours amongſt the Turks, and the eſteem they have of them.

THere was no Nation in the World ever ſo barbarous, that did not acknowledg the Office of an Ambaſſadour Sacred and Neceſſary.

Sanctum populis per ſæcula nomen.

And Cicero ſaith, Sic enim ſentio jus legatorum cum hominum præſidio munitum, tum etiam divino jure eſſe vallatum; the Alchoran it ſelf calls this Office inviolable; and it is a Turkiſh Canon, Elchi zaval yokgter, Do not hurt an Ambaſſadour; ſo that the Turks do confeſs themſelves obliged by their own Law to Rules of Civilities, Courteous Treatment and Protection of Ambaſſadors.

De Hatiſp. reſponſis.

The greateſt honour they ſhew to any Foreign Miniſter, is to him who comes from the Emperor, becauſe his Confines are contiguous with theirs, and have had occaſion more frequently, than with other Chriſtian Princes, to try the Power of the Imperial Sword.

An

An Ambaſſador coming from the Emperor, as ſoon as he enters the Ottoman Dominions, hath his Charges defrayed by the Sultan, according to the importance of the Buſineſs and Negotiation he is deſigned to, until the time of his return; and a Reſident continuing in ordinary, hath in like manner his conſtant Allowance. As it hath always been a Cuſtom amongſt the Eaſtern Princes to ſend Preſents each to other, as Tokens of Friendſhip and Amity; ſo the Emperor is, by an ancient Cuſtom and Agreement, obliged to accompany his Ambaſſador to this Court with Preſents and Gifts, as Offerings of Peace: and on the contrary, that the Emperor may not remain with the Diſadvantage, the Grand Signior is bound to recompence the Embaſſy with another from himſelf, and adorn it with Preſents of equal value with thoſe that were ſent him.

But Ambaſſadors and Repreſentatives from other Princes, who have their Dominions more remote, and whoſe principal Deſign is eſteemed for the promotion of Trade and Commerce, as the Engliſh, French and Dutch, are always admitted with their Preſents, which the Turk by cuſtom calls his right, and judges not himſelf obliged to return the like, eſteeming his Capitulations and Articles he makes with thoſe Princes, Privileges and Immunities granted their Subjects.

The Ceremonies they uſe at the Audience of every Ambaſſador are acted (as in all parts of the World) moſt to ſet off the Glory of the Empire; and repreſented with ſuch Advantages, as may beſt afford a Theme for an Ambaſſadour's Pen to deſcribe the Riches, Magnificence, and Terror of the Ottoman Power.

The Audience with the Grand Signior (having firſt paſſed a Complement with the Prime Vizier) is commonly contrived on days appointed for paiment of the Janiſaries, which is every three Months; and with that occaſion, the Order and Diſcipline of the Militia, the Mony and Stipends that are iſſued forth, are there expoſed to the obſervation of the publick Miniſter. The Mony is brought into the Divan, and there piled in heaps, where the Ambaſſador is firſt introduced, and ſeated on a Stool covered with Crimſon-velvet, placed near the firſt Vizier, and other Viziers of the Bench: as ſoon as the Mony is paid out to the chief of every Oda or Chamber, who afterwards diſtribute it amongſt their Souldiers, a plentiful Dinner is prepared for the Ambaſſador; who together with the firſt Vizier, and other Viziers of the Bench, and Teſtardar, or Lord Treaſurer, are ſeated at the ſame Table, which is not raiſed as high as the Tables we uſe, but ſomething lower, covered over with a capacious Voyder of Silver, in which the Diſhes are ſet, without ceremony of Table-cloth or Knives. In the ſame Room are two other Tables for the principal Attendants of the Ambaſſador, and other Perſonages amongſt the Turks of chief Note and Quality: the Diſhes are ſerved in by one at a time, which as ſoon as touched, or taſted, are taken off to make room for another; and thus there is a ſucceſſion of threeſcore or foreſcore Services, all the Diſhes being of China, worth about an hundred and fifty Dollars a piece; which are reported to have a virtue contrary to Poiſon, and to break with the leaſt infuſion thereof, and for that reaſon eſteemed more uſeful for the Service of the Grand Signior;

Nam nulla aconita bibuntur
Fictilibus, &c. Juvenal.

The Banquet being ended, the Chaousbaſhee, or chief of the Purſivants, conducts the Ambaſſador, with ſome of his Retinue, to a place apart, where ſeveral gay Veſts, or long Garments, made of Silk, with divers Figures, are preſented them (as a ſign of the Grand Signior's Favour) which the Ambaſſador firſt putting on, and then the others, to the number of eighteen or nineteen, attended with two Capugibaſhees, or chief of the Porters, Perſons of good eſteem in that Court, with Silver Staves in their Hands, he is conducted nearer towards the Grand Signior's Preſence; then follow the Preſents brought by the Ambaſſador, which are carried to the beſt advantage for appearance, and are delivered to Officers appointed to receive them. The Courts without are filled with Janiſaries, amongſt whom is obſerved ſo profound a ſilence, that there is not the leaſt noiſe or whiſper underſtood; and the Salutation they give their principal Officers as they paſs, bowing altogether at the ſame time, is warlike, and yet courtly, and favours of good Diſcipline and Obedience. The Audience of Ambaſſadours.

The Ambaſſador is then brought to a great Gate near the Audience, the Porch of which is filled with white Eunuchs, clothed in Silks and Cloth of Gold; farther than this, none is ſuffered to proceed, beſides the Secretary, Interpreter, and ſome other Perſons of beſt Quality: at the door of the Chamber of Audience is a deep ſilence, and the murmuring of a Fountain near by adds to the melancholy; and no other Guard is there but a white Eunuch: and here a pauſe is made, and they tread ſoftly in token of fear and reverence, ſo as not to diſturb with the leaſt noiſe the Majeſty of the Sultan: for acceſs to the Eaſtern Princes was always difficult, and not permitted with the ſame familiarity as hath been practiſed amongſt the Romans, and at preſent with us, where the ſight of the King is his own Glory, and the Satisfaction of his Subjects: For it is with the Turks, as it was with the Parthians, when they received Vonones their King, educated in the Roman Court, who conforming to thoſe manners, ſaith Tacitus, Irridebantur Græci Comites, prompti aditus, obvia comitas, ignota Parthis virtutes; the affability and eaſineſs of addreſs to their Prince, was a ſcandal to the Nation. Lib. 2. Ann.

At the entrance of the Chamber of Audience, hangs a Ball of Gold, ſtudded with pretious Stones, and about it great Chains of rich Pearl; the Floor is covered with Carpets of Crimſon-velvet, embroidered with Gold-Wire, in many places beſet with Seed-pearl. The Throne where the Grand Signior ſits, is raiſed a ſmall height from the ground, ſupported with four Pillars plated with Gold; the Roof is richly gilded, from which hang Balls, that ſeem to be of Gold; the Cuſhions he leaned upon, as alſo thoſe which lay by, were richly embroidered with Gold and Jewels: In this Chamber with this occaſion remains no other Attendance beſides the firſt Vizier, who ſtands at the right Hand of the Grand Signior with modeſty and reverence. When the Ambaſſador comes to appear before the Grand Signior, he is led in, and ſupported under the Arms by the two Capugibaſhees before-mentioned; who bringing him to a convenient diſtance, laying their hands upon his Neck, make him bow until his Forehead almoſt touches the Ground; and then raiſing him again, retire backwards to the farther parts of the Room: The like

Ceremony

Ceremony is uſed with all the others, who attend the Ambaſſador, only that they make them bow ſomewhat lower than him: The Reaſon of this Cuſtom, as Busbequius ſaith, was, becauſe that a Croat being admitted near to Amurath, to communicate ſomething to him, made uſe of that opportunity to kill him, in revenge of the Death of his Maſter Marcus; but the Turkiſh Hiſtory ſaith, That this was done by one Miles Corbelitz, who after the defeat given Lazarus the Deſpot of Servia, riſing from amongſt the Dead, had near acceſs to the preſence of Amurath.

The Ambaſſador, at this Audience, hath no Chair ſet him, but ſtanding, informs the Grand Signior, by his Interpreter, the ſeveral Demands of his Maſter, and the Buſineſs he comes upon; which is all penned firſt in Writing; which when read, is, with the Letter of Credence, conſigned into the Hands of the Great Vizier, from whom the Anſwer and farther Treaty is to be received.

This was the manner of the Audience given to the Earl of Winchelſea, when Ambaſſador there for his Majeſty, and is (as is there ſaid) the Form uſed to others, who come from a Prince equally honoured and reſpected.

But though the Turks make theſe outward Demonſtrations of all due Reverence, and Religious Care to preſerve the Perſons of Ambaſſadors Sacred, and free from Violence; yet it is apparent, by their Treatment and Uſage towards them, in all Emergencies and Differences between the Prince they come from, and themſelves, that they have no eſteem of the Law of Nations, or place any Religion in the maintenance of their Faith. For when a War is proclaimed, the Ambaſſador immediately is either committed to cloſe Impriſonment, or at leaſt to the cuſtody of a careful Guard, confined within the Limits of his own Houſe. In this manner, the Repreſentative of Venice, called there the Bailo, by name Sorenzo, is a ſtrait Chamber of a Caſtle, ſituated on the Boſphorus, endured a ſevere Impriſonment, having his Interpreter ſtrangled, for no other cauſe than performing his Office in the true Interpretation of his Maſter's Senſe.

Afterwards this Bailo (for ſo they call there the Ambaſſors from Venice) was removed to another Priſon at Adrianople, where he continued ſome Years; and in fine, by force of Preſents, mollifying the Turks with Mony, (with which their Nature is eaſily made gentle and pliable) he obtained liberty to remain in the Houſe appropriated to the Repreſentatives of Venice, but under a Guard, whoſe Office was to ſecure him from eſcape, and obſerve his Actions; and yet with Liberality and Preſents, which overcome the Turks more than any Conſideration in the World, he enjoyed, as he pleaſed, licence for his Health to take the freſh Air, and uſe what freedom was reaſonable.

Nor leſs injurious to the Law of Nations, have been the Examples of Violence and Rage, acted on the Perſons of the French Ambaſſadors; firſt on the Sieur Senſi, accuſed upon ſuſpicion of having contrived the eſcape of Koniſpolski, General of the Poliſh Army, taken Captive in a Fight, and ſent Priſoner to the above-ſaid Caſtle on the Boſphorus; the means was, by a ſilken Cord ſent in a Pye, with Limes and Files to cut the Iron Bars; and having firſt ſecured his Guard with the ſtrength of Wine, in the dead of the Night, let him down by the Cord from the higheſt Tower; where finding Horſes ready, he got ſafe into Poland. The contrivance of this Stratagem, and the Inſtruments of the Eſcape, was laid to the Charge of the French Ambaſſador; who was committed, for that Reaſon, to the Priſon of the Seven Towers, where he remained for the ſpace of four Months, until his Mony, and the French King his Maſter mediated for him, promiſing to ſend another ſpeedily to ſucceed him; he was delivered from his Impriſonment, and returned home by the way of Poland.

The Succeſſor of this Ambaſſador was the Count Ceſi, a Man too generous and ſplendid, to live amongſt covetous and craving Turks, exhauſted moſt of his Wealth in Gifts and Preſents; to which adding a vanity and ambition to court the Grand Signior's Miſtreſſes in the Seraglio (as is ſaid) he paid ſuch vaſt Sums of Mony to the Eunuchs for his admittance, that in few Years he became ſo indebted, and importuned with the Clamours of his Creditors, as wholly diſcredited and loſt the Honour and Authority of his Embaſſy; ſo that the French King thinking it diſhonourable to continue his Miniſter, in that Charge, who was failed and undone in the reputation of the World, ſent his Letter of Revocation to recal him Home; but the Turks gave a ſtop to his return, pretending, that their Law which was indulgent to the Perſons of Ambaſſadors, did not acquit them from paiment of their Debts, or privilege them with impunity to rob the Believers, and other Subjects of the Grand Signior, contrary to that Rule of Grotius, who not only exempts the Perſons, but the Servants and Moveables of Ambaſſadors from Attachments; and no Law can compel him to the ſatisfaction of Debts by Force, but by friendly perſwaſion only, till being returned to his own Country, and put off the quality of a publick Perſon, he becomes liable to common Proceſs; Si quid ergo debiti contraxit, & ut ſit, res ſoli eo loco nullas poſſideat, ipſe compellandus erit amice, & ſi detrectet, is qui miſit, ita ut ad poſtremum uſurpentur ea, quæ adverſus debitores extra territorium poſitos uſurpari ſolent. Grot. lib. de Jure Belli & Pac.

Nor leſs remarkable was the barbarous uſage of the Sieur la Haye, Ambaſſador alſo from the French King to the Port, under the Government of the great Vizier Kuperli.

The Court being then at Adrianople, and the Treaty in hand between the Grand Signior and the Republick of Venice, through the Mediation of the French Ambaſſador, by Conſent and Command of his Maſter, certain Letters of his wrote in Characters, were intercepted by the Turks; by what Means, and upon what Information, the Matter was too evident then, to be apprehended other than an Italian Contrivance. The Cipher, as containing Matter prejudicial to the State, was carried to Adrianople; and being known, by examination and confeſſion of the Meſſenger, to have been delivered to him by the Secretary of the French Affairs, immediately in all haſte, the Ambaſſador then at Conſtantinople was cited to appear at Court; but being ancient, and indiſpoſed in his Health with the Gout and the Stone, diſpatched his Son as his Procurator, with Inſtructions and Orders how to anſwer what might be objected; hoping by that means to excuſe the Inconvenience of a Winter's Journey.

The Son being arrived there, immediately was called to Audience, accompanied with the Chancellor, or Secretary for the Merchants (for the other Secretary of the Private Affairs of the Embaſſy, apprehending the Fury and Injuſtice of the Turks, had timely ſecured himſelf by flight). Diſcourſe was firſt had concerning the Contents of the Characters; the Turks inſolent in their Speeches, provoked this Sieur la Haye the Younger, to utter ſomething tending towards a contempt of that Power the Turks had over him, encouraging himſelf with the thoughts of the protection of the King his Maſter; who was ſoon ſenſible, and moved with the leaſt Injuries offered his Miniſters. The Turks who can endure nothing leſs than Menaces, and Kuperli, through natural Cruelty, and choler of old Age, and particular Malice againſt the French Nation, moved with this Reply, commanded the Caousbaſhee, who is chief of the Purſevants, to ſtrike him on the Mouth; which he did with that force, being a rude robuſtious Fellow, that with a few blows of his Fiſt, he ſtruck out two of his Teeth before, and in a moſt undecent and barbarous manner, dragged him, with the Secretary for the Merchants, to a Dungeon ſo loathſome and moiſt, that the ill Vapours oft-times extinguiſhed the Candle. The old Ambaſſador the Father, was with the like Turkiſh Fury ſent for, the Turks executing all they do with ſtrange haſte and violence, Barbaris contatio ſervilis, ſtatem exequi regium videtur; Tac. lib. 6. and being arrived at Adrianople, was alſo committed to Cuſtody, though not with that rigor and ſeverity of Impriſonment as the Son, until the ſpace of two Months paſſing with Preſents and Solicitations, they both obtained their Liberty, and returned again to Conſtantinople; where ſcarce were they arrived, before News coming of a French Ship, which had loaded Goods of Turks, and run away with the Cargaſon, the Ambaſſador was again committed to another Priſon in Conſtantinople, called the Seven Towers, where he remained, until with Gifts and Mony, the Anger of the Turks was abated.

Embaſſy,

And ſtill the Malice of Kuperlee perſecuted this Sieur la Haye, until after his Embaſſy of 25 Years continuance, unfortunate only at the Concluſion, he was diſpatched Home obſcurely and in diſgrace, without Letters of Revocation from his Maſter, or other intimation to the Grand Signior, which might ſignify the deſire of this Ambaſſador's return.

The Reaſon of this irreverent Carriage in the Turks towards the Perſons of Ambaſſadors, contrary to the cuſtom of the Ancient Romans, and other gallant and civilized People, is an apprehenſion and Maxim they have received, that an Ambaſſador is endued with two Qualifications; one of repreſenting to the Grand Signior the Deſires of his Prince, the Breach of Articles or League, the Aggrievances and Abuſes of Merchants trading in his Dominions, that ſo Satisfaction and Amendment may be made: And the other, that he remains in nature of a Hoſtage, called by themſelves Mahapous, or Pledg; by which he becomes reſponſible for what is acted by his Prince, contrary to the Capitulations of Peace, and remains for a Pawn for the faithful and ſincere carriage of his Nation, and as Security to inſure what Goods belonging to Turks are loaden on their Veſſels.

As the Reſident from Holland was in the Year 1663, impriſoned at Adrianople, for miſcarriage of a Ship belonging to his Nation, taken by Malteſe Men of War, whereon at Alexandria were Goods loaden belonging to the Grand Signior, and other conſiderable Perſons of State, and was not releaſed, until he engaged to Eighty five thouſand Dollars, in the ſpace of One hundred and twenty days, which was the full import of the Turkiſh Intereſt.

Nor hath this Law of Nations, to the Sacred eſteem of Ambaſſadors, found better obſervation towards the Repreſentatives of the German Emperor, who have, upon all conjectures of Diſcord, and breaches of Peace between thoſe two powerful Princes, been ſubject to Confinements and Cuſtody of a Guard, nothing differing from formal Impriſonment: or elſe, as it happened to the German Reſident in the laſt War, are tranſported from Place to place, according to the motion of the Armies, as a barbarous Trophy in the Time of their proſperous Succeſſes, and as a Means at hand to reconcile and mediate when evil Fortune compells them to compoſition.

What ill Fate ſoever hath attended the Miniſters of other Princes in this Court, the Ambaſſadors from his Majeſty of Great Britain, our Sacred King, have never incurred this Diſhonour and Violation of their Office; the Negotiations and Differences ſince the Engliſh Trade hath been opened in Turkey, have been various and conſiderable, and Matters as to the ſecurity of the Ambaſſador and Merchants, have been often reduced to a doubtful Condition, as far as Words and rude Speeches, full of Menaces and Choler, might make a ſober Man ſuſpicious of a greater Ruin: And yet through the Conſtancy, Prudence, and good Fortune of Ambaſſadors, the Turkiſh Raſhneſs hath not drawn upo themſelves the guilt of violating their Perſons, but have either prevented Troubles in the beginning, or wiſely compounded them before they made too far a Breach.

It is worth obſervation, that the Turks make no difference in the Name, between an Ambaſſador, Reſident, Agent, or any petty Meſſenger, ſent or reſiding upon a publick Affair; the Name Elchi ſerves them to expreſs all, though they have the Name of Kapikahya, which ſignifies an Agent at Court, and is commonly attributed to thoſe who reſide at the Port, for the Princes of Tranſylvania, Moldavia, and Walachia, and alſo for the Agents of Paſcha's, every one of which hath his Miniſter at the Court, to ſend him Advices, and to anſwer for him, if any thing ſhould be amiſs repreſented. And though the Turks, on occaſion of Ruptures, and other Diſcontents, loſe their Reſpect towards the Perſon of Ambaſſadors, yet ſtill it is commendable in them, that they commonly abſtain from the Spoil and Plunder of the Merchants Eſtates, with whoſe Prince they are at Enmity; for they look on Merchants as Men, whoſe Profeſſion is beſt advanced by Peace; and as their own Compariſon is, like to the laborious Bee which brings Hony to the Hive, and is innocent, induſtrious, and profitable, and therefore an Object of their Compaſſion and Defence.

CHAP. XX.

How Ambaſſadors and Publick Miniſters govern themſelves in their Negotiations and Reſidence amongſt the Turks.

AMbaſſadors in this Country, have need both of Courage and Circumſpection, wiſdom to diſſemble with Honour, and diſcreet patience, ſeemingly to take no notice of Affronts and Contempts, from which this uncivilized People cannot temperate their Tongues, even when they would ſeem to put on the moſt courteous deportment and reſpect toward Chriſtians.

The French Ambaſſador, Monſieur le Haye, ſent once to adviſe the great Vizier Kuperli, that his Maſter had taken the ſtrong City of Arras from the Spaniard, and had obtained other Victories in Flanders, ſuppoſing that the Turk outwardly have evidenced ſome ſigns of Joy, and return an Anſwer of Congratulation; but the Reply the Vizier gave, was no other than this, (What matters it me, whether the Dog worries the Hog, or the Hog the Dog, ſo my Maſter's Head be but ſafe?) intimating, that he had no other eſteem of Chriſtians, than as Savages or Beaſts, and with no other Anſwer than this, due to an officious Courtſhip towards a Turk, the Meſſenger returned.

There is no doubt, but of all thoſe means wherewith Kingdoms and States are ſupported, there are two more principal and chief of all others: The one is the ſubſtantial and real Strength and force of the Prince, which conſiſts in his Armies and Intereſt; and the other is the Honour and Reputation he gains Abroad, which hath ſometimes proved of that Authority and Conſequence, as to make the State of the weaker Prince to appear more conſiderable, or at leaſt, equal to the greater Forces of the other.

This Reputation is principally maintained by a prudent manner of Negotiation, and depends on the diſcretion of the Repreſentative, in which, for many Years, the Republick of Venice had great Advantages in the Turkiſh Court, through the Caution and Policy of their Miniſters, who nouriſhed in the Turks an opinion of their ſtrength of Arms, and force of Wiſdom, beyond the reality thereof; that before the War broke forth, no Nation in Amity with the Turk had their Affairs treated with more honour and reſpect than this Common-Wealth.

An Ambaſſador in this Court ought to be circumſpect and careful to avoid the occaſion of having his Honour blemiſhed, or of incurring the leaſt violation of his Perſon; for afterward, as one baffled in his Reputation, he becomes ſcorned, loſes his Power and Intereſt, and all eſteem of his Worth and Wiſdom; for having endured one Affront, their Inſolence ſoon preſumes farther to treſpaſs on his Patience: For certainly Turks, of all Nations in the World, are moſt apt to cruſh and trample on thoſe that lie under their Feet. As on the contrary, thoſe who have a Reputation with them, may make the beſt and moſt advantageous Treaties of any part of the World; according to that of Busbequius, Ep. 1. Sunt Turci in utramque partem nimii ſive indulgentia, cum pro amicis ſe probare volunt; ſive acerbitate cum irati ſunt. To reply, according to the Pride and Ignorance of a Turk, is properly to blow up Fire into a Flame; to ſupport with ſubmiſſion, and a puſillanimous Spirit, his Affronts and Indignities, by negotiating faintly or coldly, is to add Fuel and Wood to the burning Piles; but ſolid Reaſon and Diſcourſe, accompanied with chearful Expreſſions, vivacity and courage in Argument, is the only manner of dealing and treating with the Turks.

That which is called good Nature, or flexible Diſpoſition, is of little uſe to a Publick Miniſter in his Treaty with Turks: A punctual adherence to former Cuſtoms and Examples, even to Obſtinacy, is the beſt and ſafeſt Rule; for the conceſſion of one Point ſerves to embolden them to demand another, and then a third; and ſo their Hopes increaſe with the Succeſs, having no Modeſty nor Wiſdom to terminate their Deſires; one Act or two of Favour is enough afterwards to introduce a Cuſtom, (which is the chiefeſt part of their Law) and to make that which is merely voluntary, and of Grace, to become of Obligation.

But a principal Matter, which a publick Miniſter ought to look to, is to provide himſelf of ſpirited, eloquent, and intelligent Interpreters; ſpirited, I ſay, becauſe many times the Preſence is great they appear before, and the Looks big and ſour of a barbarous Tyrant; and it hath been known, that the Ambaſſador hath been forced to interpoſe his own Perſon, between the Fury of the Vizier and his Interpreter, whoſe Offence was only the delivery of the words of his Maſter; ſome of whom have notwithſtanding been impriſoned, or executed, for this Cauſe, as we have partly intimated in the foregoing Chapter: The reaſon of which Tyranny and Preſumption in theſe prime Officers over the Interpreters, is, becauſe they are moſt commonly born Subjects of the Grand Signior, and therefore ill ſupport the leaſt word miſ-placed, or favouring of Conteſt from them, not diſtinguiſhing between the Senſe of the Ambaſſador, and the Explication of the Interpreter; and therefore it were very uſeful to breed up a Seminary of young Engliſh Men, of ſprightly and ingenious Parts, to be qualified for that Office, who may, with leſs danger to themſelves, Honour to their Maſter, and Advantage to the Publick, expreſs boldly, without the uſual mincing and ſubmiſſion of other Interpreters, whatſoever is commanded and declared by their Maſter.

The French Nation hath taken a very good courſe, in breeding up Youths to make their Drugger-men or Interpreters; ſome few Years paſt, twelve were ſent to Smyrna, where being awhile inſtructed in the Convent of Capuchins, and there taught the Turkiſh and Vulgar Greek, they are afterwards diſperſed to the ſeveral Factories; ſuch as were of moſt pregnant Parts, being placed with the Ambaſſador at Conſtantinople. Such a proviſion of young Drugger-men, at leaſt twelve, ought to be allowed, for ſome of them die, ſome grow weary of the Country, and are deſirous to return Home; others not having a ſufficiency of Parts, nor Health, anſwer not Expectation;

pectation; ſo that if two or three of ſuch a Number happen to ſucceed well, they are a great help to the Ambaſſador, and the Conſul where they ſerve.

The Engliſh Ambaſſador had once three Youths ſent Aboard on this Deſign, but they are now all three dead, and one alone came into Employment.

It is certainly a good Maxim for an Ambaſſador in this Country, not to be over-ſtudious in procuring a familiar Friendſhip with Turks; a fair comportment towards all in a moderate way, is cheap and ſecure; for a Turk is not capable of real Friendſhip towards a Chriſtian; and to have him called only, and thought a Friend who is in Power, is an Expence without Profit; for in great Emergencies, and Times of Neceſſity, when their Aſſiſtance is moſt uſeful, he muſt be bought again, and his Friendſhip renewed with Preſents, and farther Expectations: howſoever this way of Negotiating by Preſents and Gratuities, is ſo much in cuſtom amongſt the Turks, that to ſpeak truly, ſcarce any thing can be obtained without it; but is the Wiſdom of the Miniſter, to diſpoſe and place them with Honour, Decency, and Advantage. For there are, and have been always, two or three powerful Perſons in this Court, which in all Times carry the principal ſway, and command of all; theſe muſt neceſſarily be treated with Reſpect, and often ſweetned with Gratuities: He that hath Mony, may doubtleſs make Friends when he needs them, and with that ſecure his Capitulation and his Priviledge, purchaſe Juſtice, and if his Stock will hold out, act any thing that can reaſonably be imagined; yet it is the moſt profitable and prudent way, to refer ſomething to Friendſhip and good Correſpondence, and not all to mere force and ſtrength of Mony.

CHAP. XXI.

How Foreign Princes in particular ſtand in the Eſteem and Opinion of the Turks.

THE Turks, as we have occaſionally inſtanced before, are naturally a proud and inſolent People, confident, and conceited of their own Vertue, Valour, and Forces, which proceeds from their ignorance of the ſtrength and conſtitution of other Countries; ſo that when the Danger which may ariſe from the Conjunction and Union of Chriſtian Princes to the Mahometan Intereſt, is diſcourſed of, they compare the Grand Signior to the Lion, and other Kings to little Dogs, which may ſerve (as they ſay) to rouſe and diſcompoſe the quiet and Majeſty of the Lion, but can never bite him, but with their utmoſt peril.

They ſay farther, as by an ingenuous Confeſſion, that they are unable to encounter the Chriſtians at Sea, to whom God hath given that unſtable Element for Dominion and Poſſeſſion; but that the Earth is the Lot and Inheritance of the Turks, which is demonſtrable by that great Circuit of Empire, obedient to the Mahometan Arms.

Theſe are the Thoughts and Apprehenſions of the Commonalty concerning Chriſtendom in general, (which I have heard often diſcourſed amongſt them) but the Opinion and Eſteem which knowing Men and Miniſters frame of Foreign Kingdoms and States diſtinctly, is for the moſt part according to theſe following Particulars.

Of all the Princes ſo far remote as England, none amongſt this People ſtands in better account than his Majeſty of Great Britain; not only for the convenience of the Trade, which provides the Empire with many neceſſary Commodities, but for the fame of His Shipping, and Power at Sea, which makes him, though divided from all parts of the World, yet a Borderer on every Countrey, where the Ocean extends: And this Eſteem and Honour the Sultan bears towards His Majeſty, hath been evidenced in ſeveral Particulars, and by none more than by the ſecurity and freedom his Merchants live in in theſe Dominions, and a readineſs always in every reaſonable Requeſt, to gratify His Majeſty's Ambaſſadors.

As for the Emperor, the Turk knows that his own proper and peculiar Force in it ſelf, is inconſiderable, but that with the conjunction and aſſiſtance of the German Princes, they are aſſured, and have proved it to their experience, in the Year 1664, that his Strength is equivalent to the Ottoman Power; but yet they are not ignorant, that the diverſity of Religions and Sects in Germany, abate much of that vigor and coalition amongſt themſelves, which is requiſite to the vigorous oppoſition of ſo potent an Enemy.

And it is evident, that the Emperor's unſeaſonable Severity againſt the Proteſtants in Hungary, diſobliging his whole Dominion there, by depriving them of their Churches, and exerciſing other courſes for ſuppreſſion of the Reformed Religion, ripened the Turk's Deſign of War, firſt laid in the Year 1663, conceiving in that conjuncture, holding forth the ſpecious pretence of Liberty in Religion and Conſcience, the Hungarians would either wholly deſert the Emperor, or very coldly and faintly apply themſelves to his Succour: The Effect of which was in the ſucceeding Wars plainly verified, and known, that the Hungarians were not only ſparing in their Contribution and Supplies of Men in the Service of the Emperor, but held ſecret Juntoes and Councils, Whether it were not better to accept the Turk's Soveraignty, on the Conditions propoſed, with Liberty of their Religion, rather than to continue in Allegiance to the Emperor, who neither afforded them freedom of Conſcience, which is the Deſtruction of their Spiritual Eſtate, nor was able to withſtand the Turk, which argued inſufficiency to yield them Protection in their Temporal.

The Emperor ſends his Ambaſſador to the Turk, under Notion of the King of Hungary, becauſe at his Inſtalment as Emperor, he ſwears to make a perpetual War with the Turk; and indeed their Peace is little better than a War, conſidering their frequent Incurſions into each others Territories; and that to skirmiſh or fight in Bodies, under the number of five thouſand, not taking Forts, or bringing Cannons in the Field, is no Breach of the Capitulations.

The French King, though the firſt Chriſtian Prince, that having no Confines bordering on theſe Dominions, entred into Capitulations with the Turk for a free and open Commerce and Traffick; and obtained the Title of Podeſhaw, which ſignifies as much as Emperor, and is denied to all other Chriſtian Kings, and even to the German Emperor himſelf, being adjudged an Honour amongſt the Turks, proper and peculiar only to the Grand Signior: Yet their eſteem of the French is not ſo great as ſome would perſwade the World it is, having (as we have at large declared in the foregoing Chapter) given ample Teſtimonies in the Perſons of the Ambaſſador, of their ſcorn and neglect of the Prince he repreſented.

I have heard the wiſe Lord Chancellor Samoſade ſay, That the French gained that Title of Podeſhaw to their King, by Craft and Subtilty, and was never fully examined nor conſidered: and in that Buſineſs there is a ſtrange Romance told of a fair French Lady, preferred to the Seraglio, whom the Turks were willing to receive for a Princes, and thence challenging Affinity with the King of France, was the more profuſe in the honour of his Titles.

It is true, there was a time when the French Ambaſſadors was called to ſecret Councils, and admitted within the Walls of the Seraglio, to private Meetings and Debates of the Turk; but it was when the French plotted, and openly aſſiſted in tranſportation of the Turks, for the Invaſion of Italy; but ſince that time, and eſpecially in the Year 1664, through the Force given the Emperor, and the Bravado upon Barbary, the French hath always (and that not without ſome reaſon) gone declining in the good Opinion and Eſteem in the Ottoman Court.

The Pope is more eſteemed, as a Prince able to blow the Coals, and excite other Princes to the Damage of the Mahometan State, rather than by his own Power or Force to effect any thing himſelf; and having no Confines bordering on the Turks, his Riches, Power, or Greatneſs, ſeldom falls as a Subject for their conſideration.

As little account would they make of the King of Spain, but that the Granadine Turks, of which there remains in Conſtantinople a conſiderable number ſince their Expulſion, through an extreme Affection, naturally inherent in them to Spain, diſcourſe of it with a Paſſion, not altogether free of a little Rodomontado, and Vain-glory, Vices incident to their Country; whereby they create in the Turks a conceit of the Greatneſs, Riches, and Force of Spain, according as it flouriſhed in the Time that the Moors poſſeſſed their Seat and Habitation there.

But yet the Turks, though a People injurious and negligent of the accurate ſtate of other Places, beſides their own, are not altogether ignorant of the decay of Spain, the Wars in Portugal, and the Menaces from France, which makes them aim at one of the Venetian Ports in Dalmatia, to have the better proſpect and eaſier paſſage into Sicily, or the Kingdom of Naples.

The eſteem the Venetians are in at this time amongſt them, is greater than when the War firſt began, for then they entertained an Opinion of their Force, much inferior to the real eſtimation thereof; as they do now the contrary beyond their true Strength, making always calculates from the Effect and Succeſs of things.

Yet the Turk knows, that the Venetian Power is not comparable to his by Land, and that nothing but Friuli ſtands between him and the maſtery of Venice; which makes him aſhamed and angry, that after ſo many Years Wars, no greater Additions ſhould be acquired to the Empire, than his footing in Candia, the whole poſſeſſion of which was imagined at the beginning of the War, would, upon a bare Demand, been quietly preſented as the Price and Purchaſe of the Peace.

The King of Poland is none of the leaſt amongſt the Chriſtian Princes eſteemed at the Ottoman Court, by reaſon of his great Power, conſiſting chiefly in Horſe, which in the Opinion of the Turks, is the moſt Warlike; and looks on the People as Martial, and with much difficulty brought under their ſubjection.

But by reaſon of the great Combuſtions and Inteſtine Troubles of that Country, the Polanders apply themſelves with much Dexterity and Caution in their Treaties with the Turks; and eſpecially, being Borderers with them, and ſubject to their Incurſions and Robberies of Men and Cattel, they endeavour all means of fair and reaſonable complyance. And on the other ſide, the Turk is well inclined to the Polander, and deſires his proſperity beyond others of his Neighbour-Princes; becauſe he looks on him as the only Curb, upon all Occaſions, of the Muſcovites, and whom they may make uſe of, to give ſome ſtop and arreſt unto the progreſs of his Arms.

The Moſcovite hath yet a greater Fame and Renown with the Turks, being reported to make One hundred and fifty thouſand Horſe; ſo that he treats with the Turk on equal Terms, and fills his Letters with high Threats and Hyperbolical Expreſſions of his Power, and with as ſwelling Titles as the Turk.

The Greeks have alſo an inclination to the Moſcovite beyond any other Chriſtian Prince, as being of their Rites in Religion, terming him their Emperor and Protector; from whom, according to the ancient Propheſies and modern Predictions, they expect delivery and freedom to their Church.

But the greateſt dread the Turk hath of the Moſcovite, is from the Union with the Soffi, or Perſian, which two uniting together, would be too unequal a Match for the Ottoman Empire.

But above all the great Potentates of the World, the King of Perſia was moſt feared and eſteemed by the Turk, not only by reaſon of his great Force, and that the Borders of his Dominions run a long ſpace on the Confines of the Turks; but becauſe it is almoſt impoſſible, by reaſon of the vaſt Deſarts, and uninhabited Places, to carry a War into his Country, without the cumberſome carriages of all neceſſary Proviſions, which with how much difficulty and incommodity were performed in the laſt Wars between theſe two great Princes, the Hiſtory ſufficiently relates; but ſince the Conqueſt of Babylon, and decay of their Riches, they are now the ſubjects of the Turkiſh ſcorn and contempt.

The nearneſs of their Faith, though derived from the ſame Founder, but afterwards receiving ſome difference by the interpretation of Haly, is in no-wiſe a reconcilement of their Affections; but rather a ground and matter of their Fear and Jealouſy, leſt at any time, waging a War againſt the Perſian, that Hereſy ſhould begin to be ſet on foot amongſt the People, which, like a Spark that cauſes the Conflagration of a whole City, may breed thoſe intestine Civil diſtractions, which may prove of more danger and ruin than the former War.

It will not be neceſſary to ſpeak much of the Hollanders, in regard, that though they have a Reſident there, they are ſcarce taken notice of as a Nation different, but depending on the Engliſh.

Theſe foregoing words of Holland, have been liable to cenſure amongſt the Dutch; but for my Apology therein, I have thus much to ſay, That though the Aſſertion may ſeem ſtrange in theſe our Times, yet when it was firſt wrote, which is now above ſeventeen Years paſt, it might have paſſ for Current Truth; Diſtingue tempora & bene doces.

When I came firſt into Turky, which was in the Year 1660, there were very few of the Dutch Nation then in Turky, and their Trade very inconſiderable.

At Aleppo they had no Conſul, till ſome Years after my arrival Levinus Warner, Reſident at Conſtantinople, ſent his Brother firſt to that place; but before that time, they always lived under the Engliſh protection.

At Smyrna they had no other for their Conſul, than one Evan Ogle a Greek, of whom either the Dutch or Turks took little notice, having recourſe very often to the Engliſh Conſul for his Advice, and Aſſiſtance.

At Conſtantinople, for many Years, the Dutch lived under the Engliſh Ambaſſador, which was the occaſion of thoſe differences debated in the Divan between ours, and the French Ambaſſador. Likewiſe Levinus Warner, a German born, lived for ſome Years in the Houſe of the Engliſh Ambaſſador, until afterwards, that by the Lords the States, he was promoted to be their Reſident at the Port.

All which happening in ſo ſhort time after my arrival in Turky, it will not appear ſtrange to conſidering Men, that the Dutch Nation ſhould not at that time, by the generality of the People (though the Miniſters of State might know otherwiſe), be diſtinguiſhed from ours, or their Puiſſance, and Greatneſs ſo well underſtood as it is at preſent. The Heer Colyer, formerly Reſident, but now digniſied with the Title of Ambaſſador at the Port, and the ſeveral Conſuls in their reſpective Factories being much reſpected and eſteemed.

And theſe are all the Nations conſiderable, with whom the Turk hath occaſion to Treat, or that fall under his Cogniſance or Buſineſs.

When the Grand Signior hath occaſion to write unto any of the Chriſtian Princes, he commonly uſes theſe Expreſſions, at the beginning of the Letter.

To the Glory of the great Princes of JESUS, Elected by the Reverend Senators of the Religion of the Meſſiah, Compoſer of the Publick Affairs of the Chriſtian Nation. Patron (or Maſter) of a Courteous and Modeſt Train, Lord of thoſe Ways which lead to Honour and Glory, whoſe End may it be happy, &c.

CHAP. XXII.

The regard the Turks have to their Leagues with Foreign Princes.

AS the Chriſtian Religion teaches Humility, Charity, Courteſie, and Faith towards all that are within the Pale of Humane Nature, to be φιλόθεοι καὶ φιλάνθρωποι; ſo the Turkiſh Superſtition furniſhes its Followers with Principles, not only to abhor the Doctrines, but alſo the Perſons of ſuch whom they term not Believers. The ſordidneſs of their Blood, and ungentleneſs of their Education, makes them inſolent and ſwelled in Proſperity; and their Victories and Spoils upon Chriſtians, render the Arms and Force of other parts contemptible in reſpect of theirs.

Upon theſe Conſiderations of the vileneſs of Chriſtianity, and ſcorn of their Power, they aſſume this into a Maxime, That they ought not to regard the Leagues they have with any Prince, or the Reaſons and Ground of a Quarrel, whilſt the Breach tends to the enlargement of their Empire, which conſequently infers the propagation of their Faith.

Many and various are the Examples and Stories in all Ages, ſince the beginning and increaſe of the Turkiſh Power, of the Perfidiouſneſs and Treachery of this People; that it may be a Queſtion, Whether their Valour and Force hath prevailed more in the time of War, or the little care of their Faith, and maintenance in their Leagues hath availed them in the time of Peace?

Thus Didymotichum in the time of Peace, under Amurath, third King of the Turks, whilſt the Walls and Fortifications were building, was by the Aſian Labourers, which were entertained in the Work, and the help of other Turks which lay near in Ambuſh, ſurprized and taken.

So alſo * Rodeſtum, in the time of Peace, by command of Amurath, was by Eurenoſes aſſaulted and taken by ſtrategem.

* Now called Rodeſto.

So Adrianople in the Reign of the ſame Emperor, after Peace made again, and Aſſurances given of better Faith, was by the Art and Diſguiſe of Chaſis-Ilbeg, pretending to be a diſcontented Captain, and a Fugitive from the Turks, by fair Speeches, and ſome Actions and Skirmiſhes Abroad, gained ſuch confidence amongſt the credulous Greeks, as enabled him afterwards to ſet the Gates open to Amurath's Army, which after ſome Conflict, was taken, and never recovered again by the power of the Greeks.

It is an old and practiſed Subtilty of the Turks, immediatley after ſome notable Misfortune, to entreat of Peace, by which means they may gain time to recollect their Forces and Proviſions to proſecute the War.

It is notable and worthy of Record, the Treachery of the Treaty uſed the Year 1604, begun in the time of Mahomet the Third, and broken off by Achmet his Succeſſour. The Overtures for a Treaty were firſt propounded by the Turks; and Commiſſioners from the Emperor appointed, and met the Turks at Buda; twelve days Truce were concluded for conconſideration of the Articles, and Preſents ſent by the Turks to the Emperor, to perſuade of the reality of their Intentions. Mahomet dying, Sultan Achmet renews his Commiſſion to the Baſſa of Buda to continue the Treaty; whereupon the Chriſtian and Turks Commiſſioners have another meeting at Peſt, where whilſt the Chriſtians were courteouſly treating the Infidels in Tents near the Town, and they to create in the Chriſtians an aſſurance of their faithful Dealings, were producing Letters from their Sultan, and Prime Vizier, filled with Oaths and Proteſtations, as by the God of Heaven and Earth, by the Book of Moſes, by the Souls of their Anceſtors, and the like, that their Intentions for Peace were real, and meant nothing but what was honourable and juſt: At that very time the Turks of Buda, conceiving, that in the time of this great Jollity and Confidence, the Walls of Peſt were neglected and ſlightly manned, iſſued out in great numbers to ſurprize it; the Alarm of which ended the Banquet, and the Turks finding Matters contrary to their Expectation, returned only with the ſhame of their Treachery.

It is no wonder the Diſciples ſhould, in a Point of ſo great Liberty and Advantage, follow the Example and Doctrine of their Maſter; for the like Mahomet did when overthrown, and repulſed at the Siege of Mecha, made a firm League with the Inhabitants of ſtrict Peace and Amity: but the next Summer, having again recruited his Forces, eaſily ſurprized and took the City, whilſt that People relying on the late Agreement, ſuſpected nothing leſs than the Prophet's Treachery.

And that ſuch prefidiouſneſs as this might not be Chronicled in future Ages, in diſparagement of his Sanctity; he made it lawful for his Believers, in Caſes of like Nature, when the Matter concerned thoſe who are Infidels, and of a different Perſwaſion, neither to regard Promiſes, Leagues, or other Engagements; and this is read in the Book of the Inſtitutions of the Mahometan Law, called Kitab Hadaia.

It is the uſual Form and Cuſtom, when a noble Advantage is eſpied on any Country, with which they have not ſufficient ground of Quarrel, to demand the Opinion of the Muftee, for the lawfulneſs of War; who without conſulting other Conſideration and Judgment of the reaſonable Occaſions, than the utility of the Empire, in conformity to the foregoing Preſident of his Prophet, paſſes his Fetfa, or Sentence; by which the War becomes warrantable, and the Cauſe juſtified and allowed.

It is not to be denied, but even amongſt Chriſtian Princes, and other the moſt gallant People of the World, Advantages have been taken, contrary to Leagues, and Faith, and Wars commenced upon frivolous and ſlight Pretences; and the States have never wanted Reaſons for the breach of Leagues; though confirmed by Oaths, and all the Rites of Religious Vows: We know it is controverted in the Schools, whether Faith is to be maintained with Infidels, with Hereticks, and wicked Men; which in my Opinion were more honourable to be out of Queſtion.

But we never read that Perfidiouſneſs, by Act and Proclamation, was allowable, or that it was wholly to be Faithleſs, until the Doctors of the Mahometan Law, by the Example of their Prophet, recorded and commanded this Leſſon, as a beneficial and uſeful Axiom to their Diſciples.

And here I cannot but wonder at what I have heard and read in ſome Books of the Honeſty and Juſtice of the Turks, extolling and applauding them, as Men accompliſhed with all the Vertues of a Moral Life; thence ſeeming to infer, that Chriſtianity it ſelf impoſes none of thoſe Engagements of Goodneſs on Mens Natures, as the Profeſſors of it do imagine. But ſuch Men, I believe, have neither read the Hiſtories, nor conſulted the Rules of their Religion, nor practiſed their Converſation: and in all Points, being ignorant of the truth of the Turks dealing, it is not ſtrange, if through a charitable Opinion of what they know not, they err in the Apprehenſion and Character they paſs upon them.

OF THE Turkiſh Religion.

BOOK II.

CHAP. I.

Of the Religion of the Turks in General.

THE Civil Laws appertaining to Religion amongſt the Turks are ſo confounded into one Body, that we can ſcarce treat of one without the other; for they conceive that the Civil Law came as much from God, being delivered by their Prophet, as that which immediately reſpects their Religion, and came with the ſame Obligations and Injunctions to obedience. And though this Polity was a Fiction of ſome, who firſt founded certain Governments, as Numa Pompilius, Solon, and the like, to put the greater Engagements and ties on Men, as well of Conſcience, as through fear of Puniſhment; yet in the general that Propoſition is true, That all Laws which reſpect Right and Juſtice, and are tending to a Foundation of Good and Honeſt Government, are of God; For there is no Power but of God, and the Powers that be, are ordained of God. And then if God owns the Creation and Conſtitution of all Princes and Rulers, as well the Pagans as Chriſtians; the Tyrants, as the Indulgent Fathers of their People and Country; no leſs doth he diſallow the Rules and Laws fitted to the Conſtitution and Government of a People, giving no Diſpenſation to their Obedience, becauſe their Prince is a Tyrant, or their Laws not founded according to true Reaſon, but to the humour of their corrupted Judgments or Intereſt.

Rom. 13.

It is vulgarly known to all, that their Law was compiled by Mahomet, with the help of Sergius the Monk (and thence this Superſtition is named Mahometaniſm) whoſe infamous Life is recorded ſo particularly in many other Books, that it were too obvious to be repeated here: and therefore we ſhall inſiſt, and take a view of the Rites, Doctrines, and Laws of the Turkiſh Religion, which is founded in three Books, which may not improperly be called the Codes and Pandects of the Mahometan Conſtitutions.

The firſt is the Alchoran; the ſecond, the Conſent or Teſtimony of Wiſemen, called the Aſſonah, or the Traditions of the Prophets; and the third, the Inferences or Deductions of one thing from another.

Mahomet wrote the Alchoran, and preſcribed ſome Laws for the Civil Government: the other Additions, or Superſtructures, were compoſed by their Doctors that ſucceeded, which were Ebbubecher, Omer, Ozman and Haly; the Califfs of Babylon and Egypt were other Doctors and Expoſitors of their Law; whoſe Sentences and Poſitions were of Divine Authority amongſt them; but their eſteem of being Oraculous failing with their Temporal Power, that Dignity and Authority of Infallible Determinations, was by force of the Sword transferred to the Turkiſh Mufti. And though there is great diverſity amongſt the Doctors, as touching the explication of their Law, yet he is eſteemed a true Believer, who obſerves theſe five Articles or Fundamentals of the Law, to which every Turk is obliged.

The firſt is, Cleanneſs in the Outward Parts of their Body and Garments.

Secondly, To make Prayers five times a day.

Thirdly, To obſerve the Ramazan or Monthly Faſt.

Fourthly, To perform faithfully the Zekat, or giving of Alms according to the proportion preſcribed in a certain Book, wrote by the four Doctors of theirs, called Aſan, Embela, &c.

Fifthly, To make their Pilgrimage to Mecha, if they have means and poſſibility to perform it.

But the Article of Faith, required to be believed, is but one, viz. That that there is but one God, and Mahomet his Prophet.

Other Rites, as Circumciſion, Obſervation of a Friday for a Day of Devotion, Abſtinence from Swines-fleſh, and from Blood, (as they ſay) amongſt the five pincipal Points, becauſe they are enjoined as Trials and Proofs of Man's Obedience to the more neceſſary Law.

CHAP. II.

The Toleration that Mahometaniſm in its infancy promiſed to other Religions; and in what manner that Agreement was afterwards obſerved.

WHEN Mahometaniſm was firſt weak, and therefore put on a modeſt Countenance and plauſible Aſpect to deceive Mankind, it found a great part of the World illuminated with with Chriſtianity, endued with active Graces, Zeal, and Devotion, and eſtabliſhed within it ſelf with purity of Doctrine, Union, and firm profeſſion of the Faith, though greatly ſhaken by the Hereſies of Arius and Neſtorius; yet it began to be guarded, not only with its Patience, Long-ſuffering, and Hope, but alſo with the Fortifications, Arms, and Protection of Emperors, and Kings: ſo that Mahometaniſm coming then on the diſadvantage, and having a hard Game to play, either by the luſtre of Graces, and Good Examples of a ſtrict Life to out-ſhine Chriſtianity; or by a looſneſs and indulgence to corrupt Manners, to pervert Men dedicated to God's Service; or by Cruelty or Menaces to gain thoſe who accounted Martyrdom their greateſt Glory, and were now alſo defended by the Power of their own Princes; judges it beſt policy to make proffers of Truce and Peace between the Chriſtian and its own Profeſſion: and therefore in all places where its Arms were prevalent and proſperous, proclaimed a free Toleration to all Religions; but eſpecially in outward appearance, courted and favoured the Chriſtian, drawing its Tenents and Doctrines in ſome conformity to that Rule, confeſſing Chriſt to be a Prophet, and greater than Moſes; that he was born of a Virgin; that Mary conceived by the ſmell of a Roſe; that the bleſſed Virgin was free from Original Sin, and the Temptations of the Devil; that Chriſt was the Word of God, and is ſo ſtyled in the Alchoran, and cured Diſeaſes, raiſed the Dead, and worked many Miracles; and by his Power his Diſciples did the like: and I have heard ſome ſpeak of him with much reverence, and with heat to deny Chriſt's Paſſion; ſaying, it were an impiety to believe that God, who loved and had conferred ſo much Power, and ſo many Graces on Chriſt, ſhould ſo far diſhonour him, as to deliver him into the Hands of the Jews, who were the worſt and moſt ſcorned of Men; or to the Death of the Croſs, which was the moſt infamous and vile of all Puniſhments.

In this manner they ſeemed to make a League with Chriſtianity, to be Charitable, Modeſt, and well-wiſhers to its Profeſſours; and Mahomet himſelf ſays in his Alchoran thus: "O "Infidels, I do not adore what you adore, and "you adore not what I worſhip; obſerve you "your Law, and I will obſerve mine.

And for a farther aſſurance of his Toleration of Chriſtianity, and evidence to the World, that his Intention was neither to perſecute nor extirpate their Religion; he made this following Compact, the Original of which was found in the Monaſtery of Fryars on Mount Carmel, and, as it is ſaid, was tranſported to the King's Library in France; which becauſe it is Ancient, and of Curioſity; it will not be impertinent to be inſerted here.

"Mahomet ſent from God to teach Mankind, "and declare the Divine Commiſſion in Truth, "wrote theſe things. That the Cauſe of Chri- "ſtian Religion determined by God, might re- "main in all parts of the Eaſt, and of the Weſt, "as well amongſt the Inhabitants, as Strangers, "near, and remote, known, and unknown: to "all theſe People I leave this preſent Writing, "as an inviolable League, as a deciſion of all "farther Controverſies, and a Law whereby "Juſtice is declared, and ſtrict obſervance en- "joined. Therefore whoſoever of the Moſſel- "man's Faith ſhall neglect to perform theſe "Things, and violate this League, and after "the manner of Infidels, break it, and tranſ-Moſſelman ſignifies a Believer, and ſo the Turks call themſelves.

"greſs what I command herein, he breaks the "Compact of God, reſiſts his Agreement, and "contemns his Teſtament, whether he be a "King, or any other of the Faithful. By this "Agreement, whereby I have obliged my ſelf, "and which the Chriſtians have required of "me, and in my Name, and in the Name of all "my Diſciples, to enter into a Covenant of "God with them, and League and Teſtament of "the Prophets, Apoſtles, Elect, and Faithful "Saints, and bleſſed of Times paſt and to come. "By this Covenant, I ſay, and Teſtament of "mine (which I will have maintained with as "much Religion, as a Prophet Miſſionary, or "as an Angel next to the Divine Majeſty, is "ſtrict in his Obedience towards God, and in "obſervance to his Law and Covenant) I pro- "miſe to defend their Judges in my Provinces, "with my Horſe and Foot, Auxiliaries, and "other my faithful Followers; and to preſerve "them from their Enemies; whether remote, or "near, and ſecure them both in Peace and War: "and to protect their Churches, Temples, Ora- "tories, Monaſteries, and Places of Pilgrimage, "whereſoever ſituated, whether Mountain or "Valley, Cavern or Houſe, a Plain, or upon "the Sand, or in what ſort of Edifice ſoever: "alſo to preſerve their Religion and their "Goods in what part ſoever they are, whether "at Land or Sea, Eaſt or Weſt, even as I keep "my ſelf and my Sceptre, and the faithful Be- "lievers of my own People. Likewiſe, to re- "ceive them into my Protection from all Harm, "Vexation, Offence and Hurt. Moreover, to "repel thoſe Enemies which are offenſive to "them and me, and ſtoutly to oppoſe them, "both in my own Perſon, by my Servants, and "all others of my People and Nation. For "ſince I am ſet over them, I ought to preſerve "and defend them from all Adverſity, and that "no Evil touch them before it firſt afflict mine, "who labour in the ſame Work. I promiſe far- "ther to free them from thoſe Burthens which "Confederates ſuffer, either by Lones of Mony, "or Impoſitions; ſo that they ſhall be obliged to "pay nothing but what they pleaſe, and no mo- "leſtation or injury ſhall be offered them here- "in. A Biſhop ſhall not be removed from his "Dioceſs, or a Chriſtian compelled to re- "nounce his Faith, or a Monk his Profeſſion, or "a Pilgrim diſturbed in his Pilgrimage, or a "Religious Man in his Cell: Nor ſhall their "Churches be deſtroyed, or converted into "Moſques: for whoſoever doth ſo break this "Covenant of God, oppoſes the Meſſenger of "God, and fruſtrates the Divine Teſtament. "No Impoſitions ſhall be laid upon Fryars or "Biſhops, nor any of them, who are not lia- "ble to Taxes, unleſs it be with their own con- "ſent. And the Tax which ſhall be required "from Rich Merchants and from Fiſher-men of "their Pearl, from Miners of their Pretious "Stones, Gold and Silver; and all other rich "and opulent Chriſtians, ſhall not exceed above "twelve ſhillings yearly; and it ſhall alſo be "from them, who are conſtant Inhabitants of "the place, and not from Travellers, and "Men of an uncertain Abode; for they ſhall "not be ſubject to Impoſitions or Contributi- "ons, unleſs they are Poſſeſſours of Inheritance "of Land or Eſtate; for he which is lawfully "ſubject to pay Mony to the Emperor, ſhall "pay as much as another, and not more; nor "more required from him above his faculty and "ſtrength. In like manner, he that is taxed "for his Land, Houſes, or Revenue, ſhall not

" be burthened immoderately, nor oppreſſed with " greater Taxes than any others that pay Contribution: Nor ſhall the Confederates be obliged to go to the War with the Moſſelmans " againſt their Enemies, either to fight, or diſcover their Armies, becauſe it is not of duty " to a Confederate to be employed in Military " Affairs; but rather this compact is made with " them, that they may be the leſs oppreſſed; but " rather the Moſſelmans ſhall Watch and Ward, " and defend them: And therefore, that they " be not compelled to go forth to fight, or encounter the Enemy, or find Horſe or Arms, " unleſs they voluntarily furniſh them; and he " who ſhall thus willingly contribute, ſhall be " recompenſed and rewarded. No Moſſelman " ſhall infeſt the Chriſtians, nor contend with " them in any thing but in kindneſs, but treat " them with all courteſie, and abſtain from all " oppreſſion or violence towards them. If any " Chriſtian commit a crime or fault, it ſhall " be the part of the Moſſelman to aſſiſt him, intercede and give caution for him, and compound for his miſcarriage; liberty ſhall alſo " be given to redeem his life, nor ſhall he be " forſaken, nor be deſtitute of help, becauſe of " the Divine Covenant which is with them, " that they ſhall enjoy what the Moſſelmans enjoy, and ſuffer what they ſuffer: and on the " other ſide that the Moſſelmans enjoy what they " enjoy, and ſuffer what they ſuffer. And according to this Covenant, which is by the " Chriſtians juſt requeſt, and according to that " endeavour which is ſo required for confirmation of its Authority, you are obliged to " protect them from all calamity, and perform " all offices of good-will towards them, ſo that " the Moſſelmans may be ſharers with them in " proſperity and adverſity. Moreover, all care " ought to be had, that no violence be offered " to them, as to matters relating to Marriage, " viz. That they compell not their Parents to " match their Daughters with Moſſelmans: Nor " ſhall they be moleſted for refuſal either to give " a Bridegroom or a Bride; for this is an act " wholly voluntary, depending on their free-will " and pleaſure. But if it happen that a Chriſtian Woman ſhall join with a Moſſelman, he " is obliged to give her liberty of Conſcience in " her Religion, that ſhe may obey her Ghoſtly " Father, and be inſtructed in the Doctrines of " her Faith without impediment; therefore he " ſhall not diſquiet her, either by threatning divorce, or by ſolicitations to forſake her Faith: " but if he ſhall be contrary hereunto, and moleſt her herein, he deſpiſes the Covenant of God, " rebels againſt the Compact of the Meſſenger " of God, and is entred into the number of Lyars. " Moreover when Chriſtians would repair their " Churches or Convents, or any thing elſe appertaining unto their Worſhip, and have need " of the liberality and aſſiſtence of the Moſſelmans " hereunto, they ought to contribute, and freely " to beſtow according to their ability; not with " intention to receive it again, but gratis; and as " a good-will towards their Faith, and to fulfill " the Covenant of the Meſſenger of God, conſidering the obligation they have to perform " the Covenant of God, and the Compact of " the Meſſenger of God. Nor ſhall they oppreſs " any of them living amongſt the Moſſelmans, nor " hate them, nor compell them to carry Letters, " or ſhew the way, or any other manner force " them: for he which exerciſes any manner of " this Tyranny againſt them, is an Oppreſſour, " and an Adverſary to the Meſſenger of God, and " refractary to his Precepts. Theſe are the Covenants agreed between Mahomet the Meſſenger of God, and Chriſtians. But the conditions on which I bind theſe Covenants on their " Conſciences, are theſe, That no Chriſtian give " any entertainment to a Soldier, enemy to the " Moſſelmans, or receive him in his houſe publickly or privately; that they receive none of the " enemies of the Moſſelmans, as ſojourners into " their Houſes, Churches, or Religious Convents; nor underhand furniſh the Camp of " their Enemies, with Arms, Horſe, Men, or " maintain any intercourſe or correſpondence " with them, by contracts or writing; but betaking themſelves to ſome certain place of " abode, ſhall attend to the preſervation of themſelves, and to the defence of their Religion. " To any Moſſelman and his Beaſts, they ſhall give " three days entertainment with variety of Meat; " and moreover, ſhall endeavour to defend them " from all misfortune and trouble; ſo that if " any Moſſelman ſhall be deſirous, or be compelled to conceal himſelf in any of their houſes or " habitations, they ſhall friendly hide him, and " deliver him from the danger he is in, and not " betray him to his Enemy: and in this manner " the Chriſtians performing Faith on their ſide, " whoſoever violates any of theſe conditions, and " doth contrarily, ſhall be deprived of the benefits contained in the Covenant of God and his " Meſſenger, nor ſhall he deſerve to enjoy theſe " privileges indulged to Biſhops and Chriſtian " Monks, and to the Believers of the contents of the Alcboran. Wherefore I conjure " my people by God and his Prophet to maintain theſe things faithfully, and fulfill them, " in what part ſoever of the World they are. " And the Meſſenger of God ſhall recompence " them for the ſame; the perpetual obſervation " of which he ſeriouſly recommends to them, " untill the day of Judgment, and Diſſolution " of the World. Of theſe conditions which " Mahomet the Meſſenger of God hath agreed " with the Chriſtians, and hath enjoyed, the " witneſſes were,

" Abu Bacre Aſſadiqu, Omar ben-alcharab.
" Ithman ben Afaw, Atiben abi taleb,

" with a number of others; the Secretary was " Moavia ben abi Sofian, a Soldier of the Meſſenger of God, the laſt day of the Moon of the " fourth Month, the fourth year of Hegira in " Medina. May God renumerate thoſe who are " witneſſes to this writing. Praiſe be to God " the Lord of all Creatures.

This Covenant or Articles with Chriſtians (howſoever denied by the Turks to have been the act and agreement of Mahomet) is yet by very good Authours taken for real, and to have been at that time confirmed when his Kingdom was weak, and in its infancy, and when he warred with the Arabians: and fearing likewiſe the enmity of the Chriſtians (not to be aſſaulted by two Enemies at once) ſecured himſelf by this Religious League, made in the Monaſtry of Fryars, in Mount Carmel, from whence that ſtrict Order have their denomination. But mark how well Mahomet in the ſequel obſerved this Law: As ſoon as his Government increaſed, and that by Arms and bad Arts he had ſecured his Kingdom, he writes this Chapter of the Sword, called ſo perhaps becauſe the firſt words are often engraved graved on the Turks Cymeters made at Damaſcus, and other their Bucklers and other ſort of Arms: And another Chapter in the Alcboran, called the Chapter of Battel (which is always read by the Turks before they go to fight) and therein his modeſt words (If you adore not what I adore, let your Religion be to you, and mine to me) and other promiſes of toleration and indulgence to the Chriſtian Religion, were changed to a harſher note; and his Edicts were then for bloud and ruin, and enſlavement of Chriſtians: When you meet with Infidels, ſaith he, cut off their heads, kill them, take them Priſoners, bind them, untill either you think fit to give them liberty, or pay their ranſome; and forbear not to perſecute them, untill they have laid down their arms and ſubmitted. And this is that ſort of Toleration the Turks give to the Chriſtian Religion; they know they cannot force Mens Wills, nor captivate their Conſciences, as well as their Bodies; but what means may be uſed to render them contemptible, to make them poor, their lives uncomfortable, and the intereſt of their Religion weak and deſpicable, are practiſed with divers Arts and Tyranny, that their toleration of Chriſtianity is rather to afflict and perſecute it, than any grant of favour or diſpenſation.

The Mahometan Religion tolerates Chriſtian Churches and Houſes of Devotion, in places where they have been anciently founded, but admits not of holy Buildings on new foundations; they may repair the old Coverings and Roofs, but cannot lay a Stone in a new place Conſecrated to Divine Service; nor if Fire, or any accident deſtroy the Superſtructure, may a new ſtrength be added to the foundation, wherewith to underprop for another Building; ſo that at laſt the Chriſtian Churches in thoſe Dominions muſt neceſſarily come to ruin, as many already have ſubmitted to the common fate of time. And as it happened in the great and notable Fires of Galata firſt, and then of Conſtantinople, in the year 1660, that many of the Chriſtian Churches and Chapels were brought to Aſhes; and afterwards by the Piety and Zeal of Chriſtians ſcarce re-edified, before by publick order they were thrown down again into their former heaps, being judged contrary to the Turkiſh Law, to permit Churches again to be reſtored, of which no more remained than the meer foundation.

CHAP. III.

The Arts wherewith the Turkiſh Religion is propagated.

THE Turks though they offer the ſpecious outſide of the foregoing toleration, yet by their Law are authorized to enforce Mens Conſciences to the profeſſion of their Faith; and that is done by various arts and niceties of Religion: For if a man turn Turk, his Children under the age of 14 years, though educated with other Principles, muſt be forced to the ſame perſuaſion. Men that ſpeak againſt the Mahometan Law, that have raſhly promiſed at a time of diſtraction or drunkenneſs to become Turks, or have had a carnal knowledge of a Turkiſh Woman, muſt either become Martyrs or Apoſtates; beſides many other ſubtilties they have to entrap the Souls of Chriſtians within the entanglements of their Law.

It is another Policy wherewith the Mahometan Sect hath been encreaſed, the accounting it a Principle of Religion, not to deliver a City or Fortreſs by conſent or voluntary ſurrender, where Moſques have been once built, and Mahometaniſm profeſſed. And therefore the Turk no ſooner enters a Town by Conqueſt, but immediately lays foundation for his Temples, thereby impoſing an obligation of an obſtinate and conſtant reſolution on the conſcience of the defendants, which many times hath been found to have been more forcible and prevalent on the ſpirits of men, than all the terrours and miſeries of Famine, Sword or other calamities.

It is well enough known upon what different intereſts Chriſtianity and Mahometaniſm were introduced into the World; the firſt had no other enforcements, than the perſuaſions and Sermons of a few poor Fiſhermen, verified with Miracles, Signs and Inſpiration of the Holy Ghoſt; carrying before it the promiſes of another life, and conſiderations of a glorified ſpirituality in a ſtate of ſeparation; but the way to it was obſtructed with the oppoſition of Emperours and Kings, with ſcorn and contempt, with perſecution and death; and this was all the encouragement propoſed to Mankind to embrace this Faith; but Mahometaniſm made its way with the Sword; what knots of Argument he could not untie, he cut, and made his ſpiritual power as large as his temporal; made his precepts eaſie and pleaſant, and acceptable to the fancy and appetite, as well as to the capacity of the vulgar: repreſenting Heaven to them, not in a ſpiritual manner, or with delights unexpreſſible, and raviſhments known onely in part to illuminated Souls; but with groſs conceptions of the beauty of Women with great Eyes, of the duration of one act of Carnal copulation for the ſpace of ſixty years, and of the beaſtly ſatisfaction of a gluttonous Palate; things abſurd and ridiculous to wiſe and knowing Men; but yet capable to draw multitudes of its profeſſours, and carnal defenders of its verity. And this Doctrine being irrational, to the better ſort of judgments, cauſes the Lawyers, who are men of the ſubtileſt capacities amongſt the Turks, to miſtruſt much of the truth of the Doctrine of Mahomet; eſpecially the aſſertions relating to the condition of the other life. For the repreſentation of the delights of the next World, in a corporeal and ſenſual manner, being inconſiſtent with their reaſon, leads them to doubt the truth of that point; and ſo wavering with one ſcruple, proceed to a miſtruſt of the whole Syſtem of the Mahometan Faith. One would think that in ſuch men a way were prepared for the entertainment of a Religion, erected on more ſolid principles and foundations; and that the Jews might gain ſuch Proſelytes to their Law, from which a great part of the Mahometan ſuperſtition was borrowed; or that the Chriſtians might take advantage in ſo well diſpoſed ſubjects, to produce ſomething of the Myſtery of Godlineſs. But the firſt are a people ſo obnoxious to ſcorn and contempt, eſteemed by the Turks to be the ſcum of the World, and the worſt of men; that it is not probable their Doctrine can gain a reputation with thoſe, to whom their very perſons and bloud are vile and deteſtable; nor is it likely the Chriſtians will ever be received by them with greater Authority, and more favourable inclination, untill they acquit themſelves of the ſcandal of Idolatry, which the Images and Pictures in their Churches ſeem to accuſe them of in the eyes and judgment judgment of the Turks, who are not verſed in the ſubtile diſtinctions of Schoolmen, in the limitations and reſtrictions of that Worſhip, and the evaſions of their Doctours, matters not onely ſufficient to puzzle and diſtract the groſs heads of Turks, but to ſtrain the wits of learned Chriſtians to clear them from that imputation.

But to return to our purpoſe. The propagation of the Mahometan Faith having been promoted wholly by the Sword, that perſuaſion and principle in their Catechiſm, that the Souls of thoſe who die in the Wars againſt the Chriſtians, without the help of previous acts of performance of their Law, or other Works, are immediately tranſported to Paradiſe, muſt neceſſarily whet the Swords and raiſe the Spirits of the Soldiers; which is the reaſon that ſuch Multitudes of them (as we read in Hiſtory) run evidently to their own Slaughter, eſteeming their Lives and Bodies at no greater price than the value of Stones and Rubbiſh to fill Rivulets and Ditches, that they may but erect a Bridge or Paſſage for their fellows to aſſault their Enemies.

The ſucceſs of the Mahometan Arms produced another argument for the confirmation of their Faith, and made it a Principle, That whatſoever proſpers, hath God for the Authour; and by how much more ſucceſsfull have been their Wars, by ſo much the more hath God been an owner of their Cauſe and Religion. And the ſame argument (if I am not miſtaken) in the times of the late Rebellion in England, was made uſe of by many, to intitle God to their Cauſe, and make him the Authour of their thriving Sin, becauſe their wickedneſs proſpered, and could trample on all holy and humane Rights with impunity. And I have known that the Romaniſts have judged the Afflictions and almoſt Subverſion of the Church of England, to be a token of God's deſertion and diſclaim of her Profeſſion; forgetting the Perſecutions and Martyrdoms of the Primitive Saints, and that the Church of God is built in Sorrow and eſtabliſhed with patience and paſſive Graces: but theſe men rather than want an argument, their malice will uſe the weapons of Infidels to oppugn the truth. And on this ground, the Turks ſo horribly deteſt and abhor the Jews, calling them the forſaken of God, becauſe they are Vagabonds over all the World, and have no Temporal Authority to protect them: And though according to the beſt enquiry I could make, that report is not true, That they permit not a Jew to become a Turk, but by turning a Chriſtian firſt, as a nearer ſtep and previous diſpoſition to the Muſſelman's Faith; yet it is certain they will not receive the Corps of a Renegado Jew into their Cemeteries or place of Burial: and the Jews on the other ſide diſowning any ſhare or part in him, his loathed Carkaſs is thrown into ſome Grave diſtant from other Sepulchres, as unworthy the Society of all Mankind.

CHAP. IV.

The Power and Office of the Mufti's, and of their Government in Religious Matters.

THE Mufti is the principal head of the Mahometan Religion, or Oracle of all doubtfull queſtions in the Law, and is a perſon of great eſteem and reverence amongſt the Turks; his Election is ſolely in the Grand Signior, who chuſes a man to that office always famous for his Learning in the Law, and eminent for his vertues and ſtrictneſs of Life; his Authority is ſo great amongſt them, that when he paſſes Judgment or Determination in any point, the Grand Signior himſelf will in no wiſe contradict or oppoſe it.

The Title which the Grand Signior gives unto the Mufti, when he writes to him, is,

> To the Eſad, who art the Wiſeſt of the Wiſe, inſtructed in all Knowledge, the moſt Excellent of Excellent, abſtaining from things Unlawfull, the Spring of Vertue, and True Science, Heir of the Prophetick and Apoſtolical Doctrines, Reſolver of the Problems of Faith, Revealer of the Orthodox Articles, Key of the Treaſures of Truth, the Light to Doubtfull Allegories ſtrengthened with the grace of the Supreme Aſſiſtour, and Legiſlatour of Mankind. May the moſt High God perpetuate thy Vertues.

His power is not compulſory, but onely reſolving and perſuaſive in matters both Civil and Criminal, and of State: his manner of reſolves is by writing; the queſtion being firſt ſtated in Paper briefly and ſuccinctly, he underneath ſubſcribes his ſentence by Yes, or No, or ſome other ſhort Determination called a Fetfa, with the addition of theſe words, God knows better; by which it is apparent that the Determinations of the Mufti are not eſteemed infallible. This being brought to the Cadee or Judge, his Judgment is certainly regulated according thereunto, and Law Suits of the greateſt moment concluded in an hour, without Arreſts of Judgment, Appeals, or other dilatory Arts of the Law.

In matters of State the Sultan demands his opinion, whether it be in Condemnation of any great man to Death, or in making War or Peace, or other important Affairs of the Empire; either to appear the more juſt and religious, or to incline the People more willingly to Obedience. And this practice is uſed in buſineſs of greateſt moment; ſcarce a Viſier is proſcribed, or a Paſhaw for pretence of crime diſplaced, or any matter of great alteration or change deſigned, but the Grand Signior arms himſelf with the Mufti's Sentence; for the nature of man repoſes more ſecurity in innocence and actions of Juſtice, than in the abſolute and uncontrollable power of the Sword. And the Grand Signior, though he himſelf is above the Law, and is the Oracle and Fountain of Juſtice, yet it is ſeldom that he proceeds ſo irregularly to contemn that Authority wherein their Religion hath placed an ultimate power of Deciſion in all their Controverſies.

But ſometimes perhaps Queries are ſent from the Grand Signior to the Mufti, which he cannot reſolve with ſatisfaction of his own Conſcience, and the ends of the Sultan; by which means affairs important to the well being of the State, meet delays and impediment; In this caſe the Mufti is fairly diſmiſſed from his infallible office, and another Oracle introduced, who may reſolve the difficult demands with a more favourable Sentence; if not, he is degraded like the former, and ſo the next, untill one is found apt to Propheſie according to what may beſt agree with the intereſt of his Maſter. This Office was in paſt times eſteemed more ſacred by the Ottoman Princes than at preſent; for no War was undertaken, or great Enterprize ſet on ſoot, but firſt like the Oracle or Augur, his Determination with great Reverence was required as that without which no bleſſing or ſucceſs could be expected; but in theſe days they are more remiſs in this manner of Conſultation; ſometimes it is done for formality; but moſt commonly the Prime Vifier conceited of his own Judgment and Authority, aſſumes the Power to himſelf, and perhaps firſt does the thing, and afterwards demands the Approbation of it by the ſenſe of the Law.

And herein the Mufti hath a ſpacious Field for his Interpretation; for it is agreed that their Law is temporary, and admits of Expoſitions according to times and ſtate of things: And though they Preach to the People the perfection of their Alcoran; yet the wiſer men hold, that the Mufti hath an expoſitory power of the Law to improve and better it, according to the ſtate of things, times and conveniencies of the Empire; for that their Law was never deſigned to be a clog or confinement to the propagation of Faith, but an advancement thereof, and therefore to be interpreted in the largeſt and fartheſt fetched ſenſe, when the ſtrict words will not reach the deſign intended.

So it was once propounded to the Mufti, what rule ſhould be obſerved in the devotion of a Turk carried Slave into the Northern parts of the World, where in Winter is but one hour of day, how he might poſſibly comply with his obligation of making prayers five times within the twenty four hours; viz. Morning, Noon, Afternoon, Sunſet, and at an hour and half in the Night; when the whole day being but of one hour, admitted of none of theſe diſtinctions; for reſolution of which, the Mufti anſwered, that God commanded not things difficult as it is in the Alcoran, and that matters ought to be ordered in conformity to time and place, and making ſhort Prayers once before day, then twice in the hour of light, and twice after it is dark, the duty is complied with.

Another queſtion of the ſame nature was propoſed to the Mufti, concerning the Kiblah or holy place of Mecha, to which they are obliged to turn their faces in their Prayers; how at Sea where they had no mark, eſpecially bad Geographers as commonly the Turks are, it is poſſible to comply with that neceſſary formality required in their devotion; the Mufti reſolved this doubt almoſt like the former, preſcribing a kind of circular motion in prayers, by which means they cannot miſs of having at ſome time their faces towards the holy City, which in a caſe of ſo much difficulty is a ſufficient compliance with the duty.

Many caſes of this nature are propoſed to the Mufti; and many particular rules of Conſcience required, one of which is remarkable, that Buſbequius relates, that occurred in his time during the Wars between the Emperour of Germany, and Sultan Solyman: Whether a few Chriſtians taken Captives by the Grand Signior, might be exchanged with many Turks in the hand of the Emperour. It ſeems the Mufti was greatly perplexed and puzzled in the reſolution; for ſometimes it ſeemed a diſeſteem to the value of a Turk to be rated under the price of a Chriſtian; on the other ſide, it appeared want of charity and care of the intereſt of the Moſſelmans to neglect real terms of advantage on ſuch airy and ſubtile points of formality. In fine, he conſulted his Books, and declared that he found two different Authours of great Authority of contradictory opinions in this controverſie; and therefore his Judgment was to incline to that which had moſt of favour and mercy in it. The Mufti whilſt qualified with that title, is rarely put to death, but firſt degraded, and then becomes liable to the ſtroke of the Executioner; but in caſes of notorious crimes or conviction of Treaſon, he is put in a Mortar for that intent remaining in the Priſon called the Seven Towers at Conſtantinople, and therein beaten to death, and brayed to the contuſion of all his bones and fleſh.

The next Office to the Mufti is Kadeleſchere or Judge of the Militia, otherwiſe Judge Advocate, who hath yet power of determination in any other Law Suits whatſoever; for this privilege the Souldiery of this Country enjoys, to have power extenſive over all other conditions of people, but to be onely ſubject themſelves to the Government of their own Officers; this Office a Mufti muſt neceſſarily paſs through, and diſcharge with approbation before he aſcends the top and height of his Preferment.

The next inferiour degree is a Mollah; and theſe are of two ſorts, one of Three hundred Aſpers, and the other of Five hundred Aſpers, ſo called for diſtinction ſake; the firſt ſort are principal Judges in petty Provinces, containing under them the command of Kadees of poor and inconſiderable places; the others have their juriſdiction over the whole dominion of a Beglerbeg, and have the Kadees of ſeveral rich and renowned places under their Government: theſe riſe often to the Mufti's Office, but proceed by ſeveral degrees and ſteps, and muſt firſt gradually command where the Imperial Seats have been, as firſt to be Mollah in Pruſa, then in Adrianople, and laſtly in Conſtantinople, at which time he is next to the Office of Kadeleſchere, and thence to that of the Mufti.

The Sultan, when he writes to any of his Mollahs, or Kadees of the firſt degree, he uſes this following ſtyle,

To the moſt perfect judge of the Faithfull, the beſt Preſident of Believers in God, the Mine of Vertue and True Knowledge, the Diſtributer of all juſt Sentence to all Humane Creatures, Heirs of the Prophetick, and Apoſtolick Doctrines, elected by the ſingular Grace of God for our Governour and Judge, of whoſe Vertues may they ever flouriſh.

Theſe and Kadees, which are the lower and ordinary ſort of Judges, are as much to be reckoned in the number of religious men as the Mufti himſelf: for as I have ſaid before, the Civil Law of the Turks is conceived by them to be derived from their Prophet; and the other Expoſitours of their Law with as much engagement and obligation as theſe which immediately concern the Divine Worſhip: and therefore are to be treated and handled together.

The Emaums or Parochial Prieſts, muſt be able to read in the Alcoran, and be counted men of good fame and moral lives amongſt their Neighbours, before they can be promoted to this Function; and muſt be one of thoſe who have learned at the appointed times of prayer to call the people together on the top of the Steeple, by repeating theſe words, Allah ekber, Allah ekber, Eſchedu enla Ilahe illallah we eſchedu enne Mahammed evveſul: cuah Fleve ala Selah heie ala Felah Allah ekber, allah ekber, la Ilahe illallah, that is, God is great, God is great, I profeſs that there there is no Deity but God, and confeſs that Mahomet is the Prophet of God; In this manner the people of a Pariſh recommending any to the Prime Viſier, declaring that the former Emaum is dead, and the Office vacant, and that this perſon is qualified in all points to the Function or better and more knowing than the preſent Incumbent; he receives immediate induction and eſtabliſhment in the place; but for better proof or tryal of the truth of the teſtimony that accompanies him, he is enjoyned to read in preſence of the Viſier ſome part of the Alchoran, which being done, he is diſmiſſed and approved, and takes the Viſier's Teſchere or Mandamus for the place.

This is all the Ceremony required in making an Emaum; for there is no new Character or ſtate of Prieſthood (as they hold) conferred upon them, nor are they a different ſort diſtinguiſhed from the people by holy Orders or Rites, but meerly by the preſent office they manage; when being diſplaced, they are again numbred with the Laity: their Habit is nothing different from others, but onely that they wear a large Turbant like the Lawyers, with ſome little variety in folding it up, and put on a grave and ſerious Countenance. Their Office is to call the People to Prayers, and at due hours to be their Leader in the Moſque, and to read and repeat upon Fridays certain Sentences or Verſes out of the Alchoran; few of them adventure to Preach, unleſs he be well conceited or really well gifted, but leave that office to the Soigh, or him that makes Preaching his Profeſſion, who is one commonly that paſſes his time in the Convents, that we ſhall hereafter treat of.

The Mufti hath no Juriſdiction over the Emaums, as to the good order or government of the Pariſhes, nor is there any Superiority or Hierarchy as to rule amongſt them; every one being Independent and without controll in his own Pariſh, excepting his Subjection in Civil and Criminal Cauſes to the chief Magiſtrates; and conſidering the manner of their Deſignation to the Religious Office, the little difference between the Clergy and the Laity, and the manner of their ſingle Government in Parochial Congregations, may not unhappily ſeem to ſquare with the Independency in England, from which Original pattern and example our Sectaries and Phanatick Reformers appear to have drawn their Copy.

The Church-men and Lawyers are greatly in eſteem amongſt them, as is apparent by the Title they uſe towards them in their Writings and Commands, directed to them in this manner; You that are the glory of the Judges and Sagemen, the profound Mines of Eloquence and Excellence, may your Wiſedom and Ability be augmented.

CHAP. V.

Of the Mufti's Revenue, and from whence it doth ariſe.

After the Mufti is elected, there is no Ceremony us'd in his Inveſture than this: he preſents himſelf before the Grand Signior, who Cloaths him with a Veſt of rich Sables of One thouſand Dollars price, and one thouſand more he preſents him with in Gold made up in a Handkerchief, which he delivers with his own Hand, putting it in the fold of his under Garment doubled over his breaſt, and beſtows on him a Salary of Two thouſand Aſpers a day, which is about Five pound Sterling money; beſides which he hath no certain Revenue, unleſs it be the power of Preferment to ſome Prebendaries or Benefices of certain Royal Moſques, which he ſells and diſpoſes of as is beſt to his advantage without the ſcruple of corruption or Simony.

By the ſentences he gives which they call Fetfas, he receives not one Aſper benefit; though every Fetfa coſts eight Aſpers, yet the Fee thereof goes to his Officers; that is, to his Muſewedegi, or he who ſtates the queſtion, is paid five Aſpers; to his Mumeiz, or he who Copies or Tranſcribes the queſtion fair, two Aſpers; to him that keeps the Seal, one Aſper.

Other benefits the Mufti hath little, excepting onely that at his firſt entrance to his office, he is ſaluted by all Ambaſſadours and Reſidents for foreign Princes; as alſo the Agents of ſeveral Paſhaws reſiding at the Port, none of which come empty-handed but offer their accuſtomed Preſents, by which he collects at leaſt Fifty thouſand Dollars.

When any Mufti is deprived of his Office without any other motive than the pleaſure of the Grand Signior, he is gratified with an Arpalick, which is the diſpoſal of ſome judicial Preferment in certain Provinces, and the ſuperintendency of them, from which he gathers a competent Revenue for his maintenance.

And becauſe he is a perſon whoſe advice and counſel is of great Authority with the Grand Signior and Viſier, and that his word and candid report of matters is conſiderable, and his favour in ſentences very eſtimable; he is therefore courted by all the Grandees of the Empire, who know no other way of reconciling and purchaſing the affections of a Turk, than by force of Preſents, which have more of power in them, than all other obligations or merits in the World.

CHAP. VI.

Of the Emirs.

We may here bring in the Emirs; otherwiſe called Eulad Reſul, into the number of the Religious men, becauſe they are of the Race of Mahomet, who for diſtinction ſake, wear about their heads Turbants of a deep Sea-green, which is the colours of their Prophet; out of reverence to his eſteemed holy Bloud, many privileges are indulged by the ſecular Authority, that they cannot be vilified, affronted or ſtruck by a Turk, upon forfeiture of his right Hand; but leſt they ſhould be licentious by his impunity, they have a chief Head or Superiour amongſt them, called Nakib Eſchref, who hath his Serjeants or Officers under him, and is endued with ſo abſolute a power over them, that as he pleaſes it extends both to Life and Death; but he never will give the ſcandal to this holy Seed, to execute or puniſh them publickly. And though few of them can derive his Genealogy clearly from Mahomet: yet thoſe who can but onely pretend to it, are often helped out in their Pedegree; as often as the Nakib deſires to favour any Perſon, or can have any colour to acquire a new Subject;

ject; and then to clear all ſcruple from the World, he gives him a Tree of his Lineage and Deſcent. The Turks being well acquainted with this abuſe, carry the leſs reſpect to the whole Generation; ſo that as often as they find any of them drunk or diſordered, they make no ſcruple to take off their Green Turbants firſt, Kiſſing them and laying them aſide with all reverence, and afterwards beat them without reſpect or mercy.

Their ſecond Officer is called Alemdar, who carries the Green Flag of Mahomet, when the Grand Signior appears with any Solemnity in publick; they are capable of any Offices; few of them exerciſe any Trade, unleſs that which is Eſirgi, or one who deals in Slaves, to which ſort of Traffick this Sainted Off-ſpring is greatly addicted, as being a holy Profeſſion to captivate and enſlave Chriſtians. Theſe are the moſt abominable Sodomites and abuſers of Maſculine youth in the World, in which ſin againſt nature they exceed the foulneſs and deteſtable Luſt of a Tartar.

CHAP. VII.

Of the Endowments of Royal Moſches, and in what manner Tithes are given for Maintenance of their Prieſts and Religion.

THE Turks are very magnificent in their Moſches and Edifices erected to the honour and ſervice of God, and not onely in the Buildings, but in the Endowments of them, with a Revenue which Records the Memory of the Donor to all Poſterity, and relieves many poor who daily repeat Prayers for the Souls of ſuch who died with a perſuaſion that they have need of them after their deceaſe; for thoſe I ſay who dye of that belief; for the condition of the Soul, untill the day of Judgment is controverted amongſt the Turks, and the queſtion not decided as a matter of Faith, or as revealed or determined by the Alchoran. For ſo large benevolence is given to places deſtined to God's ſervice, that as ſome compute, one third of the Lands of the whole Empire are allotted and ſet out to a holy uſe; much to the ſhame of thoſe who pretend to the name of Chriſtians, and yet judge the ſmalleſt proportion to be too large a competence for thoſe who ſerve at the Altar.

The principal Moſches and thoſe of richeſt endowment (as in all reaſon ought) are thoſe of Royal Foundation, called in Turkiſh Selatin Giameleri; over which the Prime Superintendent is the Kuzlir Aga, or the chief Black Eunuch of the Sultan's Women: and in his power it is to diſtribute all conſiderable offices of Eccleſiaſtical Preferment relating to the Royal Moſches, which office makes a conſiderable addition to his Power and Revenue: for there are many of thoſe Moſches in divers places of the Empire; but eſpecially where the Sultans do or have reſided, as Pruſa, Adrianople and Conſtantinople.

The Royal Moſches of Conſtantinople are Santa Sophia; Sultan Mahomet, who Conquered this City, Sultan Bajazet, Sultan Selim, Sultan Solyman, Sehezade, or the Son of Sultan Solyman, Sultan Ahmet, and three other Moſches built by the Queen-Mothers, one of which was lately erected and richly endowed by the Mother of this preſent Sultan.

I ſhall ſcarce adventure to acquaint my Reader with the particular Revenue belonging to all theſe Royal Edifices, but certain it is they have Rents as noble and ſplendid as their Founders; for example of which, I ſhall inſtance onely in that of Santa Sophia, built by Juſtinian the Emperour, and rebuilt by Theodoſius, and was the Metropolis of old Bizantium, and the Mother-Church belonging to the Patriarchal See of Greece, is ſtill conſerved ſacred and ſeparated for uſe of Divine Service; of the Revenue of which, Mahometan Barbariſm and Superſtition hath made no Sacrilegious Robbery, but maintained, and improved, and added to it in that manner, that the Income may equal any Religious foundation of Chriſtendom; for when I had the Curioſity of procuring from the Regiſters of that Church diſtinctly all the particular Gifts, Benefices, Lands, Monies at Intereſt, and other Endowments belonging thereunto, and offered according to my ability ſomething conſiderable, to have a true Copy of the Riches and annual Rent of the place; the Keepers of thoſe Liſts would perſuade me (whether out of oſtentation, or ſcruple of ſin to make one of my Faith acquainted with the particulars of their Religious offerings) that the Wealth, Rent, and Account of all thoſe Royal Endowments are ſo many, that as they are diſtinctly ſet down, fill a Volume, and the knowledge of them is the ſtudy alone of thoſe who are deſigned to this ſervice; but in general I am given to underſtand, by thoſe who magnifie not matters beyond their due computation, That the Revenue amounts to about One hundred thouſand Zechins a year: which proceeds not from any Lands or Duties raiſed without the Walls of the City, but all from within: the Sultan himſelf being a Tenant to that place; paying or acknowledging a Rent of One thouſand and one Aſper a day for the ground which the Seraglio ſtands on, being in times of the Chriſtian Emperours ſome part of the Sanctuary or Gardens dedicated to the uſe of that ſtately Temple, which the Turks eſteemed Sacrilegious to ſeparate intirely from the holy ſervice to which it was aſſigned; though the admirable ſituation thereof tendreth it unfit for other habitation, than the enjoyment of the Sultan; and did therefore think fit to oblige the Land to a Rent, adding the odd Aſper as a ſignification, that the thouſand Aſpers were not a ſufficient conſideration for the uſe of the Church Lands; and might therefore be augmented as the piety and devotion of ſucceeding Emperours ſhould move them.

It is reported by the Turks, that Conſtantinople was taken upon Wedneſday: and that on the Friday following (which is their Sunday or Sabbath, as we call it) the victorious Sultan, then firſt entitled Emperour, went with all Magnificent pomp and ſolemnity to pay his thankſgiving and devotions at the Church of Sancta Sophia; the Magnificence ſo pleaſed him, that he immediately added a yearly Rent of 10000 Zechins to the former Endowments, for the maintenance of Imaums or Prieſts, Doctours of their Law, Taliſmans and others, who continually attend there for the education of youth, teaching them to read and write, inſtructing them alſo in the principles of their Law and Religion.

Other Emperours have ſince that time erected near unto it their Turbem or Chapels of Burial, in one of which lies Sultan Selim, ſirnamed Sarboſe, or the Drunken, with his one hundred Children, and therewith have conferred a maintenance tenance of Oil for Lamps and Candles which burn day and night, and a proviſion for thoſe who attend there in prayer for their Souls departed; to which opinion the Turks (as I have ſaid already) are generally inclinable, though not preached or enforced on any man's belief as an Article of Faith. Over and above this expence, there is daily proviſion made for relief of a multitude of poor, who at certain hours appear at the Gates of the Temple, and receive their daily ſuſtenance; whatſoever advances, as yearly great Sums are laid up in the Treaſury, is numbred with the Riches of the Moſch, and remains for the ſervice of that place, as for the reparation or building thereof, in caſe of fire or other accidents.

Beſides the ſumptuous Edifices of the body of the Royal Moſchs, there are annexed unto them certain Colleges for Students in the Law called Tehmele, out-houſes or Kitchens where the poors Meat is dreſſed, Hoſpitals called Timarhanelar, Hans, or Houſes of Lodgings for Strangers or Travellers, publick Fountains, Shops for Artizans, and whole Streets of low Cottages for habitation of the poor, whoſe ſtock reaches not to a higher Rent.

All theſe Appendages bring ſome Revenue to the Moſch, which is conſtantly paid in to the Rector or Preſident thereof, called Mutevelli; but becauſe this is not a ſufficient maintenance, there are divers Lands, Villages, Mountains, Woods, and whole Countries aſſigned to this uſe, called Wakfi, which are hired out at certain Rents for the behoof and benefit of the Moſchs; ſome Rents being paid in Corn, others in Oil, and all ſorts of Proviſions; and out of every new Conquered Countrey, ſome part thereof is aſſigned to the uſe of Moſchs of modern Fabrick; as now from the Countrey gained lately about Newhauſell (which as I am informed from thoſe who gave in the account to the Grand Signior, there are 2000 Villages which pay Contribution to the Turk) are aſſigned certain Lands for encreaſe of the Rent of the Moſchs built at Conſtantinople by this preſent Queen-Mother: which Rents are ſometimes raiſed by the way of Tenths or Tithes, not that the Turk makes Tithes a duty or Rule for the maintenance of perſons, places, and things conſecrated to Divine Service, but as they find it a convenient and equal expedient in ſome Countries for leviation of their Rents. Such Countries and Villages as theſe which are called Wakfi, are greatly bleſſed and happy above others, in regard that the Inhabitants enjoy not onely particular privileges and immunities from thence, but freedom likewiſe from oppreſſion of Paſhaws and the Turkiſh Souldiery in their march, or of great Perſons in their journey or paſſage from one Countrey to another, who out of reverence to that lot to which they are ſeparated, abſtain from all kind of diſturbance and abuſe towards that people.

Other Moſchs of inferiour quality, founded by private perſons and the conſents of Derviſes and other Orders, which cannot have their Revenues in Land like the Moſchs of Royal Foundation, have their Eſtates in Money bequeathed by Teſtament or by Gift of the Living, which being lent out at eighteen in the hundred per annum, produces a conſtant Rent; and though Intereſt for the moſt part is forbidden by the Mahamitan Law, yet for the uſes of Moſchs and ſupport of Orphans it is allowed; in all other caſes is Haram and abominable. And becauſe the taking up of Money upon Loan is in ſome manner neceſſary and conducing to the better ſubſiſtence and being of Trade, and that men will not lend without a conſideration or benefit; the uſual manner is to borrow Money for a certain time, and in the Writing or Obligation to acknowledge the receipt of as much as the Principal and Intereſt may amount unto, and oftentimes double of the Capital ſumm; which being delivered before witneſs in a Bag or in Groſs, the Creditor declaring the ſumm to be ſo much therein contained, and the Debtor acknowledging it, the Teſtimony is valid when the Debt comes to be demanded. And thus much ſhall ſerve in brief to have declared concerning the Endowments and Manner of enriching the Turkiſh Moſchs, from whence the Conſtitution of others of the like nature may eaſily be collected.

CHAP. VIII.

The Nature of Predeſtination according to the Turkiſh Doctours.

THE Doctrine of the Turks in this point ſeems to run exactly according to the Aſſertion of the ſevereſt Calviniſts; and in proof hereof their Learned men produce places of Scripture, which ſeem to encline to the ſame Opinion. As, ſhall the Veſſel ſay to the Potter, Why haſt thou made me thus? I will harden the heart of Pharaoh; Jacob have I loved, and Eſau have I hated, and the like. For the Turks attribute no ſmall Reverence and Authority to the Old Teſtament, as wrote by Divine Inſpiration; but that the Alchoran being of later date, and containing the Will of God more expreſly and perfectly, the former is now abrogated, and gives place unto this.

Some are ſo poſitive in this aſſertion, that they are not fraid to ſay that God is the Authour of Evil, without diſtinction or evaſions to acquit the Divine Purity of the foulneſs of ſin according to the Doctrine of the Manichees. And all in general concur in this concluſion, That whatſoever proſpers, hath God for the Author; which was the reaſon they deſtroyed not Bajazet's Children during the time of his War againſt his Brother Selymus, expecting to receive an undoubted argument of the Will of God therein, from the good or bad fortune of the Father. And from the ſame rule they conclude much of the Divine approbation and truth of their Religion, from their Conqueſts and preſent Proſperity.

They are of opinion, that every man's deſtiny is writ in his forehead, which they call Naſip, or Tactir, which is the Book writ in Heaven of every man's fortune, and is by no contrary endeavours, counſels or wiſedom to be avoided; which Tenet is ſo firmly radicated in the minds of the Vulgar, that it cauſes the Souldiers brutiſhly to throw away their lives in the deſperate attempts, and to eſteem no more of their bodies, than as dirt or rubbiſh to fill up the Trenches of the Enemy: And to ſpeak the truth, this received aſſertion hath turned as much to account to the Turks, as any other their beſt and ſubtleſt Maxims.

According to this Doctrine, none ought to avoid or fear the Infection of the Plague; Ma-

homets precepts being not to abandon the City-houſe where the Infection rages, becauſe God hath numbred their days, and predeſtinated their fate; and upon this belief, they as familiarly attend the Beds, and frequent the company of Peſtilential perſons as we do thoſe that are affected with the Gout, Stone, or Ague. And though they evidently ſee that Chriſtians, who fly into better Airs, and from infected habitations, ſurvive the fury of the years Peſtilence, when whole Cities of them periſh and are depopulated with the Diſeaſe; yet ſo far is this opinion rooted amongſt them, that they ſcruple not to ſtrip the contagious ſhirt from the dead body, and to put it on their own, nor can they remove their abode from the Chambers of the ſick; it being the cuſtome in the families of great Men to lodge many ſervants on different Palats in the ſame room, where the diſeaſed and healthfull lie promiſcuouſly together, from whence it hath happened often, that three parts of a Paſhaws Family, which perhaps hath conſiſted of Two hundred men, moſt youthfull and luſty, have periſhed in the heat of July and Auguſts Peſtilence. And in the ſame manner many whole Families every Summer have periſhed, and not one ſurvivor left to claim the inheritance of the houſe; for want of which the Grand Signior hath become the Proprietour.

Though the Mahometan Law obliges them not to abandon the City, nor their Houſes, nor avoid the converſation of men infected with the Peſtilence where their buſineſs or calling employs them: yet they are counſelled not to frequent a contagious habitation, where they have no lawfull affair to invite them. But yet I have obſerved in the time of an extraordinary Plague, that the Turks have not confided ſo much to the precept of their Prophet, as to have courage enough to withſtand the dread and terrour of that ſlaughter ſickneſs hath made: but have under other excuſes fled to retired and private Villages, eſpecially the Cadees and men of the Law, who being commonly of more refined wits and judgments than the generality, both by reaſon and experience have found that a wholeſome Air is a preſerver of life, and that they have lived to return again to their own houſe in health and ſtrength, when perhaps their next Neighbours have through their brutiſh ignorance been laid in their Graves, And this is the opinion moſt general and current with the Turks, who are called Jabare: There is another ſort amongſt them called Kadere.

CHAP. IX.

The difference of Sects and diſagreement in Religion amongſt the Turks in general.

THere is no conſideration more abſtruſe and full of diſtraction, than the contemplation of the moſt ſtrange variety of Religions in the World: how it is poſſible that from the rational Soul of man, which in all Mankind is of little difference in it ſelf, and from that one principle, which is the adoration of a Deity, ſhould proceed ſuch diverſities of Faiths, ſuch Figments and Ideas of God, that all Ages and Countries have abounded with ſuperſtitions of different natures: And it is ſtrange to conſider, that Nations who have been admirably wiſe, judicious and profound in the Maxims of their Government, ſhould yet in matters of Religion give themſelves over to believe the Tales of an old Woman, a Pythoneſs, or the dreams and imaginations of a melancholy Hermit. And it is as ſtrange that men who embrace the ſame Principles in Religion, and have the ſame true and infallible Foundation, ſhould yet raiſe ſuch different and diſproportionate Fabricks, that moſt ſhould make their Superſtructure of Straw and Stubble, and but few of a ſubſtantial and durable Building, without uniformity, harmony or agreement each to other. For reſolution of which difficulties, nothing can be ſaid more than that the God of this World hath blinded the hearts of them that believe not, leſt the light of the glorious Goſpel of Chriſt who is the Image of God, ſhould ſhine unto them.

The Mahometan Religion is alſo one of the prodigious products of Reaſons Superfetations, which hath brought forth nothing good, nor rational in this production, more than the Confeſſion of one God. And yet even herein alſo are diverſities of Sects, Opinions and Orders, which are maintained in oppoſition each to other, with Emulation and Zeal by the Profeſſours, with heats, diſputes and ſeparations, terming the contrary parties prophane and unholy; the particulars of which Sects and diverſity in their Tenents, I ſhall as far as I have ſeen or could learn, ſet down and deſcribe, having with the more curioſity and diligence made the ſtricter Enquiry, becauſe I have not read any Authour which hath given a ſatisfactory account of ſuch Sects as are ſprung up amongſt them in theſe latter and modern times.

It is a common opinion, that there are ſeventy two ſects amongſt the Turks, but it is probable there are many more, if the matter were exactly known and ſcanned. The Turkiſh Doctours fanſie that the ſeventy two Nations which they call (Tetmiſh ekee Melet) into which the World was divided upon the Confuſion of the Languages of Babel, was a Type and a Figure of the diviſions which in after-Ages ſhould ſucceed in the three moſt general Religions of the World. In this manner they account ſeventy different Sects among the Jews, ſeventy one amongſt the Chriſtians, and to the Mahometan they aſſign one more, as being the laſt and ultimate Religion, in which, as all fulneſs of true Doctrine is compleated, ſo the Myſtery of iniquity, and the deviation of mans judgment, by many paths from the right rule, is here terminated and confined.

The Turks have amongſt themſelves as well as in other Religious, Sects and Hereſies of dangerous conſequence, which daily increaſe, mixing together with them many of the Chriſtian Doctrines (which ſhall in their due place be deſcribed) and in former times alſo a ſort of Fanatick Mahometans which at firſt met onely in Congregations under pretence of Sermons and Religion, appeared afterwards in Troops armed againſt the Government of the Empire.

So one Scheichee Bedredin Chief Juſtice of Muſa, Brother to Mahomet the Fifth King of the Turks; after the death of his Maſter, was baniſhed to Nice in Aſia, where conſulting with his ſervant Burgluzes Muſtapha, by what means they might raiſe Sedition and a ſecond War; they agreed, the readieſt courſe was by broaching a new Sect and Religion, and by perſuading the people to ſomething contrary to the ancient Mahometan ſuperſtition. Whereupon Burgluzes maſking his villany under a grave and ſerious countenance, tenance, took his journey into Aydinin, otherwiſe Caria, where he vented Doctrines properly agreeing to the humours of the people, preaching to them Freedom and Liberty of Conſcience, and the Myſtery of Revelations, and you may believe he uſed all arts in his perſuaſions, with which Subjects uſed to be allured to a Rebellion againſt their Prince, ſo that in a ſhort time he contracted a great number of Diſciples beyond his expectation. Bedredin perceiving his Servant thrive ſo well with his Preaching, fled from his place of Exile at Nice into Valachia, where withdrawing himſelf into a Foreſt like a devout Religious man, gathered a number of Proſelytes compoſed of Thieves, Robbers and Out-lawed people; theſe he having inſtructed in the principles of his Religion, ſent abroad like Apoſtles to preach and teach the people that Bedredin was appointed by God to be the King of Juſtice, and Commander of the whole World; and that his Doctrine was already embraced in Aſia: The people taken with theſe Novelties, repaired in great numbers to Bedredin, who conceiving himſelf ſtrong enough to take the Field, iſſued from his deſart with Colours diſplayed, and an Army well appointed; and fighting with his deluded multitude a bloudy Battel againſt thoſe Forces which Mahomet ſent to ſuppreſs him under his Son Amurath; the deluded Rebels were overthrown, Bedredin taken Priſoner, and his pretences of Sanctity and Revelation were not available to ſave him from the Gallows.

And thus we ſee that the name of God's cauſe, revelations, liberty, and the like, have been old and common pretences and deluſions of the World, and not onely Chriſtians, but Infidels and Mahometans have wrote the name of God on their Banners, and brought the pretence of Religion into the Field to juſtifie their cauſe.

CHAP. X.

Of the two prevailing Sects, viz. Of Mahomet and Hali; that is, the Turk and the Perſian; the Errours of the Perſian recounted and confuted by the Mufti of Conſtantinople.

THE two great Sects among the followers of Mahomet, which are moſt violent each againſt other, the mutual hatred of which diverſity of Education and Intereſt of the Princes have augmented, are the Turks and Perſians: The firſt hold Mahomet to have been the chief and ultimate Prophet; the latter prefer Hali before him; and though he was his Diſciple and ſucceeded him; yet his inſpirations they eſteem greater and more frequent, and his interpretations of the Law moſt perfect and Divine.

The Turk alſo accuſes the Perſian of corrupting the Alchoran, that they have altered words, miſplaced the Comma's and Stops, that many places admit of a doubtfull and ambiguous ſenſe; ſo that thoſe Alchorans which were upon the Conqueſt of Babylon brought thence to Conſtantinople, are ſeparated, and compiled in the great Seraglio, in a place apart, and forbidden with a Curſe on any that ſhall read them. The Turks call the Perſians, Forſaken of God, abominable and blaſphemers of the Holy Prophet; ſo that when Selymus the Firſt made War in Perſia, he named his Cauſe, the Cauſe of God, and proclaimed the occaſion and ground of his War to be the Vindication of the cauſe of the Prophet; and revenge of the blaſphemies the Perſians had vented againſt him; and ſo far is this hatred radicated, that the Youth of what Nation ſoever is capable of admittance into the Schools of the Seraglio, excepting onely the Perſian, who are looked upon by the Turk as a people ſo far Apoſtatized from the true Belief, and fallen into ſo deſperate an Eſtate by a total corruption of the true Religion, that they judge them altogether beyond hopes or poſſibility of recovery, and therefore neither give them quarter in the Wars, account them worthy of life or ſlavery.

Nor are the Perſians on the other ſide endued with better nature of good will to the Turks, eſtranging themſelves in the fartheſt manner from their Cuſtoms and Doctrines, rejecting the three great Doctours of the Mahometan Law, viz. Ebbubecher, Oſman and Omar, as Apochryphal and of no Authority; and have a Cuſtome at their Marriages to erect the Images of thoſe three Doctours of Paſte or Sugar at the entrance of the Bridal Chamber, on which the Gueſts firſt caſting their looks, leave the impreſſion of any ſecret Magick which may iſſue from their eyes, to the prejudice or misfortune of the Married Couple; for in the Eaſtern parts of the World they hold that there is a ſtrange faſcination innate to the eyes of ſome people, which looking attentively on any, as commonly they do on the Bridegroom and the Bride in Marriages, produce macerations and imbecillity in the body, and have an eſpecial quality contrary to procreation: and therefore when the Gueſts are entred, having the Malignity of their eyes Arreſted on theſe Statues, they afterwards cut them down and diſſolve them.

And that it may the more plainly appear what points of Religion are moſt controverted amongſt them, and what Anathema's and Curſes are by both ſides vented each againſt the other, this following ſentence paſſed by the Mufti Eſad Efendi, upon Schah Abbas Tutor to the King of Perſia, called Sari Haliſe, and all the Perſians, will be a ſufficient teſtimony and evidence of the enmity and hatred that is between theſe two Nations; an Extract of which is here drawn from the Book it ſelf, licenſed and approved at Conſtantinople.

If you had, ſays he, no other Hereſie than the rejection of thoſe elevated familiars of Mahomet, viz. Omar, Oſman and Ebbubecher, your crime would notwithſtanding be ſo great as were not expiable by a thouſand years of Prayer or Pilgrimage in the ſight of God; but you would be condemned to the bottomleſs Abyſs of Hell, and deprived for ever of Celeſtial bliſs; and this ſentence of mine is confirmed by the ſame opinion of the Imams, viz. Imam Azam, Imam Schafi, Imam Malick and Imam Hambeli, and therefore I friendly admoniſh you to correct this errour in your ſelves, and likewiſe in your Scholar King Abbas.

Nor are you contented to paſs with this ſingle errour, whereby you have gained the name of Kyzilbaſchi, that is, Perſian Hereticks, but you are become as abominable as the Durzi (a people that lives about Mount Libanus) of bad eſteem and reputation, corrupted in all points of Doctrine and Manners; ſo that I cannot but paſs this black ſentence upon you, that it is lawfull in a Godly Zeal to kill and deſtroy you for the ſervice of God; your Tenents being refuted by Giafer Efendi, who hath branded the Perſian, for Pagans, and in ſeventy ſeveral places of the Alchoran, and the very words of Mahomet demonſtrated the clearneſs of their errour.

If the Chriſtian onely for ſaying there is a Trinity in God is condemned for Life and Eſtate, why ſhould the Perſian expect better quarter, who is ſtigmatized for Hereſie in ſeventy places of the Alchoran? And one of your deteſtable opinions of the firſt rank is,

That you eſteem your ſelves obliged to aſſemble at the Moſchs, but not to Prayers: for what ſignifies your meeting, if not to Prayers? Mahomet himſelf ſays, That he who repairs to the Congregation without a deſign of Prayer, is a Hypocrite and a Diſſembler, is accurſed of God; nor ſhall be bleſſed in his Houſe or Eſtate, the good Angels ſhall abandon him, the Devils ſhall attend him, nor ſhall he ever proſper in this World, or in the World to come.

In anſwer hereunto you ſay, that the ancient Order of Prieſts is extinct, that you have none whoſe pious lives enable to preach and inſtruct you, or to be your leader to holy prayer in the Publick Aſſembly. Do there want pious and holy perſons of the Race of Mahomet? if there do not, why do not you imitate and follow them? but you are Enemies, and in open Hoſtility to the Mahometan Family, and excuſe your ſelves from the uſe of Prieſts or Imams, becauſe their innocence cannot equal that of Infants. In this point (it is true) you have ſomething of reaſon; for your Imams are not onely Infidels in Doctrine, but defiled in their converſation; and your King is your High Prieſt, frequents Stews, and the Styes of deformed Luſt, raviſhing fair and chaſt Wives from the embraces of their Huſbands; and that publickly in the face of the World, maintaining Concubinage with them. And where the example of a Prince makes ſuch things lawfull, his Subjects, whether Souldiers or Lawyers, will make no ſcruple to imitate his actions.

Chapter ſo called The Wife of Mahomet ſo called.

You deny the Verſe called the covering in the Alchoran, to be authentick; you reject the eighteen Verſes, which are revealed to us for the ſake of the holy Aiſche.

At the Abdeſt or Waſhing, you hold it not lawfull to waſh the bare feet, but onely lightly ſtroke them over.

Your Muſtachioes or hair on the upper Lip you never cut, but the Beard on the Chin, which is the honeſt Ornament of a man's countenance, you cut and clip into what form you pleaſe.

That holy Colour of Green appropriated to the Banner of Mahomet, which ought onely to adorn the nobler parts, you in deſpight of the honour of the Prophet, with an irreverent negligence, place it on your Shooes and Breeches.

Wine, which is an abomination to the true obſervers of the Law, you drink freely of, without ſcruple of Conſcience; as alſo in Meats you make no diſtinction between clean and unclean, but uſe all with a like indifferency. In ſhort, ſhould I mention all thoſe ſeventy points wherein you err, and are without all compariſon corrupt and erroneous, I ſhould ſwell my writing to a Volume, and not attain my end, which is brevity.

Another ſinfull cuſtome you permit amongſt you, which is, for many Men to be joyned to one Woman; for to whom of them can be appropriated the Off-ſpring that is born? What book have you, or Law, or example of any Nation to produce in approbation of this vile and unnatural cuſtome? How vile muſt thoſe Children be who are the iſſue of ſuch Parents? that it is no wonder there be none found amongſt you worthy the holy Character of a Prieſt or a Judge.

But you cannot be ſo irrational, as to deny that the Aſſembling in Moſchs to prayer, is neceſſary to Divine Service; Mahomet himſelf prayed together with the people, and ſometimes preferred Ebuhecher to celebrate the Divine Service, following him as others of the people did.

Why do not you ask your Pilgrims who come from Mecha, what mean theſe four Altars in the Moſch, which are the places of prayer deſigned to the four ſeveral Orthodox Sects? Why take you not example from theſe? But you are ſtill perverſe and obſtinate, haters of God and his Prophet; What will you anſwer at the day of Judgment before Mahomet and his four Friends? who long ſince being dead, you revive their Aſhes with ignominy, erecting their Statues at your Marriages in vulgar, and afterwards in contempt hew them down to yield paſtime and occaſion of laughter to the Spouſes and their Gueſts.

Was not the firſt converted to the Faith, Ebuhecher?

Was not Omar the braveſt Champion of the Mahometan Religion againſt the Chriſtians?

Was not he who diſpoſed and diſtinguiſhed the Chapters of the Alchoran, the chaſt Oſman?

Was not the braveſt and moſt Learned bearer of the Zulfecar, or the Sword with two points, was it not Hali? And were not Imam Haſſan, and Imam Huſein, Martyrs of the Faith in the Deſarts of Kerbela?

Did not Mahomet ſay with his own mouth, O Hali, for thy ſake there are two ſorts of people predeſtinated to Hell, one that loves thee, and one that loves thee not? Are not you then that wear red Turbants much to be condemned, being of evil life and converſation, and not well inclined to the houſe of the Prophet, nor the family of the faithfull, as it is written in the Book called Aadick? The Chriſtians conſerve the hoofs of that Aſs on which Chriſt rode, and ſet them in Caſes of Gold and Silver; and eſteem it an extream honour to have their Faces, Hands, or Heads, touched with ſo holy a Relick. But you who profeſs your ſelves Diſciples of the Prophet of God, and derived from the bloud and family of his Friends, deſpiſe ſo glorious a Title; commanding after the repetition of your Prayers, that is, after the Ezan, that Curſes and Blaſphemies be proclaimed againſt theſe holy Friends and Aſſociates of the Prophet.

That is, when the people are called to Prayers from the Steeple.

Beſides this, your Books maintain and avouch it lawfull to pillage, burn and deſtroy the Countries of the Muſſelmans, to carry their Wives and Families into ſlavery; and from a principle of malice and reproach to carry them naked through your Markets, and expoſe them to ſale to any Chapman; Pagans themſelves eſteem not this honeſt nor decent, by which it is apparent that you are the moſt mortal and irreconcilable enemies to us of all the Nations in the World, you are certainly more cruel to us than the Sezidi, the Kiafirs, the Zindics, than the Durzians; and in brief you are the Kennel of all uncleanneſs and ſin; a Chriſtian or a Jew may hope to become true Believers, but you can never.

Wherefore by virtue of that Authority I have received from Mahomet himſelf, in conſideration of your miſdeeds and incredulity, I pronounce it lawfull for any one of what Nation ſoever, that that is of the Believers, to kill, deſtroy, and extirpate you; ſo that as he who ſlays a rebellious Chriſtian, performs a meritorious action in the ſight of God; much rather he who kills a Perſian, ſhall obtain a reward ſeventy-fold from the fountain of Juſtice. And I hope that the Majeſty of God in the day of Judgment will condemn you to be the Aſſes of the Jews, to be rode and hacknied in Hell by that deſpiſed people; and that in ſhort time you will be exterminated both by us, the Tartars, the Indians and Arabians, our Brothers and Aſſociates in the ſame Faith.

CHAP. XI.

Of the Ancient Sects and Hereſies among the Turks.

THERE are four Sects into which the Mahometans of the eſteemed Orthodox belief are divided; and thoſe are theſe.

The firſt is called Haniffe, which is profeſſed in Turkey, Tartary, Eusbec, and on the other ſide of Jehun, Bactorus and Oxus.

The ſecond is Shaffe, whoſe Cuſtomes and Rules the Arabians follow.

The third is Malechee, to which Tripoli, Tunis, Algier, and other parts of Africa devote themſelves.

The fourth is Hambelle, of which are but few, and is known onely in ſome parts of Arabia.

Theſe four are all accounted Orthodox, and are followers of certain Doctours (as we may ſay amongſt Chriſtians, Scholars of Auguſtine, Thomas Aquinas, Dominicus, or the like) and have onely differences as to ceremonies, poſtures in their prayers, waſhings, diverſities in ſome points of their Civil Laws; and each maintains a charitable opinion of the other, as true Believers, and capable of entring into Paradiſe, if their life and converſation be regulated according to their Profeſſion and Tenets.

All Mahometans according to the Countries wherein they live, come under the notion of one of theſe four preceding Profeſſions; but yet are nominated with other names and differences of Sects, according as they follow the opinions which ſome ſuperſtitious and Schiſmatical Preachers amongſt them have vented; and thoſe commonly known and marked with the names of ancient Hereſies by the reſpective Opponents, which may properly be called ſo, becauſe they are converſant in their Doctrines concerning the Attributes and Unity of God, his Decrees and Judgments, his Promiſes and Threatnings, and concerning the propheſies and gifts of Faith, are eſpecially theſe which ſtand in oppoſition each to other, viz.

Moatazili		Septhatii
Kadari		Giabari
Morgii	To	Waidi
Sbii		Chawarigi.

From each of theſe Sects, as from ſo many roots ariſe ſeveral Branches of different Doctrines, as according to the Tenets of the Turkiſh Doctours complete the number of ſeventy two.

Moatazali ſignifies as much as Separatiſts; the reaſon of which denomination, was from Alhaſan the Scholar of Waſel Ebw Atw, the Author and Maſter of this Sect, to who the queſtion being propoſed, Whether thoſe who had committed a groſs ſin, were to be adjudged condemned, and fallen from the Faith? the Scholar Alhaſan inſtead of expecting the reſolution of his Maſter, withdrew himſelf, and began to interpret his ſenſe thereof to his other Fellow-Diſciples; from which withdrawing of himſelf they were afterwards denominated Moatazali, which is Separatiſts. But the name they give themſelves is the Defenders of the Equity and Unity of God, in declaration of the manner of which they ſo differ among themſelves, that they are divided into two and twenty Sects, which are maintained with that paſſion on all ſides, that every party accuſes his oppoſites of Infidelity. But the principle in which their wrangling Sophiſters accord in common, is this, That God is eternal, and that Eternity is an Attribute moſt properly agreeable to his Eſſence; but yet they reject the attribute it ſelf, ſaying, that God is eternal, wiſe, powerfull, and the like, by his own entire and ſingle eſſence; but yet they ſay he is not eternal by his eternity, nor wiſe by his wiſedom, nor powerfull by his power, for fear of admitting any multiplicity in the Deity, or incurring the like errour as they ſay of the Chriſtians who divide and diſhonour the Unity of God, by the conceptions they frame of the three perſons in the Trinity. And if the Chriſtians are to be blamed for introducing three Eternals, how much more are thoſe who frame as many Eternals as there are Attributes to the Deity?

Another ſort derived from this Sect called Haiesti, hold that Chriſt aſſumed a true and natural body, and was the Eternal and Incarnate, as the Chriſtians profeſs; and in their Creed or Belief have inſerted this Article, That Chriſt ſhall come to judge the World at the laſt day, and for proof hereof alledge an Authority out of the Alchoran in theſe words, Thou Mahomet ſhalt ſee thy Lord return in the Clouds: which though they fear expreſly in plain terms to interpret of Chriſt, yet they confidently affirm it to be propheſied of the Meſſiah, and in diſcourſe confeſs that that Meſſiah can be no other than Chriſt; who ſhall return with the ſame humane fleſh again into the World, Reign Forty Years on Earth, confound Antichriſt, and afterwards ſhall be the end of the World.

Another ſort of the Profeſſours of the Sect of Moatzali, are Iſi, whoſe firſt Author was Iſa Merdad; theſe maintain that the Alchoran was created, contrary to the expreſs word of Mahomet, who Anathematizes all who are of this perſuaſion, ſaying, let him be reputed an Infidel who believes the Alchoran created; for ſolution of which difficulty, and to concur with the words of their Prophet, they ſay, that the Alchoran delivered by Mahomet, was but a Copy tranſcribed out of that wrote by God and laid in the Library of Heaven, and that when their Prophet denies the Creation of the Alchoran, he hath no reference to the Original, but to his own hand-writing which he had Copied, and extracted from the firſt, and infallible exemplar.

Theſe alſo farther proceed to deny againſt the common Tenet of the Mahometans, the incomparable and Matchleſs Eloquence of the Alchoran; aſſerting that were it not prohibited, other Arabians might be found, who could far tranſcend every line of it in Wiſedom and Rhetorick; which in my opinion is a ſtrange kind of Impudence in the very face of their Prophet, who ſeems to be too proud of the exact diſpoſition, and full ſignification of every word, that he judges it not leſs charming for the ſweet ſound of its Eloquence, than it is convincing for the purity and truth of its Doctrine.

Sephati. The great Antagoniſts to the Moatazali, are the Sephati, who Aſſign in God Eternal Attributes of Knowledge, Power, Life, &c. And ſome of them proceed ſo far, and groſly herein, that they frame conceptions of corporeal Organs of Senſe, as of Hearing, Seeing and Speech, to be in God; affirming that thoſe expreſſions of God's ſitting in his Throne, Creation of the World by the work of his Hands, his Anger againſt Sin, Repentance for man's Converſion, which we call ἀνθρωποπαθεῖα, are to be taken in the literal and plain ſenſe, and have no need of farther fetched interpretations to clear the true notion of them: But yet herein their Doctours ſeem not to agree, ſome defining a body to be the ſame as, per ſe ſubſiſtens, denying it to be an eſſential propriety of a body to be circumſcribed and finite; others conclude that it is enough to ſay that God is great, without argument of his circumſcription, or determination to any particular place, with many other ſtrange conceits, whereby are made apparent the roving fancies of Ignorant Men, without the Rules or Grounds of Philoſophy or Metaphyſicks. But the ſoberer ſort amongſt them, who would appear more moderate and wiſer than the reſt, forbid their Scholars to make Compariſon of the Senſes in God, with thoſe of the Creature, who being more ſubtly urged by their ſevere opponents the Moatazali, they were forced to declare themſelves more plainly, in this manner, That the God which they worſhipped was a Figure, Viſible, and an object of the Sight, conſiſting of parts Spiritual and Corporeal, to which local Motion might be agreeable, but that his Fleſh and Bloud, His Eyes and Ears, his Tongue and Hands were not of any ſimilitude with created ſubſtances, but were of another Craſis and Mixture which ſubjected them to no Diſtemper or Corruption; in proof whereof they alledge the words of Mahomet, That God created Man after his own likeneſs: And all other of thoſe examples drawn from the Holy Scriptures with which the Alchoran is filled, and where in familiar expreſſions, the Divinity is pleaſed to condeſcend to the infirmity of humane Capacity.

Kadari. The next Sect is that of the Kadari, who deny wholly the Divine Decree or Predeſtination, affirming that every man is a free Agent, from whoſe will as from the firſt principle all good and bad actions flow and are derived; ſo that as with juſt reaſon God crowns man's good Works with the Rewards of Bliſs and Felicity; ſo on the other juſtly puniſhes his evil Actions in this World and in the next to come; and this they ſtyle the Doctrine of Equity, and define it to be a meaſure of man's actions, according to the rectitude and diſpoſition of that right line, which the prime Intellect hath drawn out by wiſedoms proportions. This opinion is abſolutely rejected as heterodox in the Mahometan Religion; and yet it is not fully determined how Mahomet moderated in the diſpute between Adam and Moſes, whom an Arabian Doctour comically introduced, pleading and juſtifying themſelves before God. Moſes beginning firſt, reproached Adam, that he was one immediately created by the proper hand of God, in whom the Divine Nature breathed the Breath of Life, whom Angels were made to adore, placed and ſeated in Paradiſe, and fortified with actual graces againſt the enormities and crooked irregularities of inferiour affections; from which happy ſtate that he ſhould fall and precipitate Mankind, together with himſelf, his crime was aggravated with all the degrees of his former perfection. Adam to excuſe himſelf, replyed in this manner. Thou Moſes whom God hath called to a familiar parly, revealed his Will and Pleaſure unto in thoſe engraven Tables, where all Morality and Vertue is contained, reſolve me this one Quere and difficult Probleme; How many years before I was created, doſt thou find that the Law was wrote? Moſes anſwered, Forty. And did you find, reply'd Adam, that Adam rebelled againſt his Lord and ſinned? to which Moſes anſwering in the affirmative. Do you blame me then, ſaid he, for executing that which God forty years before predeſtinated and deſigned me unto? and not onely forty years, but many Myriads of Ages before either the Heavens or Earth were framed. Mahomet confounded, as the Kadari report with this Argument, left the queſtion undetermined, though his followers, as Men are moſt prone to errour generally, entertain the contrary Tenent.

Ebnol Athir, Mr. Pocock de Moribus Arabum.

Jabari. The great Enemies diametrically oppoſed to theſe are the Jabari or Giabani, who maintain that a man hath no power over his Will or Actions, but is wholly moved by a Superiour Agent, and that God hath a power over his Creatures, to deſign them to Happineſs or to Miſery, as ſeems beſt to his Divine pleaſure; but in the explication of this opinion they proceed in the moſt rigorous manner, and ſay that man is wholly neceſſitated and compelled in all his actions; that neither his Will, nor Power, nor Election is in himſelf; and that God creates in him his actions, as he doth in Inanimate and Vegetable creatures the firſt principle of their Life and Eſſence; and as the Tree may be ſaid to produce Fruit, the Water to run, the Stone to move downwards, ſo are the Actions in Man, for which yet there is a reward and a puniſhment properly and neceſſarily allotted. This point is very ſubtily controverted by the Arabian Doctours, to which how the Turks are addicted, we ſhall farther diſcourſe in the Chapter of Predeſtination.

Morgi. The Sect of Morgi, are the great Favourers and Patrons of the Mahometan Religion, maintaining that a Muſſelman or Believer, though guilty of the groſſeſt ſins, is not puniſhed for them in this World, nor receives his abſolution or condemnation after death, untill the day of Reſurrection and Judgment: and farther, that as impiety with the true belief ſhall never be puniſhed; ſo Piety and good Works proceeding from a falſe and erroneous Faith, is of no validity or power conducing to the fruition of the joys of Paradiſe. And to theſe may not improperly be compared ſome Sectaries in England, who have vented in their Pulpits that God ſees no ſin in his Children; and that the infidelity of Sarah, being of the houſe of the faithfull, is more acceptable to God, than the Alms, Prayers and Repentance of an erroneous Believer, without the Pale and Covenant of grace.

Waidi. The oppoſite Sect to theſe are the Waidi, who eſteem that a man fallen into any great or mortal ſin, is put into the condition of a deſerter of his Faith; and though he be a profeſſour of the true Belief, ſhall yet without recovery for ever be puniſhed in Hell; but yet that his torments ſhall be in a more remiſs degree than that of Infidels; But that opinion which in this point is eſteemed Orthodox amongſt the Turks, is this, That a ſinner in a high nature going out of this world without repentance, is wholly to be committed to the pleaſure of God, either to pardon him for his mercy, or for the interceſſion of the Chap. Prophet Mahomet, according to what he ſaith in the Alchoran, My interceſſion ſhall be for thoſe of my own People who have greatly ſinned; that being firſt puniſhed according to the meaſure of their iniquity, they may afterwards in compaſſion be received into Paradiſe; for it is impoſſible they ſhould for ever remain in the eternal flames with the Infidels; becauſe it is revealed to us, that whoſoever hath but the weight of an Atom remaining in his heart of Faith, ſhall in due time be releaſed from fiery torments; for which cauſe ſome ſects amongſt the Turks uſe Prayers for the dead, and place their Cemeteries always by the ſide of Highways, that Paſſengers may be remembred of their own Mortality, and pray for the Souls of thoſe departed; of which we ſhall have occaſion to diſcourſe hereafter. The fictions the Mahometans frame of Hell, are as ridiculous as thoſe they fanſie of Paradiſe; For they imagine when they ſhall be called by Mahomet from this Purgatory at the day of Judgment, the way to him is over Iron Bars red hot with Fire, over which they muſt paſs with naked Feet; onely the Paper which they in their life time have taken from the ground and conſerved from being trampled on by the Feet of Men and Beaſts, ſhall at that day be ſtrowed on the Bars of this hot paſſage, that they may paſs that fire Ordeal with leſs torment; which is the reaſon the Turks ſee no ſmall piece of Paper on the ground, but they immediately ſtoop for it; and place it in ſome ſecret corner of a Wall, to redeem that (as they ſay) from the diſhonour of mens feet, on which the name of God is or may be wrote, and with expectation to enjoy the benefit promiſed, when the ſoles of their feet ſhall try the intenſe heat of this burning Iron. The ſame reſpect alſo they ſhew to Roſe-leaves, in conſideration (as they believe) that a Roſe was produced from the ſweat of Mahomet.

The Shii are the Sect ſpoken of before; oppoſed by the Subjects of the whole Ottoman Empire, as the moſt heretical of any of the reſt, in regard they prefer Ali before Mahomet in the Prophetical Office, and reſtrain the Prophetick gift to the natural line derived from Ali; and that none is worthy of the Title of a Prophet, who is guilty of ſin though of the lower nature; ſome of which Profeſſours called Alnoſairi, affirm that God appeared in the form of Ali, and with his Tongue proclaimed the moſt hidden Myſteries of Religion; and ſome have proceeded yet farther, to attribute to their Prophets divine honours, aſſerting them to be elevated above the degree and ſtate of the Creatures: theſe expect the return of their Prophet Ali in the Clouds, and have placed that belief as an Article of their Faith, from whence may ſeem to be grounded that miſtake amongſt our vulgar, that the Turks believe Mahomet ſhall again return into the World.

Chawarigi. To the foregoing are oppoſed the Chawarigi, who deny that there is or hath been any ſuch Function as that of a Prophet, allowed by God in any particular perſon; nor any ever ſent into the World endued with that power of Infallibility, to reſolve doubts, and teach and impoſe a new Law on Mankind; but if at any time ſuch an Office ſhould be neceſſary, it can never be reſtrained to one Lineage: for the perſon being faithfull and juſt, no matter whether he be a Servant or Free, a * Nabathean or a † Koraſchite.

* One of vulgar or rude ſort amongſt the Arabians.
† One of a noble family amongſt the Arabians.

Theſe are ancient Sects amongſt the profeſſours of the Mahometan Religion, out of which aroſe ſo many others as by the confeſſion of the Turkiſh Doctours complete the number of ſeventy three. But becauſe the accurate ſearch into ſo many is of little delight or profit to the Reader, I ſhall content my ſelf with having given him a taſte of theſe foregoing premiſſes; and ſhall now give an account how buſie theſe modern times have been at Conſtantinople in hammering out ſtrange forms and chimera's of Religion, the better to acquit England from the accuſations of being the moſt ſubject to religious innovation, the World attributing much thereof to the air and conſtitution of its Climate.

CHAP. XII.

Concerning the New and Modern Sects amongſt the Turks.

ALL Ages and times have produced their Sects and Hereſies in every Religion; and therefore we ſhall proceed in declaring ſome few that are of a freſher date than thoſe in the foregoing Chapter, and ſo ſhall continue to deſcend to others which this preſent Age hath begot.

Zeidi maintains that God will ſend a Prophet of the Perſians with a Law by which ſhall be annulled the Law of Mahomet. That called Zeidi is one of the latter edition.

A ſecond to this is derived from the Moatazeli, that denies any man can be ſtyled a Saint in this World, excepting the Prophets, who were without ſin; and that the true Believers ſhall in the next World ſee God as clearly as we ſee the Moon at full; againſt the Doctrine of Mahomet, who ſays God is inviſible either to us in this world, or the next. Derived from the Moatazeli.

There are alſo thoſe called Malumigee, who maintain God is perfectly to be known in this World: and that by the Doctrine of Cognoſce teipſum, the Creature proceeds to the perfect knowledge of his Creatour. Malumigee.

The Opponents to theſe are Mezzachulia, who hold that they which know God onely in this World by ſome glimmerings and rays of his Glory and Eſſence, is ſufficient to lead them into Paradiſe, and rank them in the number of the faithfull. Mezzachulia.

Another ſort there are called Jabaiah, which denies God's Omniſcience, affiming That God governs the World by Chance and Accidents, not comprehending from Eternity or at the Creation of the World, a perfect certainty of the particular Affairs that were to be tranſacted in it, and that God improves in knowledge by time, as men do by conſtant practice and experience. Jabaiah.

We ſhall not inſiſt here to multiply many of theſe Sects, who have almoſt as many diverſities amongſt the Turks, as there are Schools and Maſters; every Hogia that is but a Form above a meer Pedagogue, and reads a few Books of the Arabian Fables, eſteems himſelf of mean account, if by ſome ſingular opinion which he inſtills into his Diſciple, he diſtinguiſhes not his Gymnaſion from the common and inferiour Schools. But theſe theſe men in framing their particular fancies, and venting their follies, have a ſpecial care that none of their principles oppugn thoſe five points of practice, and one of faith, mentioned in the firſt Chapter of this Book, which are the eſſential points that conſtitute a Mahometan; or derogate from the Authority of their Governours, or produce factions or diſturbances in the State.

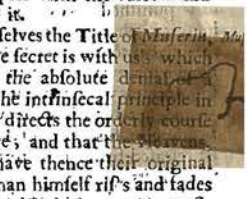
But theſe modern times have produced other Sects amongſt the Turks, ſome of which ſeem in part dangerous, and apt to make a conſiderable rupture in their long continued union; when time changes, and revolutions of State ſhall animate ſome turbulent ſpirits, to gather Souldiers and Followers under theſe Doctrines and other ſpecious pretences.

Kadezadeli. One of which is call Kadezadeli, a Sect ſprung up in the time of Sultan Morat, whoſe chief Propagatour was one Burgali Effendi, who invented many Ceremonies in praying for the Souls departed, at the burial of the dead. Thoſe that are of this Sect cauſe their Imaum to cry loud in the ears of the inanimate body, to remember that God is one, and his Prophet one. Thoſe who are principally devoted to this Sect, are the Ruſſians and other ſort of Renegado Chriſtians, who amongſt their confuſed, and almoſt forgotten notions of the Chriſtian Religion, retain a certain Memory of the particulars of Purgatory, and Prayers for the Dead.

But the opinion eſteemed Orthodox, and moſt generally allowed amongſt the Turks, is, That no Mahometan gones eternally to Hell, but after a certain ſpace of years is delivered thence, and paſſes into Paradiſe; After death they aſſign two ſorts of puniſhments; the firſt is called Azabe Kaberi, or the puniſhment of the Grave which being the bed of wicked men, binds with its Earth ſo faſt as it cruſhes their bones, and ſhuts the pores and creviſes through which they ſhould ſee into Heaven; but the bodies of good men enjoy the comfort of having a window from their dark incloſure, to behold the Viſion of God's glory. The other is the pain of Hell, where the ſouls remain untill their torments are accompliſhed, and Divine Juſtice ſatisfied.

Chupmeſſahi. There is an opinion of late years principally maintained amongſt the Gallants of the Seraglio, and common in Conſtantinople, the profeſſours of which are called Chupmeſſahi, or the good followers of the Meſſiah; theſe maintain that Chriſt is God and Redeemer of the World; the young Scholars in the Grand Signior's Court are generally devoted to this Tenent, eſpecially thoſe which are the moſt courteous, affable, and beſt diſpoſed; that it is grown into a Proverb amongſt them, when they would commend and praiſe gentleneſs and courteſie of each others nature, they do it with the expreſſion of Chupmeſſahiſen, as if they would ſay, You are gentle, accompliſhed and exceſſive in your favours, as becomes one who profeſſes the Meſſiah. Of this ſort of people there are great numbers in Conſtantinople, ſome of which have ſo boldly aſſerted this Doctrine, that they have ſuffered Martyrdom under this denomination, which is ſtill maintained, and ſecretly profeſſed by ſuch multitudes as wear white Turbants, that upon ſome notable opportunity were this Cauſe and Religion made the ground of ſome Toleration and Inſurrection amongſt its Diſciples and Profeſſours, it might take an unexpected footing, and prepare a ready way for the Plantation of the Goſpel: but of this we ſhall ſpeak more hereafter in its due place.

And becauſe it is our intent here to declare the ſeveral Religions amongſt the Turks, it will not be from our purpoſe to mention how far Atheiſm hath ſpread it ſelf into the Countries; and as Logicians illucidate one contrary with another, and Painters ſet off the Whiteneſs of their Colours with a foil of Jet, or other Blackneſs; ſo the privation of all Religion is not unaptly placed in the ſame Chapter with the various and different profeſſours of it.



Theſe then give themſelves the Title of Muſerin, which ſignifies, The true ſecret is with us; which ſecret is no other than the abſolute denial of a Deity, that nature or the intrinſecal principle in every individual thing directs the orderly courſe which we ſee and admire; and that the Heavens, Sun, Moon and Stars have thence their original and motion, and that man himſelf riſes and fades like the graſs or flower. It is ſtrange to conſider, what quantities there are of men that maintain this principle in Conſtantinople, moſt of which are Kadies and learned men in the Arabian Legends, and others are Renegadoes from the Chriſtian Faith, who conſcious of the ſin of their Apoſtaſie, and therefore deſirous that all things may conclude with this World, are the more apt to entertain thoſe opinions which come neareſt to their wiſhes. One of this Sect called Mahomet Effendi, a rich man, Educated in the knowledge of the Eaſtern Learning, I remember was in my time executed for impudently proclaiming his blaſphemies againſt the being of a Deity; making it in his ordinary diſcourſe, an argument againſt the being of a God, for that either there was none at all, or elſe not ſo wiſe as the Doctours preached he was, in ſuffering him to live who was the greateſt enemy and ſcorner of a Divine Eſſence that ever came into the World. And it is obſervable, that this man might, notwithſtanding his accuſation, have ſaved his life, would he but have confeſſed his errour, and promiſed for the future an aſſent to the principles of a better: but he perſiſted ſtill in his blaſphemies, ſaying, That though there were no reward, yet the love of truth obliged him to die a Martyr. I muſt confeſs untill now, I never could believe that there was a formal Atheiſm in the World, concluding that the principle (of the being of a God) was demonſtrable by the Light of Nature; but it is evident now how far ſome men have extinguiſhed this light and lamp in their Souls.

This poiſonous Doctrine is ſo Infectious, that it is crept into the Chambers of the Seraglio, into the Appartments of the Ladies and Eunuchs, and found entertainment with the Paſhaes and their whole Court; this ſort of People are great favourers and lovers of their own Sect, courteous and hoſpitable to each other; and if any by chance receives a Gueſt within his Gates of their own judgment, beſides his Diet and Fare with much freedom, he is accommodated with a handſome Bedfellow of which Sex he moſt delights: they are very frank and liberal, and exceſſive in their readineſs to do each other ſervice; It is ſaid, that Sultan Morat was a great favourer of this opinion in his Court and Militia, deſirous withal to propagate that of Kadizadeli amongſt the vulgar, that they being a ſevere, moroſe and covetous people, might grow rich, and ſpare for the benefit of his Exchequer; for the Sect of Kadizadeli before-mentioned, is of a melancholy and Stoical temper, admitting of no Muſick, chearfull or light diſcourſes, but confine themſelves to a ſet Gravity; in publick as well as private they make a continual mention of God, by a never wearied repetition of theſe words, Ilahe ila Ellah; that is, I profeſs there is one God: There are ſome of theſe that will ſit whole nights bending their bodies towards the Earth, reciting thoſe words with a moſt dolefull and lamentable Note: they are exact and moſt punctual in the obſervation of the rules of Religion, and generally addict themſelves to the ſtudy of their Civil Law, in which they uſe conſtant exerciſes in arguing, oppoſing and anſwering, whereby to leave no point undiſcovered or not diſcuſſed. In ſhort, they are highly Phariſaical in all their comportment, great admirers of themſelves, and ſcorners of others that conform not to their Tenents, ſcarce affording them a ſalutation of common communication; they refuſe to marry their Sons with thoſe of a different Rite, but amongſt themſelves they obſerve a certain Policy; they admoniſh and correct the diſorderly, and ſuch who are not bettered by their perſuaſions, they reject and excommunicate from their Society. Theſe are for the moſt part Tradeſmen, whoſe ſedentary life affords opportunity and nutriment to a melancholy and diſtempered fancy.

But thoſe of this Sect who ſtrangely mix Chriſtianity and Mahometaniſm together, are many of the Souldiers that live on the confines of Hungary and Boſna; reading the Goſpel in the Sclavonian Tongue, with which they are ſupplied out of Raguſa; beſides which, they are curious to learn the Myſteries of the Alcboran, and the Law of the Arabick Tongue; and not to be accounted rude and illiterate, they affect the Courtly Perſian. They drink Wine in the month of Faſt called the Ramazan; but to take off the ſcandal they refuſe Cinamon or other Spices in it, and then call it Hardali, and paſſes current for lawfull Liquor. They have a Charity and Affection for Chriſtians, and are ready to protect them from injuries and violences of the Turks: They believe yet that Mahomet was the Holy Ghoſt promiſed by Chriſt; and that the deſcending of the Holy Spirit on the day of Pentecoſt, was a Figure and Type of Mahomet, interpreting in all places the word παράκλητος, to ſignifie their Prophet; in whoſe Ear the white Dove revealed the Infallible directions to happineſs.

Potures a people of Boſna.

The Potures of Boſna are of this Sect, but pay Taxes as Chriſtians do; they abhor Images and the Sign of the Croſs; they circumciſe, bringing the Authority of Chriſt's example for it, which alſo the Copticks, a Sect of the Greek Church, imitated; but have now, as I am informed, lately diſuſed that cuſtome.

Another ſubtle point about the Divine Attributes hath begot a Sect amongſt the Janizaries, called Bektaſchi, from one Bektaſh, which ſeems an improper ſubject ſo deep in the Metaphyſical ſpeculation to trouble ſuch groſs heads as theirs; they began, (as it is ſaid) in the time of Soliman the Magnificent, and are called by ſome Zerati; that is, thoſe who have Copulation with their own Kindred, and by the vulgar Mumſconduren, or extinguiſhers of the Candle. This Sect obſerve the Law of Mahomet in Divine Worſhip, with a ſtrictneſs and ſuperſtition above any of the Preciſians of that Religion: but hold it unlawfull to adjoyn any Attributes to God, by ſaying that God is great, or God is mercifull, by reaſon that the nature of God being infinite and incomprehenſible, cannot fall under the weak and imperfect conceptions of man's underſtanding, which can imagine nothing applicable to his Nature. Of this Sect there was a famous Poet amongſt the Turks, called Nemiſi, that was flead alive, for ſaying, when the Emaum called the People to prayers, at the ordinary hours from the Steeple with the uſual word, Allah Ekber, God is one, That he lied, upon the ſuppoſition that no Epithete can be predicated of the Divine Eſſence. Amongſt the Janizaries are at preſent many principal Commanders of this Sect; but formerly were more in the time of Becktaſh Aga, Kul Kahya, Mahomet Aga, and others, who for their Rebellion in Conſtantinople (as we related before) were put to death under the Hiſtorical Pillar in the time of this preſent Emperours minority. Theſe people againſt the inſtinct of nature uſe Carnal Copulation promiſcuouſly with their own Kindred, the Fathers mixing with their Sons and Daughters, without reſpect to proximity of bloud or nearneſs in the degrees of relation, ſuffering themſelves to be tranſported contrary to the abhorrency of Nature, by a weak and illogical compariſon of the lawfulneſs and reaſon, that he who engrafted the Tree, and planted the Vine, ſhould rather taſte of the Fruit, than reſign the benefit of his labours to the enjoyment of others; and in this Argument act againſt the inclination of innate modeſty, according to that of Seneca,

Ferè quoque ipſæ Veneris evitant nefas,
Generiſque leges inſcius ſervat pudor,

Theſe people are eaſily induced to give falſe witneſs or teſtimony in the favour of their Sect, without conſideration of Equity or reaſonableneſs of their cauſe; by which means invading the right of others, they became rich and powerfull, untill they were debaſed by the deprivation of Becktaſhes Authority, and Power of other potent favourers of their Sect: and though afterwards upheld by Sudgi Beker, a Standard-Bearer of the Janizaries, a rich and learned man, they received a ſecond blow by his death, he executed by a Viſier Kupriuli Mahomet, for his diverſity in Religion and Wealth together; but farther animoſity againſt this Sect was diſſembled at that time, by reaſon of the multitude of thoſe profeſſours in Conſtantinople, and becauſe reaſon of State ſaw it at that time neceſſary to draw bloud in many parts of the Empire for other cauſes than for errours in Religion.

The Sect called Sabin, though Mahometans in profeſſion, ſeem yet to run contrary to the ſtream and general conſent of all its profeſſours, who give themſelves commonly the Title of Enemies and Confounders of Idolatry, and yet theſe notwithſtanding ſeem from the influence the Sun and Moon have on ſublunary bodies, of all living ſenſitive Creatures to conclude a certain Divinity in thoſe common Lights of the World. In Conſtantinople there are ſome few Aſtrologers and Phyſicians of this Sect, but in Parthia and Media they are numerous, the Men commonly worſhipping the Sun, and the Women the Moon, and others the Artick Pole; they are not ſtrict in a ſeverity of life, or in the conformity to the preſcriptions of their Law, but govern themſelves with morality and prudence. They are not apt to believe the immortality of the Soul, nor the reward of Vertue, or puniſhment of Vice in the next World; nor prone to vindicate themſelves from injuries reproachfull language, or other evil actions, of men, but regarding them as the natural effects of the Celeſtial influences, are no more provoked by by them than we are with a ſhower of Rain for wetting us, or the intenſe heat of the Sun in the Summer Solſtice.

Munaſibi, is a Sect purely Pythagorical, which believes the Metempſychoſis or Tranſmigration of Souls, of which there are ſome in Conſtantinople, one Albertus Bobovius a Polonian by Nation, but educated in the Seraglio, and inſtructed in all the Learning of the Turkiſh Literature (from whom I freely confeſs to have received many of my obſervations) related to me a pleaſant diſcourſe that paſſed between him and a Dorgiſt at Conſtantinople touching this ſubject. This Dorgiſt being Learned, was the occaſion that Albertus frequented his Shop the oftner; and once being after ſome familiar acquaintance at a Collation together, it chanced that a black Dog giving them interruption at their Banquet, that Albertus kicked him to drive him to a farther diſtance; at which the Dorgiſt growing pale and diſordered, Albertus gueſſed by his countenance that he was diſpleaſed at this unkindneſs towards the Dog; and therefore deſired his pardon if thereby he had given him any ſubject of offence: the Dorgiſt being thus pacified with the courteſie of his Gueſt, adviſed him to ask pardon of God, for that it was no ſmall crime and ſin that he thereby committed. This happening at the ſame time that the Funerals of a Mufti called Behai Efendi, were then ſolemnizing, afforded an occaſion of diſcourſe concerning the Soul of the Mufti and Dog together; the Dorgiſt demanding the opinion of his Gueſt whether he conceived the Soul of that Mufti was predeſtinated to remain within the Confines of the Grave, untill the day of Reſurrection? in the knowledge of which queſtion Albertus ſeeming wholly ignorant, and deſirous to underſtand the ſolution from him: the Dorgiſt began freely to declare that the Souls of men deceaſed enter into the Bodies of Beaſts, which are in temperament moſt agreeable to the diſpoſitions of thoſe whom before they animated: as the Soul of the Glutton enters into the Swine, the Soul of the Laſcivious into the Goat, of the Generous into the Horſe, of the Vigilant into a Dog, and ſo the like; in proof of which he producing a Book treating of all the diſtinctions of Nature, and the proper aſſignments for their habitation after death: Adding moreover, that of this opinion it was pity there were ſo few in Conſtantinople, ſome there were, and thoſe all of his own Trade and Profeſſion, but that at Grand Cairo were great numbers, ſtrict adherers to this Doctrine: that for his part he prayed to God with the reſt of his Brothers of the ſame Trade, that their Souls may hereafter be ſo honoured as to inform the body of the Camel, becauſe they are Beaſts that are laborious, abſtemious, patient and meek, and bring their Dorges from the remoteſt part of the Eaſt: and that he did not doubt but after the Circle of 3365 years, that his Soul had travelled for ſeveral Ages through the World, and wandred from the body of one Camel to animate another, it ſhould with the viciſſitude of time return again to a humane body, more purified and refined than in its firſt Principles. And this was the Credo of the Dorgiſt, to which opinion it is ſaid all China is greatly devoted.

Eſchraki, which ſignifies illuminated, is a Sect purely Platonical, contemplative of the Divine Idea, and the number in God; for though they hold the Unity, yet they deny not the Trinity, as a number proceeding from the Unity; which conception of theirs they uſually illuſtrate by three folds in a Handkerchief, which may have the denomination of three; but being extended, is but one entire piece of Linen. Theſe men are no great admirers of the compoſition of the Alchoran; what they meet therein agreeable to their principles, they embrace and produce as occaſion ſerves in confirmation of their Doctrine; other parts which with difficulty are reconciled they reject, and ſtyle abrogated: and becauſe they apprehend that the true beatitude and bliſs of Paradiſe conſiſts in the contemplation of the Divine Majeſty, they contemn all the fancies and groſs conceptions of Heaven, which Mahomet hath framed to allure and draw the mind of rude and groſs men. Of this Sect are all the Scheghs or able Preachers that belong to the Royal Moſchs or Churches; who are men conſtant in their devotions, abſtemious in their diet, of a chearfull countenance, and taking behaviour, great lovers of Harmony and Muſick, of an indifferent ſtrain in Poetry, whereby they compoſe certain Songs in Metre, for entertainment of their Auditory. They are likewiſe generous and compaſſionate of humane frailty; and are not Covetous, Stoical, or Conceited of themſelves, by which means their behaviour is rendred extremely taking through all Conſtantinople; they are greatly delighted with an ingenious Aſpect in youth, and from thence gather matter of contemplation on the comelineſs of the increated beauty: they are addicted to entertain a charitable affection for their neighbour, becauſe (as they ſay) he is a Creature of God, from whom our love is converted to the Creatour. Their Diſciples they procure, as much as poſſible, to be men of comely and pleaſing countenances, and Majeſtick preſence, whom they inſtruct in all the rules of abſtinence, gravity, and other vertues moſt appropriated to their Sect. And theſe of all ſorts of Turks ſeem worthy of the beſt Character, whom I compaſſionate, for not being born within the Pale of a Chriſtian Church, nor duely inſtructed in the Myſtery of Chriſtianity, to which they ſeem by their morality and vertues already to have prepared many previous diſpoſitions.

A Sect much different to that immediately foregoing is the Haireti, ſignifying amazed, and doubtfull in determination of all controverſies, who can endure any thing rather than to controvert opinions, and diſpute one queſtion in chaſe of truth: they will neither undertake to perſuade or diſſuade, but like the Academicks affirm that falſity may by the wit and contrivance of man be dreſſed in a habit as not to be diſtinguiſhed from truth it ſelf; and on the contrary, truth may be ſo diſguiſed with Sophiſtry and Deluſions as to be rendred as deformed and ugly, as falſhood, and therefore they conclude all queſtions to be meerly probable, and no ways admitting of certain demonſtration; ſo that in points of dubious controverſies their common ſayings are, Allah Bilur, God knows, bize karanuk, it is unknown to us, and ſuch like expreſſions ſavouring of negligence and a bruiſh want of curioſity to ſearch into the Studies of Arts and Sciences. Of this Sect ſome notwithſtanding are Preachers, and from that degree are promoted to the Office of Mufti, in which they behave themſelves according to their affected careleſneſs, with a readineſs and facility to ſubſcribe all ſentences to the ſatisfaction and in favour of the demandant; adding for the moſt part theſe words, Well abu ealem biſſenah, God knows that which is beſt. As to the manner of their life and practice, they are punctual obſervers of the Rites of the the Mahometan Religion and Conſtitutions of their Civil Law, but much incline to yield to the courſe of their own nature, and the force of paſſion; they drink Wine not to appear Cynical or unſociable, but more generally addict themſelves to Electuaries compoſed of Opium, which tends to augment their natural ſtupefaction; and when they are overcome with the obſcurity of this vapour, whatſoever you affirm, though never ſo contradictory, they readily aſſent to, not ſo much (as they confeſs) from a perſuaſion to one propoſition more than another, but of a pleaſing compliance to their companions, which humour the nature of their Sect allows of. And though they ſtile the Eſchraki Dogmatical and obſtinate Opiniators, yet by experience it is obſerved that the Mufties Educated in the Eſchrakian Schools have been much more fortunate than thoſe of the Hairetian Sect; becauſe the former having a certain foundation of principles, have been cautious in ſigning Fetfas, or delivering their Sentence in the reſolution of weighty Matters of State, chuſing rather to renounce their Office, than their reaſon. But the others being negligent and incurious in their determinations, as if fortune did direct them more to the true part than ſolidity of judgment; have been always free and open in their Sentences; by which means events of State falling out unhappily, and the miſcarriage attributed to the counſel of the Mufti, they have been oftner ſubject to the puniſhment of baniſhment or death than their Opponents.

We ſhall not proceed to ſwell this Work with a longer Catalogue of theſe Sects, leſt we ſhould ſeem over-tedious to the Reader, and inſtead of pleaſing his Palate, ſhould over-charge his Stomach; otherwiſe we might proceed to recite as many Sects as there are Towns or Schools in the Empire, in every one of which ſome pragmatical Preacher or other have always ſtarted a new opinion, which can never want Diſciples. And certainly the diverſity of opinions in Turky is almoſt infinite, and more numerous than in England, or other parts of Chriſtendom, though commonly not proceeding from the ſame malice, nor laid with the ſame deſign to the prejudice of the State: the reaſon of this variety amongſt the Turks I attribute to the many Religions which voluntarily, and for intereſt or by force have entred into the Mahometan ſuperſtition, many of which being Grecians, and inſtructed in the Arts and Sciences with which that Empire once flouriſhed, which was the Mine and Treaſury of Philoſophy and Learning, did afterwards mix with their new Religions (not being wholly ſatisfied with the Alcoran) certain Traditions and Opinions of the ancient Philoſophers: And ſeveral other Nations, as Ruſſians, Moſcovites, Circaſſians, and the like, retaining ſome few remembrances of their firſt Notions and Principles, make a farther addition to this ill compounded medley, which alſo receiving ſome difference and variety as they encreaſed and were propagated, have multiplyed into a number both unprofitable and tedious to ſearch farther into.

CHAP. XIII.

Of the Derviſes.

IT is commonly known and received, that the Turkiſh Religion is an abſurd Compoſition of the Chriſtian and Jewiſh Rites; in imitation of the former of which doubtleſs their Monaſteries and Orders of Religious men were introduced; moſt of which incline to a pretended mortification and ſtrictneſs of life; to Poverty, and Renunciation of the Worlds enjoyments, according to the devotion of Chriſtians a thouſand years paſt, whoſe piety and exemplary lives drew Infidels to extract a rough Copy of their elevated vertues.

I have been the more curious in making an exact enquiry into the Cuſtoms, Inſtitutions, and Doctrines of the Mahometan Convents, becauſe I find relations hereof ſparingly ſcattered in other Books, and that obſcurely without punctuality or certainty: But I ſhall promiſe my Reader to deliver nothing herein, but what I have good Authority for, and taken from the mouth of the moſt Learned of ther Seighs or Preachers, which are the Heads or Superiours of theſe Societies.

The Doctors of the Mahometan Law inform me, that their Religious Houſes and Inſtitutions, are as ancient as Mahomet, from whom general orders and inſtructions were derived from their œconomy, firſt to his Diſciple Hali; but our Turkiſh Hiſtory and other Records make no mention of theſe Monaſteries, till within theſe Three hundred and fifty years, in the time of Orchanes ſecond King of the Turks, who is famed to have been the firſt Founder of Houſes of theſe Orders.

Thoſe of the Mahometan Faith, who firſt framed Rules and Inſtitutions for theſe Religions, were two, viz. Calvettee and Nackſbendee, which after Mahomet are eſteemed the two Fountains from whence other Orders are produced, which are theſe following; from Chalvettee are derived.

} Their Original Founders.

Theſe ſeveral Orders we ſhall diſtinctly touch upon, beginning with the Mevelevee, which though ſet down here laſt, yet becauſe for fame amongſt the Turks, they are the firſt, we ſhall moſt largely and particularly treat of them.

Their Superiour.

The Mevelevee, otherwiſe and moſt commonly named Derviſe, which word ſignifies Poor and Renouncers of the World, have their chief and ſuperiour Foundation in Iconium, which conſiſts of at the leaſt four hundred Derviſes, and governs all the other Convents of that Order within the Turkiſh Empire, by virtue of a Charter given them by Ottoman firſt of the Mahometan Kings, who out of devotion to their Religion once placed their Prior or Superiour in his Royal Throne, becauſe having been his Tutour, and he who girted on his Sword (which is the principal Ceremony of Coronation) he granted him and his Succeſſours ample Authority and Rule over all others of the ſame Profeſſion.

Their Poſtures.

They pretend to great Patience, Humility, Modeſty, Charity, and Silence, in preſence of their Superiour or others; their eyes are always fixed downwards, their heads hanging towards their breaſt, and their bodies bending forwards.

Their Cloathing.

Their Shirts are of the courſeſt Linen can be made, with a white Plad or Mantle about their ſhoulders: but moſt wear a looſe kind of Garment made of Wool at Iconium or in Anatolia, of a dark colour; their Caps or what they wear on their heads is like the Crown of a Hat of the largeſt ſize, made of a courſe Felt of a whitiſh colour, their Legs are always bare, and their Breaſts open, which ſome of them burn or ſear in token of greater devotion: they wear alſo a Leather girdle, with ſome ſhining ſtone upon the Buckle before, either of Marble or Alabaſter, Porphyry, Ivory, or ſomething that makes a great ſhew or luſtre; they always carry with them a ſtring of Beads, which they call Tesbe, and often run them over, than our Fryars do their Roſary; at every Bead repeating the name of God. When the Prior of this Order dies, they commonly ſet a Hearſe for him in a Chapel, and upon it lay a long ſtring of Beads as big as Walnuts. It is alſo common amongſt other Turks to carry Beads in their hands to play with; and they ſay that when they have no other employment, that kind of divertiſement drives away idle and evil thoughts.

Their Faſts. Beſides their Faſt of Ramazan, they keep a weekly Faſt on every Thurſday, on which day, none unleſs for ſome indiſpoſition of health, or other lawfull cauſe, hath licenſe to eat, until after Sun-ſetting.

Every Tueſday and Friday the Superiour of the Convent makes a Sermon or Expoſition of ſome Verſes in the Alchoran, or out of the Books wrote by the Founder, or ſome other prime Doctour of the Mahometan Law; after which is done, the Derviſes with marvellous modeſty and reverence bowing to their Superiour, begin to turn round, ſome of them with that ſwift motion, that their faces can ſcarce be ſeen, a certain Pipe made of a Cane, ſounding all the time of this motion; and on a ſudden, when the Muſick ceaſes, they all ſtop with that exactneſs and firmneſs, ſhewing no ſymptoms of a diſordered or ſwimming Brain; to which having accuſtomed themſelves from their infancy or youth, in ſome years that motion becomes as natural, with as little diſturbance to their head or ſtomach, as to walk forward, or to uſe any other exerciſe which nature is delighted with. This cuſtome (they ſay) they obſerve with great devotion in imitation of their firſt Founder Mevelana, who for fourteen days together, and without taking any nouriſhment, uſed this Virtiginous motion by a miraculous aſſiſtence (his Friend Hamze, or Companion, all that time ſounding by him with his Flute or Pipe) until at laſt falling into an ecſtaſie, he received ſtrange Revelations, and Divine commands for the inſtitution of this his Order: The Pipe they play on, they eſteem for an ancient ſanctified ſort of Muſick, and to be that on which Jacob and the other holy Shepherds in the Old Teſtament praiſed God.

Their turning round. It hath a dolefull melancholy ſound; but their conſtant exerciſe and application thereunto makes it as Muſical as can be imagined in ſuch an Inſtrument: the beſt of thoſe Canes are eſteemed to come from Iconium, and are of twenty five Dollars price. But this ſort of devotion with inſtrumental Muſick, is by Turks themſelves diſputed againſt, denying that their Founder, who was ſo ſpiritual a man, did ever inſtitute, or himſelf uſe Muſick in his turning round, becauſe the Alchoran expreſly forbids all devotion and ſervice of God with Muſick, but onely with the natural and living Voice; And that is the reaſon why in calling their people to prayers they uſe no Bells, but onely the Voice of a Man; and for this cauſe I remember, that in my time prohibitions have been made by publick Authority againſt this practice of the Derviſes. But they on the contrary, alledging David's example, and his Dancing before the Ark, as arguments for their Muſick and Giration, have by the help of ſeveral perſons in power, many of them being greatly affected with their devotion, maintained from time to time this cuſtome and inſtitution of the firſt Founder of this Order notwithſtanding that one Vanni Efendi, a great Seigh or Preacher, eſteemed as a knowing perſon by the Grand Signior, and all the Court, hath by his Authority endeavoured to Reform this Corruption (as he calls it) amongſt them.

Their Profeſſion. They profeſs Poverty, Chaſtity, and Obedience, like Capuchin Fryars or other Orders of St. Francis; but if any have not the gift of Continence, he may obtain licenſe to leave his Convent and Marry; but of theſe, they obſerve that none ever thrived or lived happily with contentment, that renounced this Dedication to God's Service.

Their Employment. The Novices ſerve in the moſt ſervile Offices, and in time others ſupply their places; they lie as Companions two together in a Cell, ſome of which employ their time in Learning to Reade and Write in Turkiſh, Arabick and Perſian, but moſt yield to the ſlothfull temperament to which they are naturally addicted: but becauſe the nature of Man is reſtleſs, and muſt employ it ſelf either in good or bad actions; moſt of theſe aſſociates exerciſe ſome kind of Legerdemain, or tricks to amuſe the minds of the common people; and ſome really apply themſelves to Sorceries and Conjurations by help of familiar Spirits. Busbequius tells ſtrange ſtories of one with whom he was acquainted, and he would ſtrike a ſtone of great weight and bigneſs againſt his bare Breaſt with that force and violence as were ſufficient to knock down an Ox, or break the bones of the ſtouteſt Gyant; and that the ſame man he hath ſeen take an Iron Bar red hot from the Fire and hold it in his mouth, and though the ſpittle and moiſture of his mouth hiſſed with the heat, yet he ſeemed to take it thence again without the leaſt hurt or burning Imaginable.

This ſort of people of all other Turks, addict themſelves to drink Wine, Strong Waters, and other intoxicating Liquors; and eat Opium in that quantity, by degrees uſing their bodies thereunto that no Mountebank or Mithridates himſelf who was nouriſhed by Poiſon, are capable to digeſt half that proportion that theſe men will do; the effect of which is at firſt, like men drunk or mad, to raiſe their ſpirits to a ſort of diſtracted Mirth, and afterwards when the ſubtile vapours are conſumed and ſpent, and a dull ſtupefaction overcomes them, they name it an ecſtaſie, which they account very holy and divine in imitation of their firſt Founder, who was often obſerved to put himſelf into this condition; and therefore what helps may be found to excite mirth or diſtraction, is lawfull and allowable in this Order.

There is a famous Monaſtery of theſe in Egypt, invoking for their Saint one Kederlee, which by the Stories they tell of him ſhould be S. George, in conformity with whom all other Derviſes maintain a reverent eſteem of this Saint, affirming that in his life time he was a valiant Horſeman, killed Dragons and all ſorts of venomous beaſts; and now being departed this life, God for preſervation of good men, hath given him power to deliver ſuch as being in diſtreſs, invoke his aſſiſtence; aſſiſtence; eſpecially thoſe who are at Sea, and at the point of ſhipwrack; and that he with an extraordinary ſwiftneſs of motion flies from one part of the World to another in the twinkling of an eye, and ſeaſonably comes in to their ſuccour. Theſe by virtue of that bleſſing Kederlee confers upon them, pretend to charm Serpents and Adders, and handle them as familiarly as we do the moſt innocent and domeſtick Creatures; which art, as I have heard from good Authority, is not peculiar in Egypt onely to Derviſes, but to other men who are ſaid to be naturally endewed with a virtue againſt the poiſonous bites of Vipers and other venomous Beaſts; who putting great numbers of them into a Bag together, do cull and ſort them out with their hands, as one would do Worms or Muſſels; and others with a word charm Serpents from moving as they crawl along the Banks of Nile, which Gifts theſe men pretend to inherit from their Parents, and others to poſſeſs in reward of their Vertue and Sanctity. This ſort of Egyptian Derviſes have Sainted the Horſe of St. George, and have ſeated him in Paradiſe with the other three beaſts in high reſpect and eſteem amongſt the Turks, viz. the Aſs on which Chriſt rode, the Camel of Mahomet, and the Dog of the ſeven Sleepers.

Theſe Derviſes have Monaſteries in the moſt famous places of the Turkiſh Empire, which ſerve the travelling Pilgrims of this Order for Inns and places of entertainment: for they above all other Religious Turks, journey and travel from one place to another, where the Mahometan Religion is profeſſed, under pretence of preaching and propagating their Faith; and thus they travel upon Charity of their Monaſteries and Alms of others, into Perſia, China, and the Dominions of the Mogul, by which means they become the beſt ſpies and intelligencers of any that are found in the Eaſtern parts of the World.

I remember at Adrianople to have ſeen the ruine of one of theſe Monaſteries ſituated on a pleaſant Hill, and in good Air, that overſees the whole City and Plains round about; which upon enquiry I underſtand was demoliſhed by the famous Vifier Kuperli; becauſe it was diſcovered to be a Rendezvous of the lewd Women of the Town, and a Stew where the young Gallants debauched the Wives of the richeſt Turks, to whom their Husbands had given liberty in honour to the Sanctity of the place, to be often preſent at the devotion of the Derviſes; but their way of practice being too publick and ſcandalous, the Foundation of their Houſe by the order of the Vifier was razed to the ground.

CHAP. XIV.

Of the Order of Religious Turks called Ebrbuharee.

THis Order of Ebrbuharee was firſt inſtituted by their Founder and Inſtitutor Ebrbuhar, from whom they have their denomination, who herein followed the Precepts and Rules of his Maſter Mackshende, from whom in like manner the Order of Mevelevee or Derviſes are derived: for the better underſtanding this ſort of people, the Reader may take this following, as an authentick diſcourſe relating to their Manners and Original, which I ſhall deliver Verbatim as given me in writing by one eſteemed Learned amongſt the Turks, and was a Hadgi or Pilgrim, and made it his buſineſs to inform me of this Sect. Sultan Bajazet, ſaid he, in the year of Mahomet Nine hundred and eleven, erected a Moſch and Convent in Conſtantinople, dedicated to this Holy Emir Ebrbuhar (that is the Race of Mahomet) upon whom reſts the mercy of the Creatour. This man both extrinſecally as to appearance in the World, and intrinſically as to his devout Soul, was famous and renowned for the Miracles he worked; on which Fabrick Sultan Selim afterwards beſtowed a Fountain of Water.

This Ebrbuhar Scholar of Mackshende, taking into his company the aſſiſtence of Abdulla and Ilahi and Veſa, Preachers and Heads of other Convents, came out of Aſia to propagate their Doctrine in Europe. Ilahi.

Their actions were governed with Meekneſs, Gravity and Silence, and laying aſide all ſuperſtitious Worſhips, they exerciſe themſelves in pious actions; their diſcourſes amongſt themſelves were nothing in relation to the things of the world, but of Matters relating to a future life.

Theſe poor Religious faſt for the moſt part on Mundays and Thurſdays; and both they and thoſe devoted to their order abſtain from all Meats that carry with them any fetulent or ungratefull ſmells, and in this manner theſe devout people exerciſed in abſtinence and a moral life, and ſwallowed up or tranſported with the illumination of God, and attending to their daily prayers, Commemoration of God's mercy, and other offices of devotion, acquire a holy diſpoſition and preparation for Celeſtial glory.

As to the Holy Emir Ebrbuhar, whoſe Myſterious life may God ſanctifie to us, he was nouriſhed with Bread made of Barly, Oil of Olives, Hony and Grapes, and abſtained from all things of a ſtrong ſcent or ſavour; he eat but three times a year, giving himſelf continually to Faſting and Prayer; he was a man of great Sanctity, full of Divine Revelation, his attractive vertue was gratefull to all, to his Feet from divers Countries were many diſeaſed perſons brought, which afterwards returned ſound and healthfull to their own homes; all which is the relation of my Doctour and great admirer of the Mahometan Religion.

In commendation of the Religious of this Order, are theſe Verſes in the Perſian Tongue,

Gher hakiki iahi der gehan bulendi
Nakschibendi Kiun Nakschibendi; that is,

If thou wouldſt find in the World one accompliſhed as a true Heroe, make thy ſelf a Nakſchibendi, who is the true pattern of a Servant of God.

And notwithſtanding this great pretended purity and ſanctity of theſe men, they are yet by the generality eſteemed Hereticks in the Mahometan ſuperſtition, becauſe they judge themſelves not obliged to the Pilgrimage of Mecha, by reaſon of their pretended purity of Soul and Seraphick Raptures, which elevate them above the World, and enable them in their very Cells to be preſent or have a clear Proſpect into their Holy Mecha.

CHAP. XV.

Of the Nimetulahi.

ONE of thoſe who are accounted in the number of Chalvetti is the Nimetulahi; they had their beginning in the Hegira or year of Mahomet 777, and their denomination from one of that name, famous for his Doctrine and ſeverity of life in the time of Sultan Mahomet, Son of Bajazet, called by the Turks Ilderim, or the Son of Thunder, He was an excellent Phyſician, and renowned for his vertues amongſt the vulgar; for better knowledge of his Life and Doctrine, the Reader may take notice what one of this Order related to me in admiration of his Maſter.

He was one, ſaid he, who preached and publiſhed the Truth, mortifyed his Body, followed not the affections of the carnal Appetite, knew the intrinſick nature and quiddity of all Creatures, rendred continual Prayers and Praiſes to his Creatour; and ſo long reſigned himſelf entirely to ſpeculation, untill he arrived to the raviſhment of Ecſtaſies and Raptures, in which he oftentimes obtained the happineſs to diſcourſe with God.

He eat of all thoſe things which God made lawfull for humane nouriſhment, without obſervation of Faſts or ſtrictneſs in Diet, but day and night continued his Prayers and Devotions: while he ſlept he extended not his feet like the Beaſts of ſenſe, who eat Corn and Hay in the Stables; ſometimes the fear of God made him tremble, and his countenance became melancholy and affrighted with the apprehenſion of his Majeſty. And to this perfection none ever arrived, nor to that intimate knowledge of the Divine Secrets.

The Profeſſours of this Order aſſemble every Monday night to praiſe the Unity of the Divine Nature, and Celebrate the name of God with Hymns and Songs.

Thoſe that would initiate themſelves into this Order, are obliged to make a Quarentine firſt, remain ſequeſtred in a Chamber for the ſpace of forty days, with twenty four drams of Meat a day, during which time they ſee the Face of God, the ſublime Paradiſe, and praiſe the Creatour and Framer of the Univerſe; at the expiration of their term, they are taken forth by the reſt of the Fraternity, who taking hands Dance in a Morris, in which Vagary if any Viſion appear to the Novices from God, they throw th[eir] Gloaths behind them, and fall flat with their Faces on the ground, like men aſtoniſhed or ſtruck with an Apoplexy, untill ſuch time as their Prior or chief of their Order coming and making Prayers for them, they return by degrees to their ſenſe again, and taking them up with their eyes red and diſtorted, they remain a while like men drunk, diſtracted or ſtupid; but afterwards their ſcattered ſpirits being better collected, the Prior demands in ſecret their Viſions and Revelations; which they communicate to him, or ſome other ſerious and grave perſon well inſtructed in the Myſteries of their Profeſſion.

CHAP. XVI.

Of the Kadri.

THis is another of thoſe ſix Religions which are derived from Chalvetti, which had one Abdul Kadri Ghilani for its firſt Founder, a man greatly admired for wiſedom and abſtinence, whoſe Sepulchre is found without Babylon, to which place many of thoſe who enter into the Regular Orders of thoſe Convents make their Pilgrimages.

Thoſe who enter into this Religion, muſt perform their Novitiate with degrees of abſtinence and faſting; wherefore when firſt they take the profeſſion upon them, there is beſtowed upon them a ſmall cudgel made of the Wood of a Willow, weighing when freſh and green four hundred Drams, which they are always to carry about them hung at their Girdle; by the weight of this they take their daily allowance of Bread, untill ſuch time as the wood becoming exceeding dry, is alſo much the lighter, and ſo according as the weight thereof lightens, their proportion of Bread diminiſhes.

Beſides their prayers of five times a day, to which all Mahometans are bound, they are obliged to ſpend the whole or beſt part of the night with turning round at the ſound of a little Pipe, and to utter this word Hai, Hai, which ſignifies Alive, being one of the Attributes of God: and this they do in imitation of the Cuſtome uſed by their Founder, who is ſaid to have pronounced this word Hai ſo often, and with that vehemency, that the vein of his breaſt burſting, the bloud guſhed out upon the Wall and made the word Hai. Wherefore all his Diſciples to follow the Example of their Maſter, taking hands together in a ring, repeat this word Hai, Hai, with ſo much violence, and ſo often, untill they fall on the ground without breath or life; thoſe who laſt out longeſt carry off the dead from the Chamber, and lay them to recover their Spirits after their ſtrained Exerciſe: and this they do every Friday night. Every one of theſe are obliged once in the year to a retirement of forty days, in a little Cell free from all company or converſation, during which time they are wholly to give themſelves to Meditations, and to obſerve their Dreams, and recount them to their Superiour, who Studies the interpretation of them, and from them Divines of future things.

They have many times licence from their Superiour to be drunk or intoxicate themſelves with Aqua vitæ, Opium, or any ſtupifying Drugs, to be better able to perform with more ſpirit and vehemency their mad Dance.

Theſe fellows are of a refined Wit, notable Sophiſters and Hypocrites; their ſecrets they reveal to none but thoſe of their own Profeſſion, by which means they are ſubtle to cheat thoſe of other Religions.

They are not debarred from the Liberty of Marriage; but if they do marry, they are excluded from the Covenant, and may wear any ſort of Habit, yet for diſtinction ſake they wear black Buttons; thoſe that live in the Convent, carry a certain white Plad of a courſe Cloth, their heads with hair unſhaven, without Caps or other covering, and their Feet bare. Theſe are called Kadri, and have a Convent at Tophana in Conſtantinople.

The

The Founder of this Order, called, as we have ſaid before, Abdul. Kadir Ghilan, was born in the Hegira or year of Mahomet Five hundred and ſixty one, and died in the year Six hundred and fifty ſeven; he was eſteemed both a Lawyer and a Philoſopher; his Maſter or Inſtructour was Abdul Mumin Gazeli, who compoſed two Books, one called Mugrib, or the Arabian Grammar, and another called Andalus. At that time that Helakin Son of Genghiz Han came to Babylon, he cauſed him to kill one Alkami then Vice-King of that City, for being of the Perſian Sect, called by the Turks, Rafizi or Hereticks, becauſe they reject Abubecher, Omar and Oſman, as Apocryphal Writers, and attribute not to them that honour of Holy men, which is given by the Turks.

The Prior or chief of the Convent of th is Order, teach their Diſciples a certain Prayer, which they whiſper in their Ears, that it may not be overheard or known by others; this they are obliged to repeat every moment with little intermiſſion, unleſs at times ſet apart for the offices of nature; and boaſt that it hath ſo much of efficacy in it, that by virtue thereof, they obtain the enjoyment of Divine Viſions and Revelations.

Their poſture is like other Religious Mahometans, to ſit with their heads hanging down, and their Noſes in their Breaſts, which they call Murakabe; the better to keep them from diſtraction, or wandring thoughts, during their contemplations of Heaven, and the vanity of ſatisfying the carnal appetite.

Amongſt the many Miracles that the followers of this Order recount of their Maſter, one is this, That coming once to Babylon to inhabit amongſt the other ſuperſtitious perſons and Santones of that City, they hearing of his approach went forth to meet him, one of them carrying in his hand a diſh filled with water; from whence they would infer, that as that diſh was full to the brim ſo as to be capable of containing no more, ſo their City was ſo repleniſhed with Learned and Religious perſons, that there was no place to receive him: Whereupon this ſubtle Sophiſter ſtudying to confute this Hieroglyphick, whereby they would excuſe the courteſie of due Hoſpitality, ſtretching his Arms firſt towards Heaven, and then bowed down gathering a Roſe leaf which he laid on the water, which before had filled the diſh; by which piece of ingenuity, he not onely confuted the Parable of the Churliſh Babylonians, but alſo ſo took with them, that they regiſtred it as a Miracle of Wiſedom, and bringing him into their City with triumph, made him the Superiour of all their Orders.

CHAP. XVII.

Of the Order of Kalenderi.

THis Order may rather be termed the Sect of Epicureans, than men retired to mortifie their appetites, and deny the world, as all other of the religious and regulated Turks pretend; but yet this ſort of Fanaticks pretend to Religion by a different way of Libertiniſm and looſeneſs in their Converſation; which they act ſo publickly, that they are not aſhamed to profeſs their Inſtitution and cuſtoms to be after this manner.

In the time of Mahomet Manſur, Son of Melkaziz Oboma the Son of Silahdin, being ready to reſign up his laſt breath, bequeathed to his Son Mahomet Melik Kiamel, the Government of Cairo, and all the other parts of the Kingdom of Egypt; Damaſcus and Jeruſalem to his Son Iſa Melick Muazin and Diarbekir, to his third Son Eſchrefmuſa; There lived a certain Santone, who always mentioned the name of God with the ſound of his Pipe; and with that Muſick recreated himſelf day and night, not after a chearfull and merry humour, but with ſad and melancholy Tunes, accompanied his Pipe with Tears and Sighs. He was an excellent Muſician, and a deep Philoſopher, endued with thoſe ſupernatural vertues as enabled him to work Miracles clear and notorious to all the world; he was an Hermite, called in Arabick Abdal; went with his head bare, and his body full of wounds, without a Shirt or other Cloathing; beſides a Skin of ſome wild Beaſt thrown about his Shoulders; at his Girdle he wore ſome fine poliſhed Stone; on his Wriſts, inſtead of Diamonds and Stones of value he wore counterfeit Jewels, which carried a luſter and fair appearance with them; this man was called Santone Kalenderi, who was continually ſinging Arabick Sonnets, and according to them Muſical Airs, making alſo harmonious compoſitions ſo artificially, that he ſeemed another David. But how ſtrict and ſober this Santone was, his Diſciples or Proſelytes are of another temper, being wholly given up to jollity and delights, they baniſh all kind of melancholy and ſadneſs, and live free of cares, paſſions or torments of the mind, and have this ſaying amongſt them, This day is ours, to morrow is his who ſhall live to enjoy it; and therefore ſtudiouſly attend to loſe no moment or leaſt part of their pleaſure, but conſume their time in eating and drinking; and to maintain this gluttony they will ſell the Stones of their Girdles, their Earings and Bracelets. When they come to the houſe of any rich Man or perſon of Quality, they accommodate themſelves to their humour, giving all the Family pleaſant words and chearfull expreſſions to perſuade them to a liberal and free entertainment. The Tavern by them is accounted holy as the Moſch, and believe they ſerve God as much with debauchery or liberal uſe of his creatures (as they call it) as others with ſeverity and mortification. And the Turks ſay, That in the Hegira 615, the Chriſtians became Maſters of Jeruſalem, by reaſon that the Inſtitutour of this Order of the Kalenderi, who had a chief hand in the Government of the City, was found drunk when it was aſſaulted.

CHAP. XVIII.

Of the Edhemi.

THE original Founder of this Order was one Ibrahim Edhem, concerning whom the Diſciples themſelves, or Followers, recount things very obſcurely, and tell us Stories that his Father was a Slave and Abaſine by Nation, and went one day under the Fort Hboraan, to diſcourſe with Ibnimeſik King of Cairo, that he was a man very comly, facetious, and ſober in his carriage, always deſiring to pleaſe God, continued in the Moſcks reading the Alchoran, and in in prayer day and night with his face proſtrate on the ground, and often repeating theſe words;

O God, thou haſt given me ſo much Wiſedom, as that I know clearly that I am in thy direction; and therefore ſcorning all Power and Dominion, I reſign my ſelf to the ſpeculation of Philoſophy and a Holy Life.

His Servants ſeeing this his devout way of living, applied themſelves to the imitation of his Auſterity, and abandoning all greatneſs and vanities of the World, applied themſelves to ſolitude and mortification, their ſuperfluous Garments they beſtowed upon the Poor, giving to thoſe whoſe neceſſities required them.

Their food is Bread made of Barley, and Pray frequently with Faſting, and their Priors apply themſelves to a faculty of Preaching.

Their principal Convents are in Cities of Perſia, eſpecially Choraſan.

Their Cloathing is of a courſe thick Cloth, upon their heads they wear a Cap of Wooll, with a Turbant round it, and about their necks a white Linen Cloth ſtriped with red. In the Deſarts they converſe with Lions and Tigres, ſalute them and make them tame, and by the miraculous power of Divine aſſiſtence entertain diſcourſe with Enoch in the Wilderneſs; This and many other wild diſcourſes they make of this Edhem; but becauſe there are but few of this Order in Conſtantinople, being moſt appropriated to Perſia; I could not receive ſo particular an account of their Rule and Inſtitutions, as I have done of others.

CHAP. XIX.

The Order of Bectaſh.

THE original Founder of this Religion, is of no ancient memory or ſtanding, nor had his Birth or Education amongſt the Santones of Arabia, from whence moſt of theſe ſuperſtitious pretenders have had their beginning; but one of thoſe that was an Army-Preacher, that could fight as well as pray, of whom my Learned Hogia gives me this account.

In the time, ſays he, that the Warlike and Victorious Sultan Amurath paſſed with his Army into Servia, and overcame Lazarus, the Deſpot of that Countrey, and ſlew him in Battel, Bectaſh was then a Preacher to Amurath, who amongſt other his Admonitions forewarned him of truſting the Servians; but Amurath out of his couragious ſpirit relying on his own Wiſedom and Force, admitted a certain Nobleman called Vilvo, upon pretence of doing him homage, to approach near him and kiſs his hand, who having his Dagger ready and concealed, ſtabbed Amurath to the heart, and with that blow made him a Martyr. Bectaſh knowing that this treacherous death of his Prince, muſt needs alſo be the cauſe of his, for being ſo near his perſon, and propheſying of this fatal ſtroke, ſought not to prevent it, but made preparations for his own death. And in order thereunto provided himſelf with a white Robe with long Sleeves, which he proffered to all thoſe which were his Admirers, and Proſelytes, to be kiſſed as a mark of their obedience to him and his Inſtitutions; from this action the cuſtome hath been introduced of kiſſing the ſleeve of the Grand Signior.

Vid. Chap. 20. l. 1.

The Religious of this Order wear on their heads white Caps of ſeveral pieces with Turbants of Wooll, twiſted in the faſhion of a Rope; they obſerve conſtantly the hours of Prayer, which they perform in their own Aſſemblies; they go Cloathed in White, and praiſe the Unity of God, crying, Hu, (which is, may he live) and by theſe means obtain the Grace of God.

This Santone hath many millions of Diſciples and Followers; now all the Janizaries of the Ottoman Port are profeſſours of the ſame Religion. This Bectaſh at his death cut off one of his ſleeves, and put it upon the head of one of his Religious men, part of which hung down on his ſhoulders, ſaying, After this you ſhall be Janizaries, which ſignifies a new Militia; and from that time begun their original inſtitution; ſo this is the reaſon why the Janizaries wear Caps falling behind after the manner of Sleeves, called Ketche. This Hagi Bectaſh was a perſon exceedingly attractive in his converſation, holy to admiration, a Man of great Worth, and Majeſtick in his comportment; he was buried in the City Kyr, where they have many Convents and Religious followers, who always praiſe and adore God: and thus far my Hogia informs me.

But whatſoever he ſays, this Order is the moſt abhorred in the World by the Kadizadeli, becauſe that Bectaſh left it to the free will of his Diſciples, either to obſerve the conſtant hours of prayer, or not; by which great liberty and licentiouſneſs is entred amongſt the Janizaries, who are Souldier-like, not over zealous or devout in their Prayers, little attendant to the Offices of devotion. In ſome Songs which this Bectaſh is ſaid to have compoſed, it is often repeated, That none hath known God, becauſe none hath ſeen him: And for this reaſon the moſt zealous Mahometans call the Janizaries Kefereſis, which ſignifies without Faith; and a certain Mufti called Ebuſnud delivered his Sentence or Fetfa, to the queſtion demanded him; If a Muſſelman or Believer ſhould ſay to a Janizary, thou art a Pagan, what puniſhment he ſhould merit by the Law; he replied, that a man is an Infidel, who holds a Janizary for a true Believer.

Some Fryars of this Order of Bectaſh do in all publick Shews and Solemnities march near the perſon of the Janizar Aga, crying continual, Hu, hu, with their Daggers drawn. They are a moſt licentious ſort of people, much given to Sodomy, for which the ignorant and looſe ſort of Janizaries are willingly their Diſciples; and are now grown into that vaſt multitude, as is almoſt impoſſible to extirpate them or their Vices; though corroſives are laid to eat away this Gangreen in the Militia, which goes creeping on with an unſenſible pace; as we ſhall diſcourſe more largely in the next Book of the Turkiſh Militia.

CHAP. XX.

Of the Order of Herewi or Hizrevi.

IN the time of Orchanes the ſecond King of the Turks, who Governed thirty five years, and Reigned eighty three, and died in the Hegira of Mahomet ſeven hundred and ſixteen, there lived in Pruſa, then the Regal Seat, a famous

Santone

Santone called Herewi, who uſed to walk up and down, and as an act of charity to buy the Livers and Lights of Beaſts to feed Cats and Dogs; he profeſſed poverty and ſevere mortification with Tears and Sighs, and he acted with that fervency that the Angels leaving Heaven, came to be witneſſes of his holy Penance.

The fame of which moved Sultan Orchanes to diſcourſe with him, and to know the ſtory of his paſt life; which he ſmiling began to recount, and told him, that he formerly was a King derived from the Line of Mahomet, had compaſſed with his Arms the Rivers of Nilus, Euphrates, and Tigris, had governed Provinces with his Sword and Sceptre, had been triumphantly adorned with pretious Stones and glittering Arms, and had made the World tremble at the very mention of his name. But at laſt conſidering the vanity of this world, he reſolved on a ſolitary life, and to renounce all the follies and ſmall ſatisfaction of Riches and empty Honours. At which ſaying, Sultan Orchanes was amazed, and ſaid, We ought not to deſpiſe thoſe who under the guiſe and appearance of mad and diſtracted perſons wander through the World, for their Vertues are rare; and in this man particularly I diſcover ſo much of ſanctity, that I judge my ſelf unworthy of the name of one of his Servants. And this is the reaſon why Fools, and Frantick people have ever ſince been had in honour and reverence amongſt the Turks, as thoſe whom Revelations and Enthuſiaſms tranſported out of the ordinary temperament of humanity.

This Herewi was very learned and experienced in Chimiſtry; and to thoſe who profeſſed his Order, and entred into the regular life of his Religion, inſtead of Aſpers he beſtowed Gold; he wore a Green Veſt, and lived very abſtemiouſly; he mended his own Cloaths, and dreſſed the Dyet for his Convent. He endowed many Moſchs. and ſeveral Hoſpitals of Charity at Grand Cairo and Babylon. His Sepulchre is at Pruſa, which is greatly viſited by Pilgrims, and adorned by the Bounty and Munificence of thoſe who reverence the Memory of this holy Santone.

This is the beſt relation I could procure from one of the Seighs or Preachers, and one that was Prior of this Order, whoſe example, as the original Copy, others of this Order imitate. They have a Monaſtery in Conſtantinople, as all the others beforementioned; beſides which in this Capital City nor in any parts of the Turkiſh Dominions in Europe, have I obſerved any Teke or Monaſtery, where Turks profeſs to lead a religious Life, but is one of the Orders before-mentioned; ſome others there may be about Babylon and Egypt, and remoteſt parts of Aſia, whoſe names and conſtitutions I have not repeated here, who have (as I am informed) ſomewhat more of ridiculous and ſuperſtitious work amongſt them than I have declared in the account I have given of thoſe I have been acquainted with in the parts I have travelled; yet it is obſervable they all of them pretend to Poverty as the neareſt way to arrive to the happineſs of Paradiſe; but with their Poverty (as I have ſeen in ſome of their Tekes where I have been, eſpecially thoſe removed from Cities) they mix ſo much negligence in their living, not caring for neatneſs in their Houſes, but leave things in a diſorderly and confuſed manner, as teſtifies their lazineſs as well as poverty; and are not like the Cells of Capuchins, who having nothing to attend to beſides their Prayers and Gardens, improve all things with that advantage, as graces Poverty, and convinces the World that in a moderate enjoyment of it there is more ſatisfaction, than in thoſe vexations which attend the diſpoſal and government of riches, and the ſatiety of opulency and plenty. It is worth noting alſo, that on the Monuments of Santones and in the Gardens, or before the Gates of theſe Religious, there is always ſome ridiculous adornment, ſuch as agrees with the fancy of Bedlams; as Crowning the Hearſe of the Dead with Beads and Horns, and Ribbons, and pieces of Tinſel, &c. and their doors with the like; accounting it a chief diſpoſition to Divine Service to have a mind endued with an humour inclining to the fancy of Hypocondriacal or diſtracted Heads; to that I ſhall not enlarge farther in this Diſcourſe, not glut my Reader with ſo inſipid and fulſome a ſubject.

CHAP. XXI.

Of Marriages and Divorces; and how far Concubinage is indulged amongſt the Turks.

THE ſtate of Marriage is accounted both honourable and holy amongſt the Turks, by which the Race of Mankind is beſt encreaſed and maintained; yet the Prieſt, as I may call him, or their Church man, hath the leaſt hand in the Solemnity; the matter, as an action wholly Civil, is performed before the Caddée or Judge; not unlike the manner practiſed in England for ſome few years, according to that abſurd Act of Marriages by a Juſtice of Peace; and is in the nature of a Recognizance, whereby the Husband doth perſonally oblige himſelf before the Judge to take ſuch a Wife, and in caſe of his death or divorce, to endow her with a certain Eſtate to remain to her own diſpoſal. The Woman is not there preſent, but appears by her Father or ſome of her neareſt Relations, and is afterwards by a great attendance of Women brought covered, ſitting aſtride on Horſeback under a Canopy to the Habitation of her Bridegroom, who remains at the Gate with open Armes to receive her; there is great rejoicing and feaſting hereat, the night before ſhe is brought to the company of her Husband; but when the precedent ceremonies to the Marriage are performed and completed, the Houſe is all ſilent, and ſhe is brought into the Bride-Chamber by an Eunuch (if ſhe be of Quality) if not, by ſome Women of near Relation, and delivered to her Husband, who is himſelf to untie her Drawers, and undreſs her for his bed, not unlike the cuſtome amongſt the Romans of Zonam Solvere.

Polygamy is freely indulged to them by their Religion as far as the number of four Wives, contrary to the common report, that a Turk may have as many Wives as he can maintain; Though Mahomet had nine Wives, and Hali had fourteen, as being men more ſpiritual, and of a more elevated degree, had greater privileges and indulgences for carnal enjoyments.

This reſtraint of the number of their Wives is certainly no Precept of their Religion, but a rule ſuperinduced upon ſome politick conſiderations, as too great a charge and weakning to mens eſtates, every one that takes a Wife being obliged to make her a Kabin or Dowry, as we have ſaid before; or elſe for better regulation of the Oeconomies, and

and to prevent and abate ſomewhat of the Jealouſies, Striſes and Embroilments in a Family, which muſt neceſſarily ariſe between ſo many Rivals in the affection of one Husband who is obliged by Law and Covenants to deal and beſtow his benevolence and conjugal kindneſs in an exact proportion of equality. And leſt this confinement to a certain number of Wives, ſhould ſeem a reſtriction and impeachment of that liberty and free uſe of Women which they ſay God hath frankly beſtowed on Man, every one may freely ſerve himſelf of his Women Slaves, with as much variety as he is able to buy or maintain; and this kind of Concubinage is no ways envied or condemned by the Wives, ſo long as they can enjoy their due maintenance, and have ſome reaſonable ſhare in the Husband's Bed, which once a week is their due by the Law: for if any of them have been neglected the whole week before, ſhe challenges Thurſday night as her due, and hath remedy in that caſe againſt her Husband by the Law: and if ſhe be ſo modeſt as not to ſue him for one weeks default, ſhe is yet ſo ingenious to contrive a ſupply of her wants: And whereas the Women are Educated with much retiredneſs from the converſation of men, and conſequently with greater inclinations towards them, and with no principles of vertue, of moral honeſty or Religion, as to a future Eſtate relating to the rewards or puniſhments of their good or bad actions; they are accounted the moſt laſcivious and immodeſt of all Women, and excell in the moſt refined and ingenious ſubtilties to ſteal their pleaſures; And as in Chriſtendom the Husband bears the diſgrace and ſcandal of his Wives incontinency, here the Horns are by the vulgar adjudged to the Father, Brother, and Wives Kindred; the Bloud of her Family is tainted and diſhonoured, and the Huſband obtaining a Divorce, quits himſelf of his Wife and diſhonour together.

No queſtion but the firſt Inſtitutour of this eaſie Religion, next to the ſatisfaction of his own carnal and effeminate inclination, and this taking freedom amongſt his Diſciples; his main conſideration was the encreaſe of his people by Polygamy, knowing that the greatneſs of Empires and Princes conſiſts more in the numbers and multitudes of their People, than the large extent of their Dominions. This freedom (if it may be called ſo) was granted at the beginning of the World for the propagation and encreaſe of Mankind; and the Jews had that permiſſion and indulgence to their looſe and wandring affections; and we read that the Eaſtern parts of the World have abounded with Children of divers Mothers, and but one Father; and that ordinarily a Great Perſonage in Egypt hath been attended with an hundred luſty Sons in the Field, proceeding from his own Loins, well Armed, and daring in all attempts of War. But yet this courſe thrives not ſo well amongſt the Turks as formerly; whether it be thought their accurſed Vice of Sodomy, or that that God bleſſes not ſo much this State of life, as when the paucity of Mankind induced a ſort of a neceſſity and a plea for it.

But chiefly through the irreconcilable emulation, and rivalry which is amongſt many Wives, thoſe Witchcrafts and Sorceries (which in this Countrey are very frequent) are prepared againſt the envied fruitfulneſs each of other, that either they make an Abortive Birth, or otherwiſe their Children pine, and macerate away with ſecret and hidden charms, by which means they are now obſerved not to be ſo fruitfull and numerous, as is the Marriage bed of a ſingle Wife; nor is the family ſo well regulated, and orderly, as under the conduct and good Houſe-wifry of one Woman, but, contrarily filled with noiſe, brawls and diſſentions, as paſſes the Wiſedom of the Husband to become an equal Umpire and Arbitratour of their differences; which conſideration reſtrains many, though otherwiſe inclinable enough to gratifie their Appetites, from incumbring themſeves with ſo great an inconvenience; and I have known ſome, though childleſs, have adhered to a ſingle Wife, and preferred Quiet and Repoſe, before the contentment of their Off-ſpring.

The Children they have by their Slaves, are equally eſteemed with thoſe they have by their Wives; Neque vero Turcæ minus honoris deferunt natis ex concubinis aut pellicibus quam ex uxoribus, neque illi minus in bona paterna juris habent, Busbeq. Ep. 1.

But yet with this difference in eſteem of the Law, that unleſs the Father manumiſſes them by his Teſtament, and confers a livelihood upon them by Legacy, they remain to the Charity of their Elder Brother that is born from the Wife, and are his Slaves, and he their Lord and Maſter; and it is with them, as in the Civil Law, Partus ventrem ſequitur; So that from the Loins of the ſame Father, may proceed Sons of a ſervile and ignominious condition.

There is alſo another ſort of half Marriage amongſt them, which is called Kabin, when a man takes a Wife for a Month, or for a certain limited time: and an agreement is made for the Price before the Cadee or Judge: and this Strangers oftentimes uſe, who have not the Gift of Continency, and are deſirous to find a Wife in all places where they travel, and is the ſame which they term in Spain to be Emancibado, or Caſado de Media Carta, onely the act there is not made allowable by the Laws as in Turkey.

There is another ſort of Marriages commonly uſed amongſt the Turks (if we may give it that honourable Title) which is, the conjunction of an Eunuch with a Woman; ſuch as are wholly diſarmed of all parts of virility, do notwithſtanding take many Wives, and exerciſe Luſts of an unknown and prodigious nature.

There is alſo one point or reſtriction of Matrimony in the Turkiſh Religion which is obſervable; that is a Mahometan may marry himſelf with what Woman ſoever, though eſteemed an Infidel, as a Chriſtian, Jew, or any other different profeſſion, ſo it be of thoſe who are of a Learned Religion of which Books are wrote to defend and maintain it; but ſuch Women as are of a Religion which hath nothing in it of Learning or of written Law, as the Sect of Meiuzee, who adore the Fire, conſerving it always burning in their Temples, and are to be found in the parts of Perſia, but principally in ſome Countries of the Mogul; and alſo the Gipſie Women are prohibited (of which great numbers are amongſt the Turks:) a Vagabond people without Religion, but what is fabulous and ridiculous; and having no Literature or knowledge amongſt them, are reputed as abominable amongſt the Turks.

And here the Turks upon occaſional diſcourſes of the ſeverity and ſtrictneſs of the Chriſtian Diſcipline Diſcipline in matters of Concupiſcence, telling them that no Copulation is allowable but in the Marriage-Bed, and that reſtrained and confined to one Wife, without the additions of Slaves to ſatisfie with variety the corrupted fancy; that the very thoughts of Luſt and Concupiſcence pollute the purity of the Soul; And that whoſoever looks on a Woman to Luſt after her, commits Adultery in his heart; They preſently deride theſe our Precepts and our Laws, which Chriſtians not onely by their actions and corrupted lives contemn as invalid, but Authority it ſelf not by a ſimple connivence onely, but by indulgence and privileges, foments and encourages perſons walking contrary to that which is confeſſed to be an indiſpenſable Law. For proof whereof they mention the Stews of Italy, Whoredom made an allowable Trade and Profeſſion in Venice, Naples and the City of Rome, and the Gantoneras in Spain, and framed into a Politick Body (as it is related and apprehended by the Turks) from whence Taxes and Impoſitions are raiſed: The Turks comprehend not the Politick grounds hereof, with which in Italy this Maxim is defended; nor is it fitting to produce the reaſons, or argue it with them; ſince the benefit which accrues to the Roman Church, and the Profits that ariſe thence, being employed in maintenance of Gallies and Forces againſt Infidels, is the beſt can be ſaid to hallow this permiſſion; but 'tis an improper argument with a Turk, to excuſe this Licence and Authority to ſin upon conſiderations of being better able to War againſt the Profeſſours of his Religion. And therefore the Turk will hardly be convinced but that this manner of Concubinage hath much more of Sanctity, Order and Policy in it, as being free from Diſeaſes and Foulneſs, than the wandring Luſts of Stews, or impudence of Corteſans, made bold and hard-foreheaded by conceſſion of Authority.

Pudet hæc opprobria Nobis
Et dici potuiſſe, &c.

Amongſt all the privileges that the Sultan enjoys above his Subjects, this one hath leſs than they, that he cannot marry; but yet he hath as many Women as ſerves his uſe, though never ſo libidinous, or are requiſite for the Oſtentation and great Magnificence of his Court, according to the cuſtome of the Eaſtern Princes, who placed a great part of their Pomp in the multitude of their Women. This diſuſe of Marriage in the Sultan, hath been a Mixim of ſtate, and reckoned amongſt the Turks, inter Arcana Imperii, from the time of Bajazet untill this very Age: the reaſons hereof are diverſly related, Busbequius ſaith, That Bajazet after the great Victory obtained againſt him by Tamerlane, to his other great misfortunes and diſgraces, had this one added, of having his Wife Deſpina, whom he dearly loved, to fall into the hands of the Conquerour, whoſe ignominious and undecent treatment before the eyes of her Husband, was a matter of more diſhonour and ſorrow, than all the reſt of his afflictions: So that ever-ſince that time, the Sultans to free themſelves from being capable of that diſgrace on occaſion of like fortune, take no feminine companion of their Empire in whom they may be more concerned than as in Slaves, or the loſs of Goods, Riches, or Eſtate. But in my opinion, this Policy is of a deeper reach and deſign, than the conſiderations of matters ſo meerly poſſible; for as I have heard, the onely ſign and ceremony of a Sultans making a Wife, is the endowing her with Riches agreeable to her condition and quality, not called Kabin, which is Dowry, but Paſhmaluck or Money for her Shooes; which beſides Preſents, Jewels, and rich Garments for her ſelf, and great attendance, her Revenue ought to be equal to that of a Valede or Mother of the Grand Signior, which is four or five hundred thouſand Dollars yearly Rent; ſo that were this cuſtome in uſe, and meeting with the diſpoſition of ſome Princes that are Amorous and Prodigal, the chief Revenue of the Empire would be expended in the Chambers of Women, and diverted from the true Chanels in which the Chanel ought to run for nouriſhment of the Politick body of the Commonwealth. Beſides, were it the cuſtome for Sultans to take Wives, it would contradict that main principle of Policy amongſt them, of avoiding Alliances and Relations of the Grand Signior abroad. And this was the principal reaſon of the murther of Sultan Oſman, tenth Emperour of the Turks, contrived by the Rebellion and Toleration of the Souldiery: it being objected that he had married a Sultana, whereof he had contracted Alliances, contrary to the fundamental Conſtitutions of the Empire.

The tye and ſolemnity of Marriage, and the nature thereof amongſt the Turks, is as before related: from which the Woman hath no ways to unlooſe her ſelf, whilſt the Husband maintains her with Bread, Butter, Rice, Wood and Flax to ſpin for her Cloathing; the Law ſuppoſes her ſo induſtrious a Houſewife as with her own labour to ſupply her ſelf: there are ſome other points pleadable in Law for Divorce in behalf of the Woman, as impotency, or frigidity in the Husband, and the like, but the man hath divers means to acquit himſelf, and can do it by ſeveral allegations; and may upon as eaſie terms, and on as light grounds ſue out his Divorce, as was permitted to the Jews in caſes of diſlike, or that ſhe found no favour in his eyes.

There are amongſt the Turks three degrees of Divorce, every one of which is made before the Kadee or Juſtice, and by him drawn out and regiſtred. The firſt ſeparates the Man and Wife onely from the ſame Houſe and Bed, the maintenance of a Wife being ſtill continued; The ſecond not onely divides them in that manner, but the Husband is compelled to make good her Kabin, which is a Joynture or Dowry promiſed at her Marriage, ſo as to have no intereſt either in him or his Eſtate, and to remain in a free condition to marry another. The third ſort of Divorce which is called (Ouch Talac) is made in a ſolemn and more ſerious manner, with more rigorous terms of ſeparation, and in this caſe the Husband repenting of his Divorce, and deſirous to re-take his Wife, cannot by the Law be admitted to her, without firſt conſenting and contenting himſelf to ſee another man enjoy her before his face; which condition the Law requires as a puniſhment of the Husbands lightneſs and inconſtancy, and as an evidence to ſhew that though the Turkiſh Law is very indulgent and open in the free choice and enjoyment of Women, yet that it puniſhes ſuch as unadviſedly fruſtrate the ſolemn points thereof, with remarkable notes of infamy and diſgrace. Notwithſtanding ſome afterwards repenting of their Divorce, have been contented with the condition, and have choſen ſome handſome Youth to enter into the Bed of their Wife. It is a merry Story that is told of one, who in this caſe being put to a great ſtreight, reſolved to call the firſt man he conveniently met, to this Office, that ſo as one unknown, his reputation might be the leſs concerned: the man he firſt lighted on, happened to be a Kaickgee or Boat-man, who it ſeems ſo well ſatisfied and pleaſed the Wife, that ſhe afterwards renounced all intereſt in her Husband, and reſolved to adhere to her new Lover, of whom ſhe ſuppoſed ſhe had ſufficient proof and acquaintance with already to eſteem a better Husband than her former. There are but few amongſt the Turks, though ſome are found, who ſo heartily repent of their Divorce, and ſo fond of their ſeparated Wives, as to be contented to take them with the foregoing Condition: for it is reputed a kind of an Abomination; and when they would ſignifie any matter far alienated or eſtranged, they call it (Ouch Talac) ſomething ſo divided and ſeparated as to be a Sin and Prophanation ſo much as to covet or deſire it.

CHAP. XXII.

Of the other parts of the Turkiſh Religion.

Of Circumciſion.

CIrcumciſion is not reckoned amongſt one of the five Points which conſtitute a true Mahometan believer, but 'tis onely (as we have ſaid before) propoſed as a tryal and proof of man's obedience to the more neceſſary parts of the Law. This Rite of Circumciſion is not received by them as an Article or Precept delivered expreſly from the Alcoran, but by tradition and ancient practice and uſe amongſt the Arabians, before the time of Mahomet, derived originally from Iſhmael or Eſau, whoſe Progeny they are, and from thence give themſelves the name of Iſhmaelites. The Arabian Doctours affirm that Mahomet himſelf was born with his Navel cut, and naturally circumciſed; perhaps to equal the ſame Story which the Jews report of Moſes, and ſome others of the Patriarchs; and it ſeems in thoſe Countries where Circumciſion is in practice, that it is not unuſual for Children to be ſo born; who are therefore called Sons of the Moon, on whom the virtue of the Moon hath more than ordinary manner of influence. Credebant ſiquidem Arabes, quod ille qui ſub lunæ radiis naſceretur, contrahi perinde ac circumciſum præputium:

Pocokii nota de Arabum moribus.

The Turks never circumciſe their Children untill the age of ſeven years and upwards; and then they do it by a Barber or Chirurgion, it not being eſteemed a matter appropriated to the Office of the Emaum or Prieſts; for (as we have ſaid before) they make no ſuch diſtinction as Clergy and Laity; I mean as to any ſpiritual Character of Prieſthood; for a man may cry upon the Steeple to day, and like their Paſtour be the firſt to lead his Congregation to their Prayers, and expound the Alcoran in the Pulpit; and next day be expelled his Pariſh, and become free to any other ſecular Employment or Profeſſion: They obſerve ſome Ceremonies amongſt them on this occaſion, often differing according to the Country and place; but commonly the child is ſet on Horſeback in his beſt Cloaths attended with his School-fellows and Companions, who with loud ſhouts repeat ſome words in the Alcoran; and being brought home, and the act of Circumciſion performed, he is carefully attended for his Cure, and in the mean time there is a Feaſt or Banquet prepared for the Gueſts; thoſe who of riper years become Mahometans in ſome places are carried about the Town on Horſeback, with a Dart in their left hand pointing to their heart, ſignifying that they will rather ſuffer themſelves to be paſſed through with that Inſtrument, than renounce that Faith they then profeſs. And this Circumciſion is an admiſſion and introduction of them into the number of the Faithfull, as it is amongſt the Jews, and Baptiſm with the Chriſtians.

Ceremonies at the Circumciſion.

CHAP. XXIII.

Of the five neceſſary Points which are required to conſtitute a true Mahometan.

Of their Waſhings.

THough Mahomet ſaith in the Alcoran that his Religion is founded in Cleanneſs, and that it is half of his Law; yet much before Mahomet's time Waſhings were obſerved according to the ſame preſcriptions by the Arabians, who deſcending from Iſhmael, maintained by tradition the practice of Waſhings: and he had no other ſhare in this invention, than that it was enforced by his Authority on the Profeſſours of his Sect. The Turks are certainly a very cleanly people in their exteriour manner of living; as in their Waſhings relating to their holy exerciſes and duties, they are very preciſe and ſuperſtitious: ſome of them believing that the very water purifies them from the foulneſs of their ſins, as well as from the uncleanneſs of their bodies: There being three ſorts of Waſhings obſerved by them.

The firſt is called Abdeſt, which is a preparation for their Prayers, entring the Moſch, or reading the Alcoran; they firſt waſh their hands and armes, then their neck, their forehead, the crown of their head, their ears, their teeth, the face, under the noſe, and laſt of all their feet; but if the weather be cold, not convenient to uncover them, it is ſufficient, if they make ſome evidence thereof by any other outward ſignification.

The ſecond is called Guſul, which is the cleanſing of the Bath after copulation or nocturnal pollutions; untill which time a man is called Giunub, that is, his prayers are accounted abominable before God, and his Society to be avoided by Men.

The third is Taharet, which is a Waſhing after the eaſe or evacuation of nature; to this homely office they deſign the three laſt fingers of the left hand; and upon this account they call Chriſtians Taharatſis, which is as much as one defiled and impure for want of this manner of cleanſing. And waſhing is ſo uſual and frequent amongſt them both before and after Meat, as hath cauſed a common Proverb amongſt them, That God hath created Meat, that men may have occaſion often to waſh their hands.

Secondly,

Secondly, Of their Prayers.

After their Waſhing follow their Prayers, which Mahomet to recommend to his Diſciples the force and virtue of Prayer, calls it in his Alchoran the Pillar of Religion, and the Key of Paradiſe, and enjoined the performance five times in the ſpace of twenty four hours, viz. between the day breaking and Sun-riſing, called Sabanameſee. Secondly, at Noon, called Ulemanaſee. Thirdly, at the middle hour, between the Noon and the ſetting of the Sun, called Kindinamaſee. Fourthly, at Sun-ſetting, called Acſhanamaſee. Fifthly, at an hour and half in the night, called Yachinamaſee; this action they perform with very much reverence and devotion, and hold that they ought to be ſo intent and fixed in their thoughts on this religious act towards God, that no buſineſs of the World, though the execution of the Sultan's Decree ſhould in the ſame moment be commanded, or fire ſhould burſt forth in the very Chamber where they remain, or an armed Enemy within their Gates or Camp, they ought not yet to be diverted, or break abruptly off their Prayers, to extinguiſh or oppoſe themſelves againſt their inevitable Deſtruction; nay, if they do but Cough, or Spit, or Sneeze, or rub any part of their Face, or Hands, where a Fly bites, during their Prayers, they muſt begin them again, for they are void, and eſteemed to be of no effect. It is much in my opinion that Infidels ſhould be poſſeſſed with that awe and ſenſe of the Divine Majeſty in the time of their Audience with Him; and yet that Friers and others of the Roman Church obliged to their Office, as the Turk to his Namas, ſhould perform it ſo perfunctorily, as to mix the diſcourſe of buſineſs with the Repetition of their Breviary, and joyn with their Reſponſals Anſwers and Reſolutions of queſtions are made them; and ſo ſatisfie themſelves in the Opus operatum, as if it were more important to comply with his command who impoſed the Office than with his who primarily enjoyned the ſacrifice of prayer.

The form of their Prayers is not extracted out of the Alchoran, onely the Collections of Sentences, as in the Name of God, God is Great and Mercifull, and the like, are deduced from thence (as Chriſtians do from the fountain of the Holy Scriptures) the reſt is compiled by the four Doctours we have before mentioned, viz. Ebbubecher, Omar, Ozman and Ali; whoſe names are wrote in golden Characters on the Walls of moſt Moſchs: Herein they obſerve many poſtures and geſtures of their Body; as placing their hands one on the other before them, bending the body, kneeling, touching the Ground with their forehead, moving the head to each ſide, and the like; in which it is difficult to make diſtinction of thoſe meerly invented and ordained by Mahomet, from thoſe which were primarily in uſe amongſt the ancient Arabians: But that the orderly Ceremonies in their Prayers may be better deſcribed, it will be to our purpoſe to hear what Busbequius relates of the whole Turkiſh Army, whom he had ſeen drawn up orderly in the Field at their Devotion. I ſaw (ſaid he) in that Plain, a great multitude of Heads folded up in Turbants, who with profound ſilence attended to the words of a Prieſt their Conductour; all of them being drawn up in rank and file, and covering with their extended Orders the whole Plain, ſeemed to have framed a Wall or Bulwark by the regular diſpoſition of their Bodies: their Cloathings were of light colours, and their Turbants comparable to the whiteneſs of the Snow, and the variety of the different colours of their Garments, fed the eyes with a ſtrange pleaſure: in this manner ſo immovable they ſtood, as if they had grown in the place where their feet were fixed, no coughing, hemming, nor voice was heard, nor ſo much as any motion was perceived of their heads; every one at the name of Mahomet pronounced by the Prieſt, bowed his head to his knees; and at the name of God reverently proſterated himſelf, and kiſſed the Earth: and thus the Turks with devout ceremony and profound attention perform their whole Duties; ſuppoſing that Prayer to become fruitleſs, which is interrupted by ſcratching the Head, rubbing the Hands, or any other geſture not eſſential to their Prayers. But of all Nations and Religions that I have known, they are the moſt hypocritical; they are thoſe who love to pray in the Market-place, and in the Corners of the Streets, to have praiſe of Men; for it is obſervable with the Turks, that where they find the moſt Spectatours, eſpecially of Chriſtians, to chuſe that place how inconvenient ſoever, to ſpread firſt their Handkerchief, and then begin their Prayers. The ſubſtance of their Prayers conſiſts for the moſt part in praiſes of the Divine Power and Attributes; mixing therewith Petitions for the ſafety of his Prince and his Dominions, and for Diſſention and Wars amongſt Chriſtians, which part they conceive God hath greatly gratified them in, and rejoycing upon the rumours of Wars and diſturbances in Chriſtendom, as an effect of the Divine facility and conceſſion to their Prayers: They know well by experience, what Tacitus reports of the Roman Policy; That, Omne ſcelus externum cum letitia habendum, ſemina etiam odiorum incende; and as the Romans deſtined Armenia to be a prize held up, and the Stage alſo, on which the Tragedy of the ruine of the Eaſtern Nations were to be acted, Eandem Armeniam ſpecie largitionis turbandis barbarorum animis præbuerint; ſo the Turks forbore for ſeveral years the total Conqueſt of the Provinces of Tranſilvania, Moldavia and Valachia; reſerving them for the Cadmean Fields, wherein the Hungarians, Germans, Polonians, and the People of thoſe Countries themſelves might deſtroy one the other, and make his entrance to the poſſeſſion of them the more facile, and leſs bloudy.

Lib. 12. Hiſt.

Thirdly, Of their Ramazan.

The third neceſſary point of their Religion, is the obſervation of the Month of Ramazan, or a Faſt in that whole Month, in which time they can neither eat, drink, or take any thing in their Mouths, whilſt the Sun is above the Horizon; afterwards, upon ſhutting in of the Evening, that the Emaum lights the Lamps, which in that Month are expoſed round the Steeple of every Moſch, they have liberty to eat: moſt part of the night they ſpend in Feaſting, reſerving commonly their greateſt Delicacies and beſt proviſions for the conſolation of that Faſt; their buſineſs and employments they attend moſt to in the night, paſſing the day as over-tedious in ſleeping, ſo that their Faſt is nothing but a changing the day into night. This Month they call ſacred and holy, and the time when the Gates of Paradiſe are opened, and of Hell are ſhut: and ſo ſtrict is the impoſition of this Faſt, that it is no leſs than Death for a Turk to be accuſed of the breach thereof. In this Month to drink Wine is eſteemed an inexpiable crime; and ſuch who give themſelves that liberty at other times, do yet, not to give ſcandal, abſtain from it fourteen days before the beginning of this Month: and Women, and other of the more ſuperſtitious ſort, begin fifteen days their Faſt before it is enjoyned by the Precept of their Prophet. But ſuch as are ſick, or have any infirmity, or are travellers in their journey, have a permiſſion to eat; but with that condition, as to remain obliged at other times of their health and convenience to make good thoſe days of the Ramazan, of which they remain indebted to the performance of their Law.

Mr. Pocock. Note de Arabum moribus.

The Inſtitutions of this Month of Ramazan, proceeded from Mahomet himſelf, in the ſecond year of his Prophetick Office, which he did not aſſume untill he fully had compleated forty years, having before in imitation of the Jews Faſt of Aſhura, Levit. 16. ver. 29. in memory of the overthrow of Pharaoh and his Hoſt in the Red-Sea, enjoyned to the Arabians the ſame time of Abſtinence: but afterwards apprehending it diſhonourable to be beholding to the Jews for the invention of a Faſt, inſtituted the Ramazan, the time of which is governed by the courſe of the Moon, and falls out commonly ten days ſooner than in the preceding year, ſo that this Faſt with time comes to run through all the Months, and is more eaſie to the Turks when it happens in the ſhort days of the Winter, rather than in the Summer, when the days are long and hot, which become tedious to the ordinary ſort of people, who for neceſſity are forced to labour, and yet for the quenching thirſt dare not refreſh their mouths with a drop of water.

Fourthly, Of their Zacat.

Which is another neceſſary point to the conſtitution of a Mahometan, which is the beſtowing Alms according to certain rules preſcribed by four principal Doctours of their Law: the word Zacat ſignifies as much as Encreaſe, becauſe the Alms procure the bleſſing of God, and multiply the ſtore of the Mercifull. According to this command every man is obliged to give one in a hundred of all their Eſtate to the relief of the poor; and though this Precept is enjoined as an ingredient to conſtitute a true Mahometan, yet covetouſneſs and Policy ſo much prevail with the Turks, that the Rich are both unwilling to part with ſo much of their Eſtate, and fearfull to evidence their Wealth by a true calculate according to the Zacat; ſo that the Poor are the beſt obſervers of this injunction, the Rich conceiving it ſuperfluous, and never intended by God to make the performance of Religion a ſnare to their Eſtates.

Fifthly, Of their Pilgrimage to Mecha.

Which is enjoyned to every one who hath Riches and Freedom from great Offices and Charges of Government, to perform it; being a Type or ſignification of their paſſage out of this world into the next. The number of thoſe who yearly undertake this Pilgrimage is uncertain, though moſt commonly are regiſtred from divers parts where the Mahometan Religion is profeſſed, above Fifty Thouſand Souls; theſe Pilgrims depart about the latter end of May from Conſtantinople, and meet with thoſe from Anatolia, Caramania, and others of that quarter of the World at Damaſcus: thoſe from Perſia aſſemble at Babylon: thoſe of the parts of Egypt at Grand Cairo; and all unite upon a Mount not far diſtant from Mecha, where they obſerve divers Ceremonies, as making Corban or Sacrifice, which they do by killing Sheep, and ſending part thereof as Preſents to their Friends, and diſtribution thereof amongſt the Poor. They alſo here ſtrip themſelves of their Garments, and being covered onely with a Blanket, go in proceſſion through the Mountains, in ſignification that they muſt now leave all their ſins and affections of the World behind them. Here alſo they leave their Chriſtian Slaves, that ſo they may not prophane the Holy City with the Uncircumciſed.

The chief Commander over the Pilgrims (for amongſt ſo conſiderable a number of people, there muſt be rule and Government) is appointed by the Grand Signior, and is called Sur-Emini, by whom he ſends 500 Zechins, an Alcboran Emboſſed with Gold, carried on a Camel, and as much black Cloath as ſerves for Hangings for the Moſchs at Mecha; and this is yearly preſented from the Sultan to that place: when the new Hanging is ſet up, that of the former year is pulled down, and is by the Pilgrims torn in pieces: ſome getting more and ſome leſs, carry any rag of it home, as a Relique and token of their Pilgrimage, which ſerves them in place of the Caabe, to which they turn their faces at the time of Prayers. The Camel which carried the Alcboran, at his return home is decked with flowers and other ornaments, and having performed this holy Journey, is ever after exempted from all labour and ſervice.

CHAP. XXIV.

Of the Bairam and Ceremonies uſed at that time by the chief Officers to the Grand Signior.

THE Bairam is the Feaſt of the Turks, of which there are two in the year; one immediately following the Faſt of Ramazan, as our Eaſter doth the Lent, which is called the great Bairam; the other is the little Bairam, which happens about ſeventy days after the former; at which time the people for three days ceaſe from their labour: preſent one the other, rejoice and take greater liberty than at other times; which no queſtion but was invented by Mahomet, for relaxation of the bodies and minds of his Followers, as well as in imitation of the Chriſtian Feaſts.

The Bairam is then conceived to begin at the firſt appearance of the new Moon after the Ramazan; which is ſometime deferred a days time, if the weather prove cloudy, that the Moon is not viſible; if longer the Sky be obſcured, according to the courſe of nature, it is preſumed that the Moon is begun, and ſo their Feaſt begins alſo; which is publiſhed at Conſtantinople by the diſcharge of the great Guns at the point of the Seraglio upon the Sea-ſhore, at which time the Lights or Lamps on the Steeples of the Moſchs are extinguiſhed or omitted to be lighted, and Drums and Trumpets are ſounded in all publick places of the City, and Courts of great Perſons: ſo that every one betakes himſelf to Mirth or Paſtime as his own inclination or convenience leads him.

But

But that which will be moſt curious to the obſervation of the judicious Reader, is the relation of the Ceremonies uſed in the Seraglio at this Feaſt by the ſeveral Officers of State to the Grand Signior, and to one another; which are ſo formal, preciſe, and conſtant to the leaſt motion of every Member of the Body, as will clear the Turks from that opinion which paſſes of them in the World, of being rude, uncivil, and void of all Ceremony or Courtſhip in their comportment and behaviour; which according to the beſt information I could procure, is for the moſt part in this manner.

The Antiport leading to the Lodgings of the Kapa Agaſi (or chief Eunuch who commands the Pages) being adorned with rich Carpets, Cuſhions, and other Furniture after their faſhion, on the Vigil or Eve before the Bairam, all the Prime Officers of State belonging to the Empire then at Conſtantinople, aſſemble themſelves at the Grand Signior's Seraglio three or four hours before day, where as ſoon as day breaks, the Grand Signior mounted on Horſeback, paſſes through the midſt of them, and goes to the Moſchs of Santa Sophia, where having ſaid his morning Prayer, he returns again to the Seraglio.

Being returned, he enters the Haſoda or Royal Chamber, and ſetting himſelf in his Seat of State, having the chief Eunuch of the Pages on his left hand, the Sons of the Tartar Han (which remain for Hoſtages in the Turkiſh Court) upon ſigns made to them, are the firſt who preſent themſelves before him to wiſh him a happy Feſtival; whom (as I have heard reported) he walks three Paces to meet, and they proſtrating themſelves, ſay, Eiamiſcherif, which is, May theſe days be happy; and ariſing kiſs his hand, and ſo retire. The next who makes his addreſs, is the Prime Viſier, who ſtanding on the right hand of the Grand Signior in the front of all the Beglerbegs, Paſhaws, and other great Officers, Complements the Grand Signior upon one knee, and nearer approaching, kiſſes his hand, and then ariſing takes the ſtation of the Kapa Agaſi, or Eunuch of the Pages. The next who follows in this Ceremony is the Mufti, who on the left hand fronts the Officers and principal Heads of the Law, as the Kadeleſcheres or Lords chief Juſtices of Anatolia and Greece, the Nakib Eſchref, principal Head or Primate of the Kindred of Mahomet, the Mollahs, Preachers called Seighs, and others. Then the Mufti bowing his head to the ground, holding his hands on his Girdle, kiſſes him on the left ſhoulder, and the Grand Signior ſteps one pace forward to meet him, and ſo retires to his place; then all the others in their ſeveral Orders take their turns to paſs this Ceremony, who are treated according to what the Prime Viſier informs the Grand Signior; for ſome kiſs his Hand, others the hem of his Veſt, ſome his Sleeve, others his Breaſt, thereafter as their Quality and Authority is, which is ſo full of variety and formal niceties, that there is a Book wrote expreſly treating of all the particularities of this Ceremony. The laſt of all who is called to perform his Complement, is the Janizar Agaſi, or the General of the Janizaries.

This part being thus far paſſed, the Grand Signior enters into a more retired Chamber of the Seraglio, where the Arz Agalar, or the four principal Pages are the firſt of the Court to do their obeyſance as before: then follow the Eunuchs and other Pages; In the mean time a Dinner is provided in the Chamber of the Divan, where the Officers of State having complied with their obligation, take a plentifull repaſt at the Grand Signior's charge; after which the Grand Signior makes a preſent to each of the ſixteen principal Officers of Sable Veſts, with which the Ceremony concludes.

Then is way made for the Coaches of the Sultana's who having been Cloyſtered in the old Seraglio the whole year before, are glad at the Feaſt of Bairam to have occaſion to make their Viſits to the Grand Signior in the firſt place, as being of his Kindred and Relations, and then to the Queen or Queen-Mother, and to the other Sultana's and Ladies, with whom they uſe variety of Ceremony according to their Condition and Quality; and there have liberty to remain for the ſpace of three days in Banqueting, and other divertiſements of Muſick and Diſcourſe.

It may well be obſerved from the premiſſes, how generally the World is miſtaken in the opinion is conceived of the Courtſhip uſed amongſt the Turks, commonly reputed by Travellers to be rude, coming much ſhort of that quaintneſs, bowings, cringings, and reverent poſtures uſed in Chriſtendom. It is true the Turks deportment even in the moſt vile and mechanick vulgar, though never ſo mean, is carried with a ſtrange kind of barbarity and rudeneſs towards the beſt of Chriſtians in thoſe parts; which proceeds rather from a ſort of pride and deteſtation taught them by their Religion, than from any want of being inſtructed in their duty of due reverence to their Superiours; for in their carriage one towards the other, they obſerve the rules and niceties of Complement with as much variety and exactneſs, as is exerciſed in Rome, or the moſt civilized Courts of Chriſtendom; and amongſt the chief Miniſters there is much preciſeneſs and caution uſed not to exceed the limits of that Ceremony which inferiours owe the ſuperiours, leſt they ſhould diſparage their own quality, or give occaſion to the World to believe their diſorderly ſubmiſſion to be a part of adulation. And therefore it is worthy the ſtudy of Chriſtian Miniſters employed in Embaſſies in the Ottoman Court, to be well informed in the rules and manner of their carriage in the preſence of the chief Miniſters of State; for uncovering the head, as in Chriſtendom, is amongſt them eſteemed ridiculous and affrontive, and the manner of little bowings and often inclinations of the body, taken as acknowledgments of the great diſtance there is between the Maſters they repreſent; and therefore a little Ceremony at the entrance, and the like at departure, with a ſteady and conſtant behaviour at the time of the Treaty or Diſcourſe, is the beſt rule for a Chriſtian Miniſter's which is interpreted amongſt Turks as the effect of gravity and eſtimation of themſelves; it being certain, that the contrary hath cauſed many Chriſtian Miniſters to fall lower in the reputation of the Turks, than they had deſerved for their wiſedom and dexterity in the management of the more ſubſtantial points of Affairs.

CHAP.

CHAP. XXV.

Of the Prohibition of Swines Fleſh and Wine.

THE five foregoing Principles already treated of are (as we have ſaid before) the eſſential points required towards the conſtitution of a true Mahometan; other matters are proofs and trials of their obedience; amongſt which none is more enjoyned than the prohibition of Swines fleſh and Wine: which are called Haram things abominable and forbidden. The firſt in reality abhorred by them, and as diſpleaſing as the Fleſh of a Man to civilized People, or a Dogs thigh to ſuch as have been uſed to Delicacies and wholeſome Viands. But Wine of late years, though forbidden by the Law, hath gained a better reputation; and though accurſed by them, is yet accounted of ſo ſtrong a temptation, that the ſin is the more excuſable; and though the Alchoran poſitively inhibits the uſe thereof, and the Expoſitors of the Law have ſo far removed it from all poſſibility of becoming lawfull, that they have determined that if Wine be ſpilt on the ground, and in that place Graſs grows, and with that paſture a Sheep or an Ox is nouriſhed, thoſe Cattel become Haram, and are as abominable as the Fleſh of Swine.

But notwithſtanding the ſevere Prohibitions hereof by their Religion, Wine is ſo commonly uſed, that it is publickly drank without cautions or fear of giving ſcandal; the great Men, becauſe in Office, are more carefull how the World diſcovers what delight they take in that liquour, leſt the miſcarriages of their Office ſhould be attributed to the exceſs of Wine; or their knowledge of the uſe of that which deprives them of their reaſon, render them uncapable of their Truſt and Dignity. For the Turks account it impoſſible to drink Wine with moderation, and are ignorant of the benefit of it for Concoction of crude humours and indigeſtions of the ſtomach; and wonder to ſee it by Engliſh, French, or Italians tempered with Water; for unleſs they may drink it with full Bowls, and have ſufficient thereof, to give them their Kaif, (as they call it) that is to tranſport them into a diſſolute mirth, or the ridiculous actions of drunkenneſs, or to a ſurfeit or a vomit, they eſteem it not worth the drinking, and a provocation to the appetite and palate to remain with a deſire of demanding more.

But ſuch as would appear Religious amongſt them, and are ſuperſtitious, moroſe, and haters of Chriſtians, abſtain wholly from Wine, and are of a Stoical pride, melancholy temper, and cenſorious of the whole World. Theſe men who drink onely Water and Coffee, enter into Diſcourſes of State matters, cenſure the Actions, and paſs Characters on the Grandees and great Officers; Aſſumta Stoicorum arrogantia, Sectaq; quæ turbidos, & negotiorum appetentes faciat. Tac. lib. 14. And this was the reaſon why the great Viſier Kuperli, put down the Coffee-houſes in Conſtantinople, and yet privileged the Taverns; becauſe the firſt were melancholy places where Seditions were vented, where reflexions were made on all occurrences of State, and diſcontents publiſhed and aggravated; but Wine raiſed the ſpirits of men to a gay humour, and would never operate thoſe effects to endanger his condition as the Counſels which were contrived in the Aſſemblies of thoſe who addicted themſelves to a more melancholy Liquor.

The drinking Wine in young Men is eſteemed amongſt the extravagancies of Youth, but in old men is crime a more undecent, and ſcandalous in a higher degree. But why Mahomet ſhould ſo ſeverely forbid the uſe of Wine to his Diſciples, is recounted in a Fable on this occaſion; That their Prophet being once invited by a Friend to an entertainment at his houſe, changed in his way thither to be detained a while at a Nuptial Feaſt, where the Gueſts raiſed with the chearfull ſpirits of the Wine, were merrey, embracing, and in a kind temper each towards other; which pleaſing humour Mahomet attributing to the effect of the Wine, bleſſed it as a ſacred thing, and ſo departed. But it happened that in the evening returning again, and expecting to ſee the love and careſſes he had before bleſſed, to be augmented, he found the houſe to the contrary, full of Brawls and noiſe, fightings, and all confuſion; which he alſo having underſtood to be another effect of the Wine, changed his former Bleſſing into a Curſe, and for ever after made it Haram, or an abomination to his Diſciples.

CHAP. XXVI.

Of their Morality, Good Works, and ſome certain of their Laws worthy of obſervation.

THough according to the preceding Diſcourſe, the Character that may thence reſult from the nature and temperance of the Turks, doth not promiſe any long Treatiſe concerning their deep Morality, Vertues, and elevated Graces: yet in the minds of all Mankind, though never ſo barbarous, God having wrought the Law of Nature, and made that impreſſion of doing right to our Neighbour, which tends towards conſervation of the World; we may well expect to find the ſame Principles in the Turks; eſpecially their Victories and Spoils abroad, having procured them converſation with other Nations, and their Wars and Treaties with Chriſtians, having refined their minds in a good part of that rude temper they brought with them out of Scythia, it will not be ſtrange for us to find amongſt them, men whom Education hath made civil, poliſhed in all points of vertuous deportment, and made Heroes of their Age; though I muſt confeſs I cannot applaud the generality of this people with ſo high encomiums, as I have read in the Books of ſome ingenious Travellers, and do believe without partiality that they come ſhort of the good nature and vertues are to be found in moſt parts of Chriſtendom. Howſoever, wherein they conceive a great part of charity is placed, and meritorious Works, it will not be unworthy nor unpleaſant to conſider.

And in the firſt place, they eſteem it a good work to build Houſes, though from theſe they obtain a Rent, becauſe it is a habitation for thoſe who have no Lands or Eſtates, to have them of their own. But eſpecially ſuch as are Princes and great Men, who build Chans or Inns, which are receptacles for Travellers at night, are ranked in the firſt Order of ſacred Benefactors, and are bleſſed and prayed for by the weary Gueſts, who have found repoſe and refreſhment through their Munificence: and in theſe Buildings the Turks are extraordinary Magnificent in moſt parts of the Empire, having united to many of them a ſtately Moſch, Baths, and Shops for Artiſans and Tradeſmen to ſupply all the neceſſities of the Travellers; and ſome of them are ſo endowed, that every night the Gueſts are entertained at free coſt with a convenient Supper, be their number more or leſs according as the Chan is capable to receive. The form of theſe Buildings is for the moſt part according to the model of the higheſt and ſtatelieſt of our Halls, covered with Lead, though not altogether ſo high Rooſed; yet ſome I have obſerved for their breadth and length very Magnificent; yet by reaſon they have been ſomewhat lower, have onely in that come ſhort of the pride of the ſtatelieſt Fabricks: though in few of them are Apartments for different Companies, yet every one is ſufficiently retired, having at a convenient diſtance different Chimneys for all parties of Gueſts to dreſs their Meat, and in the Winter for their Fire; the greateſt inconvenience to Men of watchfull ſpirits, and uſed to quiet retirements, is the want of ſleep, which until I have been over-tired with labour, and accuſtomed thereunto by divers days Journies, hath been always a ſtranger to my eyes, by reaſon of the moleſtation of various Companies, ſome of which are always awake, ſome mending their Carts, others dreſſing Meat, others upon their departure, that in thoſe publick places never want noiſe to diſturb thoſe who ſleep but of one ear: Theſe ſtately Chans or Inns, which with the Moſchs are the onely durable and magnificent Buildings of the Empire, are the Edifices of certain great Men, who fearing to be deprived of their Riches by a haſty death, ſhould they endeavour to continue them to their Family, chuſe to perpetuate their Names, and ſecure their conditions by theſe publick Works.

Thoſe who would appear of a compaſſionate and tender nature, hold it a pious work to buy a Bird from a Cage to give him his liberty; and hold it a mercifull action to buy Bread and feed the Dogs, of which there are a great number of diſeaſed Curs in all Streets appropriate to no Maſter, but are mangy and foul, and no ſmall cauſes of breeding the Plague, ſo frequent in all the Cities of the Turks. And this care of Dogs is accounted ſo charitable, that there are certain Laws made for the protection and maintenance of them: and it is a lighter offence to deny Bread to a poor Chriſtian who is famiſhed in his Chains, than to the Dogs of their Street, which are fit for nothing but to breed Infection; and ſome bind themſelves by a Vow to give ſuch a quantity of bread a day to the Dogs of ſuch a Street, others bequeath it by Teſtament; for they maintain their quarters from other wandring Curs, and join together in a ſtrange manner to preſerve certain limits free from others that are not whelped and bred amongſt them.

The Camel is another ſort of Beaſt to which the Turks bear not onely a love, but a religious reverence, accounting it a greater ſin to over burthen and tire them with too much labour, than the Horſe, becauſe it is the Beaſt moſt common to the holy parts of Arabia, and carries the Alchoran in Pilgrimage; that I have obſerved thoſe who have the government of the Camels, when they have given water to them in a Baſon, to take off the foam or froth that comes from the Mouth of the Beaſt, and with that, as if it were ſome rare Balſame, with a ſingular devotion to anoint their Beards, and thereat with a Religious ſigh, groan out, Hadgi Baba, Hadgi Baba, which is as much as, Oh Father Pilgrim! O Father Pilgrim! And thus having run through the moſt obſervable points of the Turkiſh Religion, it will be now time to take a view of their Hoſt and Militia, being that by which their Empire is more ſupported, than either by their Policy in Civil Government, or Profeſſion in Religion.

THE THIRD BOOK,

Wherein is Treated of

The Turkiſh Militia.

CHAP. I.

Of the preſent ſtate of the Military Diſcipline in general amongſt the Turks.

WHoever is acquainted with the ſtate of the Turkiſh Empire, and hath duly conſidered the premiſſes of this foregoing Treatiſe, will eaſily judge that the main Sinews of the Ottoman Kingdom conſiſt in the force of the Spahees, Janizaries, and the other Auxiliaries; and that this Government being wholly founded upon Martial Diſcipline, and the Law of Arms, is moſt obliged to the Conſtitutions, and ſupported on the Props related in this following Diſcourſe: for this People having neither entred into the Poſſeſſion of this Empire, as into an uninhabited and deſart Land, as Colonies of other Nations have done into Countries new found or diſcovered; nor got admittance precariouſly from the Græcian Princes for the benefit of their Neighbourhood and Commerce; but have opened their way to Poſſeſſion and Government by meer force and power of the Sword; whereby their Conſtitutions, Laws, Cuſtoms and Manners of living are wholly agreeable to the warlike Diſcipline of a Camp, and to the quickneſs and ready execution of Martial Law. And if it be true in Morality, as it is in Nature, that things are conſerved by the ſame cauſe by which they are produced; it will neceſſarily follow, that this Ottoman Empire, which was begot by Arms, and had Mars its onely Father, will never be nouriſhed by ſoftneſs, and the arts and blandiſhments of Peace.

But he that takes a view of the Ottoman Armies, as deſcribed in various Hiſtories, renowned for their Chivalry and Diſcipline in the times of Sultan Selim, or Solyman the Magnificent, and deſigns thence to extract a draught, or Copy for his preſent ſpeculation, will find himſelf much at a loſs in framing true conjectures of the puiſſance of the Turks, or the Rules of their Government, by compariſon of former times with this preſent age. For that ancient ſublimity and comely Majeſty in the Empire is much abated; the Forces by Land decayed, and the Maritime power by ill ſucceſs and unskilfull and ſlothfull Seamen, reduced to an inconſiderable condition; the Countries are diſpeopled, and the Royal Revenue abated; nothing remains of thoſe plenteous ſtores and proviſions of War, nor that Regiment and Diſcipline continued in peace, none of that ancient obſervation of their Laws and Religion, nor that love and reſpect to the Militia, which is now become degenerate, ſoft, and effeminate; nor is the Ottoman Court ſo prone to remunerate the ſervices, and exalt the intereſt of the Cavalry, or maintain the reputation of the Janizaries. In brief, there are no Reliques of ancient Juſtice, or Generoſity of diſcreet Government, or Obedience to it, of Courteſie or Concord, of Valour or Counſel, nor yet of Confidence, Friendſhip, or generous Fidelity.

But though this Empire hath many of theſe diſtempers, and begins to grow factious, and yet ſlothfull, and deſirous to avoid the occaſions of War, as all Governments have been which in their youth and firſt beginnings were eager, active, and provoked through Poverty, in their riper years grown Rich, and Luxurious with Plenty, have declined afterwards as from the Meridian of their Greatneſs and Power; yet the Turks maintain ſtill the extent of their Dominions, and if they have loſt ground in one place, like the Sea, they have recovered it in another; if in Aſia the Perſians have taken from them Rivan, Sebirvan, Tibris, Lyris and Ghenge, it is but a recovery of their own Dominions; if they are diſpoſſeſſed in Ethiopia of Eden, and other parts of Arabia Felix, they have recompenced themſelves in Europe, by their footing in Candia; and in Hungary, by the late Conqueſt of Newheuſel and Novigrade; and in Tranſilvania, by the additions of Janova and Waradin.

But this Empire, as vaſt and large as it is, is yet diſpeopled, the Villages abandoned, and whole provinces as pleaſant and fruitfull as Tempe or Theſſaly, uncultivate and turned into a Deſart, or Wilderneſs: all which deſolation and ruine proceeds from the Tyranny and Rapine of the Beglerbegs and Paſhaws; who either in their Journies to the poſſeſſion of their Government, or return from thence, expoſe the poor Inhabitants to violence and injury of their Attendants, as if they had entred the Confines of an Enemy, or the Dominions of a Conquered People.

In like manner the insolence of the Horſe and Foot is unſupportable, for in their marches from one Countrey to another, Parties of 20 or 30 are permitted to make excurſions into divers parts of their own Dominions, where they not onely live upon free quarter, but extort Money and Cloaths from the poor Vaſſals, taking their Children to ſell for Slaves, eſpecially the Bulgarians, and Sclavians, and the people of Bosna and Albania, which being ignorant of the Turkiſh Tongue; are ſold for Ruſſians, Hungarians or Moſcovites, ſo that rather than be expoſed to much miſery, and licence of the Soldiery, the poor people chooſe to abandon their dwellings, and wander into other Cities, or ſeek for refuge in the Mountains, or Woods of the Countrey. In fine, though generally the Military Offices are in the ſame form, and the Soldiery diſpoſed according to the ancient Rule and Canon, yet licentiouſneſs and negligence have ſo prevailed in the Officers, as to introduce that corruption which renders them wholly altered and eſtranged from their firſt Diſcipline: For the Commanders upon every light occaſion are contented to make Otoracks or Stipendiaries, ſuch as enjoy the pay and priviledges of a Soldier, and yet are excuſed from the Wars; which they eaſily purchaſe with a ſmall Sum of Money, for a ſcratch, or a fleſh-wound gained in the Wars; wholly againſt the Original Inſtitution, which deſigned that benefit onely for maimed and diſabled Soldiers; ſo that now there is ſo great a number of Soldiery luſty and healthfull, under the title of Dead mens pay, as diſfurniſhes the Grand Signior's Treaſury, and weakens his Forces.

The Janizaries alſo marrying freely, and yet diſpenſed with as to the abſence from their Duty and Chambers, apply themſelves to Trades and other Studies beſides the War, by which means having Children and Dependencies, they are forced by other Arts than their few Aſpers of daily pay, to ſeek the proviſion and maintenance of a Family; and their minds growing eſtranged from the War, are ſolicitous with the care and anxiety for a Wife and Children; and in my time, have ſo abhorred the thoughts of the War both in Candy and in Hungary, that many have offered great Preſents to be excuſed; and ſo general hath been the diſlike of all kind of Martial action for the reaſons before mentioned, that at firſt the very rumours and diſcourſe of War, and afterwards the reality thereof, cauſed ſo general a diſcontent, as had, if not prudently prevented and timely ſuppreſſed, burſt into a Mutiny of the Militia; whoſe meer enquiry but into the reaſons and grounds of the War, is little different from a Sedition.

Another Corruption hath the Covetouſneſs of the Officers produced for ſmall Preſents and Donatives, in owning many under the title and name of Spahees and Janizaries, which have no name or place in the Rolls, or Regiſters of the Soldiery; by which means many Offenders, and outlawed perſons are defended by the Military Priviledges; and the ancient honour due to Arms is proſtituted for the maintenance and protection of the raſcalities and ſcum of the World.

And this ſhall ſerve to have ſpoken in general of the preſent ſtate of the Turkiſh Soldiery: we ſhall now proceed to the particularities of the force and numbers of the Turkiſh Militia; and from whence and how they are raiſed.

CHAP. II.

Of the Turkiſh Militia.

IN the twelfth Chapter of the firſt Book we made an eſtimate of the Revenue and the Riches of all the Beglerbegs and Paſhaws of the Empire, be which might by collected the number of Soldiers which theſe great men are able out of their own Families to furniſh unto the Wars; it will be now time to make a juſt computation in its due place, of the Forces in particular, the numbers, the Countries from whence they are raiſed, the ſeveral Military Orders, and the true puiſſance of the Ottoman Empire; which is indeed ſo incredibly great and numerous, That with good reaſon they have formed it into a Proverb; That no Graſs grows there where the Turkiſh Horſe hath once ſet his foot. This ſpeculation is abſolutely neceſſary to a true deſcription of the Regiment of a Countrey; for the Martial Conſtitutions are the beſt part of the Political Science, and Civil Laws have no vigour unleſs they receive their Authority by the enforcement of the Sword: This conſideration is alſo neceſſary to the Art of a Stateſman, that he ill ſtudies the Geography of his Enemies Provinces, who knows not the utmoſt ſtrength it contains by Land and Sea, and is ill prepared to gain a perfect knowledge of the prudent Art wherewith a Nation or People is conſerved in Peace, who is ignorant of their Force, and Conſtitutions appropriated to the time of War. Wherefore we ſhall diſcourſe as ſuccinctly of this Subject as the matter will permit, and with the ſame certainty that one of the principal Muſter-Maſters of the Turkiſh Rolls, long practiſed and accurate in his Office, hath decyphered, from whoſe Report it ſelf I profeſs to derive my Authority in this following Relation.

The whole Turkiſh Militia then is of two ſorts; one that receives maintenance from certain Lands or Farms beſtowed on them by the Grand Signior; others that receive their conſtant pay in ready money. The great nerve or ſinew of the Turkiſh Empire is that of the * firſt rank, which are of two ſorts, viz. Zaims, which are like Barons in ſome Countries; and Timariots, who may be compared to the Decumani amongſt the Romans. Thoſe of the ſecond ſort, paid out of the Grand Signior's Treaſury, are Spahees, Janizaries, † Armourers, * Gunners, and Soldiers called Levens, who have no pay for life, or are enrolled amongſt the Military Orders; but onely make an agreement for five or ſix thouſand Aſpers for their Voyage, which being ended, they are disbanded.

* Called in Turkiſh Mal-Mukarele.

† Gebegi. * Topzi.

Of the Zaims and Timariots.

The nature of theſe two, and their Inſtitution is the ſame; the onely difference is in their Commiſſions or Patents, or rather we may call them the Conveyances or Evidences for their Lands, which they have from the Grand Signior: For the the Rent of a Zaim is from 20m of Aſpers to 99999, and no further; for adding one Aſper more, it becomes the Eſtate of a Sangiackbeck, called a Paſhaw, which is from 100000 Aſpers to 199999; for adding one Aſper more, it becomes the Revenue of a Beglerbeg.

The Timariots are of two ſorts; one called Tezkerelw, who have their Evidences for their Land from the Grand Signior's Court, whoſe Rent is from 5 or 6000 Aſpers, to 19m999; for then with the addition of one Aſper they enter the number of Zaims: The other ſort is called Tezkereiis, who hath his Patent or Writing from the Beglerbeg of the Country, whoſe Rent is from 3000 to 6000 Aſpers.

The Zaims in all Expeditions of War are obliged to ſerve with their Tents, which are to be furniſhed with Kitchins, Stables and other neceſſary Apartments agreeable to their State and Quality; and for every 5000 Aſpers of Rent received from the Grand Signior, they are to bring a Horſe-man into the Field, which is called Gebelu; as for example, one of thirty thouſand Aſpers is to come attended with ſix, one of ninety thouſand with 18 Horſemen, and ſo proportionably: every Zaim is entituled Kulitchgee, or Sword-man; ſo that when the Turks calculate the ſtrength or numbers that a Beglerbeg is able to bring into the Field for the ſervice of his Prince, they make a computation upon ſo many Zaims and Timariots themſelves, which they call ſo many Swords, not numbring the people with which they come accompanied.

The Timariots are obliged to ſerve with leſſer Tents, and to be provided with three or four Baskets for every man that attends them; for their Office is, beſides fighting, as alſo of the Zaims and Spahees, to carry Earth and Stones for making Batteries and Trenches, whilſt the Janizaries are in skirmiſh with the Enemy. And for every three thouſand Aſpers Rent the Timariots are ſeſſed at a Man and Horſe, as the Zaim is for every five thouſand: And both one and the other of theſe Souldiers little differ from thoſe in England which hold their Lands in Capite, or the ancient Tenure of Knights Service.

Both Zaims and Timariots are diſpoſed into Regiments under command of Colonels, called Alai-Begler, who march with Colours and the * Kettle-Drum: theſe Colonels are again under the command of the Paſhaws, or Sangiack-beg, and he under the Beglerbeg; which Forces being united into one body, repair to the Rendezvous appointed by the † General, who is either the Grand Signior in Perſon, or the Viſier Azem, or ſome other eminent perſon qualified with the Title of Viſier.

* In Turkiſh Tabl. Alem.

† In Turkiſh Serasker.

Theſe two Orders of Souldiery are not onely appropriated to Land ſervice, but ſome alſo are deſtined to the Sea, who are called Deria Kelemende, and are under the command of the Captain Paſhaw or Admiral: but the Zaims are moſt commonly diſpenſed with as to the Sea-ſervice in their own perſons, upon the payment of ſo much Money, as they are eſteemed at in the Signior's Book, out of which Levends are raiſed, and enrolled in the Regiſters of the Arſenal; but the Timariots can never be excuſed from their perſonal duty and ſervice with their attendance of Souldiery, according to the value of their Lands.

Neither the one nor the other of theſe can be diſpenſed with from their ſervice at Land; no excuſe in time of the Grand Signior's Wars is lawfull or pleadable: if ſick, they are carried in Horſe-Litters or Beds; if Infants in Hampers or Baskets, and in the very Cradles accuſtomed to the hardſhip, hazard, and Diſcipline of War. And thus much ſhall ſerve in brief to have ſpoken in explication of the Nature of the Zaims and Timariots, which come under the general denomination of Spahees, and compoſe the beſt part of the Turkiſh Armies; we ſhall now proceed to declare, as far as can probably be computed, the number of theſe Horſe which fill up the vaſt Hoſt that hath overſpread ſo large a proportion of the World.

CHAP. III.

A Computation of the numbers of the Forces ariſing from the Zaims and Timariots.

IT were a work of too great labour conſidering the little ſatisfaction and delight it would afford the Reader, to proceed accurately in deſcribing the juſt numbers of thoſe which follow theſe Zaims and Timariots; it will be ſufficient to denote, that the ſmalleſt number of a Zaim is four Men, and is the greateſt of a Timariot, whoſe loweſt condition is obliged to maintain a ſingle Man, and the higheſt of a Zaim to ſerve with Nineteen; ſo that whoſoever will ſurvey this Turkiſh Hoſt, muſt make his Calculate a little more or leſs by conjecture and judgement.

And this difficulty is the more augmented, when I conſider the fraud is uſed by the Accomptants, Regiſters, and Muſter-Maſters of the Grand Signior's Enrollments, who are as well acquainted with the arts and ſweetneſs of making falſe Muſters as they are in the moſt ingenious places of Chriſtendom; and perhaps Policy may afford a connivence to this Fraud, for the ſake of a ſuperlative face of their Armies; which they love to expreſs by this uſual ſimilitude, Asker, reml deria miſal, As innumerable as the Sands of the Sea-ſhore: but in effect the noiſe is greater than the reality, and he that will ſum up their number, may find Arithmetick to make the Account, which by the vaſt extent of Tents, confuſion of Baggage, train of Servants, and Attendants of the Camp, appears infinite in the popular eſtimation. Beſides the Turkiſh Army admits of great increaſe and decreaſe by the many interlopers, as we call them, which the Zaims for their own honour introduce to fill up their numbers on a day of Muſter, or Appearance; ſo that one would admire to ſee, in ſo ſhort a time ſo apparent a decay in the Turkiſh Camp: which abuſe, the great and famous Viſier Mahomet Kiupruli with cruelty and extraordinary ſeverity endeavoured to remedy upon his expedition for recovery of Tenedos and Lemnos; and conqueſt of Jansoa in Tranſilvania; but it is impoſſible for one man to know, and ſee, and remedy all diſorders, and is amongſt the Turks called Aain oin a ſecret fraud, as difficult to be totally remedied as it is to be throughly diſcovered.

But that which makes the principal difference and various change herein, is the death of Zaims and Timariots; ſome of which holding an Eſtate onely for life, and others dying without Heirs of their Bodies, their Lands revert to the Crown: Which Eſtates being improved by the induſtry of the Poſſeſſours, above the primary valuation in the Records, and afterwards falling into the hands of the Prince, are beſtowed again on others according to their true eſtimate, which is oftentimes double of the former. By which means, the number of the Grand Signior's Souldiery is increaſed; and it is a point very obſervable, that as other Princes looſe by the fall, and death of their Subjects, the Grand Signior is the onely gainer; for of the moſt that are ſlain in the day of Battel, the Eſtates accrue to him, in diſpoſal again of which he obſerves this Rule, to gratifie many with that which was before the proportion of a ſingle perſon.

Note.

But to come now to the expreſs and diſtinct account of the Ziamets and Timariots in every part and Government of the Empire, this Computation is extracted out of the Imperial Rolls, and Regiſters of the Grand Signior.

Beſides

Beſides this Militia in Romania, there is another ſort called Jureghian or Jerukler, who have their Eſtates in Fee from Father to Son, of which there are accounted about 1294 Families: There is alſo another ſort in the Province of Dobridge, called Ogiacks of which there are about 4000 Houſes: Of the ſame kind in the Province of Kizlige are 200 Houſes; In Tchirmen 351 of Cingani, which are the ſame as amongſt us the Race of the Gypſies; in Wize 170: So that the whole ſum of Ogiacks may arrive to the number of 4721, or at the moſt to 5000. Theſe are obliged every year to draw out of every thirty, five perſons, called Eſchkingi or Voluntiers, who are to join themſelves with the Tartars for making Excurſions into Ruſſia, Poland, or other parts; and ſo yearly they interchangeably take their courſe. The other twenty five remaining are called Jamak, and are not obliged perſonally to ſerve when the Grand Signior's Wars call them to employment; but then for every 5000 Aſpers Rent they poſſeſs of the Grand Signior's Lands, they are ſeſſed at one man, who are aſſigned to ſerve out of thoſe whoſe turn it was that year to have accompanied the Tartars in their Robberies. The Principal Office of theſe is to attend the Artillery, Baggage and Proviſions, to mend the Ways and Bridges for paſſage of the Army. To the like ſervice are obliged certain Families of Bulgarians, for carriage of Hay, and cutting Graſs, according to the ſeaſon of the Year.

The number of the Zaims and Timariots in the Governments of the Beglerbegs of Buda, Temſwar and Boſna, I find not particularly deſcribed in Ottoman Books; but however according to the beſt information, that Militia on the Confines of the Empire called Serhadly, amount to the number of about 70000 fighting men paid out of the Rents of the Sangiacks of that Country. But though the Militia of Buda be not ſet down in the Regiſters of more ancient date at Conſtantinople, becauſe it is as it were a principality independent both for its Eminency, Revenue, and large extent of Dominions: yet in that City it ſelf is ſtrict order obſerved, and the Rolls of their force moſt exactly known and computed; to which the Turks have a ſtrict eye it being a frontier Gariſon of much importance and the Key of Hungary; the Militia of which, as I learned from Officers of Note, during my reſidence in that place, was according to this preciſe Account; Of

Muriolues, a ſort of Foot Souldiers	300
Souldiers belonging to the Powder-houſe	280
The Souldiery who are Servants to the Paſhaw	3000

In all 22180; to which adding the Militia of Boſna, and other parts of Sclavonia; and all along the Frontier Countries, which extend for above 800 Engliſh miles, the number may amount to no leſs than 70000 fighting Men. But we here diſcourſe onely of the number of the Zaims and Timariots, which whole ſum amounts to, of Zaims 10948, and of Timariots 72436, which makes in all 83380; but this is calculated at the loweſt rate, they may very well be reckoned to be one third more, beſides other Militia's of Cairo, or other Orders of Souldiery to be treated of in the following Chapters.

Theſe Partitions or Diviſions were firſt made by Solyman the Magnificent, as the beſt Rule and Method for an orderly diſpoſition of his Militia, and as the ſtrongeſt nerve of the Ottoman Force: but as with time in the moſt exact compoſitions of Diſcipline, corruptions through covetouſneſs and ambition of Officers are introduced; ſo alſo in the juſt diſpoſal of theſe Rents according to the ancient Inſtitutions: for the Beglerbegs, Paſhaws, Treaſurers, and other Officers, inſtead of beſtowing this maintenance to the Souldiers, according to their merits of Valour or long Service, reſerve it to prefer and gratifie their Servants and Pages, obliging them in recompence thereof under various Services; ſome that live at Conſtantinople, or near the Sea, to defray the Charges of all Boats and Veſſels which carry their Houſhold Proviſions; others that live in the Inland Countries agreeing with the Teaſurer of the Souldiery, without regard to the true Heirs, or any other conſideration, ſet to ſale theſe Rents to them who profer moſt; ſo that in time of Harveſt the Paſhaw ſends abroad his Officers to gather his Profits from the poor Timariots, with that oppreſſion and violence as cauſes diſturbances, differences and Law-Suits amongſt them, which being to be decided by Judges partly intereſſed in the quarrel, the Sentence is certainly determined on their ſide who have moſt Power and moſt Money.

The foregoing account of Zaims and Timariots is the moſt reaſonable one can be given: And becauſe we have reckoned them at the loweſt rate, making ſome allowance to the 83380, this Militia may amount to an hundred thouſand Men, which, as I have heard, is the utmoſt number of this ſort of Soldiery.

CHAP. IV.

Of certain Cuſtoms and Laws obſerved amongſt the Zaimets and Timariots.

AMongſt theſe Forces of Ziamets and Timariots, are in time of War and Action mixed certain Voluntiers or Adventurers call'd by the Turks Gionulli, who maintain themſelves upon their own expence in hopes by ſome ſignal Actions of Valour to obtain the ſucceſſion into a Zaims or Timariots Lands, as places are made void by the ſlaughter of the War. Theſe Men are often very hardy and ready to attempt the moſt deſperate Exploits, moved by a deſire of the Reward, and by the Perſuaſion, that at worſt dying in a War againſt Chriſtians, they become Martyrs for the Mahometan Faith. It is reported, that in one day, upon the aſſaults given to Sorinſwar, or the new Fort of Count Serini, one Timariots Farm was beſtowed eight times; one being ſlain it was conferred on another, and ſo on a third, and ſo the reſt; all which had the misfortune to fall, untill it reſted on the eighth, the others dying with the Title onely of Timariots.

The

The Zaims or Timariots being aged, or impotent, have in their life-time power to reſign up the Right of their Eſtates to their Sons, or other Relations.

It is not lawfull for a Peaſant or Clown to mount his Horſe, or girt his Sword like a Spahee, untill firſt he hath had part of his Education in the Service or Family of ſome Paſhaw, or perſon of Quality, unleſs it be on the Confines of the Empire, where having given evident teſtimonies of his Courage, he may then become Competitour for the vacant Farms of a Zaim or Timariot.

It is the Cuſtome of Romania, that a Zaim or Timariot dying in the Wars, his Zaims Rents are divided into as many Timariots Farms as he hath Sons; but if a Timariot hath no more than 3000 Aſpers Rent, it deſcends entirely to his eldeſt Son; but if it be more, it is proportionably divided amongſt the reſt of his Children.

But if they die of a natural death at their own homes, the Lands fall to the diſpoſal of the Beglerbeg of the Countrey, either to confer them on the Heirs of the deceaſed, or any of his Servants, or ſell them at the beſt advantage.

But in Anatolia there are many Zaims and Timariots whoſe Eſtates are Hereditary to them and their Heirs; and are not obliged to ſerve in Perſon in the War, but onely to ſend their Gebeluers, or number of Servants according to the value of their Eſtates; of which duty if they fail in the time of War, the years Rent is confiſcated to the Exchequer; and this Eſtate deſcends to the next of Kin, whether derived from the Male or Female Line.

CHAP. V.

The ſtate of the Militia in Grand Cairo, and Egypt.

THE guard and protection of the Kingdom of Egypt is committed to the charge of twelve Begs, ſome of which are of the ancient Race of the Mamalukes, confirm'd by Sultan Selin upon the taking of Cairo; theſe have the command of the whole Militia in their hands, whereby they are grown proud, powerfull, and ready upon every diſcontent to riſe in Rebellion; every one of theſe maintains 500 fighting men, well appointed for War and exerciſed in Arms, which ſerve but as their Guard, and for Servants of their Court; with which they go attended in Journies, in their Huntings, and publick Appearances; under the command of theſe twelve Captains are 20000 Horſe, paid at the charge of the Countrey, whoſe Office is by turns to convey yearly the Pilgrims to Mecha, and the annual Tribute of 60000 Zechins to the Ottoman Court, whether it be judged requiſite to ſend it either by Land or Sea; theſe are the ſtanding Militia of the Countrey, out of which, unleſs upon the foregoing occaſions, they are not obliged to other ſervice; their principal duty being to prevent the invaſion of the African Montaneers, who often make incurſion from the barren Rocks, into the fat and fruitfull Soils of Egypt. Beſides this Militia are computed 80000 Timariots, out of which they yearly tranſport about 2500 or 3000 men to the Wars of Candy; but to more remote Countries, or the late Wars of Hungary, I did not hear that this Soldiery hath uſually been called.

Theſe twelve Begs of Egypt are noble by bloud, enjoying an hereditary Eſtate deſcending from Father to Son; which richneſs joined with the command of a powerfull Army, hath rendred them ſo formidable and inſolent, that oftentimes they take upon them an authority to impriſon and depoſe the Paſhaw from his Office, and ſpoil him of all the Riches he hath collected in his three years Government: by which means are alway great jealouſies, and enmities between the Paſhaw and theſe Begs; Diſſentions and Rebellions to that high degree, that many times it hath been little different from an abſolute Revolt. Ibrahim Paſhaw was in the year 1664. impriſoned by them, and obtained his liberty for * 600 Purſes of Money; after whoſe departure the Brother of the ſaid Ibrahim, upon ſome certain pretences on the Paſhaw's ſcore, falling into their hands, was impriſoned alſo, but ſhortly after obtained his releaſment by the Grand Signior's † Maſter of Horſe, who was ſent expreſly to compoſe the diſorders of Egypt, which were now proceeded to that degree, as without ſome ſatisfactory atonement could not be termed otherwiſe than a total defection; and therefore they reſigned up one called Sulficar Bei to juſtice, who * being brought to Adrianople, was immediately in preſence of the Grand Signior put to death. But the Turk hath alway on occaſion of theſe diſturbances and inſolences, diſſembled and connived at the diſorders, perceiving the diſtemper of that Kingdom to be ſuch, as can with much difficulty be redreſſed, fearing that were forcible remedies applied, they would cauſe ſo violent a commotion of humours, as would abſolutely rent it from the body of the Empire.

* About 100000 Dollars at Cairo.

The Auxiliary Forces to the forementioned Militia of the Turks,

Are the Tartars, Valachians, Moldavians and Tranſilvanians, under the command of their reſpective Princes. Who are obliged to ſerve in perſon whenſoever called by the Sultan's command. The Tartars, I mean of Crim, are to furniſh one hundred thouſand men; the Tartar han, or Prince, in Perſon to lead them, when the Grand Signior himſelf appears in the Field: but if the Army is commanded by the Viſier onely, then the Son of the Tartar han is to ſerve, or having no iſſue, the Army to the number of Forty or fifty thouſand fighting men, is to be conducted under the chief Miniſter. But the Princes of Valachia, Moldavia and Tranſilvania are never excuſed from perſonal attendance in the Camp, each of which reſpectively are to be attended with Six or ſeven thouſand Men apiece. And though the Prince of Tranſilvania called Apaſi, was in the laſt War againſt the Emperour not called out of the Confines of his own Countrey; it was with deſign that he ſhould keep that ſtation free from the irruption of the Enemy, not that he was diſobliged from his perſonal attendance on the Viſiers Camp.

CHAP. VI.

Of the Spahees.

HItherto we have treated of the Turkiſh Horſe that are maintained by Farms and Rents of Lands: now it will be neceſſary to diſcourſe of thoſe that receive their conſtant pay from the Grand Signior's Treaſury; and theſe are called Spahees, who may not improperly be termed the Gentry of the Ottoman Empire, becauſe they are commonly better educated, courteous, and refined than the other ſort of Turks, and are in number 12000. Of theſe there are two Orders, one called Silachtari, who carry yellow Colours; and the other Spahioglari or the Servants of the Spahees, and have their Colours red; theſe Servants have now obtained the precedency above their Maſters; for though the Silachtari are very ancient, and deduce their inſtitution from Ali their firſt Founder, who was one of the four Companions of Mahomet; yet Sultan Mahomet the Third, on a day of Battel in Hungary, ſeeing the Silahteri routed and put to flight, with violent paſſion and earneſtneſs endeavoured to ſtop their courſe; and perceiving the Servants of theſe Spahees to remain ſtill in body, incited them to revenge the ſhamefull cowardiſe of their Maſters, who immediately encouraged with the words of the Sultan, clapping up a red Flag, gave ſo bold an onſet on the Enemy, and with that ſucceſs as wholly recovered the glory of the day: in remembrance of which ſervice and notable exploit, the Sultan as diſpoſer of all Honours and Orders, gave ever after the prehemineence to theſe Servants before their Maſters; ſince which time this new inſtitution of Spahaoglary hath always been continued.

Theſe Light horſe-men are armed with their Scimetar and Lance, called by them Mizrok, and ſome carry in their hands a Gerit, which is a Weapon about two foot long, headed with Iron, which I conceive to be the ſame with the Pila amongſt the Romans, which by long exerciſe and cuſtome they throw with a ſtrange dexterity and violence, and ſometimes darting it before them in the full career of their Horſe, without any ſtop recover it again from the ground: they alſo wear a ſtreight Sword named Chaddare, with a broad Blade fixed to the ſide of their Saddle, which, or the Scimetar, they make uſe of when they arrive to hand-blows with the Enemy; many of them are armed with Bows and Arrows, and with Piſtols and Carbines; but eſteem not much of Fire-Arms, having an opinion, that in the Field they make more noiſe than execution; ſome of them wear Jacks of Male and Head-pieces painted with the colour of their Squadron; in fight they begin their onſet with Allah, Allah, and make three attempts to break within the Ranks of the Enemy, in which if they fail, they then make their retreat.

Compariſon of the Spahees of Aſia and Europe.

The Aſian Spahees are better mounted than commonly thoſe of Europe, though theſe being Borderers on the Confines of the Chriſtians, having learned much of Diſcipline by conſtant skirmiſhes and combats, are trained in the Art of War, and become the more valiant and experienced Soldiers.

But the Aſiatick Spahees were formerly the more rich, many particular Men of them bringing into the Field thirty or forty men apiece, beſides their Led-Horſes, Tents, and other accommodations proportionable to their Retinue; but theſe Cavaliers ſeemed too great and proud to the Viſier Kupriuli, for the condition of common Troopers, and infected with the Epidemical Spirit of Faction and Mutiny, which raged at that time amongſt all the Grandees of the Empire; which cauſed him to ſtrike off their heads with as little remorſe as one would do the tops of Poppies, until he had abſolutely made a deſtruction of them. Thoſe now which remain are poor and inconſiderable, contented to comrade ten or twelve in a company, for maintenance of a poor Tent, and two or three Horſes and a Mule for Baggage and Proviſions; theſe are more tame, and ſubject to the Cudgel, and can take a beating patiently on the ſoles of the feet, which is their puniſhment, as the Janizaries is to receive the blows on the Buttocks (that ſo this chaſtiſement may neither incommode the ſeat of the Horſemen, nor the marches of the foot) but if the crime be great and capital, they are ſent for by Chiauſes, or Purſuivants to appear before the Viſier, by whom being condemned and ſtrangled near the Walls of the Grand Signior's Seraglio, their bodies are afterwards, about two or three hours in the night, thrown into the Sea,* without other ſolemnity than the firing of one of thoſe great Guns next the Sea, which are planted under the Walls of the Seraglio, which ſerve for ſo many warning pieces for others Example.

Their Pay.

Their pay is divers, but in general it is from twelve to one huudred Aſpers a day: thoſe who proceed from the Seraglios of Pera, Ibrahim, Paſhaw and Adrianople, which are ſo many Nurſeries and Schools as well of the principles of War, as Literature; or have been Cooks Mates (for the Cook of theſe Societies is principal Officer of reſpect) or Baltagees, that is, Hatchet-men, who cut Wood for the Grand Signior's Seraglio, and are licenſed to live abroad with the title of Spahee, have the loweſt pay of twelve Aſpers a day; but thoſe who are extracted from the Ieſs, or greater Chamber of the Grand Signior's own Seraglio, called Seni ſerai, have 19 Aſpers pay; and if they are favoured with the title of an Office, they receive two or three Aſpers augmentation. But ſuch as are elected to the War out of more eminent Chambers, as the Landery, the Turbant-Office, the Diſpenſatory, the * Treaſury, the † Falconers Lodge and others (which we have mentioned in the deſcription of the Seraglio) have at firſt thirty Aſpers daily pay: an ‖ encreaſe of which is obtained ſometimes by the Viſiers, or Regiſters favour unto two Aſpers more; ſometimes by ſervices in the War, by receiving two Aſpers augmentation for the head of every Enemy he brings in; two Aſpers more for * intelligence of the death of any Spahee, out of the pay of the deceaſed; as alſo, at the Inſtalment of every Grand Signior, five Aſpers increaſe is given as a donative general to the whole Army of Spahees: and thus many of them by art, induſtry, and good ſucceſs, go augmenting until they arrive to an hundred Aſpers, and here is their non plus ultra, they can riſe no higher. They are paid quarterly from three months to three months; which they may omit to receive for nine months, but if twelve paſs, they can only demand the nine, the other quarter or more, is confiſcated to the publick Exchequer: Their place of payment is now in the Hall of the Viſier, which formerly was in the Houſes of the Pay-Maſters, and Treaſurer, but changed by the Viſier

* Killer Odaſi.
‖ Called Tarakí.

* This is done, that the Grand Signior may not be cheated by having the Pay continued to thoſe who are dead.

Viſier Cupriuli, on occaſion of the diſorders and abuſes of the Officers which cauſed Mutinies and Diſturbances amongſt the Soldiery. For the rich Spahees living far diſtant, to excuſe themſelves from a long journey to the City, agreed with the Pay-Maſters that they for ſome certain part of their Income, ſhould without farther trouble to themſelves, take up their Dues, and make it over quarterly to their Countries of abode; theſe men thus taſting the benefit of this trade, agreed with others for ſome little gains to diſpatch them before the reſt; by which means and the payment onely on Wedneſdays and Saturdays, thoſe Spahees that came from remote parts, making ſo long attendance, had with their exceſſes in Conſtantinople ſpent as much as the principal ſumm they expected; of which growing ſenſible, at firſt they began to murmur, then to threaten the Pay-Maſters, and at laſt proceeded to open Mutiny, by forcing the doors, breaking the windows of the Officers, with many other inſolencies and diſorders, until Kupriuli, to remedy theſe abuſes, ordered the money to be given out in his preſence, and the Payment to be continued every day untill the Pay was ended.

Sons of Spahees.

The Sons of Spahees, preſenting themſelves before the Viſier, may claim the privilege of being enrolled in the Grand Signior's Books; but their Pay, which is the loweſt rate twelve Aſpers a day, is to iſſue forth from their Fathers proportion, but then they are in the road of preferment, and are capable by their ſervices and merits to make additions upon foundation of their own induſtry. Beſides the forgoing ways by which the Spahees gain their encreaſe of pay, I am given to underſtand that formerly they had another benefit, called Gulamiie, or ſafe Conduct Money, which was one per cent. of all Monies to thoſe whom the Collectours of the Grand Signior's Revenue ſummoned to convey the Treaſure for more ſecurity to the Capital City, beſides the maintenance of themſelves and their Horſes in the Journey; but this as too chargeable a deduction from the Imperial Revenue, was with time taken off, to the great diſcontent of the Spahees in general.

Accidental gains to the Spahees.

The Grand Signior going in Perſon to the Wars, according to the ancient cuſtome of other Sultans, beſtows a largeſs on the Spahees, of Five thouſand Aſpers a Man, which they call Sadak Akchiaſi, or a donative for buying Bows and Arrows; as alſo to the Janizaries, as we ſhall hereafter mention.

Their Diſcipline.

This Army of Spahees is in the War a mere confuſed multitude without any Government, or diſtribution into Troops or Regiments, but march in heaps, fight without order, little account kept of their preſence or abſence from the Camp; onely at the pay in the month of * November whoſoever appears not, unleſs favoured by the Officers, hath his name raced from the Grand Signior's Regiſter.

*Called in Turkiſh Kaſſem Uloſaſt.

Their duty in the War is to ſtand Centinel with a Janizary at the end of every Cord at the Grand Signior's Pavilion, as alſo at the Viſier's, armed with his Cimitar, Bows, Arrows, and Lance, mounted on Horſe-back; as the Janizary on foot with a Sword and Musket; and alſo the charge of the Treaſure for payment of the Militia, is committed in the Field to their cuſtody.

How they have loſt their honour.

This Order of Soldiers was in ancient times in great eſteem and honour in all parts of the Empire, by reaſon of their accompliſhments in Learning, refined Education in the Imperial Court, their nearneſs to Preferments, and acquaintance and Intereſt with the Grandees of the Empire: The place of the Selihtari in their marches to the War, was to flank the Grand Signior on the left hand, and the Spahi Oglani on the right, and were always the ultimate reſerve of the Battel, as the Life-guard to the Sultan: But like men not knowing how to comport themſelves in proſperity, growing mutinous and ambitious to have a hand in the Government, became Confederates with the Janizaries in conſpiracy againſt the Life of their true Sovereign Sultan Oſman; to which Treaſon adding other Inſolencies, they juſtly were deprived of the favour of Sultan Morat, and Sultan Ibrahim; the terrours alſo of their late Sedition remaining freſhly ſtill impreſſed in the memory of this preſent Emperour Sultan Mahomet, when they complotted againſt his own and his Mothers Life, is the cauſe they have gone ſtill declining from the degree of their priſtine honour and eſteem; for the Prince as he is the Fountain of Honour, ſo is his countenance and favour the ſpirit and life which gives a luſtre and ſparkling to thoſe Titles and Riches he hath conferred; other Seditions haſtned the ruine of their reputation, and in the year 1657. when the Viſier Mahomet Kupriuli, on occaſion of his Expedition againſt Janova, ſummoned the Aſian Spahees to the Rendezvous in Hungary, who inſtead of yielding obedience to the command of their General, elected a new Captain, a Spahee of their own rank, called Haſſan Aga, preferred to be Paſhaw of Aleppo, whoſe name at that time, I remember, upon the hopes of the diſſentions he might create amongſt the Turks, was greatly famed and celebrated over all Chriſtendom. Theſe Combuſtions in Aſia headed by the chief Enemy to the Viſier, cauſed Kupriuli to leave many of his deſigns againſt Tranſilvania uneffected, and to clap up a Peace on reaſonable and moderate terms of honour, that ſo he might hinder the progreſs of a dangerous evil which now threatned and approached the Capital City; for by this time Haſſan Paſhaw being arrived near the Walls of Scutari, began to treat by way of Petition to the Grand Signior, and repreſent that out of his zeal to the good of his Majeſty and his Empire, he had undertaken a long march to inform him of the corruption of his Miniſters, and the miſcarriages of Government; his tender years as yet not having ripened his judgment to penetrate theſe evils, which with time his underſtanding would diſcover to be too inveterate and incurable. All the oppreſſions and aggrievances of the Soldiery he ſeemed to object to the cruelty and oppreſſion of Kupriuli, and in appearance, had nothing but thoughts of the honour and ſafety of the Grand Signior's perſon; and doubtleſs this man was unfit to manage ſuch a deſign; for he entertained ſcruples of Conſcience, and a remorſe and tenderneſs in ſpilling Mahometan Bloud, conſiderations which are incomptable with the condition of a Rebel; for who hath the impiety to draw his Sword againſt his Prince, muſt ſtop at no bars either of Divine or humane right to maintain it. This gave advantage to Kupriuli to effect his deſign upon his Enemy; for in the interim of this Treaty, Mortaza Paſhaw of Babylon, was commanded to poſſeſs the City of Aleppo, and Haſſan, after many fair meſſages and promiſes from the Grand Signior and the Viſier, was perſuaded to return again to Aleppo, to capitulate with Mortaza concerning thoſe points and aggrievances he ſought to have redreſſed; it being alledged to him, that Mortaza had received inſtructions to treat, and a Plenipotentiary power to grant and firm as far as ſhould be reaſonable and honourable for the Grand Signior to condeſcend. Haſſan with this eaſie anſwer returned toward Aleppo; near which place he credulouſly committed himſelf into the hands of Mortaza, who no ſooner had him within his Tents, but he concluded all controverſies and capitulations by the deciſion of his head from his body; The whole Army of Spahees immediately, with the fall of their General, was ſcattered, and divided themſelves; but about three hundred of them being apprehended by Mortaza, were ſent to Conſtantinople, where, in the preſence of the Grand Signior, within the Walls of the Seraglio at Scutari they were all executed; ſince which their pride hath ever been declining, and their name became ſo odious amongſt the people, that upon the very nominating a Spahee, the vulgar were ready to run upon them with ſtones, or other Weapons that came next to hand; ſo that now the Spahees are much eclipſed in their ancient fame and honour.

There are beſides theſe two foregoing ſorts of Spahees, other four, the firſt called Sag Vlefigi, that is appointed to march on the right hand of the Spahaoglani, and carry white and red Colours. The ſecond is Sol Vlefigi, whoſe place is on the left hand of the Selahtari; which carry white and yellow Colours. The third Sagureka, that is Soldiers of Fortune that are to march on the right hand of the Sag Vlefigi, and carry green Colours. The fourth is Sol Gureba, whoſe place is to march on the left hand of the Vlefigi, and carry white Banners: but theſe four ſorts of Spahees are raiſed and liſted according to neceſſity and occaſions of War, and are obliged to all ſervices and duties; their pay is from 12 Aſpers to 20 a day, and are capable according to their merits, of being promoted to one of the ſuperiour Orders. There is alſo another ſort of more elevated Spahees called Mutafaracas who iſſue out from the Seraglio with more favour than the ordinary ſort of Spahees, and are four or five hundred in number, their pay is forty Aſpers a day, and have always the obligation or duty on them to ſerve and attend the Grand Signior when he goes in progreſs for pleaſure from one Village to another.

And thus much ſhall ſerve to have declared in brief concerning the inſtitution and diſcipline of the Spahees, alſo of the Militia of the Turkiſh Horſe; we ſhall now proceed to declare ſomething of their Infantry.

CHAP. VII.

Of the Janizaries.

THE next main ſinew of the Ottoman Power is the Order of Janizaries, which is as much as to ſay, the new Militia, and their Antiquity may be deduced from Ottoman the firſt King of the Turks; but becauſe they received honours and privileges from Amurath their third King, our Turkiſh Hiſtory accounts that to be the time of the firſt Original: it is certain that in his time they were modelized, and certain Laws preſcribed both for their education and maintenances when by the counſel of Catradin, otherwiſe called Kara Ruſthenes, Amurath's Prime Vifier, it was ordained that for the augmentation of this Militia, every fifth Captive taken from the Chriſtians, above the age of fifteen years, ſhould be the dues of the Sultan, who at firſt were to be diſtributed amongſt the Turkiſh Husbandmen in Aſia, to learn and be inſtructed in the Turkiſh Language and Religion.

Their beginning.

Their number at firſt was not accounted above ſix or ſeven thouſand, now with time they are encreaſed to the number of twenty thouſand effective men: but were there a liſt taken of all thoſe who aſſume this title of Janizary, and enjoy their Privileges, though not their Pay, there would be found above 100000; ſix or ſeven go under the name of one Janizary, for gaining by this means a privilege of being free from all duties and Taxes, they beſtow a certain ſum of Money or annual Preſents on the Officers, in conſideration of which they are owned and countenanced as Janizaries. Their Habit is as the Picture repreſents, wearing always the Beard on the Chin and under Lip ſhaven, which ſome ſay they learned from the Italians; but certain it is, that this cuſtome is more ancient, than ſince the time of their Neighbourhood unto Italy: this manner of their ſhaving being generally uſed as a token of their ſubjection, and ſo all the Pages and Officers in the Seraglio of great Men, Orders of Gardeners, Baltages or Hatchet-men, and others, are diſtinguiſhed by this mark to be in ſervice, and obliged to the attendance of a Maſter: But when they are either licenſed from the War, or promoted to Office, or freed to their own diſpoſal, they immediately ſuffer their Beards to grow as a ſign of their liberty and gravity.

Their number.

Their Habit.

In former times this Militia conſiſted onely of the Sons of Chriſtians, educated in the Mahomatan Rites; but of late that Politick cuſtome hath been diſuſed, the reaſon of which ſome attribute to the abundance of people the Turks have of their own to ſupply all their occaſions: but I am induced rather to another opinion, having not obſerved the multitude which Hiſtories and Travellers tell us, that the Turks ſwarm with; and rather aſſign the neglect of this practice ſo prejudicial to Chriſtian Intereſt in theſe parts, to the corruption of the Officers, and careleſneſs in their Diſcipline.

The Janizaries of whom compoſed.

And though this election of Janizaries, out of the eldeſt and luſtieſt Sons of Chriſtians that inhabit Europe (for Aſia was exempted) is now diſuſed; yet ſuch as enter into this Order, whoſoever they are (unleſs the neceſſity of the preſent ſtate of the War be over urgent) are obliged to perform their Novitiate like Tyrones Romani, before they can be enrolled in the Regiſter of Janizaries, and are called Agimoglas. The chief Officers of theſe are called Stambol Agaſi, in whoſe care and charge it is to enure theſe men to all labours, pains, and fortifications, as to cut wood, carry burthens, endure heats, colds, and other ſufferings, which may render them obedient, temperate, vigilant, and patient of all the inconveniencies and miſeries of War.

The Novices.

The quarters many of theſe have in the Garden-Lodges of the Grand Signior's Seraglio's (whereof there are many in and about Conſtantinople) to manure and dig the ground, learn the Art of Plantations, and Husbandry, and practiſe, as occaſion requires, meaner Offices of labour and ſervitude: others of them are placed in the three Seraglio's (we have beforementioned in the Chapter of Spahees) viz. of Pera, Ibrahim Paſham, and Adrianople, where their principal art is the Myſtery of Plantation and delicious diſpoſal of Gardens into the variety of Knots, Walks, Groves, and Fountains; and though there there are many of this Profeſſion who have no other thoughts to employ their minds, few of them are acquainted with any part of polite Husbandry, or know more than the ſeaſon to plant their Artichoaks or Colworts; as to the rules and ſymmetry of ſetting Trees, ordering the Labyrinths of Knots, making pleaſing Walks, Fountains, and Groves; it is ſtrange a people that delight ſo much in Flowers, in Fields, and Arbours, and have themſelves or Anceſtours ruined many of the delightfull Paradiſes of Chriſtians, ſhould be ſo wholly ignorant and dull in the contrivance of what they love, as not to be able to borrow one example or model, which amongſt all the Grand Signior's Gardens in Conſtantinople may deſerve a better name than of a Wilderneſs.

Others of theſe Agiamoglans are made Baltages or Hatchet-men to cut out wood for the Seraglio; others are made Cooks and Officers in the Kitchin, ſuch, I mean, as can already ſpeak the Turkiſh Language, for thoſe that are ignorant in that ſpeech, or in the Mahometan Religion, are diſpoſed into remoter parts of Anatolia, where the Janizaries have Poſſeſſions and Authority; as to Ciotabia, where the * Lieutenant General of the Janizaries hath a Revenue; to Karahizar and Angura, where the Stambol Agaſi hath principal power; to Menteſche, Sultan Ughi and Karoſi, where the Turnagibatch and Jaiabatchi, who are chief Officers of the Janizaries, have Rents and Profits belonging to their Offices, and here they are employed in ploughing and ſowing the Ground, or other laborious exerciſes, until ſuch time as ſupplies for the Wars give them occaſion to draw out theſe men from their ſeveral ſtations; and then being called to the Chambers of Janizaries, they orderly march one after the other according to their ſeniority, one holding the end of his fellows Garment, appear before the Muſter-maſter, who having enrolled their names in the Grand Signior's Regiſter, they run as faſt as they can by their Odabaſche or Maſter of their Chamber, who gives every one as he paſſes a blow under the Ear, to ſignifie their ſubjection to him: and this is the Ceremony obſerved in creating Janizaries.

* Called Kiahaia-Begh.

The manner in making Janizaries.

Their Pay. At their firſt Enrolment ſome have but one Aſper a day, others four or five, unto ſeven and a half; and ſo with time and favour of their Officers, encreaſe to twelve Aſpers a day, which is the higheſt pay of any Janizary, and can have no other advance, unleſs good Fortune promote them to the degree of a Kiahaia Begh, which is as much as Lieutenant-General of the Janizaries, or any other eminent Office.

Their Diet & Cloathing. Beſides this Pay, they have their daily Proviſion and Diet from the bounty of the Grand Signior, and their Table ordered at conſtant hours, where they find their Rice, fifty drams of Fleſh, and one hundred of Bread their ordinary Commons, and eat in their reſpective Refectories like Monks in Convents, or Scholars in their Colleges; they receive alſo one Soldiers Coat yearly, of Cloth made at Salonica of a courſe thred, but warm and convenient, which in every Month of Ramazan is diſtributed to each Chamber; ſo that their Bellies are full, and Backs are warm, and in all points are better provided than the tattered Infantry which are to be ſeen in moſt parts of Chriſtendom. And thus this people being pampered without cares of ſeeking their Bread, grow often querulous and apt to take the fire of Sedition with every ſpark of diſcontent in their Officers; the beginnings of which they commonly make known at their Aſſemblies of the publick Divan, whither four or five hundred of them are obliged four times a week, that is Saturday, Sunday, Monday, and Tueſday, to accompany the Janizar Aga, or their General; at that place they have their Commons from the Grand Signior's Kitchin, which when they have any ſubject of diſcontent, they evidence by ſlighting, kicking down their Plates of Rice, and ſhewing better ſtomachs to be revenged, than to their Entertainment; which Mutinies the Grand Signior and principal Miniſters having found oftentimes fatal, endeavour by fair promiſes and ſatisfactory compliance with their deſires to pacifie in their firſt motion.

Mutinies.

The General of this Militia is called Janizar Agaſi, and is always elected from the Royal Chamber of the Seraglio; becauſe it being an Office of great charge, it is thought neceſſary to be intruſted to one whoſe Education and Preferment hath made a Creature of the Court; which Policy hath been the ſuppreſſion of divers Mutinies amongſt the Janizaries, the diſcovery of their Combination, and an engagement to a ſtronger dependency on the favour of the Seraglio. When this General either dies by a natural death, or the Sword of the Grand Signior's Juſtice or Authority, his Riches, like that of other Paſhaws, is not confiſcated to the Sultan's Exchequer; but the Inheritance accrues to the publick Treaſury of the Janizaries; which how dangerous it is to a State to have a Militia endowed with Revenues appropriated to their Officers (as already we have declared they poſſeſs in ſome parts of Anatolia) and a Bank of Wealth united to the maintenance of a licentious Sword, the Ottoman Princes have by ſad effects rather felt, than able by virtue of their abſolute Power to remedy.

The ſecond chief Officer is the Kirhaia Begh, Lieutenant-General.

Officers.

The third is Seghban baſchi, the Overſeer of the Carriage of the Soldiers Baggage.

The fourth is the Turnagi Baſhee, or Guardian of the Grand Signior's Cranes.

The fifth is the Samſongi Baſhee, chief Maſter of the Grand Signior's Maſtives.

The ſixth is the Zagargi Baſhee, Maſter of the Spaniels.

The ſeventh is the Solack Baſhee, Captain of the Archers, or of ſuch of the Janizaries who go armed with Bow and Arrows.

The eighth is Subaſhi and Aſſasbaſhi, who are chief of the Sergeants and Bailiffs, and attend always at the Grand Signior's Stirrop when at any time on ſolemn occaſions he ſhews himſelf to the people.

The ninth is the Peikbaſhi, or Commander of that ſort of Pages which are called Peiks, who wear Caps of beaten Gold, of which there are 60 in number, who march at Solemnities together with the Solacks near the perſon of the Grand Signior.

The tenth is Meizurga, or the head Baily of the Janizaries.

Theſe eight laſt ariſe from the order of the Janizaries, and have their ſeveral Commands in the Army, though the Grand Signior, to augment their Power and Honour the more, bellows on them Titles and Wealth in other Offices.

The Janizaries Chambers of which there are no others but in Conſtantinople) are in number 162, of which 80 are of ancient Foundation, and are called Eskai Odalar; and 82 called Jeni Odalar or of the new Chambers; over moſt of which is a Tchorbagi or Captain. In theſe Chambers thoſe that are not married enjoy their Lodgings and Habitation; and twice a day find their Repaſt, as we have before-mentioned: And thus inſtead of Monaſteries of Fryars, the Turk maintains Convents and Societies of Soldiers; who are trained up with all modeſty and ſeverity of Diſcipline.

Officers of the Chambers.

The principal Officers of theſe Chambers are, Firſt, the Odabaſhee, or Maſter of the Chamber, who in the Wars ſerve as Lieutenants of the Company.

Second is Wekilharg, or Expenditour for maintenance of the Chamber.

The third is Bairackter, or Enſign-bearer.

Fourth is Aſhgee, or the Cook of the Chamber.

Fifth is Karakullukgee, or the under-Cook.

Sixth is the Saka, or the Water-carrier.

The Cook is not onely an Officer to dreſs the Diet and Proviſion of the Janizaries, but is alſo a Monitor or Obſerver of their good behaviour; ſo that when any one of them commits a Crime, the Cook is the Officer that executes the puniſhment. The under Cook ſerves alſo for an Apparitor, and is he who ſummons the married Janizaries at their ſeveral Dwellings in Conſtantinople, when their Officers command their attendance.

Janizaries married.

The greateſt part of the Janizaries conſiſts of Batchellours or ſingle Men; for though Marriage cannot be denied to any of them, yet it is that which determines their Preferments, and renders their Seniority uncapable of claiming a right to Offices, or Military Advancement; for being incumbred with Wife, and other Dependencies they are judged in a condition not capable to attend the Diſcipline of the War, or ſervice of the Grand Signior; and therefore as to other duty. In the times of Peace, beſides their appearance every Friday in their Chambers, and preſence of their Officers, they wholly are diſpenſed with.

In the Wars this Militia is conſidered as the moſt valiant and beſt Diſciplined Soldiery of the Turkiſh Camp, and therefore are kept as a Reſerve, or march in the main Body of the Army. In times of Peace their Quarters are many times changed, to keep them in employment, from one Caſtle or Gariſon to another, as to Buda, Kaniſia, Temeſwar, to Rhodes, Canea, and other parts: ſome of them are appointed to keep Courts of Guard at all Gates and Avenues of Conſtantinople, to prevent the Inſolencies and Injuries their Companions are apt to offer to Chriſtians, Jews, and others in the Streets, who at ſome times, being heated with Wine, have in open Market forced Women whilſt their Comrades have with their * Daggers drawn ſtood over them to defend them from the people; to prevent which diſorders, the Janizar Agaſi accuſtoms to ride the Streets attended with about 40 Mumigies, or Bailiffs of the Janizaries, where meeting any guilty of ſuch like Crimes, or other Enormities, he ſeizes them and carries them to his Court, where after examination of their fault, he orders them to be beaten, or if their Crime be great, to be ſtrangled, or ſowed in a Sack and thrown into the Sea; but always their puniſhment is inflicted privately, perhaps becauſe they are jealous of a Mutiny.

* Called Haniarres.

Serdars.

In every Province the Janizaries have their Serdars, who are Colonel or chief of all the Janizaries within that Juriſdiction, who greatly abuſe their Office by taking into their protection any that preſent or pay them for this Privilege; by which means they have grown ſo powerfull and rich, that ſome time paſt the Command of the whole Ottoman Empire hath repoſed in the hands of this Militia.

Their Arms are Muſquets and Swords, they fight confuſedly in the Field, and with no more order than the Spahees; onely ſometimes they draw themſelves up into Cunei, obſerved amongſt the Romans.

And thus much ſhall ſerve to have ſpoken of the Inſtitution and Diſcipline of the Janizaries: We ſhall now proceed to declare how this Militia is decayed, and upon what grounds it is not maintained in its ancient honour and flouriſhing Eſtate.

CHAP. VIII.

Whether the maintenance of an Army of Janizaries according to the Original Inſtitution, be now agreeable to the Rules of Polity amongſt the Turks.

THIS Problem I find firſt moved by Buſbequius, once the German Emperour's Ambaſſadour to Conſtantinople, who pretends to ſpeak the Grand Signior's ſenſe in this particular, on occaſions of difference which the inſolent rudeneſs of the Janizaries had cauſed between themſelves and his Family: For Ruſan Paſhaw then Prime Viſier, admoniſhed him friendly to condeſcend to any terms of compoſition, for that Law could not avail where Soldiers ruled; and the powerfull Soliman himſelf, who then reigned, trembled at nothing more than the apprehenſion of ſome ſecret Ulcer of perfidiouſneſs, which might lie concealed within the retetiement of the Janizaries. Epiſt. 3. de Legatu Turcico.

But as there is no queſtion, but a ſtanding Army of veterane and well Diſciplined Soldiers muſt be always uſefull and advantageous to the Intereſt of a Prince; ſo, on the contrary, negligence in the Officers, and remiſneſs of Government, produces that licentiouſneſs and wreſtineſs in the Soldiery, as betrays them to all the diſorders which are dangerous, and of evil conſequence to the welfare of a State.

And ſo it hath fared with the Ottoman Empire, which riſing onely by the power of Arms, and eſtabliſhed on the bloud of many valiant and daring Captains, gave Privileges, Honours and Riches to the Militia, and at all times encouraged their proweſs and forwardneſs by Rewards, and Connivance at their Crimes; by which indulgence and impunity, theſe men ill-principled in rules of Vertue, and unequally bearing proſperity, and the favour of the Prince, have for a long time been gathering a ſtock of ill humours ready to receive any contagion of ſeditious deſign, and to maintain it with an impudence contrary to the Janizaries for ſome ages, which may equal the levity of the Roman Soldiery, untill they ſhamelefly ſet their Empire to ſale, and forgot both their old obedience to the Senate, and reverence to their new Emperours.

The death and ruine of many Grandees, and of the Sultan himſelf by ſuch like Seditions, hath at length by dear experience taught the principal Miniſters how unſafe, it is to permit an Army lodged in the bowels of the Capital City, of a diſpoſition favourable to it ſelf, envious, vious, and impatient of any other, jealous, and always at enmity with the Court; rich and powerfull, with Poſſeſſions and Rents appertaining to its Commanders in Anatolia, and a Treaſury of unknown ſums, which have deſcended to the common Bank by the deceaſe of their Generals or Janizar-Aga's; and therefore have by degrees, and as prudently as might be, begun to diminiſh the ſtrength of this Militia, by the deſtruction of the veterane Soldiers, and ruine of their reputation by various arts, in the eſtimation of the world.

The particular means whereby the Janizaries have been ſtudiouſly deſtroyed, are by many ways evident; for firſt they are expoſed upon every obſcure Service, and drawn forth to encounter every Aſſault of the Empire; as the Wars of Candy have exhauſted the flower of this Militia, the Battels at Sea buried vaſt numbers, who were formerly reſerved for times of eminent exploits and glory.

Secondly, Which deſtruction of the veterane Soldiers hath created other miſchiefs to this Order, in point of Diſcipline, as prejudicial as the former; for as the Agiamoglans were obliged to perform ſix or ſeven years Novitiate, now by reaſon of the conſtant neceſſities to ſupply the Wars, they overskip the orderly formalities of the firſt Inſtitution, and create them Janizaries after a year; or half a years ſervice. And others I have known educated in Mechanick profeſſions, and from framing Timber and carrying Burthens in the Arſenal, have at once for the ſervice of Candy been created Janizaries, who neither know how to manage a Musket, nor are otherwiſe Diſciplined to any exerciſe of Arms.

Thirdly, That Europe may not be diſpeopled by the triennial ſeiſure of Chriſtian Children for the Grand Signior's ſervice, which in Turkiſh is called Deuſchirme, the politick Cuſtome and principal conſervation of the Diſcipline of Janizaries is; as we have ſaid before, wholly forgotten, and inſtead thereof election is made of Vagabonds, that proffer themſelves out of Aſia, or other parts, who having paſſed five or ſix months like Novices, are afterwards made Janizaries; and being ignorant in the uſe of Arms, and unaccuſtomed to labours and ſufferings, run from their Colours, and renounce their Order, which has been in times paſt one of the moſt honourable in the whole Empire.

Fourthly, The old veterane Officers, which had by degrees and ſteps proceeded to honour methodically from inferiour Soldiers, have either by their own ſeditious ſpirits, or jealouſies of the Prince, been diſpeeded from this World; and in their places the Sons of Conſtantinopolitan Janizaries ſucceeded, who have been bred up with ſoftneſs and effeminacy; and their Tchorbagees or Captains have not obtained their Commands by time by valour, but Buy their Places with Money and Preſents to their Prime Officers.

Fifthly, And to forward the decay of this Militia, and to take off their warlike and haughty Courages, the confinement to their Chambers is not ſevere, but liberty given upon colour of Poverty, and impoſſibility of livelihood on their mean Pay, to attend other Trades and Services, whereby the exerciſe of Arms and thoughts of the War is converted to Mechanick Arts, and an intention to ways of maintenance of themſelves and Families.

Sixthly, Hope of reward and fear of puniſhment, which are the incitements to worthy actions and reſtrictions from the vileſt crimes, are rarely held up to the Janizaries in theſe times for their encouragement or terrour; for without Money to the ſuperiour Officers none of them obtains Preferment; nor can any worn out with age and wounds procure diſmiſſion from the War with the enjoyment of the uſual ſtipend, who are called by the Turks Oturak, and by the Latins Exauctorati; and on the contrary the Children of Officers born in Conſtantinople are often made Oturaks in their Cradles, and luſty Youths are with favour and Money exempted in the flower of age from the labours of War, and yet enjoy the benefits due to a toileſome Militia.

And yet, as if all the connivance at theſe various diſorders and ſubverſion of the good inſtitutions of the Soldiery were not ſufficient to impoveriſh their ſpirits, to mould them into a more effeminate temper, and cauſe them to loſe their intereſt and reputation: it is the common opinion that the Viſier Kupriuli laid the deſigns for the late War with Germany before his death, and enjoined it to his Son to proſecute, with an intention, amongſt other expectations of benefit to the Empire, to complete the final deſtruction of the ancient Spahees and Janizaries, ſo as to be able to lay a foundation of a new Diſcipline, which may more eaſily for the future reſtrain the Turkiſh Militia within the compaſs of better modeſty and obedience: which deſign hath taken ſo ſevere effect in the War of Hungary, in the year 1664. that the bloudieſt part of ſlaughter in the Battels fell on the Janizaries and Spahees, and by how much more any were more bold and forward in their attempts, by ſo much more fatal and haſty was their ruine; ſo that it is reported, that the valianteſt Soldiers of the Confines, the veterane and beſt diſciplined of the Spahees and Janizaries, and the beſt number of their ſkilfull Commanders and expert Captains periſhed promiſcuouſly together, to the great damage and weakning to the Ottoman Power; ſo that now it is not probable that a new Militia ſucceeding, capable of receiving other Cuſtoms and Laws, and neither remembring nor concerned in former Mutinies, will adventure to follow the ſeditious practices of their Predeceſſours; for men are commonly modeſt at their firſt entrance into any condition; and unleſs debauched by corruption and Government, are eaſily contained within the bounds of reaſonable moderation. And yet notwithſtanding that the pride of the Turkiſh Religion is reduced to ſo low an abatement of their power, and to a condition eaſily for the future with with good management to be ruled; yet this preſent Sultan Mahomet ſtill retaining the memory and impreſſion of the amazement he ſuffered in his infancy on occaſion of a dangerous combination and conſpiracy of the Janizaries; will never confide himſelf to their guard, nor be reconciled to Conſtantinople, in conſideration of the many Chambers it contains of that loathed Militia, which have been ſo many Nurſeries and Seminaries of Treaſons complotted againſt himſelf, and his other Progenitors.

CHAP. IX.

Of the Chiauſes.

THESE having both offenſive and defenſive Arms aſſigned them, may be reckoned in the number of the Militia, though their Office being chiefly in relation to Civil Proceſſes and Laws, they may deſerve rather the name of Purſuivants or Serjeants. They are in number about 5 or 600, their pay is from 12 to 40 Aſpers a day; and chief Officer is called Chiaus Baſchee, to whoſe cuſtody Priſoners of Quality are committed; their place of Attendance is the Palace of the Prime Viſier, to be ready on all occaſions to carry Letters and Commands to any part of the Empire; ſuch Chriſtian Renegadoes as become Turks, they moſt commonly for their Incouragement and ſubſiſtence in the Mahometan Superſtition, admit into this Rank; becauſe having commonly an endowment of other Languages beſides the Turkiſh, are moſt ſerviceable on meſſages into foreign Countries; and ſometimes are ſent with the Title of Ambaſſadours; as one was once into England, France, and Holland. Their Arms are a Scimetar, a Bow, and Arrows, and a Truncheon with a knob at the end, called in Turkiſh Topous; thoſe of theſe Officers that are Servants to the Viſier or Beglerbegs carry this Truncheon covered with Silver, called in Turkiſh Tebeughian; but the Chiauſes of ſimple Paſhaws onely of Wood: their Harveſt they make upon the occaſions of Law Suits and Differences between one party and another, being Apparitors or Serjeants to call the guilty perſon to juſtice; or if the buſineſs comes to compoſition, they commonly are in the midſt to perſuade both ſides to reaſon, in which action they want not their Fees or acknowledgment of labour from both Parties.

CHAP. X.

Of the other parts of the Turkiſh Militia, the Toptchi.

THESE are Gunners, called ſo from the word Tope, which in Turkiſh ſignifies a Cannon; and are in number about 1200 diſtributed in 52 Chambers; their Quarters are at Tophana, on the place of Guns in the Suburbs of Conſtantinople; few of theſe are expert in their art, and are ill practiſed in the Proportions and Mathematical part of the Gunners Myſtery; for were they as skilfull as many Ingeneers in the World, they might doubtleſs with that vaſt Train of Artillery they either march with in their Camp, or found in their Trenches, give much more annoyance to the Chriſtian Forces: And therefore knowing their own imperfections in this exerciſe, when Chriſtian Gunners are taken in the War, they entertain them with better uſage than other Captives, quartering them in the Chambers appropriated to that Profeſſion, allotting them with others a pay from 8 to 12 Aſpers a day; but becauſe this is too inconſiderable a maintenance to allure men who are otherwiſe principled, moſt of them as occaſion offers, deſert the ſervice of the Turk, and fly to their own Countrey.

Their Officers are,

1. The Topgibaſchi, or General of the Ordinance.
2. The Dukigibaſchi, or the Chief of them that found the great Guns.
3. The Odabaſchi, the Chief of all the Chambers of the Gunners in the Suburbs of Conſtantinople.
4. Is the Kiatib of their Muſter-Maſter, who is always a Spahee.

Their Guns are the biggeſt, and as well caſt and moulded as any in the World; for the laſt Expedition in Hungary there were 40 Pieces of new Gannon caſt and tranſported by way of the Black Sea, and thence by the Danube unto Belgrade and Buda. Their Gunpowder is made but in ſmall quantities about Conſtantinople, but comes from divers places of Europe; but that from Damaſcus is moſt eſteemed. The biggeſt ſize of their Bullets are from 36 to 40 Inches Diamiter, but theſe are moſt commonly of Stone, which they make uſe of in the Caſtles or Block-houſes ſituate on the Sea, as at the Caſtles upon the Helleſpont, called anciently Seſtos and Abidos, and at the Forts at entrance of the Black Sea. Once an Engliſh Man, Gunner of a Ship which lay at Conſtantinople, had the curioſity and confidence to meaſure the dimenſions of theſe Bullets; but being apprehended in the very act, was impriſoned for a Spy; but by the interceſſion of our Ambaſſadour then Reſident, with much labour and ſome expence was at length releaſed.

Of the Gebegees.

Theſe are Armourers; ſo called from the word Gebees, which ſignifies in Turkiſh as much as Arms of Back and Breaſt; they are in number 630 diſtributed into 60 Chambers, and have their Quarters near the Church of Santa Sophia in Conſtantinople; their Office is to conſerve the Arms of ancient times from ruſt, by cleaning and oyling them, ſo as to remain as Trophies for ever of the Turkiſh Conqueſts: Their pay is from 8 to 12 Aſpers a day; their Officers are firſt the Gebegibaſchi, who is their Commander in chief. 2. The Odobaſhees, who are ſo many Maſters of the Chambers. On all expeditions theſe Armourers are neceſſary Officers, and oftentimes in days of Battel diſtribute forth the antique Arms, of which they have a care, into the hands of the Janizaries: but of theſe, the men that are indifferently rich, and have favour and friends, enjoy their pay with eaſe at their own homes; and like other * Ogiacks are capable of being made Otmachs, or retaining their Penſion with a diſpenſation from the War.

* Ogiacks ſignifies a Family, as alſo a Military Family; ſo Spahi Ogiagbi, the Order of the Spahees; Soviſcheri Ogiaghi, the Militia of Janizaries, &c.

Of the Delees.

Delee ſignifies as much as a mad fellow, or a Hector; theſe are the Prime Viſier's Lifeguard, and are in number from 100 to 400, more or leſs, according as the Viſier is more or leſs rich and ſplendid in his Retinue; their Pay is from 12 to 15 Aſpers a day; they are by Nation of Boſna, or Albania; their Habit is very very ridiculous according to this Picture; they are men choſen for their great ſtature and ſtomachs; they ſpeak big, talk of nothing but killing and adventurous exploits, but in reality their heart and courage is not eſteemed proportionable to their bulk and bodies: in the City they march before the Viſier on foot, and make way for him to the Divan; on journies they are too heavy and lazy not to be well mounted; they have a Captain over them called the Delibaſchi, their Arms are a Lance after the Hungarian faſhion, a Sword, and Pole-Axe, and ſome of them carry a Piſtol at their Girdle. This ſort of people being naturally more faithfull than the Turks, and more inclinable to the Viſier Kupriuli, for being of the ſame Country, he maintained 2000 of them for his Guard: which was ſo great a curb to the Janizaries and the other Militia, that they were never able to execute any Conſpiracy againſt him. The ſame courſe his Son the preſent Viſier follows, and is doubtleſs next the Grand Signior's favour, his principal ſecurity.

Of the Segbans and Sarigias.

It is not to be omitted that the Beglerbegs and Paſhaws maintain always a Militia called Segbans, to whoſe cuſtody the charge of the Baggage belonging to the Horſe is committed; and a ſelect number called Sarigias, to whoſe care the Baggage of the Infantry is entruſted; theſe ſerve on foot with Muskets like Janizaries, and the others on Horſe-back like Dragoons in Chriſtendom; their Pay beſides their Meat is 3 or 4 Dollars a Month. The Beglerbegs have oftentimes on occaſion of their Rebellions enrolled many of this ſort of Militia to encounter the Janizaries; the which was practiſed in theſe late times by Ipchir Paſhaw, Haſan Paſhaw, and Murteza Paſhaw, who having liſted great numbers to fight under this denomination, the Viſier Kupriuli for terrour and more eaſie deſtruction of this people, proclaimed through all Aſia, that ſtrict inquiſition ſhould be made after the Segbans and Sarigias, and that it might be lawfull for any one to kill and deſtroy them without mercy; by which means many were butchered in ſeveral places, and 30000 of them revolted to the Soſi of Perſia.

The Muhlagi and Beſli,

Are the Servants of Beglerbegs and Paſhaws; the firſt make profeſſion of a principal art in Horſemanſhip, and exerciſe themſelves in throwing the Gilid, which is a Dart much uſed amongſt the Turks, in the true management of which there is a great dexterity; and becauſe there are conſiderable rewards beſtowed on thoſe who are expert herein, the Turks practiſe it on Horſeback as their onely exerciſe and ſtudy: very much delight herein the Grand Signiors have always taken, and to be Spectatours of the Combats between the ſervants of ſeveral Paſhaws born in different Countries and Nations, who from a Principle of honour to their Nation, and hopes of Preferment, contend with that heat and malice one againſt another, as ſurpaſs the cruelty of the ancient Gladiators; and not onely limbs or eyes are loſt in the skirmiſh, but oftentimes ſacrifice their bloud and life for the paſtime of their Prince. Such as are obſerved to be bold, active and dextrous at this Game, are preferred to the degree and benefit of a Zaim or Timariot. The Beſlees are Footment, who for their great abilities in walking and running, attain oftentimes to be made Janizaries.

And thus we have now, with as much brevity as may be, run through the ſeveral Degrees, Numbers, Inſtitutions, Laws, and Diſcipline of the Turkiſh Militia by Land: whoſe farther progreſs into Chriſtendom, and damage to the Chriſtian Cauſe, may the Almighty Providence ſo diſappoint, that his Church corrected and grown more pious by this chaſtiſement, may at length be relieved from the Rod and Yoke of this great Oppreſſour.

CHAP. XI.

Certain Obſervations on the Turkiſh Camp; and the Succeſs of the laſt Battel againſt the Chriſtians.

IN the year of our Lord 1665. the Earl of Winchelſea, our Lord Ambaſſadour for certain Affairs of His Majeſty and the Company of Merchants, having commanded me to meet the great Viſier in his return from the Wars in Hungary; through ill, or rather uncertain information of the Viſier's motion, I was forced to proceed as far as Belgrade in Servia, on the Confines of Hungary, 23 days Journey from Conſtantinople, where finding a good part of the Turkiſh Army encamped near that City, for better convenience and expedition of my buſineſs, I entred within the Quarters of the Spahees, and pitched my Tent as near the Viſier's, and the other principal Officers as conſiſted with due reſpect; in which place I remained ſeven days, untill the Army removed towards Adrianople; and not having fully compleated my buſineſs there, I marched and remained other 13 days together with the Army: in which time I had leiſure to make ſome reflexions on the Order of the Turkiſh Camp.

In the front of the Camp are quartered the Janizaries, and all others deſtin'd for Foot-ſervice, whoſe Tents encompaſs their Aga or General: In the body of the Camp are erected the ſtately Pavilions of the Viſier, of his Kahiia or chief Steward or Counſellour, the Reis effendi, or Lord Chancellour, the Teſterdar Paſcha, or Lord Treaſurer, and the Kapiſler Kahiaſee or Maſter of the Ceremonies; which five Pavilions take up a large extent of ground, leaving a ſpacious Field in the midſt, in the centre of which is raiſed a lofty Canopy, under which Offenders are corrected or executed, and ſerves to ſhelter from the Sun or Rain ſuch as attend to the Divan, or other buſineſs with the Officers of State. Within the ſame ſpace of ground alſo is the Haſna or Treaſury, in ſmall Cheſts one piled on the other, in form of a Circle, for guard of which 15 Spahees every night keep watch with their Arms in their hands. Near theſe quarters are the Tents of Paſhaws, Beghs, Beghs, Agaes, and Perſons of Quality, who with their Retinue ſolely make up a conſiderable part of the Turkiſh Army. In the Rere are the quarters of the Spahees, and others that attend the Horſe ſervice as Segbans, Sarigias, and others: On the right hand of the Viſier without the Camp are placed the Artillery, and Ammunition; which in the time I was there was inconſiderable, the great Cannon remaining in Buda and in the City of Belgrade, onely 40 or 45 ſmall Field-pieces of Braſs (as I reckoned them) each drawn by four Horſes, marched with the Viſier, more at that time for ſtate and oſtentation, than for real ſervice. The Pavilions of the great Viſier, and other Perſons of principal Office and Quality, may rather be called Palaces than Tents, being of a large extent, richly wrought within, adorned beyond their Houſes, accommodated with ſtately Furniture, with all the convenience of the City and Countrey, and in my opinion far exceed the magnificence of the beſt of their Buildings; for being but for few years continuance, the maintenance of them is beyond the expence of Marble and Porphyry, or the perpetual Edifices of Italy, durable to many Olympiads and Myriads of years. With theſe Houſes and movable Habitations, which with the Poſts that ſupport them, are of that great weight and bulk, the Turkiſh Army marches daily, four, five, and ſometimes ſix hours Journey; all which Baggage is carried on Horſes, Mules, and Camels; The great Perſons are furniſhed with two ſets of Tents, one of which as the Viſier riſes, is advanced the Conack or days Journey beyond; ſo that in the morning leaving one Tent, another is found at noon ready furniſhed and provided at arrival; which is the reaſon why the Turkiſh Camp abounds with ſuch multitudes of Camels, Mules, and Horſes of Burthen, with ſo many thouſand Attendants on the Baggage, which are of a vaſt expence, and if duly conſidered, is a matter of the greateſt ſtate and magnificence in the Turkiſh Empire.

Though it is reported by thoſe who are Soldiers, and have experienced the Valour of the Turks in fight, that their Victories are obtained by multitudes of men, rather than by Art, or Military Diſcipline; however the Conqueſts they have made on the parts of Chriſtendom, is a demonſtration undeniable of ſome ſupereminent Order in their Army, which recompences the defect of Knowledge in the Myſtery of War; and this Regulation (in my opinion) proceeds from nothing more than the ſtrict prohibition of Wine upon pain of death (two Men being executed during the time of my Reſidence there for bringing a ſmall quantity of it in the Field) for hereby men become ſober, diligent, watchfull and obedient. In the Turkiſh Camp no brawls, quarrels, nor clamours are heard; no abuſes are committed on the people by the march of their Army; all is bought and paid with money, as by Travellers that are Gueſts at an Inn; there are no complaints by Mothers of the Rape of their Virgin-daughters, no Violences or Robberies offered on the Inhabitants; all which order tends to the ſucceſs of their Armies, and Enlargement of their Empire. As on the contrary, the ſloth of the Germans and other Nations in their Counſels againſt the Turks, the liberty given to the Chriſtian Soldiery, or rather the difficulty to correct, proceeds from nothing more than the intemperance in Wine, which moves in the Soldiery a luſt and promptitude to all evils, and is occaſion of the horrid outrages they commit, quarrels among themſelves, and diſobedience to their Officers, and betrays oftentimes a whole Army to ruine by ſurpriſal; for how can thoſe men be watchfull, whoſe heads are charged with the fumes of Wine, and not yield opportunity of ſad advantages to ſo awakned an Enemy as the Turk? Busbequius who had been Ambaſſadour from the Emperour to the Grand Signior in two ſeveral Embaſſies, and had known and ſeen the vigilance of the Turkiſh Camp, attributes much of their ſucceſs againſt the Germans to the ancient Vice of Intemperance of his Countrey: Neque vero, ſaith he, graviore imperio Turcæ Græcos premant, quàm nobis dominantur vitia, luxus, crapula. And ſo ſenſible are the Turks of the abuſes and diſorders which ariſe in their Camp by the uſe of Wine, that they endeavour all that is poſſible to debar their people from it, and therefore two or three days before the Army arrives at any place, Officers are diſpatched before to ſeal all Taverns, and make proclamation againſt the ſale of Wine: for though it be againſt their Law to drink Wine, yet Drunkenneſs is now become ſo common a Vice amongſt them (as we have already declared in the ſecond Book) that ſcarce one in ten but is addicted to a brutiſh intemperance therein.

The Camp is always free from ordure and filth; there being holes digged near every Tent, which are encompaſſed about with Canvas for the more privacy and accommodation in mens neceſſary occaſions; and whenſoever theſe places become noiſome and full, they are covered with Earth, and the Canvas removed; ſo that the whole Camp is clear of all excrements of men, as alſo kept more free from other ſtench (which may cauſe putrefaction) than the moſt orderly Cities of the World. If the march be in the Summer-time, and the weather hot, the Beaſts of Burthen and Baggage begin to travel about ſeven a clock in the evening, and the Paſhaws and great Viſier preſently after midnight; who are accompanied with ſo many Lights as equal almoſt the brightneſs of the day. Thoſe that carry theſe Lights are Arabians from the parts of Aleppo and Damaſcus, Men uſed to travel on foot, who are in Turkiſh called Maſſalageeler, over whom is a ſuperintendent or chief, called Maſſalagibaſhee, whoſe Office it is to govern and to puniſh theſe people, and is liable to anſwer for their diſorders: the Lights they carry are not Torches, but a bituminous oily ſort of Wood, which they burn in an Iron Grate, carried on a Staff made in the form of our Beacons; and of the ſame faſhion with thoſe Lights we ſee drawn in ancient Hangings and Pictures which repreſent Night-pieces of Roman Stories.

And ſince I have diſcourſed ſomething of the Turkiſh Camp in this return homewards, it will not be much from my promiſe to acquaint the Reader with what chearfulneſs and alacrity the Army marched this way after their ill ſucceſs: and alſo to declare the occaſion that put a Hook into the Noſtrils of this great Oppreſſour, and diverted him for the preſent from the farther ſpoil of Chriſtendom. After the taking of the Caſtle called Serinſwar by the great Viſier, built by Count Serini (the which was the firſt original and occaſion of the War) and the defeat of the Paſhaw of Buda near Lewa by Count Suſa Goyernour of Gomorra; the Viſier made many and various attempts to paſs the River Raab, to make ſome Conqueſts in the parts of Croatia and

Styria,

Styria, but by reaſon of the Forts the Chriſtians had made along the Banks of the River, in every adventure loſt conſiderable numbers of Men; at which loſs of Men and time, and the ill ſucceſs near Lewa, the Viſier being greatly moved, made another adventure on the 27th of July, 1664. advancing with the groſs of his Army as far as Kerment, a place between the River Raab and Terne; endeavouring there to make his paſſage with better ſucceſs; but by the valour of the Hungarians and the aſſiſtence of the General Montecuculi, were repulſed with extraordinary ſlaughter.

On the firſt of Auguſt following the Turk made another conſiderable attempt, and paſſed over in one place 6000 Janizaries and Albania, and in another where the River was fordable and not above ten paces broad, the whole body of the Turkiſh Horſe crouded over in vaſt numbers, which cauſed the Chriſtians to join their Forces into one Army, and retreat farther into the Countrey, and put themſelves into a poſture of giving Battel to the Enemy.

As ſoon as the Turkiſh Army had thus waded over the water, the night following fell ſo much Rain, and ſuch a Deluge came pouring down from the Mountains, that the River which was fordable the day before, did now over-ſwell its own Banks, and not paſſable without Floats and Bridges. As ſoon as the Army had thus paſſed the River, the great Viſier diſpatched immediately Meſſengers to the Grand Signior to acquaint him of his progreſs and paſſage; which news he knew would come very gratefull; becauſe in all Letters from the Grand Signior he was urged by threats and poſitive commands to proceed forward in his march, and not to ſuffer the impediment of a narrow ditch to be an interruption to the whole Ottoman force which was never before reſtrained by the Ocean. The Grand Signior having received this intelligence, as if the whole Victory and Triumph over the World conſiſted in the paſſage over the Raab, was tranſported with ſuch an extraordinary joy and aſſurance of Victory, that all Hungary and Germany were already ſwallowed in his thoughts; and when by a ſecond Meſſage he received intelligence, that a Forlorn Hope of the Enemy, conſiſting of 1000 Men, was cut off, the Ottoman Court was ſo tranſported with the joy and aſſurance of Victory, that to anticipate the good news, the Grand Signior commanded that a ſolemn Feſtival ſhould be celebrated for the ſpace of ſeven days and ſeven nights, called by the Turks, Dunalma; in which time the whole nights were ſpent in Fire-works, ſhooting great Guns, Vollies of Muskets, ſound of Drums and Trumpets, Revelling, and what other Solemnities might teſtifie their joy and triumph. But ſcarce three nights of vain dream had paſſed, before the Grand Signior awakened by intelligence contrary to what was preſaged and expected, of the defeat of the beſt part of his Army, ſhamefully commanded the Lights to be extinguiſhed; and the remaining four nights appointed for joy, to be turned to melancholy and darkneſs. And indeed this raſh joy was the more ſhamefull and ridiculous, by how much more fatal and deſtructive the loſs was to the Turks. For they being now got over the River, and the Chriſtians drawn up in Battalia, a moſt furious Fight began, which from nine a clock in the morning, untill four in the afternoon, continued with variable fortune; at length the Turks aſſailed by the extraordinary valour of the Chriſtians, which were now of equal number to them, began to give back and put themſelves into a ſhamefull flight, leaving dead upon the place about 5000 men, and the glory of the day to the Chriſtians: the Turks who always fly diſorderly, knowing not the art of a handſome retreat, crouded in heaps to paſs the River, the Horſe trampling over the Foot, and the Foot throwing themſelves headlong into the Water, without conſideration of the depth, or choice of places fordable after the great Rains; thoſe ſinking, catching hold of others that could ſwim, ſunk down and periſhed together; others both Men and Horſe through the rapidneſs of the ſtream were carried down the River and ſwallowed up in the deeper places: The water was died with Bloud, and the whole face of the River was covered with Men, Horſe, Garments, all ſwimming promiſcuouſly together, no difference was here between the valiant and the cowardly, the fooliſh and the wiſe, counſel, and chance, all being involved in the ſame violence of calamity: Non vox & mutui hortatus juvabant, adverſante unda, nihil ſtrenuus ab ignavo, ſapiens à prudenti, conſilia à caſu differre, cuncta pari violentia involvebantur; ſo that the waters devoured a far greater number than did the Sword; whilſt the great Viſier ſtanding on the other ſide of the River, was able to afford no kind of help or relief, but as one void of all counſel and reaſon, knew not where to apply a remedy. This defeat, though in Chriſtendom not greatly boaſted, by reaſon that the deſtruction of the Turks, which was moſt by water, was partly concealed to them; yet the Turks acknowledge the ruine and ſlaughter to have been of a far greater number than what the Chriſtian Diaries relate, confeſſing that ſince the time that the Ottoman Empire arrived at this greatneſs, no ſtories make mention of any ſlaughter or diſgrace it hath ſuffered to be equalled to the calamity and diſhonour of this. On the Turks ſide were ſlain Iſhmael Paſhaw, lately of Buda, and Chimacam of Conſtantinople, by a ſhot from the Enemy in his paſſage over the River, the Spahee lar Agaſee or General of the Spahees, and ſeveral other Paſhaws and Perſons of Quality fell that day, 15 pieces of Cannon were taken, with ſome Tents and other rich Spoils: Of the Chriſtians were ſlain near 1000; thoſe of Note were Count of Naſſau, Count Charles of Braconſtorf Captain of the Guards to Montecuculi, Count Fucher General of the Artillery, with many other Gentlemen of the French Nation, who deſerve ever to be chronicled for their vertue and valour.

The Turks were with this news greatly aſhamed, and dejected, having but two days before demonſtrated exceſſes of joy, congratulated the happy news one to the other, ſending Preſents abroad after their manner, derided the Chriſtians living amongſt them with the news, exprobriated them with a thouſand injuries, applauded their own vertue and valour, and the righteouſneſs of their Cauſe and Religion. But on a ſudden, intelligence coming contrary to their expectations, ſuch a dampneſs fell upon their ſpirits, that for ſome days there was a deep ſilence of all news at Conſtantinople; they that the day before ſought for Chriſtians to communicate to them the Miracles of their Victory, now avoided their company; aſhamed of their too forward joy, and the liberty they had taken to contemn and deride the low condition of the Chriſtian Camp. And now the ill news not being able to be longer concealed, Prayers, and Humiliation were appointed publickly to be made at all the Royal Moſchs both at Conſtantinople and at Adrianople, where all the Emaums or Pariſh Prieſts with their young Scholars were commanded to reſort, ſinging ſome dolefull Chapter of the Alchoran.

The minds of the Soldiery after this defeat were very much diſcompoſed, tending more to Sedition than to obedience, every one took licenſe to ſpeak loudly and openly his opinion, that the War was commenced upon unjuſt and unlawfull grounds; that Comets lately ſeen to fall were prodigious foretelling the ill ſucceſs of the War; that the total eclipſe of the Moon, which portends always misfortunes to the Turks, ſhould have cauſed more caution in the Commanders of engaging the Army, untill the malignity of that influence had been overpaſſed; and calling to mind the ſolemn Oath with which the Sultan Solyman confirmed his Capitulations with the Emperour, particularly vowing never to paſs the Raab or Places where the Turks received their defeat, without a ſolid or reaſonable ground of War; all concluded that this Invaſion was a violation of the Vow, and an injury to the ſacred memory of that fortunate Sultan, and that all endeavours and attempts of this War would be fatal and deſtructive to the Muſſelmen or Believers, and the end diſhonourable to the Empire. This opinion was rooted with much firmneſs and ſuperſtition in the mind of the vulgar, and the rumours in the Camp (that the Viſier had been cauſe of the Soldiers flight, by commanding them to retreat after they were engaged, upon a falſe alarm that the Enemy in great numbers were coming to fall on the quarters where the Viſier's perſon remained; and that this errour was the firſt original of the ſlaughter that enſued) augmented their diſcontents and animoſities againſt the Government. The Soldiery beſides was greatly terrified and poſſeſſed with the fear of the Chriſtians, and amazed upon every alarm; the Aſian Spahees and other Soldiers having Wives and Children, and Poſſeſſions to look after, were grown poor, and deſired nothing more than in peace and quietneſs to return to their home; ſo that nothing could come more grateful to this Camp, no largeſſes nor hopes could pacifie the minds of the Soldiery more than the promiſes and expectations of Peace. And this was the true cauſe that brought on the Treaty of Peace between the Emperour and the Turk in ſuch an inſtant, contrary to the opinion of moſt in the World; and gave occaſion to the Viſier to embrace the Propoſitions offered by the Rheningen, then Reſident for the Emperour (who was carried about according to the motions of the Turkiſh Camp, to be ready to improve any Overtures of Peace that might be offered;) the Viſier to ſhew his real intentions, flattered and careſſed this Reſident with the Preſent of a Horſe richly furniſhed, a Veſt of Sables, and a commodious Tent, whilſt the Propoſitions and Condeſcentions on the Turkiſh part were diſpatched to Vienna, which were returned again with an entire aſſent to moſt of the Articles; and thoſe wherein there might be any difference, were to be referred untill the arrival of the Extraordinary Ambaſſadour, who was ſuppoſed might reach the Ottoman Court by the end of April. The Aſian Spahees were overjoyed at the news hereof, and immediately obtained licenſe to depart, and moſt of the Militia was diſperſed, every one with joy betaking himſelf to his own home. But this Ambaſſadour miſſing of his time allotted for his arrival, above a month later than he was expected put all things into a ſtrange combuſtion. I was then in the Camp when it was whiſpered, that the Treaty was at an end, that the Chriſtians had deluded them, and cauſed them to disband their Army, that ſo they might fall upon them with the greater advantage; the misfortune of which (according to the cuſtome of the Commonalty) was charged on the heads of the Governours; and the too much credulity of the Viſier. But at length on the 28 of May 1665 news coming that the Ambaſſadour from the Emperour was arrived at Buda; the Viſier the next day departed from Belgrade with his whole Army, which I accompanied as far as Niſſa about nine days march towards Adrianople; and there having put an end to my buſineſs, and wearied with the ſlow pace, and heats, and other inconveniencies of an Army, I took my leave of the great Viſier, and proceeded farther by longer journeys to attend the Court at Adrianople: and that I may give my Reader an account of theſe Countries, and the nature of the people that inhabit them, I hope it will not be judged much beſides my purpoſe if I entertain him a little with a Relation of ſome part of my Journey to Belgrade.

On the 29*th* of April 1665. I departed from Adrianople towards Belgrade; and on the firſt of May I lodged at a Village called Semeſge, the firſt Town I came to, inhabited by Bulgarians who are Chriſtians, that day being a Feſtival: the Women upon the arrival of Gueſts came running from their Houſes with Cakes of dough bread which they called Togatch, onely laid upon the Coals between two Tiles, which they ſoon kneaded and prepared for the ſtomachs of Travellers; others brought Milk, Eggs, and Wine to ſell, and what elſe their homely Cottages afforded, which they preſſed on us with much importunity, the younger and handſomer challenging a priority in the ſale of their Proviſions before thoſe who were ancient and more homely: Theſe Countrey Laſſes had that day put on their holy Garments, which put me in mind of thoſe dreſſes I have ſeen in Pictures of the ancient Shepherdeſſes in Arcadia, being a looſe Gown of various colours with hanging Sleeves; their Armes had no Sleeve but that of their Smock, which though it were of Canvas or ſome very courſe Linen, was yet wrought with many works of divers colours; their hair was braided, hanging down at length behind, which ſome had adorned with little Shells found upon the Sea ſhoar, tied at the end with fringes of Silk, bobs, and taſſels of Silver; their heads were covered with pieces of Silver Coin of different ſorts ſtrung upon thread, and their Breaſts were in the ſame manner decked; thoſe being moſt honoured, and eſteemed moſt rich, who were beſt adorned with theſe Strings of Coin, and Bracelets on their Wriſts, with which every one, according to her ability, had dreſſed and made her ſelf fine. Amongſt theſe we paſſed with plenty of Proviſion, and a hearty welcome; for theſe people called Bulgarians inhabit all that Countrey to the Confines of Hungary; they Till all that ground, Paſture vaſt numbers of Cattel, and are induſtrious and able Husbandmen, by which means, and the liberty they enjoy by the ſmall number of Turks which live amongſt them, they paſs their time with ſome reaſonable reaſonable comfort, and are more commodious in Wealth than they ſuffer to appear outwardly to the envious eyes of the Turks. Their Language is the old Illyrian or Sclavonian Tongue, which hath much ſimilitude with the Ruſſians; becauſe this people is ſaid to come originally from beyond the River Volga, and ſo by corruption are called Bulgarians or Volgarians. On the third of May we arrived at Philippolis, where we were civilly entertained at the Houſe or Monaſtery of the Metropolite, or Greek Biſhop of that place. By this City runs the River Hebrus, having its original from the Mountains Rhodope, in ſight of which we travelled towards Sophia, of which Ovid thus ſpeaks,

Qua patet umbroſum Rhodope glacialis ad Hæ-Et ſacer amiſſas exigit Hebrus aquas. (mum,

The City of Philippolis is ſituate in a large and open Plain, and level, whereon are great numbers of little round Hills, which the Inhabitants will have to be the Graves of the Roman Legions ſlain in thoſe Fields. A certain Greek had once the melancholy dream of much Treaſure buried in one of theſe Hills; and this fancy ſo often troubled him in his ſleep, that it took a ſtrong impreſſion in his mind whilſt he was waking, and ſo far troubled him, that he could take no reſt nor contentment until he had eaſed his mind to the Naſir-Aga, who is he who overſees the Waterworks, and places of Pleaſure belonging to the Grand Signior in that Countrey. The Turk, though he had a great mind to the Treaſure, durſt not yet open the ground, until he had acquainted the Grand Signior with the mind of the Greek, who upon the firſt intimation diſpatched away Officers (ſo apt the Turks are in matters of Profit to catch even at a ſhadow) to open this Hill; to which the Countrey Villages were ſummoned, and whilſt they digged very deep, not well underſtanding the manner and art of Mining, the Earth broke from the top, and buried ſeventy perſons in the ruins; and ſo the work ended, and the Greek awaked from his dream. This Town hath one part of it built on the ſide of a Hill; two others are alſo near it, which appear like Bulwarks or Fortifications on that ſide the City; all the reſt of the Countrey thereabouts being a dead Plain or Level. At this place remains no other Antiquity beſides the ruins of two ancient Chapels, built of Brick, in the form of a Croſs, one of which the Greeks hold in great devotion, and report to be the place wherein St. Paul preached often to the Philippians; and with that opinion they often reſort thither, eſpecially on the Days of Devotion, to ſay their Prayers: The Walls of the City are likewiſe very ancient, over the Gates of which is writ ſomething in the Greek Character; but Time hath ſo defaced it, that to me it ſeemed no longer legible; And ſo ignorant are the Greeks alſo, even ſuch as were born in that City, and are Prieſts and Colories (which are the ſtricteſt ſort of Religious Men amongſt them) who have nothing more to do than to attend to their Office and Studies, that they cannot give any reaſonable account of the original of that City, who it was built by, or any thing elſe of the Hiſtory of it, and with much admiration they hearken to us, when we tell them any thing what our Books relate concerning it.

From hence I departed towards Sophia, paſſing in this Journey the Montes Hemi, called by the Turks Capi Dervent, which is as much as the Gate of the narrow way; the aſcent thereunto is rugged and ſharp, commodious for Robbers, who there have ſuch Caves and places of refuge, that they defie very conſiderable Forces that are ſent againſt them. On the top of this Hill is a Village of Bulgarians, where the Women uſed to the diverſity of Travellers, are become free in their diſcourſe, and only entertain ſtrangers, whilſt their Husbands are in the Field, or with their Cattel, or fly away for fear of ſome injury from the Turks. Deſcending hence is a very narrow incloſure, on both ſides being environed with high Mountains and Woods, which is a ſhady and melancholy Journey for the ſpace of two hours; to this place the Heydouts, or Heyducks (as that people call them) frequently reſort in great numbers out of Tranſilvania, Moldavia, Hungary, and other parts, which taking advantage of theſe cloſe Woods, diſcharge Vollies of Shot on the ſtrongeſt Caravans, and rolling Stones from the Mountains in the narroweſt paſſages, do as much execution as with Cannon; for, as I have underſtood, in one of thoſe Defvents (for there are many of this nature in the Journey to Belgrade) 18 Thieves only killed above 300 Merchants, who for ſecurity united together, and their whole Baggage and Goods became a prey to the Robbers. In theſe places, thus fortified by Nature, the Inhabitants reſiſted the force of the Grecian Emperours, and killed Baldwin Earl of Flanders after he had ſubjected the City of Conſtantinople. Amongſt theſe Bulgarians is a ſort of people which they call Paulines, who had in former times ſtrange confuſed notions of Chriſtianity, pretending to follow the Doctrine of St. Paul, uſed Fire in the Sacrament of Baptiſm, and preferred this Apoſtle before his Maſter Chriſt: but there being ſome Roman Prieſts in thoſe parts, that obſerving the ignorance of theſe poor people, and their willingneſs to be inſtructed, took the advantage, and reduced them all to the Roman Faith, to which now they are ſtrict and ſuperſtitious adherers.

Through thoſe narrow Dervents before ſpoken of, we arrived after three days of weary Journey at Sophia, a place ſo wholly Turkiſh, that there is nothing in it that appears more antick than the Turks themſelves; it is ſituated in a pleaſant Plain or broad Valley, between two high Mountains, the higheſt of them wearing a ſnowy head in the heat of the Summer Solſtice, which is the reaſon that that City is cool and wholeſome, but of a ſubtile penetrating Air, being ſupplied with admirable waters of eaſie digeſtion, which come pouring down in great abundance from the Mountains, and ſupply the Town with plentifull ſtreams in all parts of it, and are ſaid to be waters of thoſe Fountains which Orpheus delighted in. There are beſides theſe cool Waters, certain Baths naturally hot, to which the Turks reſort very frequently, being of the ſame nature and virtue with ours in England. From this place we made nine long days Journey to Belgrade, in which paſſage there is nothing more memorable than the deſolation of the Countrey; and being there arrived, we pitched our Tent in the Camp, where after ſix days we marched back with the Army, to whom nothing could come more joyfull than their return home, and the concluſion of the War; by which may be obſerved in ſome manner, how far the nature of the Turks is degenerated from the ancient warlike diſpoſition of the Saracens.

CHAP. XII.

Of the Turks Armata, or Naval Forces.

HAving particularly run over the Force of this formidable Enemy and ſcourge of Chriſtianity by Land, we are now to take a view according to the true method of this Diſcourſe, of the ſtrength of their Fleets and Maritime Forces; which though to a Nation ſituated on the Continent, are not ſo neceſſary or prevalent to defend themſelves from their Neighbours, or tranſport their Power and Conqueſts into other Dominions, as they are to a People whoſe Habitation is encompaſſed by the Sea; yet certainly a Prince can never be ſaid to be truly Puiſſant, who is not Maſter in both Elements; for not to expatiate on the common Theme of the Riches and Power which ariſe from Navigation, it is ſufficient, conſidering how often the mighty force of the Ottoman Empire hath been foiled and baffled by the ſmall Republick of Venice, for want of true knowledge or ſucceſs, or application of their minds to Maritime Exerciſe, to demonſtrate of what efficacy in moſt deſigns is a well provided and regulated Fleet.

The Turks are now very much weakned in their Naval Forces ſince the War againſt Candy, and are ſo diſcouraged in their hopes of ſucceſs at Sea, that Ships and Galeaſſes, called by them Mahumes, are wholly in diſuſe amongſt them; whether it be that they want able Seamen to govern them, or that they deſpair of being able to meet the Venetians in open Sea (for which thoſe Veſſels of Battery are onely in uſe) they are fallen into a fancy of light Gallies, a ſign that they intend to truſt more of their ſafety to their Oars than their Arms; of which in the year 1661. (after the loſs of 28 well-provided Gallies wreck'd with their Men in the Black Sea) the Viſier Kupriuli built thirty others for reparation of that loſs, but of that green and unſeaſoned Timber, that the firſt Voyage many of them became unſerviceable for the Leaks; and the reſt, at the return of the Fleet in the month of October following, were laid up amongſt the old and worn Veſſels.

It may ſeem a difficult matter to aſſign the true reaſon why and by what means the Turks come to be ſo decayed in their Naval Forces, who abound with ſo many conveniencies for it, and with all ſorts of materials fit for Navigation, as Cordage, Pitch, Tar, and Timber, which ariſe and grow in their own Dominions, and are eaſily brought to the Imperial City with little or no danger of their Enemies. For Timber, the vaſt Woods along the Coaſt of the Black Sea, and parts of Aſia, at the bottom of the Gulph of Nicomedia ſupply them: Pitch, Tar, and Tallow are brought to them from Albania and Walachia; Canvas and Hemp from Grand Cairo; and Biſket is in plenty in all parts of the Turks Dominions. Their Ports are ſeveral of them convenient for building both Ships and Gallies; the Arſenal at Conſtantinople hath no leſs than One hundred thirty ſeven Voltas, or Chambers for Building, and ſo many Veſſels may be upon the Stocks at the ſame time. At Sinopolis near Trapeſond is another Arſenal: at Midia and Anchiale, Cities on the Black Sea, are the like; and many parts of the Propontis, the Helleſpont, and the Boſphorus, are ſuch Ports and Conveniencies for Shipping, as if all things had conſpired to render Conſtantinople happy, and not onely capable of being Miſtreſs of the Earth, but formidable in all parts of the Ocean: and yet the Turk for ſeveral years, eſpecially ſince the War with Candia, and their defeats at Sea have not been able at moſt to Equippe a Fleet of above 100 Sail of Gallies, of which 14 are maintained and provided at the charge of the Beyes of the Archipelago, for which they have certain Iſles in that Sea aſſigned them.

The Turks do neither want Slaves to bogue at the Oars of the Gallies; for Tartary ſupplies them with great numbers; beſides, divers perſons in Conſtantinople make it a Trade to hire out their Slaves for the Summers Voyage for 6000 Aſpers running the hazard of the Slaves life, who returning home ſafe, is conſigned to the poſſeſſion of his Patron: and if want ſtill be of the Chiurma, as the Turks call it, or Slaves for the Oar; a collection is made in ſeveral Provinces of the luſtieſt and ſtouteſt Clowns, called by the Turks Azabs, but by the other Slaves Chakal; theſe are choſen out of certain Villages, one being elected out of every 20 houſes, the hire of which is 6000 Aſpers, for payment whereof the other 19 Families make a proportionable Contribution; upon receipt of their Pay they give in ſecurity not to fly, but to ſerve faithfully for that years Expedition: But theſe Men unuſed to the ſervice of the Sea, unskilfull at the Oar, and Sea ſick, are of little validity; and the ſucceſs of their Voyage may be compared to that in the Fable of the Shepherd, who ſold his Poſſeſſions on the Land to buy Merchandiſe for Sea-negotiations. The Soldiers which are deſtin'd to Sea ſervice are called Levents, who come voluntarily and enter themſelves in the Regiſters of the Arſenal, obliging themſelves to ſerve that Summers Expedition for 6000 Aſpers, and Biſket for the Voyage; the ſtouteſt and moſt reſolute of theſe fellows are thoſe called Caxdaglii, who are a certain ſort of Mountainers in the Countrey of Anatolia, near Troy, whoſe Countrey I once paſſed through, with ſome apprehenſion, and more than ordinary vigilance and caution to preſerve my life; for being all Robbers and Free booters, we admitted no Treaties or Diſcourſes with them but with our Arms in our hands. Others there are alſo obliged to Sea-ſervice, who are Zaims and Timariots, and hold their Lands in Sea-Tenour; but being not bound to go in perſon themſelves, they bring or ſend their Servants (called in Turkiſh Bedel) to ſupply their place, every one providing one, two, or more, according to the value of his Lands, as we have before declared in the Chapter of the Zaims and Timariots. Some Janizaries are alſo drawn out for Sea-ſervice, and ſome Spahees of the four inferiour Banners, and not to make too bold with the Veterane Soldiers, command onely ſuch to Sea as are new and green Soldiers, lately regiſtred in the Rolls of the Spahees.

The Auxiliaries of the Turks Forces by Sea, are the Pyrates of Barbari, from thoſe three Towns of Tripoli, Tunis, and Algier; but theſe of late years have diſuſed the cuſtome of coming into the Turks aſſiſtence; yet oftentimes they ply towards the Archipelago, and to the Levant, but it is to ſupply themſelves with Soldiers, and recruits of people for increaſe of their Colonies.

The

The other part of Auxiliary Forces is from the Beyes of the Archipelago; being 14 in number, every one of which commands a Galley, and for their maintenance have the Contribution of certain Iſlands in that Sea allotted to them; the which are better manned and armed than thoſe of Conſtantinople, but theſe neither, are not willing too much to expoſe their Veſſels to fight or danger, in regard that being built and maintained at their own charges, and their whole ſubſtance, they are the more cautious how they venture all their Fortune in the ſucceſs of a Battel: Theſe Beyes alſo give themſelves up much to their delights and pleaſure, and employ more thoughts how to pleaſe their Appetites, than to acquire glory and fame by the War; what they gain in Summer, when joyned with the groſs of the Turkiſh Fleet, is the Prize of the Grand Signior; but what chance throws upon them in the Winter, is their own proper and peculiar Fortune.

The Gunners of the Turkiſh Fleet are wholly ignorant of that Art, for any perſon who is either Engliſh, French, Dutch, or any other Chriſtian Nation, they deſign to this Office, whether he be skilfull or unskilfull in the management of Artillery; having an opinion that thoſe people are naturally addicted to a certain proneneſs and aptitude in Gunnery; in which they find their errour as often as they come to skirmiſh with their Enemy.

The chief Admiral or Generaliſſimo of the Turkiſh Armata, is called the Captain Paſhaw; his Lieutenant General is called Terſhana Kiahaſi; the next Officer is Terſane Emini; or Steward of the Arſenal, who hath the care of providing all neceſſaries for the Navy; but this place being bought, as almoſt all other Offices, occaſions a neceſſity in theſe perſons to rob Mails, Anchors, Cables, and other Proviſions of the Fleet to ſatisfie the Debts they contracted for the Purchaſe of their Places: In the like manner doth every Reis or Captain of a Galley keep his hand in exerciſe as often as convenience offers; theſe are all for the moſt part Italian Renegadoes, or the Race of them born and educated near the Arſenal. The Officers command their Chiurme or Slaves in corrupted Italian, which they call Franze; and afford them a better allowance of Biskot than is given to the Slaves in the Venetian Armata.

The Turks now deſpairing of being equal to the Chriſtian Forces by Sea, and to be able to ſtand with them the ſhock of a Battel, build light Veſſels for robbing, burning, and deſtroying the Chriſtian Coaſt, and afterwards to ſecure themſelves by flight, and alſo to tranſport Soldiers, Ammunition, and Proviſions, for ſuccour of Candia, and other places of their new Conqueſts near the Sea-ſhoar.

The Arſenal at Venice is ſo greatly eſteemed by the Turks, that they ſeem not to deſire the conqueſt of that place for any other reaſon more than the benefit of the Arſenal; as a perſon of great quality amongſt them ſaid once, that had they made a Conqueſt of Venice, they would not inhabit there, but leave it to the Venetians, in regard that the City affords not freſh Water, which is neceſſary for the uſe of their Moſchs, and their Waſhing before Prayer; but that the Arſenal, and a Tribute would ſatisfie the deſires of the Grand Signior.

But the Turks are not likely to be Maſters of this Sea of Neptune, whilſt they ſo unwillingly apply their minds to Maritime Affairs, who being conſcious of their former ill ſucceſs at Sea, and how little uſe they make of thoſe advantages they have for ſhipping, acknowledge their Inabilities in Sea Affairs, and ſay, That God hath given the Sea to the Chriſtians, but the Land to them. And no doubt the large Poſſeſſions and Riches they enjoy on the ſtaple Element of the Earth, is that which takes off their minds the deep attention to matters of the Sea, which is almoſt ſolely managed by Renegadoes amongſt them, who have abandoned their Faith and their Countrey. And it is happy for Chriſtendom that this faintneſs remains on the Spirits of the Turks, an averſion from all Naval Employment; whoſe numbers and power the Great God of Hoſts hath reſtrained by the bounds of the Ocean, as he hath limited the Ocean by the Sands of the Sea-ſhoar.

THE CONCLUSION.

BY the Diſcourſe made in the three foregoing Books, it will evidently appear what ſort of Government is exerciſed amongſt the Turks, what their Religion is, and how formidable their Force; which ought to make the Chriſtian World tremble to ſee ſo great a part of it ſubjected to the Mahometan Power, and yet no Mean thought of to unite our Intereſts, and compoſe our Diſſenſions, which lay us open to the inundation of this flowing Empire: To which I ſhall add this one thing very obſervable, That the Grand Signior wages his War by Land without any charge to himſelf, an advantage not to be parallel'd by the Policy of any Government I ever heard or read of before; for his Spahees and Janizaries are always in Pay, both in War and Peace; his Zaims and Timariots have their Lands to maintain them; and other Militia's enjoy the fixed Revenue from their reſpective Countries: and yet notwithſtanding through the expence of the Naval Forces, the building Gallies, and the like, matters not provided for thoſe who laid the firſt foundation of this Government, the Revenue of the Empire hath been bankrupted, and by the corruption of the Officers, or ill management, been ſold for 3 years to come, until all was redeemed and reſtored again by the wiſedom of that famous Vifier Kuprili, whom we have occaſion ſo often to mention in the foregoing Treatiſe.

We cannot now but pity thoſe poor Borderers in Hungary, Styria, Croatia, and other parts ſubject to the Incurſions of this cruel Enemy; ſince we know in the laſt War not three Engliſh miles from Vienna, many poor people have been ſurprized and fallen into the hands of the Tartar and Turk, and ſold afterwards into perpetual ſlavery; this conſideration ought to move us, who are barricado'd and fortifi'd by the Seas from the violence of our Enemies, to bleſs God we are born in ſo happy and ſo ſecure a Countrey, ſubject to no dangers but from our ſelves, nor other miſeries but what ariſe from our own freedom and two much felicity; we ought to conſider it is a bleſſing, that we never have felt any ſmart of the rod of this great Oppreſſour of Chriſtianity, and yet have taſted of the good and benefit which hath proceeded from a free and open Trade, and amicable Correſpondence and Friendſhip with this People; which have been maintained for the ſpace of eighty years, begun in the Reign of Queen ELIZABETH of bleſſed memory, preſerved by the Prudence and admirable Diſcretion of a ſeries of worthy Ambaſſadours, and daily improved both in buſineſs and reputation by the excellent Conduct and Direction of that Right Worſhipfull Company of the Levant Merchants, hath brought a conſiderable benefit to this Kingdom, and gives employment and livelihood to many thouſands of people in England; by which alſo His Majeſty without any expence, gains a very conſiderable increaſe of His Cuſtoms.

The ſenſe of this benefit and advantage to my own Countrey, without any private conſiderations, I have as a Servant to that Embaſſie, or the obligations I have to that worthy Company, cauſe me to move with the greateſt ſedulity and devotion poſſible to promote and advance the Intereſt of that Trade: And as ſome ſtudy ſeveral ways, and preſcribe Rules by which a War may be moſt advantagiouſly managed againſt the Turk; I, on the contrary, am more inclinable to give my judgment in what manner our Peace and Trade may beſt be ſecured and maintained; knowing that ſo conſiderable a welfare of our Nation depends upon it, that a few years of Trades interruption in Turkey will make all ſorts of people ſenſible of the want of ſo great a vent of the commodities of our Countrey. And therefore as I am obliged to pray for the glory and proſperity of His Majeſty our gratious Sovereign: ſo likewiſe, as that which conduces to it, for the continuance of the Honour of this Embaſſie in Turkey, and the profitable returns of the Levant Company.

MDCLXXXVIII.

THE TRANSLATOR TO THE Chriſtian Reader.

THERE being ſo many Sects and Hereſies banded together againſt the Truth, finding that of Mahomet wanting to the Muſter, I thought good to bring it to their Colours; that ſo viewing thine enemies in their full body, thou maiſt the better prepare to encounter, and I hope overcome them. It may happily ſtartle thee, to find him ſo to ſpeak Engliſh, as if he had made ſome Conqueſt on the Nation; but thou wilt ſoon reject that fear, if thou conſider that this his Alcoran, (the Ground-work of the Turkiſh Religion) hath been already tranſlated into almoſt all Languages in Chriſtendom, (at leaſt, the moſt general, as the Latin, Italian, French, &c.) yet never gained any Proſelyte, where the Sword, its moſt forcible, and ſtrongeſt argument hath not prevailed: And indeed the greateſt Doctors of their Religion have never alledged any thing for the truth thereof; but the ſucceſs of their Wars, and greatneſs of their Empire, than which nothing is more fallacious: for that which both in former, and theſe latter Ages hath been common to the bad with the good, cannot be a certain evidence of the juſtice of a Cauſe, or the truth of Religion.

Thou ſhalt find it of ſo rude, and incongruous a compoſure, ſo farced with contradictions, blaſphemies, obſcene ſpeeches, and ridiculous fables, that ſome modeſt, and more rational Mahometans have thus excuſed it; that their Prophet wrote an hundred and twenty thouſand ſayings, whereof three thouſand only are good, the reſidue (as the impoſſibility of the Moons falling into his ſleeve, the Converſion and Salvation of the Devils, and the like) are falſe and ridiculous. Yet is the whole eſteemed ſo ſacred, that upon the Cover thereof is inſcribed — Let none touch it but he who is clean. Nor are the vulgar permitted to read it, but live and die in an implicite faith of what their Prieſts deliver; which indeed (as ſaith the learned Grotius) is a manifeſt argument of its iniquity: For that Merchandiſe may juſtly be ſuſpected, which will not be ſold, unleſs unſeen: and though all Men are not alike perſpicacious in the knowledge, and diſcerning of things, ſome by arrogancy, and vain conceit of themſelves, others by affection; Some by cuſtom, being drawn into error: yet ſhould we believe that the way to eternal life cannot be underſtood by them, who without any reſpect of profit or preferment, ſeek it, ſubmitting themſelves, with all they have, to God, imploring his aſſiſtance, we ſhould ſin againſt his infinite goodneſs. Therefore (Chriſtian Reader) though ſome, conſcious of their own inſtability in Religion, and of theirs (too like Turks in this) whoſe proſperity and opinions they follow, were unwilling this ſhould ſee the Preſs, yet am I confident, if thou haſt been ſo true a votary to orthodox Religion, as to keep thy ſelf untainted of their follies, this ſhall not hurt thee: And as for thoſe of that Batch, having once abandoned the Sun of the Goſpel, I believe they will wander as far into utter darkneſs, by following ſtrange lights, as by this Ignis Fatuus of the Alcoran. Such as it is, I preſent to thee, having taken the pains only to tranſlate it out of French, not doubting, though it hath been a poyſon, that hath infected a very great, but moſt unſound part of the Univerſe, it may prove an Antidote, to confirm in thee the health of Chriſtianity.

Grotius de ver. Rel. Chriſt.

THE FRENCH EPISTLE TO THE READER.

THE Book is a long conference of God, the Angels, and Mahomet, which that falſe Prophet very groſly invented; ſometimes he introduceth God, who ſpeaketh to him, and teacheth him his Law, then an Angel, anon the Prophets, and frequently maketh God to ſpeak in the plural, in a ſtile that is not ordinary. He declaimeth againſt ſuch as worſhip Idols, particularly againſt the Inhabitants of the City of Mecca, and againſt the * Coreis, who were enemies to his deſign. He intituled this Book the Alcoran, as one would ſay, the Collection of Precepts: He likewiſe termed it El Forcan, that is, that diſtinguiſheth good from evil: He divided it into many Chapters, to which he gave what inſcription he thought good: he moſt commonly intituled them with words that are in their firſt line, without regard to the matter they treat of, and ſpeaketh little of their Inſcription; He divided it into many ſigns, or Verſes, that contain his ordinances and fables, without obſervation either of the conſequence, or connexion of the diſcourſe, which is the cauſe that thou ſhalt find in this Book, a multitude of incongruous pieces, and divers repetitions of the ſame things. It hath been expounded by many Mahometan Doctors, their expoſition being as ridiculous as the Text; They affirm the original of the Alcoran to be written upon a Table, kept in Heaven, that the Angel Gabriel brought this Copy to Mahomet, who could neither write nor read, and ſtile him Prophet, or Apoſtle, in honour. Thou ſhalt find at beginning of ſome Chapters letters of the Arabick Alphabet, which ſome Men will not expound: They fear to utter things that may diſpleaſe their falſe Prophet: Moſt of their Doctors affirm thoſe letters to be the firſt letters of the Names of God. Thou ſhalt find the expoſition in this verſion: Thou wilt wonder that ſuch abſurdities have infected the beſt part of the World, and wilt avouch, that the knowledge of what is contained in this Book, will render that Law contemptible.

* The Coreis were a powerful family in Arabia, in Mahomet's time.

A SUMMARY OF THE Religion of the Turks.

THE Turks believe one ſole God, in one ſole Perſon, Creator of Heaven and Earth, the rewarder of the good, and puniſher of the wicked; who hath created Paradiſe for the recompence of the righteous, and Hell for the laſt puniſhment of crimes. They believe that Mahomet was a very great Prophet, whom God ſent into the World to teach men the way of ſalvation, and call themſelves Muſulmans, that is to ſay, recommended to God, or ſaved.

They believe the Decalogue of Moſes, and are obliged to obſerve it; they celebrate Friday as the Chriſtians Sunday, that day they aſſemble in Temples at noon, to pray.

They are obliged to pray five times a day, viz. in the morning, at noon, at the evening, when the Sun ſetteth, and an hour within night.

They faſt the Month, or Moon, which they call Ramazan; during this Month, they neither drink nor eat all the Day, until the Sun be ſet, but in the Night drink and eat, according to their appetites, Fleſh and Fiſh, except the Fleſh of Swine, and Wine, that is at all times forbidden them; after this faſt they have the feaſt of great Bairan, as the Chriſtians Eaſter after Lent. They are great founders of Temples, and Hoſpitals, and are obliged to give to the poor the firſt day of the year, the tith of what they have gained during the preceding year.

They believe, that after being well waſht, ſaying ſome prayer appropriate to that Ceremony; they have alſo the Soul purified from all Filthineſs and Sin, which is the cauſe that they waſh and bath often, eſpecially before they pray.

They have no Sacrament, but Circumciſion; they cauſe their Children to be circumciſed at the age of ſeven or eight years; and when they can pronounce theſe words La ilha illa allha Mehemet raſoul allha, that is, There is but one God, Mahomet is his Prophet and Apoſtle; this is their profeſſion of faith; nevertheleſs there is no mention of Circumciſion in all the Alcoran; they ſay they obſerve it in imitation of Abraham, whoſe Law is recommended to them by Mahomet: they believe that the Alcoran was brought to him him at ſeveral times by the Angel Gabriel, in the City of Mecca, and that of Medina, becauſe the Jews and Chriſtians had altered the Holy Scriptures, and the Law of God.

They are permitted to have four Wives, married at the ſame time, and as many Concubines as they are able to maintain.

They can put away their Wives when they think fit, paying them what they promiſed them in contract of marriage; and marry again at their pleaſure; but the Women are bound to tarry until they are aſſured that they are not with Child before they marry again, and their Husbands are obliged to keep, and take the care of the Children. The Children which they have by their ſlaves are indifferently eſteemed with thoſe of their Wives, and are all held as legitimate.

They have Temples, Colleges, and Hoſpitals well revenued; they have covents of Religious, that live exemplarily; obey their Superiours without contradiction, and dance after the ſound of Flutes and other inſtruments when they make their prayers.

They have moreover another ſort of Religious Vagabonds through the World, clothed like fools of that Country; they often go naked, and cut their skin in many places, are held to be holy perſons, and live by alms, which are never refuſed them; both the one and the other ſort of Religious are called Dervis, they are known by their habit, and can retire and marry when they pleaſe.

They deny Jeſus Chriſt to be God, or the Son of God; neither believe they in the Holy Trinity: they ſay, that Jeſus Chriſt was a great Prophet, born of the Virgin Mary, a Virgin both before and after her delivery; that he was conceived by divine inſpiration, or by a divine breath, without a father, as Adam was created without a Mother; that he was not crucified, that God took him into Heaven, and that he ſhall come again on earth at the end of the World to confirm the Law of Mahomet; they likewiſe affirm that the Jews thinking to crucifie Jeſus Chriſt, crucified a man among them that reſembled him.

They pray to God for the Dead, they invoke their Saints, of whom they have a large Legend, nevertheleſs they believe not Purgatory; and many among them imagine that the Soul and body remain together in the grave until the day of Judgment.

A great queſtion among Mahometans.

They have Mecca and Medina, that are two Cities of Arabia, in great veneration, becauſe Mahomet was born at Mecca, and buried at Medina: they make thither great pilgrimages, and believe that Land to be Holy: They bear likewiſe ſingular reſpect to the City of Jeruſalem, for that it hath been the Birth-place, and habitation of many Prophets.

They uſe no Clocks; at the hour of their prayers their Prieſts aſcend the higheſt part of a Tower, that is in a corner of the Temple, and with a loud voice call the people to prayer, ſinging prayers, compoſed for that purpoſe.

WE the Conſuls, Governors, Protectors, and Defenders of the Priviledges, Freedoms, and Liberties of the City of Marſeillis; do certifie, and atteſt to all to whom it ſhall appertain, that Mr. Andrew du Ryer, Lord of Malezair, Gentleman in Ordinary of the Kings Chamber, and heretofore Conſul to his Majeſty in Egypt, hath executed the charge for the ſaid Conſulſhip like a Man of honeſty and honour; no complaint having been made at any time, or his adminiſtration, or deportment during the time of his abode there, and that he exerciſed that office; Neither was any complaint ever made of the ſaid Mr. du Ryer during the time he ſojourned at Conſtantinople for the ſervice of his Majeſty; but all the Captains and Officers of Merchant Veſſels, and of others that negotiated in the ſame parts, received of him all favour, as in matters that concerned them, as in affairs that did relate to the ſervice of his Majeſty, and the advantage of his Subjects traffick: in teſtimony of which, We have drawn and ſigned theſe Preſents, and have put and affixed to them, the Seal, and accuſtomed Arms of this City.

THE

THE PROPHET of the TURKS, and AUTHOR OF THE ALCORAN.

MAHOMET, the Son of Abdalla, a vicious Pagan, was born Poſthumus at * Jeſrah, then a Village of Arabia Fœlix; his Mother a Jeweſs, both by Birth and Religion, dying when he was two years old, left him to his † Uncle Abdal Mutalib, who being of vile condition, and unable to give him education, above the common ignorance and irreligion of his Country, at the age of ſixteen years, abandoned him to fortune, or after the barbarous cuſtom of the Arabians, ſold him to the Iſmaelite Merchants, who expoſing him to ſale in the Markets, he was purchaſed by Abdemonople, a wealthy Merchant; He after ſome obſervation, and experience of his wit and induſtry, withdrew him from the common drudgery of a ſlave, to employ him with his other Factors in Commerce, and finding him apt for thoſe Affairs, gave him the conduct of his Camels into Syria, Egypt, Perſia, and elſewhere. By which, in a ſhort time, he became ſo expert in his Trade, that as he encreaſed the wealth and profit of his Maſter, ſo he gained his good will and affection.

* Now a City called Medina-talnabi, [i.e.] the Town of the Prophet.

† Some will have him to be his Grandfather.

At that time Heraclius being Emperor of the Eaſt, and the ſeamleſs Coat of the Church torn by variety of Sects, and Hereſies, the Biſhops and Governors in Conſtantinople juſtly fearing Divine vengeance, by reaſon of the Neſtorian Hereſie, which, with that of the Monothelites, began afreſh to infect their Clergy, deliberated on ſome Eccleſiaſtical cenſure againſt them: When Sergius a Monk, and Sectary of Neſtorius, conſcious of his error, and dreading the puniſhment, fled ſecretly into Arabia, and found retreat and entertainment with Abdemonople, the Maſter of Mahomet, where finding ſlender hopes of propagating his infectious Hereſie (the Family being Pagans) and leſs of overthrowing his oppoſites in Religions, he reſolved to take revenge on Chriſtianity it ſelf, and to that effect began to practiſe on Mahomet, as a ſubject prepared to receive the impreſſion of his deſign.

In the mean time, Abdemonople died, his Riches being augmented through the care and induſtry of Mahomet, who having before inſinuated into the favour of his Miſtris Ajiſſa, by Preſents of rare Toys, procured in his Travels, by them, or through Sorcery (of which he was held guilty, and laboureth to purge himſelf in his Alcoran) ſo charmed her affection, that of her ſlave, he was advanced to be Lord both of her Perſon and Fortunes.

Being thus grown opulent, he ſometime continued his Trade, but then willing to take eaſe, as he had, during the Voyages through ſeveral Countries, been a ſeeker, and inquiſitive concerning the diverſity of Religions profeſſed through the Univerſe; ſo now (though irreſolute which to follow) he rejected all, as vain, and fooliſh, except Judaiſm and Chriſtianity; and approving the latter as the beſt, accordingly framed his life, aſſuming a ſpecious form of Sanctimony, which bred admiration in them that conſidered his former Education, and gave him a repute above his expectation. But this haſty Fruit was ſoon corrupted, and with the touch of Ambition (like the Apples of Sodom) ſoon vaniſhed into ſtink and filthineſs.

For Sergius, as ſubtile, as malicious, obſerving his diſpoſition, and withal, after ſome diſcourſe concerning the two Religions, of both which he found him excellently ignorant, ſeeing it no difficulty to diſtill into him the poyſon of his Hereſie, eaſily perſwaded him, That Jeſus Chriſt was but Man ſimply, that for the merit of his vertues he was held as Deified: that the ſufferings of his death were but humane inventions; that he was tranſported from this life to an immortal, and glorious, by another way than that of Death; That there is but one God, in one Perſon; ſo that the Faith of the Chriſtians is vain, and invented, and that of the Jews too looſe, and lean, through their own obſtinacy. That the Arabians being a dull and ignorant people, inclining neither to the one nor the other, but all (as many as had been touched with the fame of his new ſanctity) admiring his perfections; The Jews and Chriſtians being likewiſe enemies to each other, and the Chriſtians at variance among themſelves; He might in that juncture of affairs, aſſume the title of a Prophet ſent from God, to diſabuſe the one, and the other, and ſave the World by another Law. This Counſel of Sergius took the deſired effect, and Mahomet's thoughts, before enflamed with his new gotten wealth, and fame, now entertained more ardent deſires of being eſteemed a Prophet, looking upon all other attributes of Religion, and ſanctity, as vile and abject.

To this effect, on a ſudden he retires to a ſolitary Cave, not far diſtant from Mecca, while Sergius proclaimed the vain perfections of his Life, and filled the ears of the people with the noiſe of his deſervings. The term of two years expired, Mahomet again appears to the World, and as if newly returned from the Oracles of Heaven, ſtileth himſelf a Prophet ſent from God, who willing through his mercy, to withdraw him from that precipice of his everlaſting ruine, and admoniſh him of his error, afflicted his body with the falling ſickneſs, which Mahomet, inſtead of repenting, made an advantage to promove his wicked deſign. For his Wife lamenting to ſee her ſelf yoaked to one ſo diſeaſed, and tormented with an hideous infirmity, he excuſed it, and eaſily wrought in her a belief, that being conſtrained frequently to converſe with the Angel Gabriel, his frail body, unable to abide the ſplendor of his heavenly preſence, fell into that diſtemper, and at the departure of the Divine Ambaſſador, recovered its former condition. His Wife believing this, was not wanting to divulge the rare qualities of her husband, his admirable ſanctity, and frequent converſe with the Angel, which gained him the eſteem of a Prophet in his own houſe, and reverence among his Neighbours.

That this Infant-repute of his Holineſs might be the better ſtrengthned, Mahomet thought it requiſite to promulgate ſome Chapters of his Alcoran (as a Remonſtrance of his Commiſſion) which as he ſaw occaſion, he ſhaped (though ill-favouredly) to his deſigns, giving out that he received them from the Angel Gabriel, as the Counſel and precepts of God, who for that he had not ſaved Men, either by the Law of Moſes, the Pſalms of David, or the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt, did now promiſe them infallible Salvation by the means of the Alcoran, which though rudely, yet cunningly contrived, as complying with the looſe humor of the Arabians, enjoyning nothing ſtrict or burthenſome, but leaving all to liberty; as the ſole means to allure them to a belief of it, induced firſt the Parents and allies of his Wife, then the more ignorant and meaner ſort to embrace it, and eſteem Mahomet as the Meſſenger of God ſent to guide them into eternal felicity, and the enjoyment of Paradiſe, which the eaſier to enſnare them, he feigned to be full of ſuch pleaſures as fall under ſenſe, and a plentiful fruition of thoſe delights, that in thoſe more barren and deſert parts of Arabia they exceedingly wanted.

Having thus drawn to his devotion, a numerous, though vulgar party of the people, who in opinion of his Prophetical Function were prompt to his obedience; he thought it altogether as eaſie to obtain a Kingdom, as he had found it not difficult to attain to the title of a Prophet; and to effect this, having before, under pretence of Reformation of Religion, gained many followers, while more ſtood as lookers on, not at all regarding that Decoy; he reſolved to yoak to it that other concomitant in popular diſturbances, liberty, proclaiming it to be the will of God, that all Men ſhould enjoy it, and that the Edict might be firſt obeyed in his own family enfranchized his Slave, called Zeidi.

This bait, as it inhaunced his fame, ſo it added to his retinue; for as multitudes, affecting novelty, and a mutation of condition, daily added themſelves to his party; ſo ſlaves from all parts of Arabia forſook their Maſters, and fled to him as their Redeemer, and embraced his Law, as the means of their ſalvation. Theſe through a fond conceit of his piety, ready to ſacrifice their lives at his command, he divided into troops, and ſent to rob the Caravans of Merchants that travelled through the deſarts; and by this means, having added to his treaſure by ſpoil; and his retinue daily encreaſing by a multitude of Fugitives and Vagabonds, who by reaſon of this liberty, to act any villany, reſorted to him; he at length took up thoughts of imploying them them in the confirmation of his Law, which he knew to be the ready way to his eſtabliſhment, in that power to which he aſpired.

To this purpoſe, he marcheth with his Troops towards Medina (the place of his Birth and Burial) to preach in a Synagogue of Jews there inhabiting. Theſe leſs ſtupid than the Arabians, could not endure his impoſtures, and inſtead of believing, did handſomly beat him, and drive his train from the Town. This repulſe rather irritating than terrifying him, he drew all his force into the field, and aſſailed the Jews in two ſeveral conflicts; in one of which, by a wound on the face with a ſword, that broke out his fore teeth, He ſigned the Articles of his Law with his Blood, and continued a long time as dead in a ditch; but being reſcued by his Slaves, and recovered of his wound, he again fought and vanquiſhed them, and converted their Synagogue into a Temple, for his own uſe.

The fame of his exploits increaſing; with the number of his Sectaries (to whom ſome Princes, and eminent perſons of the Country began to encline, giving him their Daughters in Marriage) awakned the Nobles of Mecca, particularly the family of Coreis, who wiſely judging a new form of Religion, propagated by a new way, force of arms, muſt inevitably introduce a new Government, of which Mahomet, of baſe and obſcure beginnings, would be chief, as the Author, oppoſed themſelves to his deſigns, expelled all ſuch as ſeemed to favour him out of the City, and ſeveral times gave him battel; in which he ſo valiantly deported himſelf, that though he was ſometimes put to the worſt, yet he more often prevailed; and giving freedom to ſuch priſoners as would embrace his Law, incorporated them into his Army, ſtrengthning himſelf, and weakning his enemies. Being in fine a compleat Conqueror in the field; he aſſaulted the City of Mecca, took it, and after ſome ſlaughter of the Nobility, his enemies; proclaimed impunity to all that would acknowledge him a Prophet of God, by whoſe favour (as he affirmed) and appointment, not by his own valour, he had attained to that honor. After this proclamation many for fear of preſent danger, and apprehenſion of future bondage, more out of ignorance, embraced his belief, and he enjoyed the vain felicity, to ſee himſelf a General of an Army, Lord of a vaſt Country, and to be eſteemed, and reverenced as a Prophet.

About that time Heraclius the Emperor, diſpoſing himſelf rather to improve the Hereſie of the Monothelites, than to defend the Confines of the Empire, not only permitted Mahomet to domineer in Arabia, but gave advantage to Coſroes, the Perſian King, to invade his dominions: but at length awakened by the alarms of ſo puiſſant an Enemy, levied a ſtrong Army, and ſummoned the * Saracens (a people ſo called from their inhabiting the Deſart) to his aſſiſtance. The Perſian vanquiſhed, and the Saracens expecting the ſalarie of their labours, and with ſome importunity demanding it, were anſwered, that the Emperor had not ſufficient Treaſure to pay the Chriſtian Troops, and therefore thoſe Heathen Dogs muſt attend the convenience of their Prince. Incenſed by this contempt, they retired and marched by the way of Africk, where finding Mahomet buſie to enlarge his Power; he aggravated their diſcontents, affirming it to be the will of God, that all Men ſhould enjoy their Liberty, that God was offended at their oppreſſions, and willed them to oppoſe the tyranny of the Chriſtians, and that whoſoever died in that holy War, his ſoul ſhould be inſtantly tranſported to Paradiſe. Theſe motives raiſed them to a reſolution of making defection; ſo that they elected Mahomet their General, who incontinently deprived the Emperor Heraclius of his Tribute, and his Officers (who were ſlain in demanding it) of their lives. After this act, the whole Province, with that of Egypt, revolted, and the people generally eſteeming the ſucceſs of Mahomet's arms (which he was diligent to employ) as a ſure teſtimony of the goodneſs of his Cauſe, embraced his Religion.

Heraclius having neglected to ſtrangle this rebellion in its birth, endeavoured to extinguiſh it, being now grown to conſiderable ſtrength; and to that end ſent an Army under the conduct of Theodoſius his Favorite; his Army was twice overthrown, the General ſlain, and the Mahometans purſuing their victories, took from the Greeks, the Countries of Egypt, Syria, and other Provinces of Africa, where Mahomet encreaſed his Triumphs, and erected his Trophies.

Being now grown impotent, rather through his inordinate life, than burthen of years, he retired full of glory, as a King and Prophet, to Mecca, where he reſolved to end his days, having affirmed in the Alcoran to be the moſt holy City of the World: as that wherein ſtood the Temple of Abraham, built miraculouſly by Angels, to be the Sanctuary of all that repair thither in Pilgrimage. And therefore it was, that when he had by his Armies taken the City of Antioch, he durſt not enter into it in perſon, leſt by the delightful and fertile ſituation of it, he ſhould have been entited to deſert Mecca, and contradict his own Prophecy. His life now drawing to a period, a Pleuriſie ſurprized him; On the ſeventh day, for Criſis of his diſeaſe, he became frantick. Haly, one of his ſucceſſors, aſtoniſht at his diſtemper and frenzy, not eſteeming it one of the rare qualities of a Prophet, and Redeemer (as he ſtiled himſelf) of ſo much People, derided him, yet willing to conſtitute his Law, that he might inherit his Power, carefully concealed it, and according to his commands (yet living) watched his Body after his deceaſe. For he told his followers that he ſhould riſe again the third day, and aſcend to Heaven. They obſerved this, and guarding his Corps four days entire, with impatient expectation of his Reſurrection, were at length compelled, by reaſon of its putrefaction, to take him up, and bury him at Medina, where his Reliques are annually viſited by the ſuperſtitious Pilgrims of his Religion.

Thus Mahomet, the Prophet of the Turks, and Author of the Alcoran, died on the twelfth day of the Month * Rabeg, in the great climacterical year of his Age, having abuſed Men with his horrible impoſtures, full 23 years, dwelling in the eſteem of a Prophet; ten at Mecca, and thirteen at Medina. His coming was ſome years after the year of our Saviour 600. Heraclius being Emperor at Conſtantinople, Sadinion Biſhop of Rome, Clotaire King of France, Viteric of Spain, and Edbald of England. He was of ſtature not tall, large Sinews, brown colour, and broad Face, his Head diſproportioned to his Body: yet may we well imagine the beauty of his Body to ſurpaſs that of his Mind, which was full of deceit, vicious, and cruel, never ſparing any thing to advance his luſt (in which he equalled himſelf to forty Men) or to procure his revenge. He was (as himſelf confeſſed) altogether illiterate, and though by Nature ſubtile, and quick-witted, yet often puſled for the invention of deluſive Miracles, to confirm the Arabians in their Belief. For he continually preached to them, that God had ſent him to confirm his Law by force of Arms, and not by Miracles, yet the People inſtantly demanding them, as ſigns of his Miſſion, he was conſtrained firſt to tell them of a certain Voyage to Heaven; which was briefly thus. The Angel Gabriel, with threeſcore and ten pair of Wings, came to him by Night, as he was in Bed with his Wife Ajiſſa, told him, God had ſent for him; he going down with this Angel, found at his door an Heterogeneous Beaſt, called Elborach, half Aſs, half Mule, but much ſwifter than either: (for it would go as far at one ſtep as the moſt quick-ſighted could ſee) this Beaſt, or Believer of the Alcoran, would not let Mahomet mount him, unleſs he would firſt promiſe to pray for him, which the charitable Prophet did, and was in the twinkling of an Eye brought by him to Jeruſalem, where the Angel Gabriel tied the Beaſt with his Girdle to a Rock, and taking Mahomet on his Shoulders, carried him to Heaven-gate. They knocked, and the Porter underſtanding Mahomet to be there, inſtantly opened, and bade him welcome. In this firſt Heaven he ſaw Angels, of divers and monſtrous ſhapes: ſome compoſed of Fire and Snow, others of Fire alone, every of them diverſly ſhaped; among the reſt, one with the head of a Cock, whoſe Feet touched one Heaven, and Head another (each Heaven being diſtant from the other, a Voyage of five hundred years) and when he crows (which is his Language) he moves the Cocks of the Earth to crow: This Angel recommended him to another, he to a third, and ſo one to another, until he came to the Heaven, where God kept his reſidence. God courteouſly received him, asked him how his People did, how they entertained his Law, and familiarly laid his Hand upon his Shoulder, which was ſo cold, that it pierced to the marrow of his Back-bone. God had ſoon done with him, only telling him how often his People ſhould make their Prayers, which were ſo many, that as he was returning, in the fourth Heaven, Moſes adviſed him to go back to God, and entreat him that fewer Prayers might ſerve his turn, for his People were not able to make ſo many; which he did, and after many returns, brought the number to five. This done, he went back to his Elborach, which in a moment brought him to his Houſe in Mecca, where he went to bed again to his Wife, ſhe not once dreaming her Husband would leave Heaven for her company, or thinking he had been there; all this he performed in the tenth part of a Night. The Turks at this day fondly believe this as a Truth; but the Arabians of his time requiring him to do as much in their view, he (unwilling to take again ſo long a Journy) replied, Praiſed be God, I am Man, and an Apoſtle. He had other ſlights, which in ſight of the People, by Art or Sorcery, he performed, and they ſtupidly believed, and entertained as Miracles: as a Pigeon being by him taught to come and pick a Peaſe out of his Ear, he told them it was the Holy Ghoſt that came to tell him what God would have him do; ſo an Ox brought him a Chapter of the Alcoran upon his Horns, in a full Aſſembly. He likewiſe perſwaded them, that being at dinner at the Houſe of one that pretended to be his Friend (who had an intent to poyſon him, or he at leaſt was ſo informed) a ſhoulder of Mutton ſerved in to the Table, forewarned him that he ſhould not eat of it; and though many were preſent, none but he heard or underſtood the Language of the Mutton, and yet he permitted one of his deareſt Friends to eat of it, and die impoyſoned. Such, and many of the like nature were his Miracles: As the bowing of Trees, ſhaken by ſome ſudden guſt of Wind; the howling of Wolves, and braying of Aſſes, which is their Language, deſiring Mahomet to pray for them; and he Prophetically underſtanding, as religiouſly performed. His cuſtom was often to inculcate into the Ears of his Auditors, that God gave him commiſſion to fulfil his own deſires in all things; and to that purpoſe introduceth God ſpeaking to him, To thee, O Prophet! It is permitted to lie with all Women that are given thee, or thou doſt purchaſe, thy Aunts and Kindred, and all good Women that freely deſire thy company; and this is lawful for thee alone. His Iſſue was one onely Son, called Caſſim, who died before him, and many Daughters; Fatima the eldeſt (in high eſteem at this day among the Arabians, and honoured as the royal root of Aben Alabecy) was Wife to Haly. Zeineb the ſecond, was married to Oſmen, after Son to Mahumias, and perhaps to both ſucceſſively, for they both ſucceeded in the Empire of Arabia; to her is attributed the original of the other Family of Aben Humeia. Imiaultim and Naphiſſe are diverſly mentioned by the moſt faithful Hiſtorians; ſome delivering them as his Daughters, others as his near Kindred. On the Seal which he uſed, were engraven theſe words, Mahomet, Meſſenger of God. Heaven ordained him to be a ſcourge for the puniſhment of Chriſtians, who in multitudes at that time had forſaken the Truth, to follow the Sects and Hereſies of the Arrians, Donatiſts, Neſtorians, and others. The day of his death was no leſs prodigious, than the courſe of his life, a Comet, reſembling a Sword, appearing at high noon, pointing from South to North, when it was beheld the ſpace of thirty days, which that age interpreted to portend the fatal riſing and ſplendor of the Arabian Empire.

FINIS.

A need-

A needful Caveat or Admonition for them who deſire to know what uſe may be made of, or if there be danger in reading the Alcoran: By Alexander Roſs.

GOod Reader, the great Arabian Impoſtor now at laſt after a thouſand years, is by the way of France arrived in England, and his Alcoran, or gallimaufry of Errors, (a Brat as deformed as the Parent, and as full of Hereſies, as his ſcald head was of ſcurf) hath learned to ſpeak Engliſh. I ſuppoſe this piece is expoſed by the Tranſlator to the publick view, no otherwiſe than ſome Monſter brought out of Africa, for people to gaze; not to dote upon; and as the ſight of a Monſter or miſhapen creature ſhould induce the beholder to praiſe God, who hath not made him ſuch; ſo ſhould the reading of this Alcoran excite us both to bleſs God's goodneſs towards us in this Land, who enjoy the glorious light of the Goſpel, and behold the truth in the beauty of holineſs; as alſo to admire God's Judgments, who ſuffers ſo many Countreys to be blinded and inſlaved with this miſhapen iſſue of Mahomet's brain, being brought forth by the help of no other Midwifry than of a Jew and a Neſtorian, making uſe of a tame Pigeon (which he had taught to pick corn out of his Ears) inſtead of the holy Ghoſt, and cauſing ſilly people to believe, that in his falling ſickneſs (to which he was much ſubject) he had conference with the Angel Gabriel.

I know the publiſhing of the Alcoran may be to ſome dangerous and ſcandalous; dangerous to the Reader, ſcandalous to the higher Powers, who notwithſtanding have cleared themſelves by diſliking the publiſhing, and queſtioning the publiſhers thereof: but for the danger, I will deliver in theſe enſuing Propoſitions my opinion, yet with ſubmiſſion to wiſer judgments.

1. Though it may be dangerous to ſuch as like Reeds are ſhaken, and like empty clouds carried about with every wind of Doctrine; yet to ſtaid and ſolid Chriſtians, the reading of Mahomet's Hereſies will be no more dangerous, than the reading of thoſe errors which are recorded in Scripture, for in them are mentioned many damnable errors and abominations of the Egyptians, Canaanites, Hittites, Sidonians, and other Gentiles, and of the Hebrews themſelves, of the Sadducees who denied Spirits, Angels, and the Reſurrection.

2. Is there more danger in reading the Alcoran, than in reading the Errors of ancient and modern Hereticks? ſurely Tertullian, Irenæus, Epiphanius, Auſtin, and other Fathers were not of this opinion, who have left upon record to poſterity, the damnable Hereſies of Arians, Eutychians, Neſtorians, Macedonians, and others: and in the Alcoran there are not ſuch dangerous errors as among the Tetratheites, Angelites, and Thebdoſians, who held there were four Gods, or the Tritheites, who affirmed there were three, or the Gnoſticks, Manicheans, Cerdonians, Marcionites, who maintained there were two contrary gods, the one good, the other bad; whereas the Alcoran ſets down there is but one true God; and although it denieth with Arius, the Divinity of Chriſt, yet it holds him a great Prophet; not doth it ſpeak ſo blaſphemouſly of Chriſt as the Simonians, who held Simon Magus; or the Ophites, and Manicheans, who ſaid, the Serpent was Chriſt; or Menander, who affirmed himſelf to be Chriſt, and the Saviour of the World. Beſides; Are not the damnable Hereſies of the modern Familiſts, who deny Chriſt's Divinity, making as many Chriſts as there be illuminated Elders in their Congregations? are not alſo the Hereſies of the Socinians, Anti-trinitarians, Adamites, Servetians, Antiſabbatarians, and many others expoſed to the view of all that will read them? why then may not the Alcoran? Beſides, are Men debarred from reading the Greek and Latine Poets? nay, are not many of them tranſlated into our Engliſh tongue? as alſo the modern Hiſtories of the Eaſt and Weſt Indies, wherein are more damnable Tenets than any in the Alcoran, and they who have read the Jewiſh Talmud, and Cabala, will find them as ridiculous pieces as the Alcoran.

3. If there were any lovelineſs, beauty, excellency, or any thing elſe in the Alcoran that might win the mind, and draw the affection after it, I ſhould hold the reading of it dangerous, but whereas it is ſuch a miſhapen and deformed piece, I think the reading of it will confirm us in the truth, and cauſe us love the Scripture ſo much the more: for as a beautiful body is never more lovely than when ſhe is placed near a Black-More, neither is truth more amiable than when it is beſet with Errors. Oppoſita juxta ſe poſita clarius eluceſcunt, the Gem receives luſtre from the foil, the Stars from the night, and Fire is moſt ſcorching in Froſt; even ſo by an Antiperiſtaſis is Philoſophy indeed for a Hog. Fourthly, of Lyes, for he belyeth God, in making him Author of his Impiety and Hereſies; he belyes Chriſt, in ſaying he was conceived by the ſmell of a Roſe; he belyeth the Holy Ghoſt, in affirming that he inſpired Mahomet to write the Alcoran; he belyeth the Virgin Mary, calling her the daughter of Amram, and ſiſter of Moſes, confounding her with Miriam, whereas there were ſo many generations between; he belyeth the Goſpel, in ſaying it is corrupted by Chriſtians; he belyeth Chriſtians, when he ſaith they worſhip many gods, and that they give to God a companion, when they acknowledge the Divinity of Chriſt; he belyeth the Jews in ſaying they make Eleazer a god; he belyes the Patriarchs, in ſaying that Noah, Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, believed his Alcoran, being ſo many thouſand years before he was born, or his Alcoran had any exiſtence; he belyes alſo the Apoſtles, in making them his Scholars, who lived near ſix hundred years before he was born: by all which we may ſee who was the Compiler of this Alcoran, not the God of Truth, but the Father of Lyes; not Chriſt and his Apoſtles, whoſe weapons in propagating the Goſpel, were powerful Preaching, Miracles, and patience in Suffering; not the Sword, the chief means that Mahomet uſeth to force his Alcoran, an inſtrument forbid by Chriſt, but uſed by him who hath been a murtherer from the beginning; but I will not take upon me the task of refuting the Alcoran, being already refuted by Cantacuzenus, Richardus the Monk, Cuſa the Cardinal, Woodmanſtadius, Savanorola and others. I only thought good, upon intreaty of ſome learned and religious Men, to prefix this brief Caveat, that the Reader might be the better armed to encounter with any rub or difficulty he ſhall meet with in the reading thereof. But before I end, give me leave to clear my ſelf again in this point, that it is not my meaning all ſhould have the liberty to read the Alcoran promiſcuouſly. I know with the Apoſtle, that though all things be lawful, yet all things are not expedient, there are Children as well as Men in underſtanding; the Nurſe may uſe that Knife which the Child may not, and that Sword which may without danger be handled by a ſober Man cannot without danger be touched by a mad Man; there are as well queaſie as ſtrong ſtomachs, and what is Meat to the one may be Venom to the other; though Mithridates could without hurt eat Poyſon, others may not preſume to eſcape ſo; it is lawful for any to look upon a Monſter, but it is not expedient for conceiving Women; that Iron which an Oſtrich can digeſt, may deſtroy the ſtomach of other Creatures; how many have been deceived in gathering Hemlock for Parſly? It is not for every Man to meddle with Apothecaries Drugs, he may chance meet with Poyſon as ſoon as an Antidote; if all Men were like Bees, to ſuck Hony even out of Henbane, there might be no danger in reading the Alcoran, but moſt Men are like Spiders, ſuck ſecurely Poyſon even out of the ſweeteſt Roſes; therefore they only may ſurely and without danger read the Alcoran, who are intelligent, judicious, learned, and throughly grounded in Piety, and principles of Chriſtianity; but weak, ignorant, inconſtant, and diſaffected minds to the Truth, muſt not venture to meddle with this unhallowed piece, leſt they be polluted with the touch thereof, as they were who came near to a leprous Body; and if we will not venture to go into an infected Houſe without preſervatives, much leſs ſhould any dare to read the Alcoran, that is not ſufficiently armed with Grace, Strength, and Knowledge, againſt all temptations. God grant we may walk in the light of the Goſpel whilſt we have it, that we may not be overwhelmed with the diſmal night of Mahometan darkneſs, which God may juſtly inflict upon us; for our ſins, rents and diviſions are no leſſer than thoſe were of the Greek, and Aſiatick Churches, and doubtleſs except we repent we ſhall all periſh with them, who for deſpiſing Gods ſacred Oracles, are now taught to reverence every piece of paper they find, which they are made believe ſhall be put under the ſoals of their feet when they walk over the burning grate to their fools Paradiſe, as Busbequius in his Epiſtle tells us, who lived long amongſt them, and was well acquainted with their opinions; but what I have written here concerning the Alcoran, I ſubmit to the judgment and wiſdom of thoſe who ſit at the Stern, and can ſee more than the Paſſengers.

riſtaſis truth is fortified by error. Who can think that the ſight of a Hob-Goblin, or deformed Vizard ſhould draw the Child from the Nurſe or breaſt of the Mother to embrace it; whereas the ſight thereof will rather cauſe the Child hold faſter by the Mother. The wiſe Spartans oft-times brought Drunkards into the room, where their ſons were, not that they ſhould be induced thereby to love, but to abhor drunkenneſs, which they could not have done, had they not ſeen the unſeemly and rude carriage, the undecent behaviour, and uncompoſed geſtures of the drunkard. When Ziſca had deſtroyed the Adamites of Bohemia, he preſerved two alive that they might reveal to the World the wicked errors of that Sect. Who is ſo mad as to prefer the embracements of a filthy Baboon, to his beautiful Miſtreſs, or the braying of an Aſs to a Conſort of Muſick? he deſerves the ears of Midas that will prefer the Cuckows ſong to the ſweet notes of the Nightingale.

4. Though the Alcoran be received among many Nations, yet this reception proceeds not from any love they bear to it, or any lovelineſs they find in it, but partly out of fear, being forced by the Sword, partly out of a prepoſterous deſire of liberty and preferment, and partly out of ignorance, as not being ſuffered to read the Scriptures, nor to hear Philoſophy, by which the errors thereof may be detected, nor to enquire into the abſurdities thereof, or to diſpute and queſtion any thing in it: for which cauſe alſo it is not ſuffered to be Printed, nor are Chriſtians permitted to enter into Mecca, leſt the abſurdities and impieties of their Religion ſhould be manifeſted: and thus are thoſe ſilly ſouls kept in blindneſs and ignorance, and therefore I never read that any Nation did voluntarily receive the Alcoran, except the theeviſh Saracens of Arabia, becauſe it was a friend both to their theevery and lechery, as permitting multiplicity of Wives and Concubines, and a reward for thoſe that ſhall murther and rob.

5. The Alcoran is tranſlated into French and other vulgar Tongues, and the chief heads thereof by Purchas in his Pilgrimage, by Heylin in his Geography, and by others, into our own tongue without ſcruple or exception; and I pray you, why is the Arabick tongue, the language of that falſe Prophet, and in which he write his Alcoran, ſo much learned and taught in Schools and Chriſtian Univerſities, but that by it, we may come to the knowledge of Mahomet's Laws and Religion? and how ſhould we know this little horn in Daniel that ſpake high and proud things againſt the Almighty, if we read not his life and Doctrine?

6. There is a kind of neceſſity we ſhould know evil as well as good, falſhood as well as Truth, that we may avoid the one, and ſo much more love the other; he that hath ſmelled a ſtinking weed will ſmell with more delight the ſweet Roſe; he that reads the Alcoran will find it ſmell worſe than Mahomet's carkaſs did, which after his death lay putrifying upon the ground, which his diſciples permitted for many days together, hoping he would have been as good as his word, who made them a promiſe that he would riſe again the third day; but at laſt finding he had forgot himſelf, and that his body ſmelled not ſo ſweet as Alexander's did after his death, they were forced to bury it, or otherwiſe the Dogs who were beginning to bury him in their guts, had ſaved them a labour; though Sugar be ſweet in it ſelf, yet it is much more ſweet to him that hath taſted Aloes, and though Italy in it ſelf be a delicious Countrey, and garden of the World, yet it is much more delightful, pleaſant, and beautiful, to him who hath paſſed over the mountainous, craggy, and rugged Alpes: Did not the Prodigal love the bread of his Fathers houſe evermore the better after he had been fed on huſks with Swine? doubtleſs we ſhall find, that after we have fed a while upon the courſe huſks of the Alcoran, with the Arabian Swine, we ſhall with much more eagerneſs covet after the plenty of our Fathers houſe, exhibited to us in his Word, where we ſhall find the hidden Manna, the bread of Life, that came down from Heaven.

7. Books of Palmiſtry, Phyſiognomy, judicial Aſtrology, Necromancy, and other ſuperſtitious and impious Arts have been permitted to come abroad, that Men might ſee the vanity of thoſe Arts, the knavery and wickedneſs of the Artiſts, the fooliſhneſs of credulous people, who ſuffer themſelves to be deluded by them, and the malice of Satan the arch enemy of mankind, whoſe delight is to abuſe, delude, and deſtroy Men: why then may not the Alcoran be read, that Men may ſee the vanity, impiety, and fooliſhneſs of it, by which the World have been ſo many years cheated and abuſed?

8. They that learn Arts and Sciences, deſire the knowledg, not only of the good things, but of the evil things alſo, and the abuſes of them, to the end they may avoid them; therefore Logick ſpeaks as well of ſophiſtical and fallacious ſyllogiſms, as of demonſtrative and topical; Ethicks treat of Vices as well as of Vertues; Natural Philoſophy handleth the natures, not only of uſeful and beneficial creatures, but alſo of hurtful and venomous, as of Serpents; Phyſick ſpeaks of poyſons as well as of cures; Hiſtorians deſcribe both the ver-tuous and vicious actions of Princes; in Divinity we learn, not only what God and good Angels are, but alſo what Sathan is and his wicked Angels; in Navigation we muſt know, not only what places are Navigable, but alſo what are not; how ſhall we avoid Rocks, Quick ſands and Shelves if we know them not? even ſo Chriſtian Religion permits not only the reading of Scripture but alſo of heretical and heatheniſh books, as is ſaid, that we may know what to embrace, what to ſhun; therefore if you would know what be the damnable errors to be avoided by Chriſtians, read the Alcoran, and you ſhall find in it the ſink of all, or moſt part of ancient Hereſies.

9. In reading of the Alcoran, though it be, as Cato ſaid of the three Roman Embaſſadors, that were to go to Antiochus, head leſs, heartleſs and footleſs, the one being maimed in his head, the ſecond a fool, and the third lame in his Feet: I ſay, though it be without head or tail, as we uſe to ſpeak, being immethodical and confuſed, contradictory in many things, written in a rude Language, the Author himſelf being no Languiſt or Scholar, nay, not able to read or write, though alſo it conſiſt of lyes and ſenſleſs follies, yet this benefit we may reap; I ſay, in reading of it, that we ſhall be forced to admire and praiſe the goodneſs of God towards us Chriſtians who having ſuffered a great part of the World to ſit in the valley of the ſhadow of death, to be oppreſſed with Cimmerian, yea more than palpable Egyptian darkneſs; hath placed us in the Temple, where we have the Golden Candleſtick of his Word, and a clearer and more durable Lamp than that of Salomon's Temple, yea even the Sun of righteouſneſs ſhining upon us in the land of Goſhen, whileſt a great part of the World doth follow the Antichriſtian beaſt, we follow the Lamb upon mount Sion; while they hear the voice of Satyres, Oſtriches, and Schrich Owls, we hear the voice of the Turtle, and the Songs of Sion in our own Land: whilſt they feed on huſks with Swine, and drink the corrupted puddles of Mahomet's inventions, we are fed with Angels food, and eat cœleſtial Manna, and drink of the pure river of life clear as cryſtal: Again, we may tremble at the reading of this Alcoran, when we conſider the ſeverity of God's Judgments, and the fierceneſs of his anger, who for the contempt of his Goſpel, in thoſe Countries where Mahomet is worſhipped, hath ſuffered ſo many millions of people to be deluded, blinded, abuſed, and inſlaved by that falſe Prophet, to believe his lyes, and by loathing the ſweet Evangelical Manna, to devour greedily the poyſonable Quails of his doctrine, and with it the wrath of God which hath faln on them whilſt the fleſh is between their teeth, ſo that they muſt needs periſh everlaſtingly. Who would have thought that thoſe Countreys which were honoured by God's own preſence, by the Oracles of the Prophets, by the preſence, miracles, and preaching of Chriſt, by the planting of the Apoſtles, by the blood of ſo many Martyrs, ſhould be thus beſotted, and enſlaved by the tyranny of this grand Impoſtor? When we think on thoſe things, let us work out our ſalvation with fear and trembling, and let him who thinks he ſtandeth, take heed leſt he fall: they were not greater ſinners than we, therefore doubtleſs except we repent we ſhall all likewiſe periſh; the remiſſneſs of Heraclius Government, his falling into the Hereſie of the Monothelites, the contempt of the Goſpel, the ſlighting of the Paſtors, the wickedneſs of the people, the continual Schiſms, rents, jars, and diviſions of their Churches, were both the cauſes and occaſions of theſe miſeries which have faln upon them; let us take heed then we be not partakers of their ſins, leſt we alſo partake of their plagues.

10. The reading of the Alcoran will enable us to beat Mahomet with his own weapons, to cut off the head of this Goliah with his own Sword, and to wound this unclean bird with quills pickt out of his own wings, for even unwittingly and unwillingly he is forced to acknowledg many truths of Chriſtian Religion, in affirming there is but one true God the Creator of all things, and though he goeth about to overthrow the Doctrine of the Trinity, yet he doth plainly confirm it; when he ſpeaks of God, of the Word, and of the Spirit, which three indeed are one in eſſence, though diſtinct in ſubſiſtence; though he laboureth to overthrow the Goſpel, yet he confirms it, when he calls it good, full, right, a light, and a guide to ſalvation: for if it be full, good, &c. what need was then of his Alcoran? and though he endeavoureth to overthrow Chriſt's Divinity with Arius and Neſtorius, and the Jews his ghoſtly Fathers, yet he affirms it, in calling Chriſt the Word; for as the internal word of the mind is coeternal with the mind, ſo is Chriſt the Word of his Father, coeternal with the Father; he eſtabliſheth alſo the Article of Chriſt's Conception and Nativity, affirming him to be conceived by the Holy Ghoſt, and born of the Virgin Mary, whom he confeſſeth to have been a pure Virgin, both before and after Chriſt's birth: ſo he confirms the Article of Chriſt's aſcenſion into Heaven; and divers other points of Chriſtianity, to whom we are more beholding for his reverend verend eſteem of Chriſt, than the Jews who revile and blaſpheme him.

11. In reading the Alcoran, though we find much dung, yet in it we ſhall meet with ſome gold, as Virgil did in reading of Ennius his Verſes. Æſop's Cock found a precious ſtone in a dunghil; where is much droſs, ſome pure metal will be found; even ſo in the dirt of the Alcoran you ſhall find ſome jewels of Chriſtian Vertues; and indeed if Chriſtians will but diligently read and obſerve the Laws and Hiſtories of the Mahometans, they may bluſh to ſee how zealous they are in the works of devotion, piety, and charity, how devout, cleanly, and reverend in their Moſques, how obedient to their Prieſts, that even the great Turk himſelf will attempt nothing without conſulting his Mufti: how careful are they to obſerve their hours of prayers five times a day where ever they are, or however imployed? how conſtantly do they obſerve their Faſts from morning till night a whole month together; how loving and charitable the Muſſemans are to each other, and how careful of ſtrangers, may be ſeen by their Hoſpitals, both for the Poor and for Travellers: if we obſerve their Juſtice, Temperance, and other moral Vertues, we may truly bluſh at our own coldneſs, both in devotion and charity, at our injuſtice, intemperance, and oppreſſion: doubtleſs theſe Men will riſe up in judgment againſt us; and ſurely their devotion, piety, and works of mercy are main cauſes of the growth of Mahometiſm, and on the contrary, our neglect of Religion, and looſneſs of converſation, is a main hindrance to the increaſe of Chriſtianity; is it not a ſhame that they ſhould read over their Alcoran once every month, and we ſcarce read over the Bible in all our life? that they ſhall give ſuch reverence to their Alcoran, as to honor the very Camel that carried it to Mecca, and to lay up for holy reliques the napkins and hankerchiefs that rubbed off the ſweat from his skin; and we ſhall prefer laſcivious Poems, and wanton Ballads to the ſacred word of Almighty God? do we not make our ſelves unworthy of ſuch an ineſtimable treaſure?

12. The Turks are our neighbors, and their Territories border upon the dominions of Chriſtendom: there have been continual Wars, and will be ſtill between us: it concerneth every Chriſtian who makes conſcience of his ways to examine the cauſe, and to look into the grounds of this War, whether they be juſt or not, which cannot be known but by reading the Alcoran in which we ſee the Mahometans to be the enemies of the Croſs of Chriſt, in denying his Death, and of his Divinity, alſo in that they deny his Godhead: we ſhall find ſo many paſſages in it repugnant to, and deſtructive of Chriſtian Religion, that Chriſtian Princes are bound to oppoſe the enemies thereof; after the example of thoſe glorious Emperors, Conſtantine, who made War againſt the Heathen Princes, Maxentius, Maximinus and Licinius; of Theodoſius the elder againſt the Tyrant Eugenius the worſhipper of Hercules, of Theodoſius the younger againſt the Saracens, of Honorius againſt the Goths, all enemies of Chriſt, by whoſe aſſiſtance they got notable victories, and glorious triumphs. Euſeb. in vit. Conſt. & l. 9. c. 9. Hiſt. Theod. l. 5. c. 24. Socrat. l. c. 7. 18. Aug. l. 5. de civit. dei, c. 23.

13. We cannot do better ſervice to our Countrymen, nor offer a greater affront to the Mahometans, than to bring out to the open view of all, the blind Sampſons of their Alcoran, which hath maſtered ſo many Nations, that we may laugh at it, of which even their own Wiſe Men are aſhamed, and are ſorry it ſhould be tranſlated into any other language: for they are unwilling that their grand Hypocrite ſhould be unmasked, or that the Viſard of his pretended holineſs ſhould be taken off, whoſe filthy nakedneſs muſt appear when he is deveſted: they know that words and works of darkneſs cannot endure the light: Trepidantq; immiſſo lumine manes, the infernal Ghoſts tremble at any glimpſe of light; and the wild Beaſts return to their dens, ſaith David, when the morning appears, not daring to ſeek their prey but in the dark night of ignorance; this great thief Mahomet hath deſtroyed many thouſands, and under the Lyons skin, this Aſs hath affrighted his beaſtly minded Saracens, therefore let us take away the ring from this Gyges, by which he hath made himſelf inviſible, and let us with Hercules, pull out this thieving Cacus out of his dark den where he uſeth to hide and ſhelter himſelf, and expoſe his deformed carkaſs to the publick view, that we may wonder at it: and in detecting his errors, we follow the practice of Chriſt, who diſcovered to the World the damnable Tenets of the Scribes, Phariſees, Hypocrites. Pſal. 10. 4. Vt jugulent homines, ſurgunt de nocte latrones. Mat. 15.

14. The Turks are prepoſterouſly zealous in praying for the converſion, or perverſion rather, of Chriſtians to their irreligious religion; they pray heartily, and every day in their Temples, that Chriſtians may imbrace the Alcoran, and become their Proſelytes, in effecting of which they leave no means unaſſaied by fear and flattery, by puniſhments and rewards; now, is it fitting that they in charity and zeal ſhould exceed us? we are bound to pray, and indeavour heartily for their converſion, from darkneſs to light, from error to truth; but how ſhall we do this, if we know not the dangerous and damnable eſtate they are in, which we cannot know but by reading their Alcoran?

15. In reading the Alcoran we ſhall ſee what is the force of ſuperſtition, and with what violence Men are carried headlong in the defence and maintenance even of the moſt abſurd & impious opinions; what Hecuba is more deformed than the Alcoran? yet how do the Turks fight and ſtruggle, toil and care, hazard life and liberty, eſtates and all for it, as if it were the moſt beautiful Helena in the World! theſe Men cannot endure the Image of Chriſt, or of a Saint in their Temples, calling this Idolatry, and yet they are the greateſt Idolaters in the World themſelves: for never was there ſuch an Idol as the Alcoran, no Man muſt touch it, till firſt he be waſhed, and that being done, he muſt not touch it with his naked hands, but with a clean linen cloth; the Prieſt muſt kiſs it, and bow to it; he muſt when he reads in it hold it up on high, for it is a ſin to hold it lower than his girdle: Every piece of Paper that a Turk finds, he muſt uſe reverendly, becauſe the Alcoran is written in paper, the Mule that carries it to Mecca is held in great veneration, ſo that he or ſhe is ſanctified all the year after that can but touch him, and that handkerchief which wipeth off his ſweat is a holy relique: thus do they ſtrain at a Gnat and ſwallow a Camel.

Rev. 20. 16. 16. In reading the Alcoran & Turkiſh Story, we ſhall ſee who were Gog and Magog that made War againſt the Saints, even the Turks an obſcure people of Scythia, therefore called Gog, becauſe they were hid and unknown a long time, and the Saracens, who were a known people, and the open enemies of the Church, therefore called Magog; theſe treacherouſly combined together, oppreſſed firſt the Perſians, and afterward the Greek Empire, with the famous Churches of Aſia, Greece, and Egypt; we ſhall alſo find that by the Star which fell from Heaven, and opened the bottomleſs pit, whoſe ſmoke darkned the Sun, and out of which came the Locuſts, whoſe terror is deſcribed by St. John, is meant Mahomet that great deſtroyer, as his name ſignifieth, anſwering to the name Rev. 9. Apollyon, and Abaddon: for never was there ſuch a deſtroyer, who by his peſtilent doctrine hath deſtroyed ſo many Souls, and by the ſword of his Locuſts hath deſtroyed ſo many bodies, and ruinated ſo many goodly Countries.

17. If you will take a brief view of the Alcoran you ſhall find it a hodg-podge made up of theſe four ingredients. 1. Of Contradictions. 2. Of Blaſphemy. 3. Of ridiculous Fables. 4. Of Lyes: firſt, of Contradictions he doth ordinarily ſay, and unſay the ſame thing; one while he tells us, that he was the firſt that ever entred into Paradiſe, and elſewhere he ſays he found Men and Women there; ſometimes he affirms that Jews and Chriſtians ſhall be ſaved by their own Religion, and ſometimes again, that none can be ſaved who embrace not his Alcoran; In one place following the Opinion of Origen, or rather of the Origeniſts he affirmed that all the Devils ſhall be ſaved; in another place he ſaith, only thoſe Devils ſhall be ſaved who hearken to, and obey his Alcoran. Secondly, of Blaſphemy, for he blaſphemeth God, in ſaying that he prayeth for Mahomet, intimating hereby that he is inferior to that God he prayeth to; he makes God alſo ſwear by Flies, Worms, and ſuch baſe Creatures, as if he were their inferiour, whereas God having none greater than himſelf, ſwears only by himſelf; He blaſphemes the Father, in ſaying he cannot have a Son, becauſe he, is not married, as if there were no other generation but what is carnal; he blaſphemes the Son with Arius, in denying his Divinity; he blaſphemes the Holy Ghoſt with Macedonius, affirming him to be the Creature of a Creature; he blaſphemes God alſo, in making him the Author of his Alcoran, bragging that his name is written upon the Throne of God, in that he is the greateſt of the Prophets, who hath more knowledge than all the Men and Angels of the World: and many other bragging words he uttereth of himſelf, by which we may ſee he is that little Horn which did ſpring up among the ten Horns of the great and terrible Beaſt of the Roman Empire, deſtroying three of the Roman Horns, to wit, the Aſians, Grecians and Egyptians; this is the Horn that hath many Eyes, as being crafty and vigilant, but his mouth ſpeaks proud things, in blaſpheming and bragging, as we have heard. Thirdly, of ridiculous Stories, and which are more unſavory than the Golden Legend, or Lucian's true Narrations; he tells us that he divided once the Moon, one half whereof fell into his lap, (this was not then the Man in the Moon, but the Moon in the Man) the other on the ground; theſe two pieces he ſouldred again. Perhaps in memory of this lying Miracle, the Turks uſe yet the half Moon for their Arms: He tells us of a great Army of Men and Angels raiſed by Salomon, but much hindred in their march by an Army of Flies, which Salomon rebuked, where we have a witleſs conference between Salomon and the Fly; he tells you a ſtrange Story of Noah's Ark, how there the Hog was generated of the Elephants dung, and a Rat of the Hogs dung, which gnawing a hole in the Ark, at which Noah was affrighted; he touched the Lyon on the Forehead, out of whoſe Brains leaped out a Cat, as (Minerva did out of Jupiter's) which cauſed the Rat to run away: this

THE ALCORAN OF MAHOMET.

CHAP. I.

The Chapter of the Preface, containing ſeven Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful; Praiſed be God, gracious and merciful: King of the Day of Judgment. It is thee whom we adore; it is from thee we require help. Guide us in the right way, in the way of them that thou haſt gratified; againſt whom thou haſt not been diſpleaſed, and we ſhall not be miſ-led.

CHAP. II.

The Chapter of the Cow, containing Two hundred fourſcore and ſeven Verſes, written at Mecca.

See Erpenius his Grammar.

IN the Name of God, Gracious and merciful. I am the moſt wiſe God. There is no Error in this Book; it guideth into the right way thoſe that are righteous, who believe what they ſee not, who make their Prayers with affection, and diſpenſe in Alms a part of the Goods that we have given them. Such as believe the things that are inſpired into thee, in thoſe that have been Preached before thee, and at the end of the world are not ignorant they are guided by their Lord, and ſhall be bleſſed. Miſery is upon unbelievers. Whether thou reprove them, or do not reprove them, they will not be converted. God hath ſhut up their heart, their ears and eyes, and they ſhall ſuffer great torments. Many men ſay, we believe in God, and the Day of Judgment, and do not believe: they think to deceive God, and them that believe in God; certainly they deceive themſelves, and know it not. God will augment the infirmity which they have in their heart, and they ſhall undergo the rigours of an infinite pain, by reaſon of their lying. When it was ſaid to them, Pollute not the earth, they ſaid, We are true obſervers of the Law of God; notwithſtanding, they were they that polluted the earth, but they knew it not. When it was ſaid to them, Believe ye as the world believeth? They ſaid, Shall we believe as fools believe? they themſelves are fools, and know it not. When they met with ſuch as believed in God, they ſaid, We believe as you do: And when they returned towards the Devils, their Companions, they ſaid, We believe as you, and mock at thoſe men: Certainly God mocketh them, and continueth them in their Errours, to their confuſion. They that have purchaſed Error, for the right way, have gained nothing in their commerce, and are not well directed; they are like to ſuch as kindled fire, and when it hath enlightened what is about them, God hath deprived them of light, and left them in darkneſs, deaf, dumb, blind, and they ſhall never be converted: or as a cloud of Heaven, full of darkneſs, thunder, and lightning, they ſtop their ears with their fingers, by reaſon of the noiſe, and for fear of death; but God ſeeth the unbelievers, he cauſed lightning to approach, that raviſhed from them their ſight; they have followed what appeared to them, and are detained in darkneſs: But if God had pleaſed, he had deprived them, both of hearing, and ſight; for he is Omnipotent. O People, worſhip your Lord, who created you, and all that were before you; it may be that you will fear him that hath extended the Earth, that raiſed the Heaven, and cauſed Rain to deſcend; that cauſed the production of Fruits to enrich you. Say not, That God hath a Companion equal to him, becauſe you know the contrary. If you doubt that I have ſent my ſervant, come, and bring ſome Chapters like to the Alcoran, and call to witneſs the Idols that you adore; if you are good men, if you have not done it, or cannot perform it, Fear the fire of Hell prepared for Infidels, and Idolaters; and declare to true believers, who do good works, That they ſhall enjoy the immenſe pleaſures of Paradiſe, wherein flow many Rivers; they ſhall there find all ſorts of fair and ſavory Fruits, which God hath prepared for them; they ſhall conſider, if they be like to ſuch as they had before in the world: They ſhall there have Wives, fair, and delicate, and ſhall dwell, in eternal felicity. God is not aſhamed to compare a little *Puny to an extream Greatneſs: Now, ſo it is, that true believers know, that it proceedeth from their Lord. The wicked demand, what God doth mean by that compariſon? He by this means miſ-leadeth; and directeth many men; but miſ-leadeth none, but the diſobedient:

Such as pervert his Teſtament, and his Promiſes; ſuch as retrench his Commandments, and defile the Earth, are damned. Why will you be impious, ſeeing that God hath given you life after death? He will cauſe you to die, he will raiſe you again, and you ſhall all return before him to be judged. He it is, that created whatever is upon Earth, and aſcending to Heaven, hath ordained ſeven Heavens, knowing all things. Remember to inſtruct men, that thy Lord ſaid to his Angels, I would create a Vicar upon Earth; and when they anſwered, Wilt thou there place him that ſhall defile it, and ſhed Blood, while we exalt thy Glory, and ſanctifie thee? I know, ſaid he, what you know not. He taught Adam the Names of all things, who diſcovered them to the Angels, to whom God ſaid, Declare to me the Names of all things that I have created, if you know them; they replyed, Praiſe is due to thy Divine Majeſty; we know nothing, but what thou haſt taught us, thou alone art knowing and wiſe. He ſaid to Adam, Declare to them the Names of all things that I have created. After he had taught them, God ſaid, Did I not tell you, that I knew what is not, neither in Earth, nor Heaven; and that I underſtand whatever you make manifeſt, and whatever you keep moſt ſecret? Remember thou, that we ſaid to the Angels, Humble your ſelves before Adam; they all humbled themſelves, except the Devil: He was already proud, and in the number of the wicked. We ſaid unto Adam, Dwell thou and thy Wife in Paradiſe, and eat there what thou likeſt, but approach not that Tree, leſt thou be in the number of the unjuſt. The Devil made them to ſin, and depart from the Grace in which they were; then we ſaid to them, Deſcend you enemies one to another, you ſhall have a dwelling upon Earth, and goods wherewith to live for a time. Adam begged pardon for his fault of his Lord; he pardoned him, becauſe he is gracious and merciful, and ſaid, Deſcend, and go all of you out of Paradiſe; there ſhall hereafter come to you, a guide from me. Such as ſhall follow him, ſhall be delivered from fear and affliction (at the day of Judgment;) ſuch as ſhall be impious, and conceal my Commandments, ſhall burn eternally in the fire of Hell. O Children of Iſrael, remember the Grace I have done you, I will ſatisfie my Promiſes, perform yours, fear me, and believe in what I have ſent from Heaven, confirming what was before taught you; be not the firſt impious, and forſake not my Law at any rate; fear me, and cover not the Truth with a lye, neither willingly conceal it; Make your Prayers at the time appointed, pay Tithes, and worſhip your Lord with them that adore him. Will you command people that have no care of their Souls, to do good? Will you meditate upon Scripture, with obſerving it? Entreat for ſuccour with Patience, and with Prayers; they abound not, but in them that are obedient, that believe they ſhall one day behold their Lord, and ſhall return before him to be judged. O Children of Iſrael, call to mind my favours. I have preferred you to all the world; fear the day, wherein one Soul ſhall not be chaſtiſed for another; when Prayer ſhall not be heard, neither ranſom, ſuccours nor protection be found for the wicked. Remember, that we delivered you from the hands of Pharaoh, who afflicted you through the violence of torments, who murthered your Children, abuſed your Wives; and that your Lord encreaſed your Miſeries, becauſe of the Enormity of your Crimes. Remember, that we divided the Seas to ſave you, and that we drowned Pharaoh's men in your view; nevertheleſs, you worſhipped the Calf, when we detained Moſes with us forty Nights, in which you were extreamly to blame; after this, we pardoned you, it may be that you will give me thanks. We gave unto Moſes the Book, that diſtinguiſheth good from evil; perhaps you will be converted. Remember, that Moſes ſaid to his people, You were to blame for having adored the Calf; repent, and be converted to your Creator: Slay one another, that will be a thing acceptable to God; he will pardon your Crime, he is gracious and merciful. You ſaid, O Moſes, we will not believe thee, for that we ſee not God; then you were ſmitten with thunder, you ſaw your Miſery with your own eyes; nevertheleſs, we raiſed you after your death; perhaps you will give me thanks. We covered you with the ſhadow of Clouds, we cauſed Manna and Quails to fall upon you, and ſaid, Eat the good things we have given you. They did us no harm, when they murmured; they afflicted themſelves. We ſaid, Enter into that City, and eat therein what ſhall content you; enter in at the gate, with humility, and ſay, Remove our ſins from us. I will pardon your offences, and encreaſe the Graces of thoſe that are righteous: then the wicked altered their words that were taught them; but I ſent my indignation from Heaven upon them, according to their demerits. When Moſes demanded drink for his people, we ſaid, Smite the Rock with thy Rod, incontinently there ſprung forth twelve Fountains, and every man knew his place, where to drink: Eat, and drink the good things of God, and defile not the Earth any more. You ſaid unto Moſes, we are not ſatisfied with one ſort of meat; entreat thy Lord that he give us what the Earth produceth, Beets, Cucumbers, Garlick, Lentils, and Onions; he ſaid, Deſire you to change good for evil? Go down into Ægypt, you will there find what you require. They were beaten with diſgrace, and poverty, and returned into the wrath of God, for that they diſobeyed his Commandments, and unjuſtly ſlew his Prophets, for which they were greatly to blame. All thoſe that ſhall believe Chriſtians, Jews or Samaritans, ſuch as ſhall believe in God at the day of Judgment, and do good works, ſhall be recompenſed by their Lord, and be free from fear, and affliction, at the day of the Reſurrection. When we received your promiſe, to believe in the Old Teſtament, we raiſed a Mountain over you, to overſhadow you, and ſaid, Comprehend with affection, what we teach you, and remember; perhaps you will fear the fire of Hell, and diſobedience; nevertheleſs, you have gone aſtray; without the mercy of your Lord you ſhall be in the number of the damned. You know what befel thoſe that obſerved not the Sabbath; we ſaid unto them, Be ye abhorred, and deſpiſed as Apes; We left this puniſhment, as an Advertiſement to their Temporaries and Poſterity, and particularly, to be for an example to the true Believers. Remember thou, that Moſes ſaid unto the people, God commandeth you to ſacrifice a Cow. They anſwered, doeſt thou mock us? He replyed, God defend me from being in the number of the ignorant. They ſaid, Call upon thy Lord, that he inſtruct us what Cow that ought to be. He ſaid, it muſt be a Cow of a middle age, neither young, nor old, and

and do what is commanded you; They ſaid, pray unto thy Lord, that he ſhew us of what colour it ought to be. It muſt, ſaid he, be of a bright, yellow colour, that it may delight the eyes of the beholders. They ſaid, invoke thy Lord, that he inſtruct us, what it ought to reſemble, and we ſhall (if it pleaſe him) be obedient to his Commandments. He ſaid, God anſwereth you, that it muſt be a Cow, that never bare the yoke, to till the earth, neither water the fields, round, and that hath never laboured, neither hath ſpot upon her Body. They ſaid, thou haſt now ſpoken truth; they then ſacrificed her, and it wanted not much, but they had not done it: When you have ſlain any one, you are then full of wrath, and become proud; God bringeth to light whatever you conceal; We ſaid, ſmite that dead Body with a piece of that Cow: ſo God raiſeth again the dead *, and manifeſteth to you his Miracles; it may be you will comprehend them, yet your hearts are hardned, more obdurate than Rocks:; for Rivers flow from Rocks, when they cleave and appear, or when they fall, and overturn by the permiſſion of his Divine Majeſty. God is not ignorant of your actions. Do you deſire the Jews ſhould believe you, becauſe many among them write the word of God, and alter it at pleaſure, after they have comprized it? When they meet with true Believers, they ſay, we believe in God, and being aſſembled, they ſay among themſelves, have you entertained thoſe true Believers, for that God hath inſtructed you, that they may find no excuſe againſt you at the day of Judgment, before his Divine Majeſty? Underſtand you not that they would excuſe themſelves upon what you have ſaid to them? Know they not that God knoweth whatever they conceal, and what they bring to light? There be ſome that know neither to read nor write, that underſtand nothing of Scripture, but what they have learned from the lies of their Doctors, yet they think to be knowing Men. Miſery is upon them that conceal the Scripture in their hands, that alter it, and ſay, that what they read proceedeth from God to profit any thing thereby. Miſery is upon them, becauſe of what their hands have written; Miſery is upon them, and upon what they have gained, in blaſpheming againſt God. They have ſaid, we ſhall continue in Fire but a certain number of days: Say unto them, have you capitulated with God? He will not act againſt his Promiſes: Will you ſpeak of God what you know not? Such as have gained ought, and were entangled in the ſin of their gain, ſhall for ever remain in the flames of Hell; and they that have faith in God, and do good works, ſhall eternally enjoy the delights of Paradiſe. Remember thou, that we taught the Commandments of the Law, and how we ſaid to the Children of Iſrael, worſhip one only God, do good unto your Father and Mother, to your Allies, Orphans, and the Poor: ſpeak mildly unto the People, make your Prayers at the time appointed, and pay your Tithes; neverleſs they were diſobedient, except ſome very few among them. When we received the Commandments of God, and that we ſaid, ſhed not your Blood, neither forſake your Houſes, you approved it, your ſelves are Witneſſes; Nevertheleſs you ſlew many, and conſtrained a great number to deſert their habitation, you aſſiſted each other in injuſtice, and impiety. If Slaves have recourſe to you, you ſhall redeem them, their deliverance is appointed you: Do you believe one part of the Scripture to abjure the other; The reward of any of you that ſhall do this thing, is ignominy in this World, and to be precipitated into the moſt grievous torments of Hell at the day of Judgment. God is not ignorant of your actions. Such as purchaſe the Life of the World, to quit Paradiſe, ſhall not be eaſed in their Miſeries, and be utterly deprived of ſuccours. Certainly, we gave the Law to Moſes, and after him ſent many Prophets; We inſpired knowledge into Jeſus the Son of Mary, and ſtrengthned him by the Holy Ghoſt, but you aroſe againſt the Prophets, that came contrary to your affections, you belyed one part, and ſlew another. The unbelievers ſaid, our heart is hardned; It is God that hath curſed them, by reaſon of their impiety, and few of them will believe the Commandments of his Divine Majeſty. When God hath ſent them any Book, confirming the Scriptures, which they before approved (viz. the Old Teſtament and the Goſpel) they demanded ſuccours when they met with the wicked, and being ſuccoured, they either underſtood it not, or would not receive it. The curſe of God is upon Infidels, eſpecially upon them that have ſold their Souls, and through Envy diſobeyed his Commandments: He beſtoweth his grace on whom he pleaſeth, they are returned in the diſpleaſure of his Divine Majeſty, who hath prepared for them grievous torments, becauſe of the Enormity of their Crimes. When it was ſaid to them, Believe in the Commandments of God; they ſaid, Do we not believe in what hath been commanded us? Nevertheleſs, they have no faith in the truth which God hath ſent, confirming the Prophecies and the Precepts that they before approved: Say unto them, had you heretofore ſlain the Prophets, if you had believed in his Law? Moſes certainly had cauſed you to ſee Miracles; but ye adored the Calf after his departure, wherefore you were greatly to blame. We received your Promiſe, to obſerve the Commandments of the Law, and raiſed a * Mountain over you; Underſtand with affection what we teach you, and hearken to what is commanded you; they anſwered, we have heard, and diſobeyed, and inclined their heart to the adoration of the Calf, becauſe of their impiety. Say to them, doth your faith command you to do it, if you believe in God? and life eternal? Think upon death, if you be righteous: They regard not their paſt errours, but God knoweth the unjuſt: Thou ſhalt find them with diligence, and deſire to live a long time; The wicked hope to live a thouſand years, but they ſhall be exempt from the Puniſhment to live long; God beholdeth all their Actions. Say to them, who is an Enemy to Gabriel? He by the permiſſion of God hath inſpired into * thee the Alcoran that confirmeth the ancient Scriptures, and guideth the good in the way of their Salvation, and declareth to them the joys of Paradiſe. He that is an Enemy to God, the Angels, his Prophets, to Gabriel and Michaell, ſhall be rigorouſly chaſtiſed, God is an Enemy to Infidels. We have ſent to thee clear, and intelligible Precepts, none will abjure them but the wicked; Some of them have acted againſt their own Promiſes, and the greateſt part is incredulous; Many of them that have knowledge in the written Law, have forſaken it, even when God ſent them any Prophet to confirm the Scriptures, that they had before received and approved: They caſt the Book of God behind hind their Backs, as if they knew it not, and adhered to what the Devils taught in the Reign of Solomon, (yet Solomon ſinned not, but the Devils only, that inſtructed the People in Magick) and what was taught by the two Angels, Arot and Marot in Babylon. Before they taught the people, they ſaid, We are not ſedition, neither be you impious. The people learned of them, what concerneth the Separation of the Man and the Woman, and what breedeth hatred betwixt them. They did not harm to any by their Magick; but through the permiſſion of God, the people learned of them what might hurt, and not be profitable to them; they inſtructed in Magick them that ſold their part in Paradiſe, at the loſs of their Souls, although they knew their errour, that they had before believed in God, and feared his Divine Majeſty. Repentance inſpired by God is exceeding profitable, if they underſtood to know it. O you that fear God, ſay not, honour us; ſay, regard us, and hearken to what is commanded you. To Infidels are prepared dolorous torments; the Jews and Chriſtians deſired not that God ſhould ſend you good, but God very liberal, gratifieth with his mercy whom he pleaſeth: he will not alter his Commandments, neither forget them; he will moreover teach others more profitable, or of the like nature; know you not that God is Omnipotent? underſtand you not that to God appertains the Kingdom of Heaven, and of Earth; who except God will be your Protector? Will you queſtion your Prophet, as Moſes was heretofore queſtioned? He that ſhall change faith into impiety, ſhall forſake the good way. Many that have knowledge in the Scripture, endeavoured to miſlead you through impiety and Envy; notwithſtanding they are not ignorant of the Truth; forgive them, and beware of them, untill God hath (otherwiſe) diſpoſed, he is Omnipotent. Make your Prayers at the time appointed, and pay your Tithes, you ſhall find before God the good that you do for your Souls; he beholdeth all your Actions. They have ſaid, that none but the Jews and Chriſtians ſhall enter into Paradiſe, it is their falſe invention; ſay unto them, if you be good Men, bring your Reaſons on the contrary, he that reſigneth himſelf to God, and is a juſt Man, ſhall be recompenſed by his Divine Majeſty, there needeth not be any fear for him, he ſhall not be tormented in the fire of Hell. The Jews ſay, the Chriſtians are void of reaſon; and the Chriſtians affirm the Jews to be without reaſon, nevertheleſs they ſtudy the Scripture, ſo ſpeak the ignorant, God will determine their difference at the day of the Reſurrection. Who is more unjuſt, than he that hindred, that God be remembred in Temples, and that ſtudieth nought but their deſtruction? Such men cannot enter therein, but with fear and terrour; they ſhall have on Earth ſhame upon the Forehead, and, in the other World ſhall ſuffer exceeding great torments. The Eaſt and Weſt are Gods, whitherſoever men turn themſelves, the Face of God doth there meet them, his Divinity extendeth through the whole Earth. They ſaid, believe you that God hath a Son? Praiſed be God on the contrary; whatever is either in Earth or Heaven, appertaineth to his Divine Majeſty, and all things obey him; he hath created Heaven and Earth, and when he willeth any thing, he ſaith, Be thou, and it is. The unbelievers ſaid, if God ſpeak not to us, or if thou performeſt no Miracles, we will not believe thee; their Predeceſſors have ſaid as much, and their words have been like unto their hearts; we have cauſed Miracles to appear to the righteous, and have ſent thee to preach and inſtruct the people; inquire not why thoſe that ſhall deſcend into Hell will not believe thee; the Jews and Chriſtians will not be ſatisfied of thee, until thou follow their opinion; ſay unto them, there is no better guide in the World than God: take heed leſt thou follow their Appetites, after that thou haſt comprehended the knowledge which we inſpired into thee, who except God, will be thy defender? They whom we have taught the Scripture, that ſtudy and read it with truth, believe the contents of it; and they that do not believe, are damned. O Children of Iſrael, call to mind the favour that I did you, I preferred you before all the World, fear the day wherein one Soul ſhall not be able to aſſiſt another, when a Ranſom ſhall not be accepted, neither excuſe; and when the wicked ſhall not be protected. Remember thou, that Abraham requeſted of the Lord an accompliſhment of his Word; he ſaid to him, I will eſtabliſh thee among the people, to teach them the Myſteries of my Law: and he ſaid, what ſhall become of my Linage? He anſwered, Paradiſe ſhall not be open to the unjuſt. We have eſtabliſhed the Temple of Mecca for a ſure refuge of the people, in Repentance; he made his Oratory at Abraham's *place; and we have commanded Abraham and Iſmael to keep clean my houſe for them that ſhall repair thither in Proceſſion, with humility and adoration. When Abraham received this command, he ſaid, Lord fortifie this City, and enrich its people with all good things, and all the inhabitants thereof, that ſhall believe in thy Divine Majeſty, and the day of Judgment. God ſaid, I will for a time enrich the Infidels alſo, and precipitate them into the fire of Hell, where they ſhall remain to all Eternity. When Abraham and Iſmael raiſed the Foundations of the Temple of Mecca, Abraham ſaid, Lord accept our Vows; thou underſtandeſt all, and knoweſt all things: Lord give us the grace to be obedient to thy Commandments, and let a people iſſue from our Loyns that may obſerve thy Law: Shew us the way we ought to follow, and have mercy upon us; thou art gracious and merciful: Lord ſend to this thy people a Prophet of their Nation, to preach to them thy Commandments, to inſtruct them in Scripture and knowledge, and to purifie them, thou art Omnipotent and wiſe. No man ſhall abandon the Law of Abraham but to his own damage, I have choſen him in this World, and he is in the other, in the number of the juſt. Remember thou, that his Lord ſaid to him, Be thou obedient to thy Lord, and truſt thou in him; he ſaid, I reſign my ſelf to God, Lord of the Univerſe: He commanded Jacob and his Children to follow the Law of God. My Children, God hath taught you his Law, truſt you in him, be obedient to him even unto death. Were you preſent when Jacob was near unto death? and when he ſaid to his Sons, Whom will ye adore after me? They anſwered, We will worſhip thy God, the God of our Fathers, Abraham, Iſmael, and Iſaac, one ſole God; we reſign our ſelves to his pleaſure. The good that thoſe men gained, remained to them, and the evil that you ſhall commit, ſhall be againſt you; enquire not after what they did. They have ſaid, Be ye either Jew, or Chriſtian, you ſhall follow the right way. Say unto them, contrariwiſe, wiſe, The Law of Abraham is moſt juſt, he was not of the number of them that believed in many Gods. Say ye, We believe in God, in what he inſpired into Abraham, Iſmael, Iſaac, Jacob, and the Tribes, in what was taught Moſes, Jeſus, and all the Prophets, we rely upon God. If they believe as you do, they ſhall not erre; if they abandon your faith, they will have a controverſie with you, but God ſhall protect you; he underſtandeth whatever they ſay, and what they do; he hath purified his Law, and what better Purification is there, than that of his Divine Majeſty? Say unto them, Will you diſpute with us concerning God, who is your, and our Lord? We will anſwer with our Actions, and you ſhall anſwer with yours; all our confidence is in his Divine Pleaſure. Will you ſay, that Abraham, Iſaac, Jacob, and the Tribes, were Jews or Chriſtians? Are you more knowing than God? Who is more unjuſt, than he that concealeth the Miracles that he hath ſeen to proceed from God? He is not ignorant of all your Actions. The good that thoſe men have done, remain to them; and the evil that they ſhall commit, ſhall be againſt you: enquire not after what they did. Some ignorant among the people will ſay, Their Prophet doth not appoint them to turn the face to that ſide, to which they turned heretofore, when they made their Oriſons. Say unto them, The Eaſt and Weſt belong unto God; he directeth in the right way whom he pleaſeth. As we have conducted you into the right way; we have likewiſe commanded you to do that which is juſt; that you be witneſſes againſt the people at the day of judgment, and the Prophet witneſs againſt you. I have not ordained, that you turn your face as heretofore, when you made your Oriſons, to the end, they may be known that follow the Prophet, from them that return to their impiety. It will be irkſome to the people to turn to that ſide, except to ſuch as God hath guided into the right way. God will not make vain your belief; he is gracious and merciful to his people. I ſee that thou lifteſt up thy face to Heaven, turn which way ſhall pleaſe thee; but turn thou towards Mecca, whereſoever thou art: They, to whom heretofore the knowledge of Scripture was given, knew that the Truth proceeded from their Lord; what they do is not concealed from God, when thou ſhalt meet them; and that they will not turn themſelves, as thou, in making their Prayers; do not thou likewiſe turn, as they, they turn not all the ſame way, follow not their Appetites, having comprehended the knowledge that hath been inſpired into thee, leſt thou fall into the number of the unjuſt. Many, to whom we have given the knowledge of the written Law, underſtand it perfectly, as alſo do their Children; nevertheleſs, they conceal the Truth, and are not ignorant that it proceedeth from thy Lord: Be not thou of the number of them that doubt. Turn thy ſelf always towards Mecca. Do good whereſoever thou art, God will be with thee; he is Omnipotent. From what place ſoever thou goeſt forth, turn thy face towards Mecca: This is reaſonable, and ordained by thy Lord. Whatſoever you do, is not hid from God; whereſoever you are, turn towards Mecca, that none may find wherewith to reprove your actions, but the unjuſt; fear not them, but fear me. I will accompliſh my Grace upon you, and you ſhall be guided through the right way. We have ſent unto you a Prophet of your Nation, that ſhall teach you my Commandments, and puriſie you. He ſhall inſtruct you in the Scripture, in knowledge, and in what you underſtand not. Remember me, I will remember you; praiſe me, and be not in the number of the wicked. O ye that are * True believers! implore ſuccour with Patience and Prayers. Certainly, God is with ſuch as are patient: Say not, that thoſe that are ſlain for the defence of their Law, are dead, contrariwiſe they are alive, but you know it not. I will try you, and afflict you through the loſs of your Goods, and diſeaſe of your Perſons: Paradiſe ſhall be for them that ſhall be patient, and ſhall ſay in their affliction, We are given up unto God; and ſhall return before him to be judged; his Grace ſhall be upon them, and they ſhall not erre. * Safa and Meroa are Tokens of his power: He that ſhall go on Pilgrimage to Mecca, ſhall not do amiſs to viſit thoſe two places; he that obeyeth, ſhall do well. God rewardeth them that do good works, and knoweth all things. I will lay my Curſe upon ſuch as conceal my Commandments, they ſhall be accurſed above whatever is in this world; except them that ſhall be converted, that ſhall do good works, and bring to light what they concealed, I will give them my Grace; I am gracious and merciful: The wicked that died in their impiety, ſhall be eternally accurſed of God, of Angels, and of all the World, they ſhall never be eaſed in their torments, and ſhall be, without end, deprived of protection. Your God, is one ſole God; there is none other God, but God gracious and mertiful. The Creation of the Heavens, and the Earth, the difference of the day and the night, the Ship that ſaileth on the Sea for the advantage of Commerce, the Rain that falleth from Heaven, to give Life to the Earth after it's death, the diverſity of Winds, and the Clouds that move, between Heaven and Earth, are Signs of the Unity of God, to thoſe that can underſtand it. There be, that adore Idols, and love them: the True believers love but one ſole God. When thou ſhalt ſee the wicked, know, they ſhall one day ſee the puniſhment of other Crimes. All ſtrength and Vertue proceedeth from God, moſt ſevere in his Chaſtiſements. When that a part of them that had embraced the true Law, ſeparated themſelves from the Company of True believers, and that any miſchief befel them, they could not re-unite themſelves: Then they ſaid, in their affliction, If we another time meet our Companions, we will ſeparate our ſelves from them, as they have ſeparated themſelves from us: Thus ſhall God give them to underſtand their Errour, with exceeding ſorrow, and they ſhall be eternally confined in the fire of Hell. O ye people! eat what is good and ſavoury in the Earth, and follow not the ſteps of the Devil; he is your open enemy, he will command you that which is evil, and filthy; and to ſpeak of God what you know not. When it was ſaid to the Infidels, obey the Commandments of God, they ſaid, We will follow the ſteps of our Fathers; we will obſerve, what they obſerved: ſurely their Fathers were unwiſe, and miſled; they are like to him that cryeth, and underſtandeth nothing of what is ſpoken, but the voice; they are deaf, dumb, blind, and without judgment. O ye, that believe in God, eat the good things that he hath given you, and give him thanks, if it be him that you worſhip. He forbiddeth you to eat Carrion, Blood, Swines fleſh, and whatever is not killed, in pronouncing the name of his Divine Majeſty, except it be in extreme neceſſity, and in this caſe, it ſhall not be reputed diſobedience, nor ſin; God is benigne, and merciful: what they eat, that conceal the Word of God, for any profit or advantage, ſhall be nothing but matter of fire in their bowels, God ſhall not ſpeak to them at the day of judgment, but with fury; he will not purifie them, and they ſhall ſuffer rigorous torments. They that have purchaſed Errour for the right way, and puniſhment for pardon, ſhall burn in the fire of Hell; for that God hath ſent the moſt true Book that containeth his Commandments; they that impugne what is contained in that Book, are in an exceeding great Errour, far from the truth. It is not juſtification to turn the Face, making your Prayers towards the Eaſt or Weſt; he ſhall be juſtified, that ſhall believe in God, the day of judgment, the Angels, the Scriptures, and the Prophets; and that in Charity ſhall impart ſome part of his Goods to his Parents, to Orphans, to the Poor, to Pilgrims, and to Slaves. Such as believe in God, and have his fear before their Eyes, perſevere in their Prayers, pay Tithes; they ſatisfie their Promiſes, and are patient in their adverſities. O ye that believe! the Talio is commanded you in murther, the free for the free, the Slave for the Slave, the Woman for the Woman. But if any one pardon the blood of his Brother, he ſhall proſecute the Malefactor, according to what he ſhall ſee moſt advantagious, through damages and intereſts: It is a facility which God hath given you, through his mercy. He that ſhall do injury to the Malefactor, having received ſatisfaction of him, ſhall ſuffer grievous torments; at the day of Judgment you ſhall find life in the Talio. O you that are wiſe! it may be you will fear God: He commandeth you to make your Teſtament, when you approach unto death; give Legacies of your ſubſtance to your Father, and Mother, your near Kindred, and beſtow Alms on the poor. If any man alter your Teſtament, the ſin ſhall be upon him, and upon all them that ſhall alter it: God underſtandeth, and knoweth all things. If any one feareth that there is an Errour in the Teſtament, that oppoſeth Reaſon, he ſhall do well to reconcile the parties with affection, God is gracious and bountiful. O ye that believe! Faſting is commanded you, as it was them that were before you; you ſhall fear God, and Faſt, particularly, a certain number of days; but if any one among you is ſick, or in travel, at the time of Faſting, he ſhall count the days that he faſted not, and ſhall fulfil them at another time. Such as are not of ſtrength to Faſt, ſhall ſatisfie for Faſting, through Alms; he that ſhall obey, ſhall do well: If you Faſt, you ſhall do well. Faſt the month of * Ramazan, in which the Alcoran deſcended from Heaven, to guide men into the right way; it containeth Precepts of Divine Right, and diſtinguiſheth good from evil, all thoſe that live to this Month, ought to Faſt. He that is ſick, or in a Voyage, ſhall accompliſh the days that he Faſted not another time, at his Conveniency: God willeth that his Law ſhould be light unto you, and not a Burthen; his Will is, that you obſerve the days of Faſting, and that you return him thanks, for that he hath guided you in the right way, perhaps you will give him thanks; I will be near unto my Servants, when they ſhall enquire of thee concerning the Myſteries of my Law; I will hear their Supplications when they invoke me, that they may perſevere in obedience to my Commandments; peradventure they will follow the right way. It is lawful for you to know your Wives the night of Faſting, they are neceſſary to you, as your Cloathes, and you are to them as neceſſary as their Garments: God knoweth, that otherwiſe you ſhould have betrayed your Souls; he is bountiful to you, and hath pardoned you, know them, and perform what God hath appointed you. Eat and drink, until you may diſtinguiſh a white thread from a black by the light of the morning, then begin to faſt until night; Know not your wives when you are in the Temple; Such are the limits preſcribed of God, tranſgreſs them not: So God manifeſteth his Commandment to the people; perhaps they will have the fear of his Divine Majeſty before their eyes. Diſpend not your Goods unprofitably, and with Vanity, and corrupt not the Judges with Gifts, and Preſents, to eat maliciouſly the ſubſtance of another, they will queſtion you concerning the new Moon, ſay ye, That it is the ſign of the time appointed for Pilgrimages; It is not reaſonable that you ſhould enter the houſe of another a back way, he that fears God, doth well to enter through the gate. Fear God and you ſhall be happy; Fight for his Law againſt them that aſſault you, and do wrong to no man, he loveth not them that are unjuſt, flye Infidels whereſoever you find them, and expel them out of the place, from which they ſhall have driven you; Sedition is worſe than murther; fight not againſt them at Mecca, until they aſſault you; if they there fight you, kill them, ſuch is the puniſhment of Infidels: if they ſet a period to their infidelity, God will be to them gracious and merciful: Fight againſt them to avoid Sedition: Faith proceedeth from God: If they deſiſt from their impiety, you ſhall exerciſe no hoſtility againſt them, but only againſt the wicked: If they fight you in the Month of Mharam, you ſhall fight them alſo in that ſame Month, and obſerve Reciprocation in honours. Offend them that ſhall offend you in that Month, in the ſame manner that they ſhall have offended you. Fear God, and know that he is with them that fear him, diſpend for his Glory, and throw not your ſelves into your own deſtruction; do good, he loveth thoſe that do good, accompliſh the Pilgrimage appointed, if you be not hindred by your enemies, or have not Conveniency to perform it; Shave not your heads, until you arrive at the place appointed for Sacrifices; if any of you be diſeaſed, or ſick in the head, he ſhall there give ſatisfaction by faſting, Alms, and Sacrifices, when you ſhall be in a place of ſafety, and ſecure from your enemies. Such as ſhall be hindred to accompliſh Pilgrimage, and ſuch as have not means to ſatisfie for the Sacrifices ordained, ſhall faſt three days, during the time of Pilgrimage, and ſeven days at their return, which is in all ten days, if they be not inhabitants at Mecca, with their Wives and Families. Fear God, and know, that he is ſevere in his puniſhments; Pilgrimage ought to be performed in a certain Month, they that ſhall deſire to perform it, at the time preſcribed, ſhall not know their Wives, they ſhall be humble, and ſhall have no quarrel in that Voyage; God knoweth all your good Actions, he ſhall augment your faculties, culties, he is a great rewarder. Oh you that are wiſe, fear me, you ſin not in demanding good from your Lord, and making Merchandize in that Voyage. When you ſhall depart from the Mountain of Arefat, remember God in that of Mouchar, remember how he hath guided you, and how you were before out of the way; paſs through the place, through which that people were wont to paſs, and implore pardon of God, he is gracious and merciful. Having finiſhed your Oriſons, remember God with affection, as your Fathers remembred you; There be among the people, that ſay, Lord give us good in this World, and have no part in the other. Others there be, that ſay, Lord beſtow on us the good of this World, Paradiſe in the other, and deliver us from the fire of Hell; They ſhall all find the good and the evil that they have done, God is exact to keep account; He that ſhall advance his Voyage two days, ſhall not ſin, neither he that ſhall retard it, if he fear God; Fear God, and know, that you ſhall all one day appear before his Divine Majeſty to be judged. There be men whoſe Speech will be pleaſing to thee in this World, they will call God to witneſs what is in their hearts, nevertheleſs they are very pernicious, when removed from thee, and travelling upon the earth, they there commit filthineſs, and ruine both Village and Fruits. God loveth not diſorders; When it was ſaid to them, fear God, Pride, with ſin, poſſeſſed them, but Hell ſhall be their habitation. Some there be among the people, that ſell their own Perſons, out of a great deſire to pleaſe God, ſurely he is gracious to them that ſerve him. Oh ye that believe in God! be obedient to his Commandments, and purſue not the ſteps of the Devil, he is your open Enemy; if you ſin againſt God, having once learned his Commandments, know, that he is Omnipotent to chaſtiſe you, and prudent in all his works. Will the wicked expect that God ſhould appear to them in the obſcurity of a Cloud? Or elſe the Angels with Command to extirpate them, they ſhall be aſſembled before his Divine Majeſty to be judged. Demand of the Children of Iſrael, how many Miracles were made appear to them? He that altereth the grace he ſhall have received of God, ſhall be ſeverely puniſhed. The wicked eſteem the Life of the World, and ſcorn thoſe that believe in God; but ſuch as believe God, ſhall be above them at the day of Judgment; he enricheth with innumerable good things whom he pleaſeth. The World was all of one Religion, before impiety took place: God ſent his Prophets to inſtruct the people, to ſhew them their Errour, and declare to them the joys of Paradiſe; he ſent with them, the Book of truth, to judge the differences among men, no man contradicted the Contents of it, but * ſuch as had knowledge of the Scripture, and this cauſed the Envy that is riſen among them; God guided them that obſerved his Commandments, and ſuch, as with his permiſſion, obeyed his Will, he directeth in the right way whom it pleaſeth him. Do ye believe to enter Paradiſe, unleſs that happen to you, that befel your Predeceſſors? They were touched with Miſeries, and Diſeaſes, and trembled, until that very inſtant that the Prophet ſaid to the true believers that were with him; When ſhall Divine ſuccour come? notwithſtanding Divine ſuccour was not far off; They ſhall queſtion thee concerning what they ought to expend; Say unto them, you ſhall aſſiſt with your goods, your Father and Mother, your Allies, Orphans, the Poor, and Pilgrims. God will underſtand all the good you ſhall do; Fighting is enjoyned you, although it be againſt your Will; it may chance that you will ſhun that which is profitable to you, and likewiſe love what is pernicious to you, God knoweth what you know not. They ſhall ask of thee, if they ſhall fight in the Month of Maharam; ſay unto them, great Battels ſhall happen in this Month, that ſhall ſhut up to the people the way of the Law of God; and impieties, that ſhall hinder the multitude to go to Mecca. *To drive the people from Mecca is an exceeding great ſin: Sedition is worſe than murther; The wicked ſhall not ceaſe to fight you, until they have, if they can accompliſh it, miſled you from your Religion. His good works among you, that ſhall quit his Law, and die an Infidel, ſhall be vain in this World, and himſelf be confined in the fire of Hell; Such as believe in God, that ſeparate themſelves from the impious, that abandon their Houſes for the ſervice of his Divine Majeſty, and that fight for the Faith, hope for his Mercy, he is gracious and merciful. They will enquire of thee concerning Wine, and Games of hazard; ſay unto them, that it is in them a very great ſin, and yet of Utility to Men; but the evil that they cauſe, is much greater than the profit they reap. They will demand what they ought to expend in good works; ſay unto them, what ſhall remain to you, your own Affairs being done. So God teacheth you his Commandments, peradventure you will call to mind the things of Earth and Heaven. They will enquire concerning Orphans; ſay unto them, if their ſubſtance be intermingled with your own, do them no wrong, they are your Brethren in God, he knoweth them that do good, and thoſe that do Evil: if it had pleaſed him, he had detained much more from you, for he is Omnipotent and juſt. Marry not women that believe in many Gods, until they believe in one ſole God; a Slave that is a true Believer, is of more value than a free Infidel, notwithſtanding ſhe is beautiful. Infidels ſhall be ſummoned to Hell fire, and God calleth men to Paradiſe, and to his mercy, through his meer good Pleaſure, and declareth to them his Commandments, perhaps they will remember them. They will enquire of thee concerning the Monthly terms of Women; anſwer, that they are unclean; ſeparate your ſelves from your Wives when they are menſtruous, and come not nigh them until they be purified; when they ſhall be clean, approach them, according to what God hath commanded: he loveth them that repent of their Errours, that are clean and purified; your Wives are your Tillage, go to your Tillage at your Pleaſure, and do good for your Souls; you ſhall one day find it, fear God and preach his Commandments to the true Believers. Your Religion doth not permit you to ſwear by God in vain, and oftentimes to juſtifie your ſelves; God underſtandeth and knoweth all things, he will not regard what you ſhall ſpeak at Random, that ſhall not be hurtful to any, but he will ſee what it ſhall be in your heart. He will be gracious and merciful; to ſuch as ſhall ſwear, not to touch their Wives for the ſpace of four Months, if they return to them; he is gracious and merciful; but if they deſire to repudiate them, he underſtandeth, and knoweth all things. Women divorced, ſhall tarry until their Terms be paſt four times, before they Marry again, it is not permitted them to conceal what God hath created in their Womb, if they believe in his divine Majesty, and the Day of Judgment; if they flie from their Husbands, they shall be brought again to them, which is a thing reasonable. They ought to honour them; and their Husbands likewise ought to honour them, but the Husbands have a degree of advantage above them. God is Omnipotent, and most wise in what he ordaineth. Divorce the first and second time, ought to be performed with mildness, courtesie, and good deeds; it is not lawful for you to take any thing from your Wives, of what you have given them, if you both fear a disability of not satisfying the Commandments of God; but if you both fear to transgress the bounds prescribed by God, you shall do well to accord together, such are the commandments of his Divine Majesty, transgress them not, such as transgress them are exceedingly to blame. He that shall have repudiated his Wife thrice, shall not resume her, until she hath been married to another that hath divorced her: then they may return to each other, and marry again without Sin, if they think themselves able to continue within the limits prescribed by God, which he manifesteth to the wise and prudent. When you shall repudiate your Wives, appoint them the time they must tarry, before they again marry, take them with civility and modesty, and in the like manner dismiss them, give them presents according to your abilities, and take them not, to abuse nor torment them; they that do this, offend their own Souls. Mock not at the Commandments of God: Remember his favours, and how he hath taught you Scripture, Knowledge, and the mysteries of his Law; Fear God, and know that he understandeth all your actions. When you repudiate your Wives, appoint them they ought to tarry, before they marry again, and hinder them not to marry according to the Commandments of God. These things are preached to them among you that believe in God, and in the Day of Judgment, it is requisite so to make use of them. God knoweth what you know not. The Women shall give suck to their Children two years entire; if they desire to accomplish the time appointed to suckle them, the Father shall nourish and cloath the Wife; and his Children, according to his faculties; expend not, but according to the measure of your goods: the Father and Mother shall not necessitate themselves for their Children: the heir shall perform what is above ordained, (he shall entertain his Father and Mother according to his abilities;) if the Parents desire to wean their Children before two years be expired, they may do it without offending God, if they both agree to it. If you cause your Children to be nursed by other Women than your own Wives, God will not be offended, in giving them their sallary, according to reason and honesty: fear God, and know that he seeth what ever you do. Widows shall tarry four months and ten nights after the death of their Husbands, before they marry again; this time being accomplished, they shall do what shall seem good to them, according to reason and honesty, God knoweth all your actions. You will not offend God in speaking a word in secret to Women that you research in marriage, although you conceal in your mind your design to espouse them; he understandeth what ever you think of them; know them not secretly, until you have pronounced the words appointed by the Law; and enter not the bonds of marriage, until the time set down in writing be accomplished, God knoweth whatever is in your hearts: take heed unto your selves, he is gentle and gracious to them that fear him. It is no sin to repudiate your Wives, before you have touched them; you shall give them some presents, and do good unto them, according to the proportion of your wealth, or poverty; and civilly intreat them, as is the custom of honest Men. If you repudiate them before you have touched them, and have bestowed on them any presents of garments, moveables, and other things, they shall have the moity, if they release it not to you, or if the Husband, remitting with his own hand the tie of marriage, doth not leave to them the whole, of courtesie: it is requisite to gratifie them, and to forget nothing of the benefits between you, God beholdeth all your actions: stand upon your guard, when you make your prayers, especially, that at noon, and be obedient unto God. If you fear your enemies, and cannot place your selves on your knees, neither perform the Ceremonies that are appointed you; omit not to say your prayers on foot, or on horseback, and being freed from fear, remember God, and how he hath taught you what you know not. Such as die, shall be good to their Wives by their Testament; they shall bestow in them wherewith to live during the time they must tarry before they marry again; drive them not from your houses: If they willingly depart, the sin of what they shall do in their own persons, shall not be upon you: God is Omnipotent, and just; you shall likewise do good to your Wives that you have divorced, according to your power, it is a thing reasonable among such as fear God: Thus God teacheth you his Commandments, perhaps you will learn them. See you not them that departed their houses for the fear they had of death? they are thousands in number; God hath said to them, die: after this, he raised them again: God is the Benefactor of the People, but the greatest part return him no thanks for his favours. Fight for his Law, and know, that he understandeth and knoweth all things. Who is he that will afford him a good turn? He will augment him with multiplicity of increase; he giveth good, and taketh it away from whom it pleaseth him; you shall all return before him to be judged. Knowest thou not, that a company of the Children of Israel, after the death of Moses, said to their Prophet, send us a King, we with him will fight for the Law of God? He answereth them, have you disobeyed the Commandments of God? If they enjoyn you to fight, you will not do it: They said, we have no greater desire, than to fight for the glory of his Divine Majesty; we for this Cause have abandoned our houses, and those of our Parents: nevertheless, when they were commanded to fight, they all, except some few of them, retired; but God knoweth them that sin against him. Their Prophet said to them, God hath sent Saul to be your King; they answered, why shall shall he be our King? we rather deserve the Royalty than he, he is not rich enough; he replied, God hath chosen him to command you; he hath encreased his knowledge, and Stature, he giveth Royalty to whom he listeth, he is liberal and prudent in all his Actions. Their Prophet said to them, the sign of his Reign shall be, that the Ark shall appear to you from God, to confirm your hearts; wherein shall be contained the remainder of what the people of Moses and Aaron left, and it shall be born by Angels; this shall be to you the sign of his Reign, if you believe in God. When Saul went forth with his Troops to fight his Enemies, he said, God shall try you by a River; he that shall drink of that River, shall not be mine, unless he drink with his hand; they all, except some few of them drank at their Pleasure; and having past that River with the true Believers, they said, we have not this day strength sufficient to resist Goliah and his Troops; but such as believed in God, and feared his Divine Majesty, said, how often through the permission of God, hath a small Troop defeated a great Army? He is with them that are patient: when they saw Goliah with his Troops appear; they said, Lord, give us patience, confirm our steps, and give us Victory over the Infidels. They, through the permission of God, vanquished their Enemies; David slew Goliah, and God gave him the Royalty, and knowledge of future things. Had not God raised the people one against the other, the whole Earth had been full of disorders; such are the Miracles of God, as I declare to thee with truth; thou art indeed one of the Prophets of his Divine Majesty. We have conferred our graces on the Prophets, on some more than on others; many have spoken to their Lord, and some have been more elevated than others. We gave knowledge to Jesus the Son of Mary, and fortified him through the Holy Spirit. Had it pleased God, the Prophets that came heretofore, had not been slain, after they had taught his Commandments. Men were of different Opinions; some believed in God, others were impious; had it pleased God, they had not been slain, but he doth what pleaseth him. O ye that are true Believers! dispense in Alms some part of your wealth that we have given you, before the day arrive, wherein you shall find no Ransom, Alms, Protection, nor Prayers that can succour you. Certainly Infidels are greatly to blame. God! There is but one only God, living and eternal; think not that he slumbereth or sleepeth; whatever is in Heaven or in Earth is his; who shall intercede for thee with his Divine Majesty unless by his permission? He knoweth all the Actions of men, and whatever they have done; they know nothing, but what it hath pleased him to teach them. The largeness of his Throne containeth Heaven and Earth, and the Conservation of both is not troublesome to him, he is Omnipotent and glorious. The Law ought not to be abjured, it manifesteth the difference of Faith and Impiety: He that believeth not in Tagot, or the Devil, and hath Faith in God, layeth hold on the strongest knot, that cannot be dissolved, broken, or cut asunder. God understandeth and knoweth all things; he aideth and assisteth them that believe in his Unity; he will cause them to come out of darkness, and will guide them into light: the wicked shall have Tagot, and the Devil for their Protector; he shall cause them to forsake the light, and shall lead them into darkness: such men shall remain eternally in the fire of Hell. Consider you not his Action, to whom God had given the Royalty? When he disputed concerning God with Abraham, Abraham said to him; My Lord is he that giveth life, and death; He said I, even I, give life and death to my Subject, when I see good: Abraham answered, God causeth the Sun to rise in the East, make thou it to arise in the West; then the Infidel was confuted, God is not a guide to unjust Persons. Hast thou considered the action of him that came into a Village desolate and ruined, and said, How is it that God can be able to give life unto this Village after it's death, and re-establish it after so great a ruine? Then God caused him to die, after the space of an hundred years raised him again, and said to him, How long hast thou continued here; he answered, I have sojourned here a day and a half; On the contrary, thou hast been here an hundred years; consider thy Meat and Drink, that they are not altered through length of time; and behold, thine Ass is dead, see his bones, that are white; thou shalt become an example to all the World, and to Posterity; see the bones of thine Ass; I will recollect and reveſt them with flesh: Seeing this Miracle, he said, I affirm that God is Omnipotent; Remember thou, that Abraham said, Lord shew me how thou reviveſt the dead; God said, Doeſt thou not believe my Omnipotency? He answered, yea, Lord, but hear my Praver for the repose of my heart; God said, Take four Birds, cut them altogether in pieces, and carry the pieces upon those Mountains; this done, call them, they shall speedily return to thee; God knoweth all things, and is most prudent in all his works. The action of them that dispend their Goods for his glory, is like unto a Grain of Corn that produceth seven ears, and every ear an hundred Grains: God multiplieth the wealth of whom it pleaseth him, he is liberal and omniscient: Such as dispend their substance for his glory, without repining, and reproach, shall be recompensed by his Divine Majesty, and be delivered from fear and affliction at the day of Judgment. Good words and pardon are preferred to Almes, followed with repentance: God is most rich and merciful. Oh ye that believe in God! render not your Alms unprofitable through repining and reproach, as do those, that give Alms with Ostentation and hypocrise; they believe, neither in God, nor the day of Judgment, their good works are like to a Rock, whereon was little Earth, there fell great Rain that carried it away, and left nothing thereon: their Labour shall be in vain, and they reap no merit, for God loveth neither the Hypocrites nor the impious. The action of such as do good, to please God or to save their Souls, is like to a Grain sown upon an high place, whereon fell great and small Rain, that caused it's Fruit to multiply: God beholdeth all your Actions. Is there any one among you that desireth to have a Garden enriched with Palms, and Grapes, wherein flow many Fountains and Rivolets, and that is filled with all manner of Fruits, that old Age should overtake him with young and infirm Children, and that an hot wind come, and burn up his Garden? God so teacheth you his Mysteries; peradventure you will bear them in mind: Oh ye that believe! dispend in pious works, and give Alms of the wealth you have acquired, and of the Fruits of the Earth that God hath given you; desire not wealth ill gotten; or wherewith to give Alms; ſuch are not received but to your ſhame; And know, that God is moſt rich, and worthy of praiſe. The Devil will cauſe you to fear Poverty, and will command you filthineſs, and God promiſeth to you his Grace and Mercy; he is munificent, and omniſcient, he giveth knowledge to whom it pleaſeth him, and to whom knowledge is given; on him is beſtowed an exceeding great Treaſure, which none but the wiſe do value; God beholdeth your alms, and vows, and the wicked ſhall be deprived of protection at the day of Judgment. If you ſuffer your alms to appear, it ſhall not be amiſs; if you conceal them, you ſhall do well, that will cover many of your ſins; God knoweth all your actions. You are not obliged to lead Men into the right way, God guideth whom he liſteth; the good and the alms that you perform, ſhall be for your Souls; give not alms but for the love of God, you ſhall be rewarded for the good works that you ſhall do, and no injuſtice ſhall be done againſt you; Be benefactors to the poor, that are not accommodated for the ſervice of God, and that cannot labour. The ignorant believe them to be rich, by reaſon of their probity and goodneſs, you ſhall know them by their Phyſiognomy, and in that they demand nothing with importunity; God will know the good you ſhall do towards them; They that give alms, by day or by night, ſecretly or publickly, ſhall be rewarded of God; there needeth be no fear for them, they ſhall be exempt from affliction at the day of Judgment; Uſurers ſhall riſe again, like to Men poſſeſſed with Devils, becauſe they have ſaid, that traffick is like unto Uſury; God permitteth traffick, and prohibiteth uſury; he to whom the word of God cometh, and who hath abandoned Uſury, what is paſt, is to himſelf, God will pardon his fault; but he that ſhall return to exerciſe Uſury, having once abandoned it, ſhall be puniſhed in the fire of Hell; God abhorreth Uſury, he loveth them that are alms-givers, and hateth Infidels; Such as believe in God, that do good works, and that make their prayers at the time appointed, and pay their Tyths, ſhall be rewarded by his Divine Majeſty, they ſhall be delivered from fear and affliction at the day of Judgment. O ye that believe in God! have the fear of him before your eyes, and forſake Uſury, if you will obey his Commandments; if you do not this, God and his Prophet will make War upon you; if you be converted, your principal remains unto you; Do injuſtice to no Man, it ſhall not be done unto you. If your debtors be unable to pay you, and are in want, you ſhall do well to ſtay their conveniency; if you give them alms, you ſhall do well; fear the day when you ſhall return before God, and that every one ſhall be payed, without injuſtice, of what he ſhall have gained. O ye that believe in God! when you ſhall charge your ſelves with any debt, cauſe an act to be drawn; the Notary ſhall write the Contract between you, conformable to Juſtice, and ſhall not refuſe to write it, as God hath inſtructed him, but the debtor ſhall entirely ſatisfie what he ſhall owe, and ſhall have the fear of his Lord before his eyes; if he that is a debtor is a fool, or ſick, and is unable of himſelf to diſcharge it, his Guardian, or he that ſhall overſee his affairs, ſhall give ſatisfaction for him. Call with you two witneſſes, if you cannot find two Men, one with two Women ſhall ſuffice, whoſe teſtimony you ſhall accept; if the one be wanting to her duty, the other ſhall cauſe her to remember; theſe witneſſes ſhall not refuſe their teſtimony, notwithſtanding they be called in a great number. Make no difficulty to write your teſtimony, whether it concern little or much, and limit the time wherein payment ought to be made; ſuch writings are juſt before God, give more efficacy to teſtimony, and are requiſite to avoid your complaints one of another; If your merchandize be preſent, you ſhall take it between you at the ſame time, then ſhall you not ſin in not drawing a writing, or contract. Call witneſſes when you ſell or buy; neither the witneſſes, nor the Notary ſhall receive any damage; If you ſhall do that which is forbidden, you ſhall do very ill: Fear God, he will teach you his Commandments, he knoweth all things. If you are in a journey, and cannot find a Notary, you ſhall give earneſt; If one truſteth in the other, he that ſhall be truſted in, ſhall ſatisfie his promiſe, and fear God his Lord; no Man ſhall conceal his teſtimony; he that ſhall conceal, ſhall ſin in his heart; God knoweth all your actions. Whatſoever is in Heaven, or in Earth, belonging unto God, whether you conceal, or reveal what is in your minds, he ſhall require an account of you, he pardoneth, and chaſtiſeth whom it pleaſeth him, he is Omnipotent. The Propfet believed in all that God ſent to him, as likewiſe all the true believers: Such as believe in God, the Angels, and Scriptures, and generally all the Prophets, without exception, ſay, We have heard and obeyed; Pardon us, O Lord! Thou art our refuge; God requireth of no Man more than he is able to perform; the good that a Man ſhall do, ſhall be for himſelf, and the evil that he doth ſhall be likewiſe againſt him. Lord excuſe us, if we have forgotten thee, or ſinned; Lord charge us not with any heavy burthen, as thou didſt charge them that were before us; charge us not with that which we are not able to ſupport, blot out our ſins, and give us thy mercy; Thou art our Lord, give us victory againſt the Infidels.

CHAP. III.

The Chapter of the Lineage of Joachim, containing two hundred Verſes, written at Medina.

IN the name of God, gracious and merciful; I am the moſt wiſe God. God! There is but one only God, living, and eternal; He hath ſent to thee the Book that containeth truth, and confirmeth the Scriptures, that were ſent before it. He ſent the Old Teſtament, and the Goſpel, that were heretofore guides to the People; He hath ſent the Alcoran, that diſtinguiſheth good from evil; they that believe not in the Law of God, ſhall be ſeverely chaſtiſed. He is Omnipotent and revengeful; Nothing is hid from him in Heaven, or in Earth; It is he that formed you in the Wombs of your Mothers, as it pleaſed him; there is no God, but the Omnipotent, and Wiſe God. He it is that ſent to thee the Book, whoſe precepts are neceſſary, they are the original, and foundation dation of the Law, like in purity one to the other, and without contradiction. Such as in their heart incline to depart from the truth, do often follow their inclination, desirous of Sedition, and to understand the explication of the Alcoran; but none understand it's explication, but God, and such as are profound in learning, they say, we believe in God, all things proceed from his Divine Wisdom, nevertheless none remember, but the wise. Lord cause not our hearts to erre, after thou hast guided us into the right way; give us thy mercy, thou art most bountiful towards thy Creatures. Lord thou art he that shalt assemble the World at the Day of Judgment, at which day nothing shall be found doubtful, when thou wilt not go against thy Promises, and when wealth and Children shall not serve to the wicked, but to kindle the fire of Hell. The Infidel Lineage of Pharoah, and those that preceded him, blasphemed and abjured the Law of God, but he surprized them in their sin; he is grievous in his Chastisements. Say to the Infidels, they shall be vanquished, and shall be gathered together into the fire of Hell, that is prepared for them. You have an example in the two Troops that fought for the glory of God, they beheld with their eyes, Infidels become true Believers, like unto themselves; God strengtheneth with his Aid, whom it pleaseth him; this shall be for example to such as shall clearly see. The love and desire of Women, of Children, of Riches, abundance of Gold, and of Silver, of Horses, Cattel, and of Tillage, are pleasing to Men; such are the Riches of the life of this World, but the most assured refuge is in God. Say unto them; I will declare unto you things much better for them, that shall have the fear of God before their eyes: they shall dwell eternally in Paradise, where flow many Rivers, with Women beautiful, and Lean, and all manner of Content. God beholdeth them that adore him, and that say, Lord we believe in thy Law, pardon our sins, and deliver us from the torments of Fire. The Patient, the persevering, true Believers, the obedient, the good Men, such as beg Pardon of God in the Morning; the Angels, the Learned, that love Justice, testifie that there is but one only God. The Law of Salvation, is a Law pleasing to his Divine Majesty; no man contradicteth this Truth, among * such as know the written Law, but through Envy. He that shall not obey the Commandments of God, shall find his Divine Majesty very exact to call him to an Account. If the impious dispute with thee; say to them, I am wholly resigned to the Will of God, with all such as have followed me. Ask of such as know the written Law, and them that know it not, if they resign themselves to God; if they do, they will follow the right way; if they go astray, thou hast none other Obligation, but to preach to them; God beholdeth them that adore him. Declare grievous torments to those that conceal his Commandments, that kill the Prophets, and injure them that instruct the people in Justice; the good Works that they do, shall be unprofitable to them on Earth, and they shall be in the other World deprived of protection. Seest thou not a party of them that know the written Law, how they were called to a Lecture of the Book of God, to the end they might judge with Equity the differences that are among them? but many are returned to their sin: they contemned the Scripture, in that they said, the fire shall not touch us, but for a certain number of days; They are deceived in their blasphemies, what will become of them, when we shall assemble them at the day of Judgment, when nothing shall be doubtful, and every one shall be recompensed, as he shall have merited? No injustice shall be done unto them. Say, Lord, thou possessest the Kingdoms of the World, thou givest Royalty to whom thou seest good; from thy hand, O Lord, proceedeth all good, thou art Omnipotent, thou causest day to enter the night, and night the day; thou causest life to come out of death, and death out of life; thou enrichest without measure whom thou seest good. The Believers shall not obey the unbelievers, to the exclusion of true Believers; he that doth this thing, observeth not the law of God; but if you fear your Enemies, God willeth that you fear him also, he is the assured refuge of the righteous; say to them whether you conceal what is in your heart, or whether you manifest it, God knoweth all things; he knoweth all that is either in Heaven or Earth, he is Omnipotent; think on the day wherein every one shall find the good and the evil that he hath done, then shall you desire to be cleansed from your sins, and that the number of your good works exceed that of your evil, God willeth that you fear him, he is gracious to them that worship him. Say to them, If you love God, follow me, God shall give you life, and pardon your sins, he is gracious and merciful. Say to them, obey God and his Prophet; If they return in their sin, God will very severely punish them, he loveth not Infidels. God elected Adam, and Noah, the Lineage of Abraham, and the Lineage of Joachim, the one proceedeth from the other, God knoweth and understandeth all thing. Remember thou, how the Wife of Joachim said, Lord I vow unto thee the Fruit that is in my Womb, free, and exempt from all Affairs, to serve thee in thy Temple: Accept him from me, who offer him to thee with affection; thou understandest and knowest all things: When she was delivered, she said, Lord I am delivered of a Daughter, thou knowest thou hast given her to me; I have named her Mary, I will preserve through thine assistance, her and her Posterity from the malice of the Devil; accept her Lord, with a pleasing Acceptation, and cause her to produce good Fruits. Zachary had the care of the Education of this Daughter, and whersoever he went into his Oratory, he there found a thousand sorts of different Fruits of divers Seasons. He said one day, O Mary! whence do these good things proceed? she answered, they proceed from God, who enricheth without measure whom he pleaseth. Then Zachary prayed to the Lord, and said, Lord give me a Progeny that may be pleasing to thee, and that may observe thy Commandments: Lord hear my Prayers. The Angels called him, and said to him; I declare to thee from God, that thou shalt have a Son, called John, he shall affirm the Messias to be the word of God, that he shall be a great Person, Chaste, a Prophet, and one of the just: Lord, answered Zachary, how shall I have a Son, I am old, and my Wife is barren? The Angel said to him, so God doth as pleaseth him: Lord, said Zachary, give me some sign of the Conception of my Wife: The sign that I will give thee, answered the Angel, shall be, that thou shalt not speak in three days, but by ſigns; Remember thou thy Lord often, praiſe him evening and morning. Remember thou, how the Angels ſaid, O Mary, God hath choſen and purified thee above all Women of the World; O Mary, obey thy Lord, praiſe him, and worſhip him with them that worſhip him. I relate to thee how the matter paſt: thou wert not with the Miniſters of the Temple, when they caſt in their pens to draw lots, and to ſee which of them ſhould have the care of the education of Mary, neither when they entred upon this difficulty. Remember thou how the Angels ſaid, O Mary, God declareth unto thee a word, from which ſhall proceed the Meſſias, named Jeſus, the Son of Mary, full of honour in this World, and that ſhall be in the other, of the number of Interceſſors with his Divine Majeſty; he ſhall ſpeak in the Cradle, as a Man betwixt thirty and fifty years, and ſhall be in the number of the juſt: She ſaid, Lord, how ſhall I have a Child, without the touch of a Man? he anſwered, So God doth as pleaſeth him; when he createth any thing, he ſaith, Be thou, and it is. I will teach him the Scriptures, the Myſteries of the Law, the Old Teſtament, and the Goſpel, and he ſhall be a Prophet ſent to the Children of Iſrael. Jeſus ſaid to the Children of Iſrael, I come to you with evident ſigns of my miſſion from your Lord, I will make unto you of the ſlime of the Earth, the figure of a Bird, I will blow upon it, incontinently it ſhall be a Bird, and by the permiſſion of God, ſhall flie; I will heal them that are born blind, and the leprous, I will raiſe again the dead, I will teach you what you ſhall eat, and what you ought not to eat; this ſhall ſerve you for inſtruction, if you believe in God; I am come to confirm the Old Teſtament, and what hath been taught you heretofore. Certainly it is lawful for you to eat things that have been heretofore forbidden. I am come to you with ſigns of my miſſion, that teſtifie that I am truly ſent from your Lord; fear God, and obey me, God is my Lord, and your Lord, worſhip him, this is the right way. When Jeſus knew their impiety, he ſaid, Who ſhall ſuſtain the Law of God in my abſence? The Apoſtles anſwered him, we will ſubſtain the Law of God, we believe in his unity; be thou a witneſs before God, that we reſign our ſelves wholly to the pleaſure of his Divine Majeſty. Lord we believe in what thou haſt commanded, and we have followed the Prophet, thy Apoſtle, write us in the number of them that profeſs thy Law. The Jews conſpired againſt Jeſus, and God cauſed their conſpiracy to turn againſt them, he knoweth the deſigns of Conſpirators. Remember thou, how the Lord ſaid, O Jeſus, I will cauſe thee to die, I will elevate thee to my ſelf, and remove thee far from Infidels, and prefer thoſe that have obeyed thee, to Infidels, at the day of Judgment. That day ſhall aſſemble you all before me; I will judge the differences between you, and will puniſh the impious, in this World, and in the other; none among them ſhall be of power to protect them, I will reward them that ſhall have believed in my Law, and have done good works; God loveth not the unjuſt. I relate to thee theſe myſteries, and teach thee the Alcoran; Jeſus is with God, as is Adam, God created him of the Earth; he ſaid, Be thou, and he was: this truth proceedeth from thy Lord, be not thou of the number of them that doubt; If any one diſpute with thee concerning thy Doctrine, ſay to them, Come, call together your Children and ours, your Wives and ours, let us aſſemble and addreſs our prayers to God; I will lay the curſe of his Divine Majeſty upon lyers. This Diſcourſe is moſt true, there is no God, but God alone the Omnipotent, and Wiſe. If they depart from his Commandments, he ſhall well obſerve the unbelievers; ſay to them, * O ye that know Scripture! come with words alike true between you and us; Do I worſhip other than God? I do not aſſociate him with any one, and acknowledge none other Lord but him; but if they turn aſide from the way of faith; God knoweth them that ſhall pollute the Earth; Say to them, be ye witneſſes that we believe in God. O ye that underſtand Scripture, diſpute not the Law of Abraham, to wit, if he obſerved the Old Teſtament, or the Goſpel, they were taught after him, perhaps you will acknowledge your error. Oh ye that have diſputed what you knew not! Abraham was no Jew, nor Chriſtian, he profeſſed the unity of God, he was a true believer, and not of the number of Infidels: The People, and particularly thoſe that followed him, of his time, as alſo the Prophet Mahomet, and all true believers have known the truth of his Law. Part of them, to whom heretofore was given the knowledge of Scripture deſired, ſeduced you from the right way, but they themſelves erred, and they knew it not. O ye that know the Scripture! do not maliciouſly conceal the Commandments of God, cover not the Truth with a lye, neither willingly hide it. Many of them that knew the written Law, ſaid, From the break of day, believe in what hath been taught them, that believe in the Law of God: Nevertheleſs, at evening, they were themſelves of the number of Infidels, peradventure they will be converted. Believe not, but ſuch as follow your own Law; Say to them, The true guide, is the guide of God. The knowledge that was given to you, was not given to any other, but to you: If the Infidels ſhall diſpute againſt you, before your Lord, at the day of Judgment; ſay to them, Grace proceedeth from the hand of God: He is bountiful, and omniſcient; he pardoneth whom he pleaſeth, and is altogether merciful. If thou intruſteſt thy wealth to the hands of many of them that know the written Law, they will faithfully reſtore it to thee: There be alſo many of them that will not reſtore it, if thou take not heed; becauſe they have ſaid, They have no belief in the Arabians, they blaſpheme againſt God, and know their blaſphemies. He that ſhall ſatisfie what he hath promiſed, and ſhall fear God, ſhall be beloved of God; he loveth ſuch as have fear of him before their eyes; ſuch as pervert his Commandments for any profit, ſhall have no part in Paradiſe; he will not protect them, neither regard, or pardon them at the day of Judgment; and they ſhall be rigorouſly puniſhed. There be of them, that alter the Scripture in reading it, and will make believe that what they read, is in the Scripture, although it be not; they blaſpheme, and know it well. God gave not to Man the Scripture, knowledge, and prophecies, to ſay to the People, Worſhip me inſtead of God; but indeed, to ſay, Obſerve exactly what you have learned in Scripture, and what you read. God doth not command you to adore Angels, nor Prophets; Will he command you impiety, having having inſtructed you in his Law? Remember that he received the promiſe of the Prophets, to preach his Commandments without fear, and that he hath taught you Scripture, and knowledge; and that after this, came a Prophet, that confirmed the Doctrine that was taught you, that you might believe his words. Have you not approved it? Have you not received what was promiſed unto you? We have received it; be therefore witneſſes againſt your ſelves, and againſt them that have followed you, and I will be a witneſs againſt you, and againſt them. Such as go aſtray from the right way, ſhall be wicked; Deſire they to obſerve any other Law, than that of God? Whatever is in Heaven, or Earth, obeyeth him; either willingly, or by force: And you ſhall all one day appear before him, to be judged: Say to them, We believe in God, in what he hath inſpired into us, in what he inſpired into Abraham, Iſmael, Iſaac, Jacob, and the Tribes, in what was ordained by Moſes, by Jeſus, and generally all the Prophets from God; and we are wholly reſigned to his pleaſure. The Sacrifices of them that deſire to follow other Law, than the Law of Salvation, ſhall not be accepted; they ſhall be in the other World, in the number of the damned. God guided not thoſe that followed impiety, after they had profeſſed his Law; and having ſeen, and teſtified that the Prophet is true, by ſigns, clear and evident, that appeared to them. God guideth not the unjuſt, they ſhall be for ever curſed of his Divine Majeſty, of Angels, and of all the World; they ſhall find no relaxation of their torments, and at the Day of Judgment be deprived of protection; except ſuch as ſhall be converted, and do good works, God ſhall be to them gracious and merciful. Such as ſhall be impious towards Jeſus, having believed the Books of Moſes, and ſhall augment their impiety againſt Mahomet, ſhall never be converted, they ſhall err eternally. All the treaſures of the Earth ſhall not be able to ſave the wicked that die in their impiety, great puniſhments are prepared for them, and none of them ſhall be able to protect them. You ſhall not be juſtified, until you have diſpenſed in pious works, part of the goods you poſſeſs. God will take notice of the alms you beſtow. All meats were permitted the Children of Iſrael, except what Iſrael forbad to himſelf, before the Old Teſtament; Say to them, Come, and bring the Old Teſtament, and conſider it, it will appear if you ſpeak the Truth. Theſe that ſhall afterwards blaſpheme againſt God, ſhall be exceedingly to blame. Say, God hath ſpoken Truth, follow ye the Law of Abraham, that is pleaſing to him: He profeſſed the unity of his Divine Majeſty; he was not of them that believed in many Gods. The Temple of Mecca is the firſt that God eſtabliſhed on Earth, to be therein adored; he bleſſed it, and Men ſhall there find the inſtructions of the right way, with clear and evident ſigns of his omnipotency; to wit, * Abraham's place: He that ſhall enter into this Temple, ſhall be in a place of ſafety and priviledge. God hath commanded that Pilgrimages be made thither, by ſuch as ſhall be able. He that is impious, muſt know that God hath not to do with him. O ye that have knowledge of the written Law, do not willingly conceal the Commandments of God, he knoweth all your actions; Say to them, O ye that have the knowledge of Scriptures, divert not from the way of Salvation them that believe in the Law of God; you deſire to alter, and pervert it, but God is not ignorant of what you do. O ye that believe, if you obey many of them that have the knowledge of the written Law, they will miſlead you into the number of the wicked. How can you be of the impious, ſince you are taught the Commandments of God, and that his Prophet, and his Apoſtle is among you? He that reſigneth himſelf to God, is in the right way. O ye that fear God, die in the profeſſion of his Unity, imbrace his Law, and remember the favour he hath ſhewed you: you were all enemies of each other; he hath united your hearts, and through his ſpecial Grace you continued united to each other as good Brethren: you were upon the brink of a pit of fire, from which he withdrew you. Thus God manifeſteth to you his mercies, perhaps you will follow the right way. Some there be among you, that exhort the People to do good, they command to do that which is honeſt, and abſtain from what is unreaſonable; theſe Men ſhall be happy: Be not like them that have abandoned the Truth, and followed lies; notwithſtanding the Truth was know to them, they ſhall ſuffer great torment in the day wherein the viſage of the good ſhall be white, and that of the wicked ſhall be black. It ſhall be ſaid to them that have black viſages; Have you followed impiety, after you made profeſſion of the Faith? Taſte this day the torment due to your ſin. Such as ſhall have white viſages, ſhall be in the favour of God; in which they ſhall eternally continue. See there the Myſteries of the Law of God, which inſtructeth thee with Truth. God willeth that no injuſtice be done to his People; whatever is in Heaven or in Earth, appertaineth to him, he diſpoſeth all things. There hath appeared no Nation on the Earth that hath followed a better way than you; forbid ye to do that which is not reaſonable, and believe in one only God; If thoſe that heretofore had knowledge of the written Law, had believed in God, they had done very well; there be among them that believe what is veritable, but the greateſt part are impious. They ſhall not hurt you, but with their tongue, and ſhall find no protection againſt you; if they fight you, they ſhall turn their backs; they were beaten with ſhame and ignominy, where they made a ſtand, except, when they embraced the Law of God, and obſerved the precepts that were taught the faithful: When they returned in the wrath of God, they were beaten with poverty; becauſe they believed not the word of his Divine Majeſty, but ſlew his Prophets without reaſon, and diſobeyed his Commandments. They that heretofore had knowledge of the written Law, are not all alike: there be among them that perſevered in obedience, and in the night meditate on the miracles of God, worſhip him, and believe in his Divine Majeſty, and the Day of Judgment; preach honeſty, prohibit to do things diſhoneſt, and apply themſelves to good works; certainly, they are good Men. Hide not the good works which you perform, God knoweth ſuch as have his fear before their eyes. Riches and Children ſhall be unprofitable to Infidels with God, they ſhall eternally dwell in the fire of Hell: The Alms that they give in this World, are like to a Wind exceeding hot, or extreamly extreamly cold, that fell upon the Tillage of them that did injury to their own Souls, and wholly deſtroyed it. God did no injuſtice to them, they were miſchievous to themſelves through their ſins. O ye that believe in God, eſteem no man to be elected of God, that is not of your Religion: The wicked endeavoured to bring you into their diſorders, malice appeared in their mouth, and that which their heart cheriſheth, is yet greater; We have taught you the Commandments of God; if you obſerve them, you ſhall protect your ſelves from the malice of Infidels. O ye! you love them, and they love not you; you believe generally in the Scriptures, and they believe not what you believe: When they met you, they ſaid, We believe in God; and when they were gone from you, they bit for anger their Fingers ends: Say to them, Die with your Choler, God knoweth what is in your hearts. If good happen to you, they are diſpleaſed; and when evil befalleth you, they rejoyce: If you have patience, and fear God, their malice ſhall not hurt you; God knoweth all their Actions. Remember the morning, when ſome of thy people deſerted the true Believers in the Field of battel; and when two of thy Companions forſook the fight, God was their Protector: All true Believers ought to truſt in him. He protected you at Beder, where you were a few Men ill armed, perhaps you will fear him, and give him thanks for that favour. Say to the true Believers, ſufficeth it not, that God ſuccoureth you with three thouſand of his Angels: Truly, if you have patience, and fear God, he will come to ſuccour you at need, and your Lord will aſſiſt you with five thouſand of his Angels ſent from Heaven; he will not ſend you this aſſiſtance but to declare to you his Protection, and to confirm your hearts. Victory proceedeth from his Divine Majeſty: He is Omnipotent, and prudent in all his works; he will extirpate in this World one part of the wicked, or will ſo ſharply reprehend them, that they ſhall become deſperate. Thou haſt nothing to do, whether he ſhall pardon, or chaſtiſe them, becauſe they are wicked: Whatever is in the Earth, and in Heaven, is his, he pardoneth as he ſeeth good; he is gracious and merciful to the righteous. O ye that believe! be not Uſurers, and fear God; peradventure you will obey his Commandments; Fear the fire of Hell prepared for Infidels. Obey God, and the Prophets, his Apoſtles, your ſins ſhall be forgiven you; beg pardon ſpeedily of your Lord. The extent of Paradiſe containeth Heaven and Earth; it is prepared for the good. God loveth them that give Alms in joy, and in affliction; that ſubdue their Paſſion, and forgive ſuch as offend them: he loveth them that do good, and that after the Commiſſion of any ſin, remember his Divine Majeſty, and implore his Pardon. Who but God forgiveth ſins? Such as perſiſt not in their Errours, and acknowledge their ſins, ſhall be recompenſed with the mercy of God, and enjoy his favour in Paradiſe. There were heretofore Laws and Means to conduct men into the right way; but conſider what hath been the end of Infidels. The Alcoran was ſent to inſtruct the World, to guide men in the right way, and to preach to the good. Diſhearten not, neither afflict your ſelves in fighting; you ſhall be Victorious if you believe in God; if you have been wounded, the like hurts have befaln the impious. God ſo diverſifieth days among men, to the end he may know them that are truly zealous in his Law; and that among you, Witneſſes be taken againſt the malice of Infidels. God loveth not the unjuſt, he forgiveth ſins to thoſe that believe, and extirpate Infidels. Do you believe to enter Paradiſe, and that God knoweth not them that fought gallantly? He knoweth them that were patient in adverſity, and perſevered in obedience to his Commandments. You expected death before you met it; you ſaw it with your Eyes, and were Victorious. Certainly Mahomet is the Prophet, and Apoſtle of God; there were many Prophets before him; when they died, or were ſlain, you returned upon your ſteps to impiety: They that return upon their ſteps, do no harm to God; he will reward only ſuch as acknowledge his favours; and men cannot die without his permiſſion, and that in a time preſcribed and predeſtinate. I will give the good things of this World to whom it pleaſeth me, and will abundantly recompence them that praiſe me. How many Prophets, and men with them, that were not dejected through their afflictions that befel them, in fighting for the Law of God? They were not weakned, neither humbled to the Infidels. God affecteth them that are patient in their adverſities, and ſuch as perſevere in his Law. They ſaid in their afflictions, Lord pardon our ſins, confirm our ſteps, and protect us againſt the Infidels. God giveth them the Riches of the Earth, and the Treaſures of Heaven; he loveth them that do good. O ye that believe in God, if you obey the wicked, they will cauſe you to return upon your ſteps, you ſhall return to the number of the damned; truly God is your Lord, he is the beſt Protector; I will put fear into the hearts of Infidels, becauſe they have without reaſon adored many Gods, and the fire of Hell ſhall be their habitation. God hath made the truth of his Promiſes to appear to you, when by his permiſſion you ſlew the Infidels, until you were weary of fighting; nevertheleſs you contradicted what the Prophet ordained, you diſobeyed him, after he had cauſed you to ſee what you deſired with affection. There be among you that covet the Goods of this World, and others that love the good things of Heaven; God hath withdrawn you from the Infidels, to try you, he hath pardoned your ſins, he is bountiful to them that obſerve his Commandments. When you retreated from the Combat, and yielded without reaſon, the Prophet recalled you, and gave you to know your Errour, with a thouſand pains; afflict not your ſelves with the loſs of the ſpoil that eſcaped you at the day of Victory, neither with the miſchief that befel you when you were vanquiſhed, God knoweth all your Actions. After your Labour, he ſent you great repoſe, part of you ſlept in all ſafety, and the reſidue ſuffered themſelves to be carried away at their Pleaſures, they had thoughts of God contrary to the truth. Think on the ignorant, that ſay, Have we ſeen any of the ſuccour that God hath promiſed? Say to them, all things proceed from God. They conceal in their Souls what they publiſh not, and ſay, had we been free of our own Wills, we had not been ſlain; ſay to them, although you had ſtayed in your Houſes, and in your Beds, death would have taken away them that were arrived at the hour of their Deſtiny; God approveth what is in your hearts, and knoweth what you have in your Souls: Certainly the Devil ſeduced them that fled, when the two Armies were in Battel, and that, becauſe of ſome ſin they had committed; nevertheleſs God pardoned them, he is gracious and merciful to his people. O ye that believe! be not like the Infidels, that ſaid, ſpeaking of their Brethren that were ſlain in the Army; that had they continued in their Houſes, they had not dyed; God putteth this ſorrow in their heart, becauſe of their impiety; he giveth life and death, and beholdeth all your Actions; if you be ſlain for his Law, or die in his favour, it ſhall be more advantagious to you than all the Treaſures of the World; and if you dye, or be ſlain, fighting for the Faith, you ſhall appear before his Divine Majeſty to be rewarded: Through the grace of God thou haſt rendred them docile; although thou be ſevere to them, they will not depart from thee, pardon them, pray for them. Take their Advice in occaſions offered, and being reſolved to do any thing, truſt thou in God; he loveth them that truſt in him, he protecteth you; none ſhall obtain Victory over you; if he abandon you, who ſhall protect you? All the faithful ought to reſign themſelves to the Will of his Divine Majeſty. It is not Lawful for the Prophet to deceive; he that ſhall be a deceiver, ſhall appear at the Day of Judgment with his deceit, to be judged; then ſhall men be payed with what they have gained, no injuſtice ſhall be done to them that ſhall have loved God, and Hell ſhall be the habitation of them, that through deceit ſhall return in the diſpleaſure of his Divine Majeſty; They ſhall not be all equally entreated, God ſhall appoint them their Rank and place, he beholdeth all their Actions, he aſſuredly rewarded the true Believers, when he ſent them a Prophet of their own Nation to preach to them his Commandments, and inſtruct them in the Alcoran; they before his coming were in a manifeſt Errour: When any miſchief befel you, it alſo befel the Infidels; you have demanded, when doth this miſchief come? it proceedeth from your ſelves, certainly God is Omnipotent. What befel you when the two Camps encountred, hapned through the permiſſion of God, to diſtinguiſh the true Believers, that diſpenſe their Goods with affection for the glory of his Divine Majeſty, from them that abandoned the fight; when it was ſaid to them, Come, fight for the Faith, and anſwered, had we thought of fighting, we had not followed you; then were they nearer to impiety, than to the Faith; nevertheleſs, they had not all of them that in their heart, that was in their mouth, God knoweth what they keep ſecret: There be of them that ſaid to their Brethren, Stay, and go not to the Combat; your Companions had not been ſlain, had they obeyed us; ſay to them, Deliver your ſelves from death, if you can avoid it, continuing in your Houſes. Believe not that thoſe that were ſlain for the Faith are dead: on the contrary, they are alive with God; they rejoyce, for that ſuch as ran to hinder them to fight, did not meet them; fear not for them, they ſhall rejoyce eternally in the favour of God, he will abundantly reward them that fight for his Law. Thoſe that obeyed God and the Prophet, after being overcome, that did good works, and feared his Divine Majeſty, ſhall receive great rewards. When it was told them, the people have conſpired againſt you, take heed to your ſelves; this Diſcourſe increaſed their Faith; and they ſaid, it ſufficeth that God is our Protector, they were filled with the grace of God, no more evil befel them, and they obſerved the Commandments of his Divine Majeſty. He is gracious to them that obey him. The Devil will cauſe in you a fear of the Infidels, fear them not; but if you be good men, fear me. Afflict not your ſelves to ſee the wicked run to impiety, they hurt not God, he will not give them reſt in the other World, where they ſhall be ſeverely chaſtiſed. Increaſe the wealth of Infidels to augment their pain, they ſhall in the end feel grievous torments. God will not leave the faithful in the ſtate that you are in; he will one day ſeparate the good from the evil; he doth not teach you what is to come; he, for that effect chuſeth among the Prophets whom he ſeeth good. Believe therefore in God, and his Prophets; if you believe in God, fear to offend him, you ſhall be rewarded. Believe that ſuch as are too ſparing, and avaritious of the wealth that God hath given them, do well; on the contrary, they do very ill, what they ſpare without reaſon, ſhall ſtrangle them at the day of Judgment. The inheritance of Heaven and Earth is Gods, he knoweth all things. Certainly God heard the Speech of them that ſaid, God is poor, and we are rich; he hath ſaid, I will write what they have ſpoken, and keep an exact account of the Murther they have unjuſtly committed on the Perſons of the Prophets; I will ſay to them at the day of Judgment, taſte of the torments of Hell fire, which you have deſerved. God doth not lead into darkneſs them that worſhip him. There be that ſay, God hath commanded us not to believe the Prophets, until their Sacrifice be conſumed by fire: Say to them, there came to you Prophets heretofore with Miracles that you demanded, you had not ſlain them, had you been righteous; if they belye thee, know, they belyed the Prophets that were before thee, that came with Miracles, the Pſalter, and the Book of Light. Every man ſhall taſte of death, and your reward ſhall be payed at the Day of Judgment; he that ſhall depart from the fire of Hell, and enter into Paradiſe, ſhall be happy. The wealth of this World is but matter of Pride, that you may be tryed in your Riches and Perſons. Hearken not to the Jews and Chriſtians, that have known the written Law before you, neither to them that believe in many Gods, they offend God through their blaſphemies; if you have patience, and fear God, you ſhall make a very good reſolution. God hath accepted the Speech of them that know his written Law, when they promiſed him to preach to the people his Commandments, and not conceal them; nevertheleſs they have contemned them, and changed them for profit of little value, and have gained nothing but miſery; think not that ſuch as rejoyce of the evil they have done, and affect to be commended for what they have not done, have eſcaped the puniſhment of their Crimes, they ſhall certainly ſuffer great torments. The Kingdom of Heaven and of the Earth is Gods, he is Omnipotent; the Creation of Heaven and Earth, the difference of day and night are evident ſigns of his Omnipotency, to ſuch as have judgment. Such as have, remember God, ſtanding, ſitting, or lying down, and conſidered the Creation of Heaven and Earth, have ſaid, Lord, thou haſt not created theſe things in vain; bleſſed be thy Name, deliver us from the torments of Hell fire, thou wilt render miſerable him that thou ſhalt thither precipitate, and the wicked ſhall be deprived of protection at the Day of Judgment. Lord, we have heard them that ſay, Believe in your Lord, we believe in thy unity, pardon our faults, blot out our ſins, and give us grace to die in the number of the juſt; beſtow on us what thou haſt promiſed by the Prophets, and ſuffer us not to be miſerable at the Day of Judgment; thou doſt not contradict what thou doſt promiſe. The Lord heard them, and ſaid to them, I will not ſuffer your works to be loſt, as well of Men as of Women. I will blot out the ſins of them that went out of Mecca, to ſeparate themſelves from the wicked; I will cover the offences of them that forſook their Houſes, that aſſembled to fight for the Faith, and were ſlain; I will open to them the Gate of Paradiſe, wherein flow many Rivers, to recompence their good works. There is with God great reward: envy not the Infidels, whom thou ſhalt ſee poſſeſs a little wealth in the Earth, Hell is prepared to be their habitation; and ſuch as fear God ſhall dwell eternally in Gardens, wherein run many Rivers, with all manner of content. God is a great rewarder of the juſt. Among them that know the written Law, there be, that believe in God, in what was afore time taught you, and in what was preached to them, ſurely they obey God, and forſake not his Law: They ſhall receive a great reward from God, he is exact in his account. O ye that are true believers, be patient in your adverſities, perſevere to do well, fight for the Faith, fear God, and you ſhall be happy.

CHAP. IV.

The Chapter of Women, containing one hundred and ſeventy Verſes, written at Medina.

IN the name of God, gracious and merciful. O ye People, fear your Lord that created you of one ſole perſon, and created his Wife of his Rib, of whom iſſued many Men and Women. Fear God, by whom you ſwear, and ſay, the Belly * of your Wives, God exactly obſerveth your actions. Give unto Orphans what appertaineth to them, and render not evil for good; devour not their ſubſtance, it is a very great ſin. If you fear to do injury to Orphans, fear alſo to do wrong to Women; marry thoſe that pleaſe you, two, three, or four: if you apprehend you ſhall not be able to entertain them equally, marry but one, or the ſlaves that you ſhall have acquired; this is moſt neceſſary, to the end you offend not God. Give to Women their Dowry with a good will; if they give to you any thing that is pleaſing to you, receive it with affection, and civility. Beſtow not on fools the wealth that God hath given you for ſubſiſtence; aſſiſt Orphans, give to them the Garments that ſhall be neceſſary for them, and entertain them honeſtly; inſtruct them until they have attained to years of diſcretion, and are capable of marriage; if you belive they demean themſelves wiſely, reſtore to them their faculties, and devour them not unjuſtly before they be of age. He that ſhall be rich, ſhall abſtain from their goods, and he that is poor, ſhall take with honeſty, according to the pains he ſhall undergo for them: when you make to them reſtitution of their goods, take witneſs of your action, God loveth good accounts. The Children ſhall have a good part of what their Father, and Mother and Parents left after their deceaſe, of little or of much, there appertaineth to them a portion prefixed and limited. When they divide their goods, the kindred ſhall have care of the poor and Orphans; do good to them, and honeſtly entertain them. Such as fear to leave after them a weak progeny of little Children, ought to fear to wrong Orphans, they muſt fear God, and courteouſly entertain them. Thoſe that unjuſtly devour their ſubſtance, ſwallow fire into their Bowels, and ſhall burn in a great fire. God recommendeth to you your Children, the Son ſhall have as much as two Daughters; if there be more than two Daughters, they ſhall have two thirds of the ſucceſſion of the Dead; if there be but one, ſhe ſhall have the moiry, and her kindred a ſixth part of what ſhall be left by the dead: if there be no Children, and the kindred be heirs, the Mother of the dead ſhall have a third; if there be Brethren, the Mother ſhall have a ſixth, after ſatisfaction of the Legacies contained in the Teſtament, and of debts. You underſtand not to whom it is moſt requiſite to do good, to your Children, or to your Father and Mother, give them their Portion ordained of God. The moity of what their Wives ſhall leave belongeth to you, if they have no Children; if they have, you ſhall have the fourth part of what they ſhall leave, after payment of the Legacies and debts; they ſhall have the fourth of your ſucceſſion, if you have no Children; if you have, they ſhall have the eight portion. If a Man or Woman be the heirs of each other, and have neither Father nor Mother, nor Children, and have a Brother or Siſter, each of them ſhall have a ſixth part of the ſucceſſion; if they be more, they ſhall ſhare the third, after payment of Legacies and debts, without fraud, following what God hath ordained, he knoweth all your actions, and is prudent in what he ordaineth, it is ſo ordained by his Divine Majeſty. He that ſhall obey him, and his Prophet, ſhall enter into Paradiſe, where many Rivers flow, and ſhall dwell in eternal felicity; he that ſhall diſobey God and his Prophet, ſhall be caſt headlong into the fire of Hell, where he ſhall ſuffer ignominious torments. If your Wives commit adultery, take four witneſſes of their fault, that be of your Religion; if they bear witneſs, keep them priſoners in your Houſes until death, or until God ſhall otherwiſe ordain; puniſh Whoremongers, Concubines, and Adulterers; if they repent of their fault, do them no harm, God is gracious and merciful to them that repent. Converſion dependeth on God, he is merciful to them that commit ſin ignorantly, and ſpeedily repent, he is Omniſcient, and moſt Wiſe. Pardon is not for them that do wickedly to the very hour of their death, we have prepared great torments for them that ſhall die impious. O ye that believe in God! it is not lawful for you to inherit what is your Wives by force, take not violently away what you have given them, unleſs they be ſurprized in manifeſt adultery; ſee them with civility, if you have an averſion from them, it may chance that you have a thing, wherein God hath placed much good; but if they deſire to repudiate your Wives, to take others, and that you have given them any thing, take not any thing that appertaineth to them. Will you take their wealth with a lie, and a manifeſt ſin? How ſhall you take it, ſince you have approached each other, and that you have promiſed to uſe them civilly. Marry not the Wives of your Fathers; what is paſt was inceſt, abomination, and a wicked way. Your Mothers are forbidden you, your Daughters, Siſters, Aunts, Nieces, your Nurſes, and your Foſter-ſiſters, the Mothers of your Wives, the Daughters that your Wives have had by other Husbands, of whom you ſhall have a particular care: The Daughters of Women that you ſhall have known, are alſo forbidden you; if you have not known them, it will be no ſin: the Wives of your Sons are likewiſe prohibited, and two Siſters; for what is paſt, God is gracious and merciful: Married Wives are likewiſe forbidden you, except the women Slaves, that you ſhall have acquired. God hath ſo commanded you, except what is above forbidden, it is lawful for you to marry at your Pleaſure. If you deſire women for money, and neither commit Concubinage, nor Adultery, give them their Salary for which you ſhall agree, ſo you ſhall not offend God, he is Omniſcient, and moſt Wiſe. He that ſhall not be able to eſpouſe women of Free-condition, ſhall marry ſuch women or maids, that are Slaves, as ſhall pleaſe him. God knoweth the Faith of the one, and other. Marry your Wives with the permiſſion of their Parents, and give them their Dowry with honeſty: If women of Free-condition, that have committed neither Concubinage, nor Adultery, ſecretly nor publickly, flie into ſecond Nuptials, and come to commit Adultery, they ſhall be doubly puniſhed, more than the Daughters of Love. The Marriage of Slaves is for them that fear Whoredom: If you abſtain from Marrying them, you ſhall not do amiſs. God is gracious and merciful; he is willing to teach you his Law, and direct you in the way of them that preceded you; he is gracious and merciful to his people. Such as follow the Appetite of the wicked, decline extreamly from the Truth. God willeth that his Law be Light unto you, for that man was created weak. O you that believe in God, devour not your ſubſtance among you with Uſury; but if you Traffick, be peaceable in your Affairs; ſlay not one another, God is merciful to them that obey him: He that diſobeyeth, through malice and injuſtice, ſhall burn in the fire of Hell; it is an eaſie thing to God to puniſh them. If you depart from mortal ſins, I will cover your Faults, and cauſe you to enter into Paradiſe: covet not through Envy, what God hath given to your Neighbour; men and women ſhall have the wealth they have gained; beg Grace of God, he knoweth all things. Give to your Aſſociates what appertaineth to them. We have ordained a Portion, prefixt to the one and the other, in the ſucceſſion of your Father, Mother, and Kindred, God ſeeth all. The men ſhall have Authority over the women; they ſhall have them in their keeping; they ſhall have in their power the wealth that God ſhall give them; and ſhall have care of what ſhall be convenient to be expended for them. Diſcreet and obedient Wives obſerve, in the abſence of their Husbands, the Commandments of God, make Remonſtrances to them that ſhall be diſobedient, and remove them from your Bed, chaſtiſe them. If they obey you, ſeek not occaſion to abuſe them unjuſtly. God is moſt high, and moſt mighty. If you fear there may happen ſome difference between a Man and his Wife, ſend to them ſome of their Kindred, to put an end to their Quarrel, and reconcile them. God will give this Peace to them, he is Omniſcient. Worſhip God, and ſay not that he hath a Companion equal to him; do good to your Father, and Mother; your Kindred, Orphans, the Poor, your Neighbours, Pilgrims, your Friends, and your Slaves. God loveth not the Proud. We have prepared rigorous torments for them that are avaricious, that recommend Avarice to the people, that conceal the Graces that God hath beſtowed on them, and that are impious. Such as diſpend their wealth with Hypocriſie, believe neither in God, nor the Day of Judgment; and thoſe that ſhall have the Devil for their Companion, will be in exceeding bad Company; he ſhall not approach them, if they believe in God, and the Day of Judgment, and give in Alms ſome part of the Riches God hath given them. God knoweth them, and doth no injuſtice to any one, of the weight of a ſmall Ant. If the righteous do good of the quantity of a Piſmire, God ſhall multiply it, and give them a great reward. In what condition will Infidels be at the Day of Judgment, for that we have Witneſſes of all Nations againſt their impiety; and that we will call thee for a Witneſs againſt them of their Deportments? That day, the Infidels that have diſobeyed the Prophet, ſhall deſire to be conſumed, like to the Earth; and not to have concealed or altered, through their Diſcourſe, the Commandments of God. O you that believe, make not your Prayers, being drunk, until you know what you ſpeak; neither likewiſe being polluted, unleſs in paſſing on the way, until you be cleanſed; if you be in a journey, or ſick, or go to diſcharge your Belly, or have known your Wives, and find no water to waſh you, you ſhall lay hand upon the Sand, and wipe your Face and Hands. God is gracious and merciful to his Creatures. Seeſt thou not how thoſe that know the written Law, purchaſe Errour? how they deſire to miſ-lead you through their Riches, and divert you from the right way? God knoweth your Enemies, it is enough that he is your defender and Protector. Such as Judaize, alter the word of God, and ſay to the Prophet, we have heard, and diſobeyed thee, they heard without hearing; they ſay, preſerve us, have care of us; nevertheleſs do they pervert the word of God, in reading it, and alter his Commandments, they ſhould do better to ſay, Lord we have heard, and obeyed; hearken only to us, and regard us: But God hath curſed them, and few of them will believe in his Divine Majeſty. O you that have knowledge of the Scriptures! believe in the Alcoran, that confirmeth the Old and New Teſtament, before that I deface your Viſages, and cauſe them to turn behind your Backs. I will curſe Infidels, as I have curſed them of the Sabbath; the Commandment of God is incontinently executed; he pardoneth not them that aſſociate him with Companions equal to him, except this, he forgiveth ſins to whom it pleaſeth him: He that ſaith, God hath Companions, blaſphemeth, and mortally ſinneth. Conſider not ſuch as affirm themſelves to be good Men; contrariwiſe, God maketh thoſe good Men that pleaſe him; no injuſtice ſhall befal them at the Day of Judgment. Conſider how they blaſpheme, it is ſufficient that God manifeſtly beholdeth their ſin. Seeſt thou not them that have knowledge of the written Law, that believe lieve in Habot and Tagot, Idols; that ſay to the Infidels, Behold the way of them that believe in God? Certainly, God hath curſed them; he, whom he curſeth, ſhall find none to protect him. Shall they alone have part in the Kingdom of Heaven, without giving Alms? They will envy their Neighbour, for the favours God hath conferred to him. Certainly, we gave to the poſterity of Abraham, the knowledge of the Scriptures, and Prophecies; we beſtowed on them great abundance of wealth. There were of them that believed in the Scripture, and others that contemned it; but they ſhall be puniſhed in the fire of Hell. I will cauſe them to burn, and change their burned skin into a new skin, that they may ſuffer the more. God is Omnipotent, and prudent in what he ordaineth. I will cauſe thoſe that have believed in God, and have performed good works, to enter into Gardens, wherein flow many Rivers, where they ſhall dwell eternally with moſt beautiful Women. I will give them to enter the ſhade of Paradiſe: God recommendeth to you, Fidelity among your ſelves, to render faithfully what hath been intruſted to you; and when you ſhall judge differences that ſhall happen among the people, judge with Equity. It is a good work that he commandeth you; he beholdeth, and knoweth all things. O ye that believe! obey God, and the Prophets, and ſuch as command over you; if you be in Controverſie concerning any point, refer it to God, and his Prophet, to underſtand the Expoſition; if you believe in God, and the Day of Judgment, you ſhall do well: this will be the beſt Interpretation that you can attain to. Seeſt thou not, that they who think to believe in what hath been inſpired into thee, and what hath been inſpired into thy Predeceſſors, incline to diſpute before Tagot? Nevertheleſs, they have commanded not to believe in that Idol; the Devil laboureth to ſeduce, and withdraw them from the Truth. When it was ſaid to them, Obey the Commandment of God, and his Prophet, they departed from thee: What will they do, when there ſhall happen to them any puniſhment of their paſt ſins? They will return to thee, and ſwear by the name of God, That they deſire Peace, and to do good Works; but God knoweth what is in their hearts, and hath abandoned them. Ceaſe not to preach to them, and to declare to them the Word of God; the Prophets, and Apoſtles were not ſent, but to preach, and to be heard through the permiſſion of his Divine goodneſs. If, when they have hurt their Souls, they come to thee, and demand pardon of God, thou ſhalt beg pardon for them, they ſhall find God gracious and merciful: They will not believe in his Divine Majeſty, until they have diſputed the difference with thee, that is among them; and when they ſhall no more doubt of what thou ſhalt have done, they will without contradiction obey thee. We have ordained them to kill each other, and to forſake their Houſes; they have not done it, except very few of them: and although they did it, they did it not to obey what ſhould have been to them a great benefit, and exceeding merit; we had given them very great reward, and guided them to the right way. He that ſhall obey God, and his Prophet, ſhall be with them whom God hath endued with his Grace: He that knoweth it, reſigneth himſelf to his Divine Majeſty. O you that are true Believers! be upon your Guard, aſſembled to fight ſtoutly for the Law of God. There be among you that be Cowardly, when any diſcomfiture hath befaln you; they have ſaid, God protected me, that I was not with them: And when God gave you Victory, they ſpake as if there had been no underſtanding between them and you. Would to God I had been with them, I ſhould have acquired exceeding great merit. Fight for the glory of God, againſt them that prefer the life of this World, to that of Heaven. I will give an exceeding great reward to ſuch as ſhall fight, that ſhall be Victorious, and to them that ſhall be ſlain, fighting for the Faith. Wherefore fight you not for the Law of God? for the liberty of Women and Children, weak and afflicted, that cry, Lord deliver us out of this place; the people thereof are unjuſt, give us a Protector, give us an aſſured refuge. They that believe in God fight for his Law, and Infidels fight for the Devil. Fight againſt them that ſerve the Devil, his Policies are weak. Conſider thoſe to whom it was ſaid, Ceaſe to imbrue your hands in the Blood of Infidels, perſevere in your Prayers, and pay Tithes. When they were commanded to fight, part of them were afraid of the multitude, as of God, yea, more afraid of the multitude than of God, and ſaid, Lord thou haſt not enjoyned us to fight, unleſs thou haſt differed us to a near end. Say to them, The wealth of the Earth is but a ſmall thing, there be great Riches in the other World, for him that ſhall have the fear of God before his eyes. No injuſtice ſhall be done to you; whereſoever you are, death will meet you, notwithſtanding you may be in ſtrong Citadels. If good happen to the Infidels, they ſay it proceedeth from God; if evil befal them, they ſay, that cometh from thee. Say to them, All proceedeth from God, what then is the Will of thoſe Men? they cannot comprehend this Diſcourſe: The good that happeneth to you, cometh from God, and the evil that befalleth you, is of your ſelves. We have ſent thee to the people, to teach them the Myſteries of my Law; it is ſufficient that I am witneſs. He that obeyeth the Prophet, the Apoſtle of God, obeyeth God; if they be diſobedient, thou art not ſent to be their Tutor. They ſay, They will obey thee, and when they are gone from thee, many of them ponder in their heart other things than they have ſpoken, but God ſhall write their thoughts, and abandon them. Reſign thy ſelf to God, and be content that he is thy Protector. Will they not meditate on the Alcoran? Were it ſent from any but from God, there would be therein many Contradictions. When they had any aſſurance of Victory, or feared to be overcome, they publiſhed it, although they had referred all to the Prophet, to the moſt knowing among them, and to them that obeyed the Prophet, who knew what ought to be publiſhed, and what to be kept ſecret. If the grace of God had not been with you, and his mercy, you had followed the Devil. Fight for the Law of God, employ but thy Perſon, and be not troubled, if the true Believers be without Arms, the miſery of the wicked ſhall never end, God ſhall augment their Calamity, and encreaſe the puniſhment of their Crimes; he that doth well, ſhall find well, and who doth evil, ſhall find evil, God regardeth all. When you are ſaluted, return the ſalute with Honour and Affection, God putteth all in Account. God! there is but one only only God, he ſhall aſſemble you all at the Day of Judgment, of that there is no doubt. Who is more true in his words than God? What have you to do with thoſe Ones, divided into two Troops? God ruined and deſtroyed them, becauſe of their ſins; will you direct into the right way him, whom God hath made to err? He, whom he ſhall cauſe to err, ſhall not find the right way. They deſire that you may be Infidels, as they are, obey them not, unleſs they ſhall return to the Law of God; if they forſake it, kill them where you find them, contract no friendſhip with them, except with ſuch as ſhall come to enter league with you, with ſorrow for what is paſt; to fight againſt Infidels with you. Had it pleaſed God, he had given them advantage over you, and they had beaten you, if they depart from you, and follow your Religion, God permitteth not you to do them injury. You ſhall find ſome that ſhall incline to believe you, and their companions, they will turn all to confuſion, and fall into it themſelves: if they ſeparate themſelves from you, if they deſire not peace of you, and deſiſt not to do you miſchief, take and kill them, where you find them, we have given you abſolute power over them. One true believer ought not to ſlay another true believer, unleſs it be through ignorance; He that ſhall ſlay a true believer through ignorance, ſhall redeem from ſlavery a true believer, or ſhall pay damages and intereſts to the Kindred and Heirs of the Dead, if they through courteſie diſcharge him not of them: If he be of your enemies, and a true believer, he ſhall ranſom from captivity a true believer; If he be of your confederates, he ſhall pay damages and intereſts to the Kindred and Heirs of the Dead, and redeem from Captivity a true believer; If he ſhall be deſtitute of means to perform this, he ſhall faſt two Months together for a penance appointed of God; God knoweth all things, and is prudent in what he commandeth. He that ſhall kill a true believer of deliberate purpoſe, ſhall be chaſtiſed in the fire of Hell, the wrath of God, and his curſe ſhall be upon him eternally. O ye! who are true believers, when you fight againſt Infidels for the Law of God, cauſe your ſelves to be known; and ſay not to them that ſalute you, Thou art not a true believer; If you deſire the good things of the World, God poſſeſſeth riches innumerable, you were before like to them, but God hath given you grace, and ſeeth all your actions. The faithful that continue in their Houſes without ſickneſs, are not equal in merits to ſuch as imploy their perſons and faculties for the Law of God; he preferreth by many degrees, them that fight for his Law, and employ their wealth and perſons for his ſervice; to thoſe that remain idle in their Houſes, he is their protector, and hath prepared for them a ſure refuge in Paradiſe: he gratifieth by many degrees of favour, them that fight for his Law, above thoſe that live at eaſe in their Houſes, he is gracious and merciful. The Angel ſaid to the Infidels that they put to death, Where were you with your Religion? they anſwered, We were weak and impotent in the City of Mecca; they ſaid, Was not the Earth large enough for you to depart from the wicked? Hell ſhall be their habitation, except the Women and Children that were weak and impotent; peradventure God will pardon them, he is gracious and merciful; he that ſhall depart from the wicked, to follow his Law, ſhall find many places favourable to him, aſſuredly he will recompenſe him that ſhall quit his Houſe, that ſhall be ſlain for his glory, and to follow his Prophet, he is gracious and merciful. When you ſhall be in a journey, you ſhall not offend God to abridge your prayers, that the Infidels may not ſurprize you, they are your declared Enemies; when thou ſhalt be near them, and ſhalt appoint the true believers to make their prayers, keep about thee a party of them for a guard, while the reſidue make their prayers; having finiſhed their Oriſons, they ſhall do as the firſt, take Arms and keep a guard, during the time their Companions ſhall make their prayers: the Infidels deſire that you quit your Arms to ſurprize you; you ſhall not do amiſs to quit them, if Rain trouble you, or you be ſick, but continue always upon your guard, God hath prepared for Infidels ignominious torments: Having finiſhed your prayers, Remember God, ſtanding, ſitting or lying down, and pray when you ſhall be in a place of ſafety; prayer is commanded the faithful in a prefixed and appointed time. Be not negligent to purſue the Infidels, if you ſuffer, they ſhall ſuffer like you; but you hope for that which they muſt not hope for: God knoweth all their actions, he is moſt prudent in all his works. We have ſent to thee the moſt true Book, to the end, thou mayſt judge the differences that are among the People, as thy Lord hath inſtructed thee. Contend not with Traitors, and ask pardon of God, he is gracious and merciful. Diſpute not with thoſe that betray their Souls, God loveth not treacherous ſinners, they conceal themſelves from the World, he is with them when they hide in their hearts ſuch things as are diſpleaſing to him, he knoweth all their actions: O ye! you diſpute for them in this World, who ſhall diſpute for them againſt God at the day of Judgment? Who ſhall that day be their protector? He that ſhall implore pardon of God, having offended him, ſhall find him gracious and merciful; who doth evil, ſhall find evil, God is Omniſcient; and moſt Wiſe. He that committeth a venial, or a mortal ſin, and would excuſe himſelf, committeth evidently a mortal ſin. Many of them had endeavoured to ſeduce thee, had'ſt thou not been directed by the grace and mercy of God. But they ſeduce only their own Souls, and ſhall do thee no harm; God hath ſent to thee the Book that containeth his Commandments; he hath taught thee what thou didſt not underſtand, and his grace is eminently upon thee: there is no good in the multiplicity of their ſecrets or diſcourſe, except in ſuch as command alms, honeſty, and peace among the people, with deſire to pleaſe God, they ſhall receive from his Divine Majeſty a great reward. He that ſhall contradict the Prophet, having had knowledge of the right way, and ſhall follow other paths than that of the true believers, ſhall relapſe into his impiety, I will cauſe him to burn in the fire of Hell, where is the habitation of the wicked. God pardoneth not them that ſay, He hath Companions, except this, he pardons all things as he ſeeth good: he that affirmeth that God hath a Companion, greatly erreth, and is eſtranged from the truth. If they invoke other than God, they invoke Idols, the Devil, obſtinate, and curſed of God; when he ſaid to him, Thou wilt not give me power over them that worſhip thee, but I will ſeduce them from the right way, I will prolong their wicked life, to retard their converſion; I will cauſe them to cut off the * ears of Beaſts, they ſhall diſobey thy commandments, and they ſhall envy thy creatures. He that demandeth ſuccours of the Devil, is in manifeſt perdition, he will promiſe to Men long Life, and retard their repentance, but he promiſeth them but a vain glory; Hell is the dwelling place of ſuch Men, out of which they ſhall find no iſſue; Such as ſhall believe in God, and do good works, ſhall dwell eternally in Paradiſe, where flow many Rivers. God is moſt true in what he promiſeth, who is more than God in his words? Your lies, and the lies of them that know the written Law, do him no harm; he that ſhall do ill, ſhall be puniſhed, and ſhall find no protector; he that ſhall do well, and ſhall believe in the Law of God, ſhall enter into Paradiſe, and ſhall have no injuſtice done to him; what better Law is there, than to reſign thy ſelf to God, and to be an honeſt Man? Follow the Law of Abraham; God choſe Abraham to love him; whatſoever is in Heaven and in Earth, belongeth to his Divine Majeſty, he knoweth all things. They will queſtion thee concerning Women; ſay to them, God teacheth you in that, what you were taught in the Scripture touching Orphans, and Women; give to them what is appointed by the Law, and deſire not to eſpouſe them, only to poſſeſs their wealth; God teacheth you likewiſe to give to Orphans what appertaineth to them, and to injure them; he will underſtand your good actions. If a Woman fear to be ill entreated by her Husband, and that he will divorce her, they ſhall do well, mutually to accord, for peace is exceeding good. If you be too obſtinate, and cannot agree together; if you do good to your Wives in divorcing them, and fear to wrong them, God will take notice of your actions. If you believe you cannot keep equality, and juſtice among your Wives, although you apply your ſelves to it; incline not altogether to your own appetites, and leave not your Wife, as a thing left in toleration. If you live in a good accord, and fear to injure them, God will be merciful to you. If they ſeparate themſelves conformably to the precepts of the Law, God will enrich them with his protection, he is bountiful and wiſe, and whatever is in Heaven, and Earth obeyeth him. We have recommended to you the fear of God, as we have heretofore, to them that had knowledge of the written Law. If you be impious, know, that whatever is in Heaven and Earth is Gods; he hath no need of his Creatures, and muſt be exalted, it ſufficeth thee, he is thy Protector. If he will, he can cauſe you to periſh, and put other Creatures in your place, for he is Omnipotent. He that loveth the good things of the Earth, ſhall find in God all the wealth of this World, and of the other, he underſtandeth and ſeeth all things. O you that believe! be true in your Teſtimonies, notwithſtanding it be againſt your ſelves, againſt your Father and Mother, and againſt your Kindred, and conſider the rich no more than the poor, God is the Protector of the one, and the other; follow not your Appetites, to favour the rich more than the poor, pervert not the Truth, be not ſcrupulous to teſtifie what you know, God knoweth all your Actions. O ye that believe in God! and his Prophet, and the Book that was ſent before him; know, he that blaſphemeth againſt his Divine Majeſty, againſt his Angels, the Scripture, the Prophets, and life eternal, greatly erreth, and departeth from the Truth. God pardoneth not them that have embraced his Law, and then have forſaken it, having believed in his Divine Majeſty, and are returned again to their impiety; declare to ſuch men, they ſhall feel heavy torments. Such as obey Infidels, to be great in this World, extreamly delude themſelves; greatneſs proceedeth from God; It is written in the Book that was ſent to you, that the Infidels ſhall mock you, when they ſhall hear the word of God, and you ſhall obey his Commandments; Tarry not in their Company, if they change not their Diſcourſe, otherwiſe you will be like to them. God will aſſemble into the fire of Hell all Infidels, and wicked Perſons. Some of them that obſerve your Actions, ſaid, they were of your party, when any Felicity hapned to you; and when the Infidels had advantage over you, they ſaid, they were with them, and that they fought againſt you; God at the Day of Judgment ſhall judge the difference that is between you, and will not give advantage to Infidels over them that obſerve his Law. The wicked think to deceive God, but God deceiveth them, they are negligent to make their prayers, they are hypocrites before the World, and remember not his Divine Majeſty, except very few of them, uncertain whether they ſhould follow the faithful, or the Infidels; he whom God ſhall cauſe to go aſtray, ſhall not find the right way. O ye that believe! obey not Infidels, to the excluſion of true believers; will you give God manifeſt occaſion to chaſtiſe you for your ſins? The wicked ſhall be in the loweſt place of Hell, and ſhall find no relief, except ſuch as ſhall repent, that ſhall do good works, reſign themſelves to God, and obey his Commandments, they ſhall be with the true believers, and receive from God a very great reward. He will not ſend you miſery, if you give him thanks for his favours, and obey him; he accepteth the acknowledgment of his benefits, and knoweth all things. He willeth not that what evil is committed, be publiſhed; he that publiſheth the evil he doth, is very much to blame; if you manifeſt the good you do, or if you conceal it, and abſtain from doing evil, he will be merciful to you, he is Omnipotent. Such as blaſpheme againſt God and his Prophets, his Apoſtles; ſuch as would make a diſtinction between the Commandments of his Divine Majeſty, and the precepts of his Prophets, ſuch as affirm they believe in ſome of the Prophets, and believe not in all, and take a middle way between faith and impiety, are indeed impious, we have prepared for them ignominious torments; but they who believe in God, and generally in all his Prophets, and Apoſtles, ſhall be recompenſed of God, gracious and merciful. They that know the written Law, will require thee to cauſe to deſcend from Heaven a Book, and written Tables; They demanded of Moſes greater things, and ſaid, Cauſe us to behold God with our eyes, then thunder ſurprized them by reaſon of their impiety: They adored the Calf, after having had the knowledge of our Commandments; nevertheleſs, we pardoned them, and gave to Moſes an abſolute dominion over them. We raiſed the Mountain over them, following lowing our promiſes, and ſaid to them; Enter the Gate of the Temple with adoration and humility, and no longer tranſgreſs the obſervation of the day of Reſt; We for this matter received from them a ſtrong promiſe, but they ſwerved from what they had promiſed, and we curſed them, becauſe of their impiety, by reaſon of the Murther they committed without reaſon, on the perſons of the Prophets, and of the words they uttered, viz. Our heart is hardned; Contrariwiſe, God imprinted infidelity in their hearts, they ſhall never believe in his Law, except very few of them, becauſe of their malice, and the blaſphemies they vomited againſt Mary: they ſaid, We have ſlain the Meſſiah, Jeſus, the Son of Mary, the Prophet and Apoſtle of God: Certainly they ſlew him not, neither crucified him, they crucified one among them that reſembled him; ſuch as doubt it are in a manifeſt error, and ſpeak not but through opinion. Certainly they ſlew him not; on the contrary, God took him up to himſelf, he is Omnipotent and prudent in all his actions: Such as have the knowledge of Scripture, ought to believe in Jeſus before his death; he ſhall be a witneſs againſt them of their actions at the Day of Judgment; We have prohibited them that Judaize, by reaſon of their ſin, things that were permitted them; We have prepared for them great torment, becauſe they miſ-lead the World from the right way, becauſe they take Uſe that is forbidden them, and unjuſtly eat the ſubſtance of their neighbour. Such of them as are profound in Learning, and all the faithful, believe in the Scriptures, both ancient, and modern; I will give great rewards to them that ſhall make their prayers at the time appointed, that ſhall pay Tyths, and believe in the Day of Judgment. We have ſent thee our inſpirations, as we ſent them to Noah, and the Prophets after him; as we heretofore ſent them to Abraham, Iſmael, Iſaac, Jacob, the Tribes, to Jeſus, Job, Jonas, Aaron, and to Solomon, and gave the Pſalter to David. We have told thee who were the Prophets that preceded thee; but we have not ſpoken to thee, concerning the merits of all of them. Moſes ſpake to God, as his Prophet, and Apoſtle; all declared his mercy, and preached the torments of Hell, to the end Men might have no cauſe of excuſe; God is Omnipotent and prudent in all his actions: He ſhall be witneſs that the Alcoran was ſent to thee with his Commandments, the Angels likewiſe ſhall teſtifie it; but it ought to ſuffice thee, that God is witneſs. The Infidels that hinder the People to follow the Law of God, were exceedingly erroneous; God will not pardon them, he will lead them into the path of Hell, where they ſhall remain eternally, it is a thing eaſie to his Divine Majeſty. O People! A Prophet is come to you, who preacheth to you the Truth from the Lord, believe him, you ſhall do well; if you believe him not, know, that whatever is in Earth, and in Heaven is Gods, and that God knoweth whatſoever you do. O ye that underſtand the written Law! Obey the Commandments of God, and ſpeak not of his Divine Majeſty but with truth; the Meſſiah, Jeſus, the Son of Mary, is a Prophet, and an Apoſtle of God, his Word, and his Spirit, which he ſent to Mary, believe therefore in God, and in his Prophets, and ſay not there be three Gods, put an end to that diſcourſe, you ſhall do well; For there is but one God, praiſed be God, he hath no Son; whatever is in Heaven, and in Earth obeyeth him, it is ſufficient that he is witneſs. The Meſſiah eſteemeth it no diſhonour to be the ſervant of God, neither the Angel, nor the Cherubins; He that holdeth it a diſhonour to be at his ſervice, is too proud; he ſhall aſſemble all the World at the Day of Judgment, and every one ſhall receive the recompence that he ſhall have merited, he ſhall augment his favours upon them that ſhall have believed in his Divine Majeſty, and have done good works; he ſhall chaſtiſe them that ſhall have held it a diſhonour to be his ſervants, and have been proud upon the Earth, they ſhall find no ſafe refuge but in his mercy. O People! God hath ſent you a Protector, a moſt ſtrong argument, and a moſt clear light; they that ſhall truſt in God, ſhall enjoy his grace; and he ſhall guide them into the right way. They will enquire of thee concerning ſucceſſions; ſay to them, God teacheth you touching ſucceſſions, as followeth: if a Man deceaſe without iſſue, and hath a Siſter, ſhe ſhall have the moity of what he ſhall leave, and ſhall inherit it, if ſhe have no Children: If they be two Siſters, they ſhall have two thirds of what the deceaſed left; if they be many Brothers, and many Siſters, the Son ſhall have as much as two Daughters; God teacheth you his Commandments, depart not from the right way, he is Omniſcient.

CHAP. V.

The Chapter of the Table, containing an hundred and twenty Verſes, written at Medina.

IN the name of God, gracious and merciful. O ye that believe in God! Satisfie what you have promiſed; it is permitted you to eat of the Beaſts that be in the World, except of what ſhall be hereafter declared. Hunting is forbidden you, during the time that you ſhall go on Pilgrimage to Mecca. God ordaineth what he will. O ye that believe! ſay not, That it is permitted to do what God hath prohibited, perform what is commanded you, during the Month of Pilgrimage; give no impediment to ſuch as carry preſents to Mecca, neither to them that aſſume * Collers, neither hinder Pilgrims to repair thither, to demand the Grace of God, and his mercies. It is lawful for you to hunt, when you ſhall have finiſhed your Pilgrimage; beware leſt ſome perſons cauſe you to ſin, and hinder your going to Mecca; to oblige you to puniſh them, repoſe your confidence in the juſtice and fear of God, and not in the ſin and malice of your neighbour. Fear God who is ſevere in his chaſtiſements. It is forbidden you to eat Carrion, Blood, Swines Fleſh, and whatſoever is not killed in pronouncing the name of God: you are prohibited to eat Animales ſtrangled, choakt, knockt down, precipitated, that are ſlain ſtriking each other, and ſuch as beaſts ſhall have ſlain; if you find them not alive, to let out their Blood, in pronouncing the name of God. You ſhall not eat of Beaſts ſacrificed to Idols: Conſult not with Southſayers or Lots, it is a great ſin. The day ſhall come when they that have abandoned your Law, ſhall be deſperate; fear not them, and fear me: The day will come, when I ſhall accompliſh your Law, and my Grace ſhall be abundantly upon you: The Law of Salvation, is the Law that I deſire to give you. If any one be in neceſſity, and eateth of what is prohibited, without a will to ſin, God ſhall be to him gracious and merciful. They will demand of thee, what is permitted them to eat? Say to them it is lawful to eat all ſorts of Beaſts that are not unclean, and whatever hath been taught you from God, touching Beaſts that have been wounded by Lions or Dogs, eat the Beaſt you ſhall take, and remember God in blooding them; fear God, he is exact to take account. This day it is lawful that you eat what is not unclean, and the meats of them that know the written Law, their meats are lawful for you, and yours for them. You are permitted to eſpouſe Maidens and Women of free Condition, that are of your Religion, and Maidens and Women of free Condition, that know the written Law, giving them their Dowry with civility; commit neither Concubinage, nor Adultery with them, neither ſecretly or publickly; the good works of him that ſhall renounce your Law, ſhall be unprofitable, he ſhall be at the Day of Judgment in the number of the Damned. O ye that believe in God, when you would make your Prayers, waſh your Faces, your Hands to the Elbow, and paſs your hand over your head, and over your feet to the ancles. If you be polluted, purifie your ſelves; if ſick, or in a journey, or about to diſcharge your Belly, or have known Women, and find no water to waſh you, lay hand on the Sand, paſs it over your Viſage, and wipe therewith your hands. God enjoyneth you nothing irkſome, but willeth you be clean, and deſireth to accompliſh his Grace upon you; peradventure you will give him thanks. O ye that believe in God! call to mind his Grace, and promiſe he made to you, when you ſaid, We heard, and obeyed: fear him, he knoweth all that is in your hearts. O ye that believe in God! obey his Commandments, and be true in your Teſtimonies, take heed that no man move you to offend God, in diverting you from what is juſt; render juſtice to all, his fear inviteth you to it; have it before your eyes, he knoweth all your Actions; hath promiſed his grace, and great recompences to the true Believers, that ſhall do good works in this World, and hath prepared Hell to puniſh Infidels. O ye that believe in God! remember his favour towards you, when ſome Perſons would have extended their hands upon you, and how he delivered you from their Malice; Fear him, all true Believers ought to reſign themſelves to his Will. God received the Promiſe of the Children of Iſrael to obſerve his Commandments, he eſtabliſhed among them twelve Captains, and ſaid to them, I will be with you when you ſhall make your Prayers, pay your Tithes, believe in the Prophets, defend them, and ſhall lend to me any Alms; I will cover your ſins, and cauſe you to enter Paradiſe, wherein flow many Rivers; and he among you that ſhall be an Infidel, ſhall be entirely erroneous from the right path. When they ſwerved from what they had promiſed, we gave them our Curſe, and hardned their heart; they have altered the words of the Scripture, and abjured what they had approved. Thou ſhalt not know them that ſhall be Traytors, except very few of them; forgive and depart from them, God loveth them that do good. We likewiſe received the Promiſe of thoſe who call themſelves Chriſtians, but they have forgotten what they promiſed; they have altered what was taught them, and we have caſt among them Enmity and hatred, even until the Day of Judgment. That day God ſhall cauſe them to know whatever they have done for their puniſhment. O ye that know the written Law! our * Prophet is come to bring to light many things of the Scripture, which you conceal, and he likewiſe leaveth in ſilence many things, that it is not time to make manifeſt. God hath ſent you a Book full of light, to conduct into the way of Salvation them that love him, to bring them out of darkneſs, and by his ſpecial Grace, to lead them into the way of Salvation. Certainly he that ſaith, that the Meſſiah the Son of Mary, is God, is impious: Say to him, who can hinder God to exterminate the Meſſiah, and his Mother, with whatſoever is in the Earth, when it ſhall ſeem good to him? God is King of Heaven and Earth, he created with them what ſeemed good to him, he is Omnipotent. The Jews and Chriſtians have ſaid, we are the Children of God, his well beloved; Say to them, ſhall not God chaſtiſe you for your ſins? Certainly ye are men; He that created you, pardoneth, and puniſheth as it pleaſeth him, he is the King of all that is in Heaven or Earth, and of whatever is between them, he is the refuge of the righteous. O ye that have knowledge in the written Law! The Prophet, the Apoſtle of God is come to inſtruct you in a time that there is none other Prophet but he on the Earth; Will you ſay that no man preached to you the torments of Hell? Certainly the word of God is this day preached to you, the torment of Hell, and the Omnipotency of his Divine Majeſty. Remember thou what Moſes ſaid to his people, O people, call to mind the grace of God towards you, he hath choſen from among you Prophets, and Kings, hath conferred on you what he hath given to none in the World: Enter into the Holy Land, as God hath commanded, turn not your Backs to your Enemies, leſt you be in the number of Reprobates: They anſwered, O Moſes! there are Gyants and Tyrants in the Holy Land, we will not enter into it, until they be gone out of it, if they forſake it, we will enter into it. Then two men of them that were in the grace of God ſaid to them, enter at the Gate, and fight againſt them, you ſhall be Victorious, truſt in God, if you believe in his Law: They ſaid, O Moſes! we will not enter, ſo long as thoſe Tyrants dwell therein, go and fight againſt them with thy Lord, we will here attend. Then, ſaid Moſes, Lord, I diſpoſe but of mine own, and my Brothers perſon; ſeparate us from this wicked people; the Lord ſaid to him, the entrance into the Holy Land is prohibited to this people, they ſhall wander forty years upon the Earth, in confuſion and amazement, afflict not thy ſelf with the Deportments of the wicked; teach them the Hiſtory of the Sons of Adam, how they offered Sacrifices, how the Sacrifice of the one was accepted, that of the other was not: he through envy menaced his Brother, to murther him; his Brother ſaid to him, God receiveth the Sacrifices, and Holocauſts of ſuch as have his fear before their eyes: aſſuredly if thou extendeſt thine hand to ſlay me, I will not ſtretch forth mine to hurt thee; I fear the Lord of the Univerſe; If thou chargeſt thy ſelf with the murther of my Perſon, with thy paſt ſins, thou ſhalt go to Hell, where the unjuſt ſhall be puniſhed: The murther of his Brother ſeemed eaſie and advantagious for him, he ſlew him, and is in the number of the Damned. God ſent a Raven that made a Pit in the Earth, and ſhewed him the manner to bury the Body of his Brother: Then ſaid he, would to God I had been weak and impotent, that I were like to this Raven? I muſt bury the Body of my Brother, and he was penitent for his offence; by reaſon of this murtner, we ordained to the Children of Iſrael, that he who ſhall ſlay a Perſon innocent, ſhall be puniſhed, as if he had ſlain the whole World, and he that ſhall give him his Life, ſhall be recompenſed, as if he had given Life to the whole World. My Prophets came to the Children of Iſrael, taught them my Commandments, and cauſed them to ſee Miracles, nevertheleſs many of them were diſobedient: the puniſhment of them that oppoſe the Will of God, that of his Prophet, and that endeavour to pollute the Earth, is to be ſlain, hanged, to have the right foot, and the left hand, or right hand, and the left foot cut off, and to be extirpated from the Earth; they ſhall have in this World ſhame on the Forehead, and ſhall feel in the other, great torments, except ſuch as ſhall be converted before their death, and ſhall know, that God is gracious and merciful. O ye that believe! fear God, fight for his Law, you perhaps ſhall be happy. All the Treaſures of the World ſhall not be able to redeem Infidels at the Day of Judgment, they ſhall endure exceeding great torments, they ſhall deſire to go out of the fire of Hell, but ſhall dwell there eternally. Cut off the hands of thoſe Men and Women that ſteal, they contract upon themſelves the wrath of the World, and the puniſhment that God hath prepared for the wicked: He that ſhall turn, and do good works, ſhall be pardoned, God is gracious and merciful to the penitent. Knoweſt thou not that the Kingdom of Heaven, and of Earth is Gods? that he chaſtiſeth and pardoneth whom it pleaſeth him? and that he is Omnipotent? O Prophet! afflict not thy ſelf, to behold them running to impiety, that ſay with the mouth, we believe, and have no Faith in their hearts; neither for them that Judaize, and hearken to the lies of their Doctors, to relate them to others; they pervert the Language of the Old Teſtament, and ſay; If you be inſtructed in thoſe Precepts, you ought to obſerve them, if they inſtruct you not in them, take heed to your ſelves. Such as make uſe of the name of God, to move the people to ſedition, are without Faith, God will not purifie their hearts, they ſhall have in this World ſhame upon the Forehead, and feel in the other extream torments. They liſten to blaſphemies, and eat what is prohibited; If they repair to thee, and ſubmit themſelves to thy Judgment, judge their Controverſie with Equity, converſe not with them; if thou depart from their Company, they ſhall not hurt thee, if thou giveſt judgment between them, judge with Equity, God loveth the Juſt: How ſhall they ſubmit to thy judgment, ſeeing they have the Old Teſtament, which containeth the Commandments of God? They will not execute thy Judgment, neither believe in the Old Teſtament, wherein is the guide of the right way, and a light to the Prophets, to judge the differences ariſing among true Believers, among Jews; their Doctors, and their Prieſts, who ſtudy the Scripture, and are Witneſſes that it containeth the truth, fear not the World, but dread me; ſell not, neither exchange my Commandments for any price. Such as judge not conformably to the Law of God, are Infidels; We have ordained the Talio, man for man, an eye for an eye, a noſe for a noſe, an ear for an ear, a tooth for a tooth, a wound for a wound; he that ſhall obſerve it, ſhall do well, and ſuch as ſhall not judge conformably to the Law of God are unjuſt. We ſent after many Prophets, Jeſus the Son of Mary, who confirmed the ancient Scriptures, to him we gave the Goſpel, full of light, to conduct the people to the right way, with a confirmation of the Old Teſtament, a guide and inſtruction for the righteous. They that follow the Goſpel, ought to judge as it is commanded in the Goſpel; ſuch as judge not conformably to what God hath taught them, are diſobedient to his Divine Majeſty. To thee have we ſent the Book that containeth the truth, and confirmeth the ancient Scriptures, determine the differences that ſhall ariſe among the people, as I have inſpired thee, and follow not the Appetite of men that will abjure the truth which I have taught thee. We have inſtructed all of you in a Law, and aſſured means to lead you into the way of Salvation; you ſhould all have been of one and the ſame Religion, had it ſo pleaſed God; he hath done this to prove you; Do good, and know, that you all ſhall be aſſembled before him, and he ſhall reſolve the doubts that are among you. If thou judgeſt the differences that are among them, judge conformably to what hath been inſpired into thee, and follow not their Appetites; be careful they ſeduce thee not, and move thee to doubt many things that God hath taught thee; if they diſobey his Commandments, know, he will ſeverely puniſh them, becauſe of the Enormity of their Crimes. The greateſt part of the World are impious; Do they affect the Judgment of the Ignorant? What better Judge for the good, is there than God? O ye that believe! obey not the Jews, nor the Chriſtians, they mutually obey each other in their impiety, he that ſhall obey them, ſhall be like unto them, God guideth not the unjuſt. Thou ſeeſt ſuch as are unſtable in their Faith, flock to them, and ſay, they fear a change of times, but God ſhall give advantage and Victory to his Prophet, and they ſhall repent to have concealed in their minds the Miracles of his Divine Majeſty. What will they alledge for excuſe, who ſwore by the name of God, exactly to obſerve their Religion, and to be with you? Their good works ſhall be unprofitable, and they in the number of the Damned. O ye that believe! if you abandon your Faith, God will put others in your place, that ſhall love him, and he them, and this to your great ignominy, and the advantage of converted Infidels, that ſhall fight without fear, for his Law: Thus God beſtoweth his grace, as he ſeeth good, he is liberal, and Omniſcient. You ought certainly to obey God, and his Prophet, his Apoſtle; they who believe in God, that make their Prayers at the time appointed, pay Tithes, and are in the Protection of God and his Prophet, ſhall be beloved of his Divine Majeſty, and be Victorious. O ye true Believers! obey not ſuch as ſcoff at your Religion, who have knowledge of the written Law; obey not Infidels, and if you are good men, fear God; obey not them that deride your Prayers, it is the action of thoſe that are unwiſe. O ye that underſtand the written Law! will you not abhor me, if I believe not in God, in what he hath inſpired into me, and into them that preceded me? The greateſt part of you are wicked. Say to them, did I inſtruct you to do evil, when I preached to you the effect of Gods mercy? Thoſe whom he curſeth, againſt whom he is incenſed, whom he hath Metamorphoſed into Apes, and Swine, and who have adored Idols, ſhall be confined in the fire of Hell, they are in a very evil way. When they come to thee, they will ſay, they believe in the Law of God, they will enter thine Houſe with impiety, and go forth in the like manner; but God knoweth what they conceal in their heart: Thou ſhalt ſee many of them embrace Paganiſm, follow a lye, eat what is forbidden, and this to diſpleaſe their Doctors, and Prieſts, who have forbidden them to ſpeak lies, and eat meats that are unclean. The Jews ſaid, The hand of God is ſhut, contrariwiſe, it is their hand that is ſhut, and they ſhall be accurſed by reaſon of their diſcourſe: certainly the hands of God are open, and he doth good to whom he pleaſeth: Many amongſt them, through impiety, and diſobedience, alter what is in the Scripture; but we have caſt among them hatred, and horror, even to the Day of Judgment; God hath extinguiſhed the fire which they had kindled, to make War againſt the righteous; they endeavour to pollute the Earth, but God deteſteth ſuch as as cauſe diſorder; he remitteth their ſins that know the Scripture, believe in his Law, and flie impiety, they ſhall enter Paradiſe, that is full of delights. They have read the Old Teſtament, the Goſpel, and all Scriptures, they enjoy abundance of all good things; nevertheleſs many have diſobeyed the Commandments of God. O Prophet! preach what God hath taught thee; whether thou doſt preach it, or doeſt not, he will defend thee from the malice of men, he abhorreth Infidels. O ye that know the written Law! if you obſerve not the Old Teſtament, the Goſpel, and Scriptures which God hath ſent you, you ſhall be without merit. Many of them through impiety and ignorance, pervert what is contained in the Scripture; afflict not thy ſelf with the actions of the impious. The Jews, Samaritans, Chriſtians, all that ſhall have believed in God, the Reſurrection of the Dead, and have done good works, ſhall be exempt from affliction, there is nothing for them to fear at the day of Judgment. We received of the Children of Iſrael a promiſe, to believe in our Prophets, and Apoſtles; Yet have they ſlandred many, and ſlain ſuch as would not follow their appetites: they believed there was no puniſhment for their crimes, and became deaf, and blind; After this, God pardoned them, nevertheleſs, they returned in their ſin, and are again become deaf, and blind; God beholdeth all their deportments. Certainly, they who affirm the Meſſiah, the Son of Mary, to be God, are impious; the Meſſiah commanded the Children of Iſrael to worſhip God, his and their Lord; the entrance into Paradiſe is forbidden to him that ſhall ſay, God hath a Companion equal to him, Hell ſhall be his habitation, and the unjuſt ſhall find none to protect them at the Day of Judgment. Such as affirm there are three Gods, are impious: there is but one God; if they deſiſt not from ſuch diſcourſe, they ſhall burn in the fire of Hell; if they turn, and implore pardon of God, he will be to them gracious and merciful. The Meſſiah, the Son of Mary, is a Prophet, and Apoſtle of God, like to the Prophets that came before him; his Mother is holy, and both of them did eat and drink. Conſider how I manifeſt my unity to Infidels; how they blaſpheme, and depart from the Truth; ſay to them, Will you worſhip inſtead of God, what can neither benefit, nor hurt you? God underſtandeth and knoweth all things. O ye that have knowledge of the written Law! ſpeak of your Religion with reverence, and follow not the appetites of ſuch as go aſtray, and walk in an evil way. The Infidels were accurſed by the Tongue of David, and of Meſſiah, the Son of Mary, becauſe of their diſobedience; they abſtain not from things that are not approved; they do them, and through obſtinacy will continue them. Thou ſhalt ſee many of the Inhabitants of Mecca adhere to them, by reaſon of the ſin they conceal in their hearts. God aſſuredly will be incenſed againſt them, and they ſhall be confined eternally in the torments of Hell. If they had believed in God, in his Prophet, and the Scriptures, they had not obeyed Infidels, but many of them are impious. Thou ſhalt find the Jews, and Inhabitants of Mecca, who believe in many Gods, to be very great enemies to the faithful, and the Chriſtians to have a great inclination, and amity towards the true believers; for that they have Prieſts, and Religious, that are humble, who have eyes full of tears, when they hear mention of the Doctrine which God hath inſpired into thee, becauſe of their knowledge of the Truth, and ſay, Lord, We believe in thy Law, write us in the number of them that profeſs thy Unity, who hindreth us to believe in God, and the Truth wherein we have been inſtructed? We deſire with paſſion, O Lord, to be in the number of the juſt. God ſhall hearken to their Prayers, and pardon them; he ſhall open to them the Gate of Paradiſe, wherein is the reward of the righteous, and the Infidels ſhall inhabit the abyſs of Hell. O ye who are true believers! inhibit not the eating of what God hath permitted, offend not God, he abhorreth them that offend him, eat of the meats that are lawful for you, and have his fear before your eyes, he will not chaſtiſe you for what you have ſpoken at random, contrary to your faith, without deſign of offending him, but he ſhall puniſh you for your Oaths, if you obſerve them not; the ſatisfaction of an Oath not accompliſhed, is to give food to ten poor of your Religion, and to cloath them, or to enfranchiſe a Slave that is a true believer; he that is deſtitute of means to perform this, ſhall faſt three days immediately ſucceeding, ſuch is the ſatisfaction of a not accompliſhed Oath; keep exactly your faith, ſo doth God teach you his Commandments, you will, peradventure, give him thanks. O ye that believe in God! Wine, Games of hazard, Idols, Lots, and divinations are abominations, and filthy practiſes of the Devil, depart from him, perhaps you will be righteous. The Devil deſireth to ſow among you diſſention, and horror, through Wine, and Games of hazard, to choak your remembrance of God, and of praying to him; abandon Wine, and Games of hazard, be obedient to God and the the Prophet, his Apoſtle; and take heed to your ſelves; If you diſobey God, know, that the Prophet is obliged only to preach publickly the word of his Divine Majeſty; the true Believers, and the righteous have not provoked God in drinking Wine, and playing at Games of Hazard, before they were prohibited, they will abſtain for the future, and perform good works, God loveth them that do good. O ye that believe! God proveth you by one thing, to wit, by hunting, whether you take the Game with your hands, or courſing on Horſe-back, to diſcern them among you that fear him, and believe in his Law; whoſoever ſhall offend him, ſhall be ſeverely puniſhed. O ye that believe! kill not your Game, during the time of your Pilgrimage to Mecca; whoſoever ſhall kill of deliberate purpoſe, ſhall be judged, as if he had ſlain his Neighbours beaſt, he ſhall be judged by one among you, and be condemned to offer a Preſent at the Temple of Mecca, or to give Food to the Poor, or to faſt, or to perform ſomewhat of like Nature, for the expiation of his Errour; if he have repentance in his mind, God will pardon what is paſt; if he return in his ſin, God will be avenged on him, he is Omnipotent, and avengeful. It is permitted that you fiſh, and eat of fiſh during your Pilgrimage, but hunting by Land is abſolutely forbidden in this Voyage; fear God, you ſhall all one day be aſſembled before him to be judged, he hath appointed the month of Pilgrimage, he hath eſtabliſhed the Temple of Mecca for the Devotion of the people, and hath forbidden to give impediment to ſuch as bring thither oblations, and thoſe that aſſume * Collers, to the end, you may learn to underſtand that he knoweth all things both in Heaven, and Earth, and that he is Omnipotent. Know ye, that he is grievous in his Chaſtiſements, and gracious and merciful: The Prophet is obliged but to preach his Commandments, he knoweth all that you conceal in your hearts, and whatever you make manifeſt: Evil muſt not be equal to good, notwithſtanding it be pleaſing to you: O ye that are wiſe! have the fear of God before your eyes, peradventure you ſhall be happy. O ye Believers! deſire not the knowledge of all things, you will afflict your ſelves; be not curious to know at what time the Alcoran was ſent from Heaven, God pardoneth your former curioſity; your Predeceſſours were alike curious, and in the number of unbelievers. God hath commanded nothing touching * the ſhe Camel, whoſe ear is ſlit, neither that which is at liberty in the Field, neither concerning the Ewe that hath brought forth ſeven Lambs, neither the Camel, of whom have iſſued ten Camels, but the wicked invent blaſphemies againſt his Divine Majeſty, and are unwiſe; When it was ſaid to them come, and obſerve what God hath taught his Prophet, they replyed, it ſufficed them to follow what their Fathers had obſerved, notwithſtanding their Fathers were ignorant and erroneous. O ye Believers! be careful of your ſelves, ſuch as be in errour ſhall not hurt you; if you follow the right way, all of you ſhall one day be aſſembled before God, who ſhall diſcover all your works, and reward you according to your merits. O ye Believers! make your Teſtament, when your death approacheth, and take two Witneſſes of your own Religion, that are honeſt men; If you are in a journey, and ſickneſs ſurprize you, you ſhall take two witneſſes, ſuch as you ſhall meet with to ſerve your Teſtament, and having prayed, ſhall deliver to them your Will. If you doubt their integrity, cauſe them to ſwear to be faithful in their teſtimonies, and not give themſelves to be corrupted by your Kindred. Conceal not your teſtimony, leſt you be in the num- of ſinners. If you diſcover thoſe two witneſſes to have erred in their teſtimony, ſubſtitute two other in their place, although they partake in your ſucceſſion, and take Oath of them to be more veritable in their diſpoſitions, than the two others, otherwiſe they will offend God, and be numbred with the unjuſt. It is better to ſpeak Truth, than to be in fear, leſt your falſhood be detected; fear God, and hearken to his Commandments, he guideth not them that diſobey him. He ſhall one day aſſemble his Prophets and Apoſtles, and ſay unto them what did you anſwer, being queſtioned concerning my unity? they ſhall reply, Lord, we are ignorant, thou alone knoweſt all things. He ſhall ſay to Jeſus, O Jeſus, Son of Mary, remember thou my grace towards thee, and thy Mother; I ſtrengthned thee with the Holy Ghoſt; Thou ſpakeſt in thy Cradle, as a Man of forty or fifty years, thee did I inſtruct in Scripture and knowledge, the Old Teſtament, and the Goſpel; Thou didſt form of Earth the figure of a Bird, didſt breath upon it, and it did flie, thou didſt cure the Born blind, and the leprous, didſt revive the Dead, I delivered thee from the Jews, when thou didſt preach to them my Commandments, and wroughteſt Miracles, which the wicked affirmed to be Magick, and inchantment. Remember, how thou didſt command thy Apoſtles to believe in me, and obey my Propher, and how they ſaid, we believe in one ſole God, be thou Witneſs that we entirely reſign our ſelves to the Will of God. Remember * thou, that the Apoſtles ſaid, O Jeſus Son of Mary, can thy Lord ſend us from Heaven a Table covered with meats to ſatisfie us? Jeſus anſwered them, Fear God, if you believe in his Law; they ſaid, we have an Appetite, and deſire to eat of the Food of Heaven, for the repoſe of our hearts, and to know if thou ſpeakeſt the truth, of which we ſhall be Witneſſes. Then ſaid he, O God my Lord, cauſe to deſcend upon us from Heaven a Table covered with meat, this day ſhall be celebrated by us and them that ſhall ſucceed, this ſhall be a ſign of thy Omnipotency; enrich us with thy grace, thou poſſeſſeſt all Treaſure. God ſaid to him, I will cauſe to deſcend from Heaven the Food which thou deſireſt, and whoſoever ſhall be impious, ſhall be puniſhed with torments, that no man yet hath ſuffered. He ſhall ſay at the Day of Judgment, O Jeſus Son of Mary! didſt thou enjoyn the people to worſhip thee, and thy Mother, as two Gods? Jeſus ſhall anſwer, praiſed be thy name; I will take heed of ſpeaking what is not, thou knoweſt if I have ſaid it, thou art Omniſcient, thou knoweſt what is in my Soul, and I have no knowledge of what is in thee; I delivered nothing but what thou didſt command me to ſpeak: to wit, Worſhip God your Lord, and mine, I am Witneſs from the time that I was in the World, until thou didſt cauſe me to dye; thou didſt obſerve the Deportments of the people, thou ſeeſt all; if thou chaſtiſeſt Men, they are thy Creatures; if thou doſt pardon them, thou art Omnipotent and Wiſe. Then ſhall God ſay, this day ſhall good works be profitable to the righteous, they ſhall enter into Paradiſe, wherein flow many Rivers, there ſhall they dwell eternally, with my grace, in exceeding great felicity; the Kingdom of heaven, of Earth is Gods, he is Omnipotent.

CHAP. VI.

The Chapter of Gratifications, containing an hundred ſixty and fifteen Verſes, written at Medina.

Gilaldin juſtifieth this Chapter of Animals. See Gilaldin.

IN the name of God, gracious and merciful: Praiſe be to God the Creator of Heaven, of Earth, of darkneſs, and of light; ſuch as believe not in their Lord are in error. He it is that created you of the duſt of the Earth, and appointed a prefixed time for your death, and reſurrection; nevertheleſs you doubt, he is God in Heaven and in Earth, he underſtandeth the ſecrets of your hearts, and whatſoever you make manifeſt; he knoweth the good and evil that you commit, that his Commandments have been taught the Inhabitants of Mecca, and that they have abjured them; they oppoſed the revealed Truth, but ſhall be chaſtiſed for their contempt. They conſider not how much People we have deſtroyed, in paſt ages; we gave them places to dwell in, more ſtrong and ſpacious than thoſe which you inhabit, ſent them about of rain, cauſed Fountains flow in the places of their habitation; after this did we extirpate them, by reaſon of their ſins, and eſtabliſhed in their place a new People. We have ſent to thee the Scripture, written in Vellum, the unbelievers have handled it with their hands, yet ſay, it is evident forcery and inchantment, that they will not believe thereiſh, unleſs they ſee an Angel deſcend to confirm it. Should we have ſent an Angel, they had periſhed by his preſence, unleſs we had ſent him under the figure of a Man, like unto them, and cloathed as they are. They derided the Prophets, and Apoſtles, thy Predeceſſors; deriſion is fallen upon ſuch as contemned them. Say to them, go through the World, and conſider the end of them that abjure the Law of God; ſay to them, to whom appertaineth whatſoever is in Heaven and Earth? it is Gods. He will imploy his mercy to ſave you; doubtleſs he will aſſemble all of you at the Day of Judgment. Nevertheleſs Infidels believe not in his Unity; they conſider not, that whatſoever moveth by night, and by day, and whatſoever is in the World, belongeth to his Divine Majeſty, who underſtandeth and knoweth all things. Say to them, require you other protection than that of God the Omnipotent Creator of Heaven and Earth, who nouriſheth all things, is nouriſhed by none? Say to them, I have received a command to embrace the Law of Salvation. Be not ye in number of unbelievers; I fear to diſobey my Lord, and fear the torments prepared for the wicked at the day of Judgment; he that ſhall deliver himſelf, ſhall enjoy the grace of God, which is ſupream felicity: If God will puniſh you, none ſhall deliver you from his puniſhment; if his Will is to do good to you, he is Omnipotent, always victorious, and hath all power over his Creatures; he is moſt wiſe and Omniſcient. Say to them, What better teſtimony is there in the World than that of God? Say to them, He ſhall teſtifie between you and me, to whom he hath inſpired the Alcoran to inſtruct you: Will any among you that ſhall learn it, ſay there is any other God, but God; I will not ſay ſo; there is but one God, and I am innocent from the ſin you commit, in aſſociating him with a companion equal to him; many of them that underſtand the written Law, have knowledge of the truth of the Alcoran; their Children alſo know it, but ſuch as forſake their own Souls, will not believe in God. Who more unjuſt, than he that blaſphemeth againſt God and his Commandments? Certainly the wicked ſhall be miſerable; I will aſſemble all of them, and ſay, Where are the gods which you did aſſociate with God? They ſhall have none other excuſe, but to ſay, by God, Lord, we were of the number of Idolaters. Conſider how they will lie, and diſavow their blaſphemies: ſome there be among them that hearken to thee, we have hardened their hearts, they will not learn the Alcoran, becauſe their ears are ſtopped. When they ſhall hear related all the miracles of the World, and ſhall ſee them with their eyes, they will not believe until they have diſputed againſt thee. The wicked ſay the Alcoran is but a lie, and Fable of Antiquity; they forbid the People to believe it, and contemn it; certainly they deſtroy their Souls, and know it not; thou ſhalt ſee when they ſhall be detained in the fire of Hell, they will ſay, Would to God I might return into the World, I would obey the Commandments of his Divine Majeſty, and be in the number of true believers. They knew the truth, but concealed it; ſhould they return into the World, they would return to their impiety, they are liars. They affirm, there is none other life than that of the World, neither any reſurrection; when they ſhall be before God, they ſhall acknowledge their errors, he ſhall cauſe them to feel the chaſtiſements due to their blaſphemies. Such as believe not in the Reſurrection, are wretched Men, they ſhall be afflicted for their ſins at the hour when ever death ſhall ſurprize them; they ſhall bear on their back the burthen of their crimes, and avouch the life of this world to be but deceit and vanity, and the life of the other to be full of felicity for the righteous; nevertheleſs the wicked are not converted. I know thou wilt be incenſed againſt ſuch as ſhall ſay, they deſire to obey thee, and ſhall renounce thy Doctrine; they that contemn the Commandments of God are impious, they have belied the Prophets thy Predeceſſors; the Prophets endured their lies, and were patient, until we deſtroyed them; God declineth not what he hath promiſed. Thou knoweſt what the Prophets foretold: if Men abandon thee, canſt thou covet to continue on earth (to inſtruct them) and to be in Heaven at the ſame time, to cauſe prodigies appear (teſtimonies of thy miſſion.) Had it ſo pleaſed God, he had brought them all into the right way, nor had they been in the number of the ignorant. Certainly he heareth the prayers of the righteous, that hearken to his word; he will give reſurrection to the dead, and aſſemble them to receive recompenſe according to their merits. They have ſaid, we believe not in the Prophet, if he ſhew not to us ſome miracle from his Lord: ſay unto them, God hath ſhewed you many miracles, but moſt of you do not underſtand them; the beaſts that walk upon the Earth and the birds that flie in the Air, are in the number of his creatures:

We

We have not omitted to write any thing that is written in the Book kept in Heaven; all Men ſhall one day appear before God, ſuch as ſhall not have believed in his Law, ſhall be deaf and dumb; and inhabit darkneſs: God miſleadeth whom it pleaſeth him, and guideth in the right way whom he ſeeth good. Say unto them, have you felt the puniſhment of God? Have you had knowledge of the day of Judgment? Will you invoke any but God, if you be good Men? If you implore him, he will deliver you from the evils that you fear; and if it pleaſe him you ſhall abandon the Idols, which with unbelievers you adore. We ſent our Prophets to them that were before you, when they contemned them, we ſent afflictions to procure their converſion, which had not been done without the miſeries that we brought upon them. Nevertheleſs their heart is hardned, the devil cauſed them to find diſobedience more advantageous, and they forgat what was taught them. When we opened the gate of happineſs, they exceedingly rejoyced, and were ingrateful; but, when they thought leaſt of it, they were chaſtiſed, became deſperate, and were extirpated, for the great glory of God; Lord of the Univerſe, ſay unto them, If God rendred you deaf, blind, and ignorant, what other god than God ſhall reſtore your ſight, hearing, and knowledge? Conſider how I manifeſt my Unity; nevertheleſs they will not believe it: ſay unto them, have you had a ſenſe of the ſcourge of God ſecretly and publickly? Hath God condemned any but the wicked? He ſent not the Prophets and Apoſtles, but to proclaim the felicity of Paradiſe, and preach the torments of Hell: He that ſhall believe, and do good works, ſhall be exempt from fear at the Day of Judgment, and unbelievers ſhall be puniſhed, becauſe of their diſobedience. Say unto them, I told you not that I had in my power all the treaſures of God, neither that I had knowledge of the future, and paſt; nor do affirm, that I am an Angel, I only act what hath been inſpired into me; is the blind like to him that ſeeth clearly? Conſider what I ſay. I preach not the Day of Judgment but to ſuch as apprehend it, they ſhall find none other than God to protect them; peradventure they will fear his Divine Majeſty. Moleſt not them that pray unto God evening and morning, and that deſire to ſee his face, thou ſhalt not be accomptable for their actions, neither ſhall they give accompt of what thou doſt; if thou diſturbeſt them, thou ſhalt be in the number of the unjuſt. We have proved men by one another; they have ſaid among them, with deriſion, behold thoſe among us, to whom God hath given his graces: doth God not know them that acknowledge his benefits? Salute with affection true believers, when they come to viſit thee; God loveth civility, clemency, and humanity, and will pardon him among you, that ſhall offend him through ignorance, that ſhall repent of his error, and do good works, he is benigne and merciful. Thus do I recount the graces of God, and diſcover the way of ſinners; Say unto them, I am forbidden to worſhip what you adore, leſt I ſhould go aſtray from the right way. I have received from God a light, which ye have contemned; God is Judge of all things, judgeth with truth, and is moſt juſt in his Judgments. I cannot forthwith give you a ſight of the torments of Hell, neither of the chaſtiſement of God, which you with ſo much inſtance require; this dependeth on his Divine Majeſty; had I this power, our difference would be ſoon at a period. God knoweth the unjuſt, in his power are the Keys of the future, none knoweth but he; he knoweth whatſoever is in the Earth, and the Sea, the number of the leaves that fall from the Trees, and of the Atomes that are in the darkneſs of the Earth. There is nothing dry or green in the Earth, that is not written in the Book of Light. He it is that cauſeth you to die in the night, and knoweth the good and evil that you have committed by day; he ſhall cauſe you to riſe again at the day nominated; you all ſhall appear before him; he ſhall give you knowledge of your ſins, and ſhall chaſtiſe you after your demerits; he is always victorious and Omnipotent. He ſhall ſend to obſerve your actions; and when you ſhall arrive at the hour of death, he ſhall diſpatch his Meſſengers, who ſhall not fail to execute his commands; the People ſhall repair to him, as to their Lord, he is extreamly exact to keep account. Say unto them, He ſhall deliver you from the darkneſs of the Sea, and of the Earth; when you ſhall in ſecret or publickly invoke him; if he deliver me, I will return him thanks for his grace: Say unto them, God can deliver you from darkneſs, and all other afflictions; yet ſay you, He hath a Companion, aſſociate with him; Say unto them, We can ſend puniſhments from above, and from below; he is able to diſunite, and cauſe you to taſte a thouſand miſeries, which you ſhall bring upon each other. Conſider how I ſhew them the effects of my Omnipotency; they will peradventure comprehend my ſayings: Thoſe of thy Nations have rejected them, notwithſtanding they are moſt true: ſay unto them, I am not your Tutor; every thing hath its time, you ſhall hereafter underſtand the truth. Depart from them that ſpeak of our Law with contempt, until he ſpeak otherwiſe; the Devil would induce thee to forget my Commandments, and cauſe thee to ſit down with the unjuſt: the true believers ſhall not regard their diſcourſe, neither ceaſe to admoniſh them, peradventure they will be converted. Depart thou from ſuch as ſport and mock at their Religion, the wealth of this World rendreth them haughty; declare, they ſhall be ſeverely puniſhed; none is able to protect or hear them but God, no ranſom is able to deliver them; they ſhall find the good and evil that they have committed, ſhall drink a liquor extreamly cold, and endure grievous torments, becauſe of their impiety; ſay unto them, ſhall we worſhip inſtead of God, what can neither benefit nor hurt us? Shall we return on our ſteps to our ſins, having been guided by his Divine Majeſty, like unto him whom the Devil hath ſeduced? He left him diſmaid, and aſtoniſhed in the midſt of his Voyage, having forſaken his Companions, that ſhewed him the right way. God guideth Men to the way of Salvation. I will wholly reſign my ſelf to the pleaſure of his Divine Majeſty: Make your prayers at the time appointed, and pay Tythes, you all ſhall appear before God at the Day of Judgment, to give account of your actions. He it is that created Heaven and Earth. Remember thou the Day wherein he ſaid, Be thou, and every thing was: he ſhall reign, and at that day command an Angel to ſound the Trumpet, to call to univerſal Judgment, the living and the dead. He knoweth the future, preſent, and paſt; is moſt Wiſe, and nothing is hidden from him. Remember thou that Abraham ſaid to his Father Azer*, wherefore do you worſhip Idols inſtead of God? I perceive your Family to be in manifeſt errour: God ſhewed to Abraham the Kingdom of Heaven, and of Earth, and he was in the number of the Bleſſed. Abraham ſeeing by night a moſt clear Star, asked in himſelf, if it were his God; no, replyed he to himſelf, my God doth not riſe and ſet; ſeeing the Moon to ariſe, he demanded if that were his God; no, ſaid he to himſelf, certainly God will not guide me to be of them that are erroneous: when he beheld the Sun riſing, he likewiſe asked, if that were his God; and when he ſaw it ſet, he ſaid to his people, I am innocent of the ſin which you commit, in adoring many Gods, I wholly commend my ſelf to his Will, who created Heaven and Earth, and profeſs his Unity: His people would diſpute againſt him; he ſaid to them, will you diſpute againſt me concerning the Unity of God, who hath inſtructed me in the right way? I fear not your Idols, my God doth what pleaſeth him, and knoweth all things, will you not conſider it? How ſhall I fear your Idols, ſince you are not afraid to affirm, that God hath Companions equal to him, which you have no reaſon to adore? If you underſtand the truth, who is more true, you, or I? Such as believe in God, and ſhall not cover the truth with a lie, ſhall be delivered from the torments of Hell, and conducted into the way of Salvation. We inſtructed Abraham with reaſons to diſpute againſt his people; I give knowledge to whom I ſee good, and exalt whom I pleaſe. Thy Lord, O Abraham, ſeeth and knoweth all things; we gave to Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob his Sons; we before inſtructed Noah and his Lineage in the right way; we taught it. David, Solomon, Job, Joſeph, Moſes, Aaron, Zachary, St. John, Jeſus, the Son of Mary, Eliah, Iſmael, Joſhua, Jonas, and Lot; we gratified them above the reſidue of the World; we elected their Fathers, Brothers, and Progeny, and guided them in the right way: Thus God guideth whom he ſeeth good: Men before adored Idols, and believeth there were many Gods; nevertheleſs he blotted out their paſt Errours, when they were converted. If they ſlander them that have knowledge of the Scriptures, and of Prophecies, will give power over their Perſons to Men that ſhall miſ-lead them with the Infidels: Thoſe whom God guideth, believe in the Unity of his Divine Majeſty. Say unto them, I require no reward for having preached to you the Alcoran, he teacheth to all the World the Commandments of God. The Jews have not honoured him as was their Duty; they underſtood not his Graces, when they ſaid, he hath inſtructed the people in nothing that is profitable. Say unto them, who gave the Tables unto Moſes? who inſtructed him in the Scripture, which they have written in Vellum, to guide and illuminate the people? They have publiſhed what pleaſed them, and have concealed much; they ſhall learn in the Alcoran what they know not, and what their Fathers underſtood not: Say to them, God after that left them obſtinate; and amazed in their Errours. We have ſent from Heaven that Book full of Bleſſedneſs, it confirmeth the Scriptures that were ſent before it, to the end thou mayſt inſtruct the people of Mecca, them that inhabit about that City, and the reſt of the World. Such as ſhall believe in the Day of Judgment, believe in what is written in this Book; and ſhall pray to God to deliver them from the torments of Hell: Who is more unjuſt, than he that blaſpheneth againſt God? that ſaith, God hath inſpired into him what he uttereth, notwithſtanding he hath received no inſpiration from his Divine Majeſty. Who more unjuſt, than he that ſaith, he will cauſe to deſcend from Heaven, things like to thoſe which God inſpired into his Prophets? When thou ſhalt ſee the wicked at the point of death, and the Angels ſtretching forth their hands to take their Souls: ſay unto them, This day the torments of Hell ſhall be the puniſhment of the blaſphemies that ye have vomited againſt God, and your diſobedience to his Commandments. God ſhall ſay to them, you are come before us without Riches, and Children, naked as you were created, and have caſt behind your Backs the inſtructions which we gave you; I ſee not with you the Idols you adored; you are ſeparated from each other, and have forſaken them, that you eſteemed on Earth, ſhould have been your Protectors; God ſeparateth the good from the wicked, as the Corn from the Ear, and the ſtone from the Date: He cauſeth the Living to ſpring from the dead, and the dead from the living: behold the works of God; why will you depart from his Law? He divideth the Morning from darkneſs, hath eſtabliſhed Night for the repoſe of Men, and the Sun and Moon to compute Ages, Years, Months, and Seaſons; ſuch are the effects of Gods power, he is Omnipotent, and knoweth all things. He it is that created the Stars to give you light, and guide you in the obſcurity of the Earth and Sea; he gratifieth with his Grace, ſuch as learn his Commandments. He it is that created you of one ſole Perſon, that gave you the Earth to inhabit, and preſerveth you in the World, he hath conferred his Grace on ſuch as have obeyed his Commandments, hath made Rain to deſcend from Heaven, and cauſeed the Earth produce divers ſorts of Herbs, Green things, and Corn; he hath cauſed the Date to ſpring forth, and the Palm Tree, with Gardens enriched with Grapes, Olives, Pomgranets, and many Fruits alike, and different. Conſider how Fruits encreaſe and multiply; this ſerveth for inſtruction of Gods Unity, to them that have his fear before their eyes: the Infidels have adored the Devil, with God, who created them, and ſaid, that God hath Sons and Daughters, ſuch is their ignorance; praiſed be God, he created Heaven and Earth; how ſhall he have a Son, who hath no Wives? He createth and knoweth all things, he is your God, and your Lord, there is none other God but he; worſhip him, he conſerveth all things, he is ſeen of no Man, and beholdeth all things, he is benign, and nothing is concealed from him. O people, there is come to you a light from your Lord to conduct you, he that ſeeth clearly ſhall receive advantage; and he that ſhall be blind, ſhall continue his Miſery: I am your Tutor, neither obſerve I what you do; Thus do I declare the Myſteries of my Law, the wicked ſhall in the end confeſs that thou haſt taught my Commandments to ſuch as inclined to learn them. Act what thy Lord hath inſpired into thee, there is no God but he, ſeparate thy ſelf from the Society of unbelievers; Had it pleaſed God, they had not diſobeyed his Commandments, mandments, thou art not their Tutor, injure not them that worſhip Idols, they injure God through Malice and Ignorance, every Man eſteemeth what he hath done, and pleaſeth himſelf in his opinion. Certainly they ſhall all be aſſembled at the Day of Judgment, and be chaſtiſed after their Demerits. They have ſworn by the name of God to fight for the Faith, if ſome Miracle appear to inſtruct them; Miracles proceed from God, they know not the time where in he will make them to appear; although they ſhould ſee Miracles, they will not be converted. I will overturn their hearts, blind their ſights, and they ſhall never be converted; I will leave them in their Errours, and diſobedience, with contempt and confuſion. If we ſhould ſend to them Angels, ſhould the dead come and ſpeak to them, and ſhould we bring about them all the Witneſſes of the World, they ſhall not believe, if it ſo pleaſe God, moſt of them are ignorant; we have allotted an Enemy to each Prophet; as the Devil is an Enemy to Men, he tempteth them with the Ornament of his Diſcourſes, to render them proud. If it had pleaſed thy Lord, they had wanted that power; depart thou from unbelievers, and their blaſphemies, and incline not to their will; they ſhall find no advantage in their impiety. Do you deſire another Judge than God, who hath ſent to you the Book that diſtinguiſheth good from evil? Such as know the Scripture are not ignorant that this Book was ſent from God, and containeth the Truth; Be not thou in the number of them that doubt, the word of God exactly cometh to paſs, no Man can hinder its effects, God underſtandeth and knoweth all things. If thou incline to the will of moſt Men, they will ſeduce thee, they believe but their own opinions, and are lyars. Thy Lord knoweth them that err, and ſuch as follow the right way. Eat what ſhall be ſlain in pronouncing the name of God; they taught you what was forbidden; eat not, unleſs conſtrained through neceſſity: Many err from the right way, and purſue their own appetites, and ignorance, God beholdeth them that offend him; flie publick and ſecret ſin, ſinners ſhall be ſeverely chaſtiſed; eat not of what is not let Blood in pronouncing the name of God, leſt you diſobey his Commandments. The Devils will tempt them that ſerve them, they will perſwade unbelievers to diſpute againſt you; if you incline to them, you ſhall be Infidels as they are. I raiſed again many of them that were dead through their ſins, I converted them, and gave them a light to illuminate them, in the darkneſs, wherein Infidels ſhall dwell for ever, becauſe they delight in their diſobedience: Thus will I place in every City, leaders, that ſhall ſeduce the wicked, and themſelves, but ſhall not underſtand it: When they beheld any ſign (of the truth of the Prophet) appear; they ſaid, they will not believe in him, unleſs he were accompanied with the vertues, and merits of other Prophets; God maketh choice of them on whom he conferreth the grace of prophecy, he ſhall chaſtiſe ſuch as diſcourſe in that manner, with ignominie in this World, and they ſhall feel in the other great torments, by reaſon of their impiety. God rejoyceth the hearts of them that he inclineth to lead into the way of Salvation, and puniſheth them that digreſs from the right path; his wrath fell upon the Infidels ſo ſoon as he aſcended into Heaven. The way thou followeſt is the right way; we have recompenſed ſuch as have underſtanding to profit, they ſhall be happy, God ſhall be their protector, becauſe of their good works. Remember thou the day wherein we ſhall aſſemble the People, and when it ſhall be ſaid to the Devils, O ye bands of Devils! wherefore are you riſen againſt Men? The chief of thoſe Men that ſhall have obeyed them, ſhall anſwer, Lord, ſuffer us to be revenged on each other, and let each command in his turn; O Lord, teach us the prefixed time that thou haſt appointed to our miſeries: The Angels ſhall anſwer, Hell ſhall be your habitation, you ſhall there remain eternally, and ſo long as it ſhall pleaſe God: Your Lord is moſt wiſe, and Omniſcient; the wicked ſhall obey the wicked, becauſe of their ſins. O ye Bands of Men and Devils! have you not ſeen my Prophets, and Apoſtles of your own Nation, who have given you to ſee Miracles? Who have preached my Commandments, and the Day of Judgment? They ſhall anſwer, they have ſeen the Prophets, and Apoſtles, but that the life of the World rendered them proud, and ſhall confeſs themſelves to have been wicked. God ſhall not deſtroy Mecca for the unjuſtice therein committed, until he hath ſent an Apoſtle to the Inhabitants, to teach them his Commandments; every one ſhall be puniſhed according to his works, thy Lord knoweth whatſoever is done in the World. He hath no need of his People, he is altogether merciful, he can deſtroy you if it pleaſe him, and eſtabliſh in your place another People, as he hath eſtabliſhed you in the place of your predeceſſors: If you be not converted, you ſhall not eſcape the torments of Hell; Say unto them, do as you underſtand him, I will comport my ſelf, as I ſhall apprehend him; you ſhall in the end underſtand who ſhall have the good part in the other World. None ſhall give ſuccour to Idolaters, they offer to their Idols of the fruits that God hath created, and ſay, (following their thoughts) behold our God! Such ſacrifices aſcend not to God, their Idolatry hath induced many of them to ſacrifice their own Children to their falſe Gods, they have deſtroyed them, and were enſnared in their Religion; which they had not done, had it ſo pleaſed God; Separate thy ſelf from them and their blaſphemies, they have ſaid, that the fruits of the Earth, and the benefits of God were unclean, and would not eat of them. God giveth food but to thoſe whom he is pleaſed to gratifie. They have prohibited to ride on ſome beaſts that God gave them, and ſlew them for food, without pronouncing the name of his Divine Majeſty, which is a great ſin, but they ſhall be puniſhed according to their demerits. They have ſaid it is lawful for Men to eat what is in the Bellies of Beaſts, and that it is unlawful for their Wives, and when they had ſlain them, they did eat for company; but God ſhall chaſtiſe them for their diſcourſe, he is moſt wiſe, and Omniſcient. Such as ſlay their Children are wretched Men, Fools and ignorant, they have forbidden to eat the good things that God hath given them, to blaſpheme, and are gone aſtray from the right way. It is God who created the Gardens full of Fruits and herbs of divers colours with Olives, Pomegranets, and other fruits alike, and different; Eat of the fruits of the Earth: Pay the dues appointed pointed when you reap, and diſpenſe not your ſubſtance lightly; God abhorreth prodigals: Of clean beaſts, ſome there be that have born the burthen, and others that are young, and have not born it; Eat what God hath given you, and follow not the footſteps of the Devil, he is your open Enemy. Say unto them, behold eight pair of Beaſts, viz. two pair of Wethers, two of Ewes, two of Camels, and two pair of Cowes, of which is it permitted, or forbidden you to eat? Is it lawful for you to eat the Males, or Females? Which are thoſe that God hath forbidden you? Who is more wicked than he that blaſphemeth, to ſeduce from the right way the People that are ignorant? God guideth not the unjuſt; Say unto them, In all that God hath inſpired into me, I find not that it is prohibited to eat of thoſe beaſts, except they die of ſome Diſeaſe, and if they be ſlain without pronouncing the name of God. The Fleſh of Swine is forbidden you; if you eat of it, you incur the wrath of God; If any one be in neceſſity, and eateth without deſign to provoke God, he ſhall find God gracious and merciful. We forbad the Jews to eat of Beaſts whoſe Feet were cloven, and of the fat of Beaſts, except of ſuch as is interlarded in the fleſh; the Entrails and the Bones. We enjoyned this prohibition by reaſon of their ſin, and we are veritable in our words, and exact in our promiſes: If they ſlander thee, ſay unto them, The mercy of God is great, and the wicked ſhall not avoid the puniſhment of their crimes. The Infidels have ſaid, Had it pleaſed God, we had not been unbelievers, neither our Fathers alſo, and nothing had been prohibited. Their predeceſſors ſpake as they, until they felt the puniſhment of their ſin. Say unto them, Are you aſſured that God is content with your proceeding? Tell us, whence ariſeth this aſſurance? You, in this, follow but your opinion, you are but lyers, Gods providence is great; he had guided all of you in the right way, had it ſo pleaſed him. Cauſe them come before us, who ſaid, It is unlawful to eat of clean Beaſts; were they preſent when God made the Prohibition? If they ſay they were preſent, ſay not as they, neither follow the appetites of blaſphemous Infidels, who believe not in the end of the word, and worſhip many Gods. Say unto them, Come, I will inſtruct you what is by God forbidden to be eaten; there is but one ſole God, ſay not, he hath Companions equal to him; do good to your Father and Mother, and ſlay not your Children, in fear of dying with Famine, God ſhall beſtow on you and them alſo, what ſhall be neceſſary; commit not whoredom, either privately or publickly; kill no Man, if juſtice do not command it: God requireth you to obſerve what is above (ordained) perhaps you will conſider it. Take not the goods of Orphans, but to ſuccour them, until they be of age, of diſcretion, meaſure, and weight, with good weight, and juſt meaſure. I enjoyn no Man any thing, but what is in his power to perform. Judge with equity, although it be againſt your Parents and Allies; ſatisfie what is above (ordained) God commandeth it, peradventure you will conſider it; it is the right way, which you ought to purſue: go not aſide, God commandeth it, perhaps you will fear his Divine Majeſty. We taught Moſes our Commandments; it is a peculiar grace to inſtruct the righteous, and guide the People in the right way; it may be you will believe in the Reſurrection. O ye Inhabitants of Mecca! We have ſent to you the Alcoran, full of benediction, perform what is ordained, flie impiety, your ſins ſhall be forgiven you; ſay not, That God hath ſent his Law to the two Nations that preceded you; and that it is hid from you. Will you ſay, That had God taught you the Scripture, you had been more obedient than they? Certainly he hath taught you his Commandments, it is a ſpecial grace to guide you in the right way: Who is more unjuſt, than he that blaſphemeth againſt his Divine Majeſty, and departeth from his Commandments? Such Men ſhall be rigorouſly chaſtiſed in the fire of Hell. Will they expect that the Angels came to viſit them? That God ſhould puniſh, and declare to them his miracles? Will they look for the Day of Judgment, wherein repentance and converſion ſhall be unprofitable? Such as believe in one part of the Law, and reject the other, have no foundation in their belief. God ſhall make them to know their errors, and ſhall puniſh them after the enormity of their crimes: He that ſhall do a good work, ſhall have a reward tenfold. Whoſoever acteth any wickedneſs, ſhall be puniſhed in like manner; neither ſhall he receive injuſtice. Say unto them, God hath guided me in the way of his Law; ſuch as profeſs the Law of Abraham, profeſs the unity of God; Abraham was not in the number of unbelievers: my prayers, my vows, my life, my death ſhall be conſecrated to God; he hath no Companion, I wholly commend my ſelf to his Divine pleaſure. Say unto them, Do I deſire to worſhip other Gods, than the Lord of the Univerſe? The good that a Man doth, is for himſelf, and the evil that he committeth is againſt them; you all ſhall one day appear in the preſence of God, he ſhall reſolve your diſputes. He it is that prolongeth your Poſterity, and exalteth ſome above others, to prove you; your Lord is exact to chaſtiſe the wicked, and gracious and merciful to the righteous.

IN the name of God, gracious and merciful: I am God, the moſt wiſe, the moſt true. This Book was ſent to thee, to preach to the True believers; doubt not the Contents of it. Say unto them, Believe in what was ſent to you from your Lord, and worſhip none other God but him; few there be among you that conſider it. How many Cities have we deſtroyed? How often have we inflicted our puniſh-niſhment on their Inhabitants by day, and by night, when they repoſed? Nevertheleſs, they ſaid nothing, but that they were greatly afflicted. We will examine the People to whom we have ſent our Prophets, and require account of what they have learned, and of what they have done. We will examine our Prophets, and demand an account of ſuch as have followed, and obeyed them. I will cauſe them to remember what they have done worthy of reward. We forſook not our Prophets when they preached to them the Truth; their actions ſhall be weighed in the Ballance of Equity; the Ballance of the bleſſed ſhall be ponderous with good works; and they whoſe Ballance ſhall be light of good works, ſhall be damned, for having contemned our Commandments. We gave you your habitation on the Earth, and there beſtowed on you what was neceſſary for your nouriſhment; but few of you are grateful to me. We created and formed you, and commanded the Angels to worſhip Adam, which they performed, except the Devil, to whom we ſaid, what hindred thee to worſhip Adam, when we commanded thee? He anſwered, I am better than he, thou haſt created me of fire, and haſt created Man of the mire of the Earth; then ſaid we to him, depart out of Paradiſe, it is not the habitation of the Proud, thou ſhalt be in the number of them that ſhall be laden with Ignominy; the Devil anſwered; let me alone until the day of the Reſurrection of the dead; wherefore haſt thou tempted me? I will ſeduce Men from the right way, I will hinder them on the right hand, and on the left, and on all ſides, to believe in thy Law, and the greateſt part of them ſhall be ungrateful: we ſaid to him, be gone out of Paradiſe, thou ſhalt be abhorred of all the World, and deprived of my mercy; I will fill Hell with ſuch as ſhall follow thee. O Adam! dwell with thy Wife in Paradiſe, and there eat of whatſoever ſhall pleaſe thee, but approach not that Tree, leſt thou with thy Wife be in the number of the unjuſt. The Devil tempted them, and deſpoyled their Bodies of their Veſtments of grace; he ſaid to them, God hath forbidden you to eat of the Fruit of that Tree, that you may not be Angels, or eternal; he ſwore that he ſpake the truth, and filled them with Ignominy, becauſe of their Pride. They knew their Nakedneſs, having eaten of that Fruit, and to cover themſelves, took leaves of Paradiſe; their Lord called them, and ſaid, Did I not forbid you to approach that Tree? I told both of you, that the Devil was your open Enemy; they ſaid, Lord, we have offended thee, and injured our Souls, if thou doſt not compaſſionate us, we ſhall be in the number of the damned: he ſaid, Depart out of Paradiſe, ye Enemies of each other, you ſhall inhabit the Earth, until the time appointed; you ſhall there live and die, and go from the Earth to the Day of Judgment. O ye Children of Adam! we beſtowed on you Veſtments of Graces, ſigns of our Omnipotency, peradventure you will bear it in mind. O ye Children of Adam! beware, leſt the Devil ſeduce you, as he did your Father and Mother, when he cauſed their departure out of Paradiſe; he diſpoyled them of their Garments, and made them know their deformity; he ſhall appear to you, with ſuch as follow them, and you ſhall ſee him, when you leaſt think thereon; he protecteth the Infidels: when they commit any Fault, they ſay, we follow the Law of our Fathers, God hath ſo commanded us. Say unto them, Doth God command you to offend him? Will you ſpeak of God what you know not? He hath appointed you to do Juſtice, to worſhip him, and embrace his Law. Many ſhall riſe again, as you have ſeen them; ſome ſhall be in the right way, others ſhall be damned, becauſe they have obeyed the Devil, and believed they were in the right way. O Children of Adam, cloath your ſelves decently, when you ſhall repair to the Temples, eat and drink what pleaſeth you; be not Prodigal, God abhorreth them that ſpend their wealth unprofitably: Say unto them, who made the prohibition of decent cloathing, when men go to the Temple to worſhip God? Who hath forbidden to eat of the Goods that God hath given you? This is lawful for true Believers. God ſhall ſo expound his Commandments at the Day of Judgment. Say unto them, God hath forbidden you Whoredom, private and publick, diſobedience, injuſtice, deſire to adore any other God but him, and to ſpeak of his Divine Majeſty what you know not; every one hath his Predeſtination, and none can advance or retard it. O ye Children of Adam, did not the Prophets teach you my Commandments? Such as ſhall fear me, and do good works, ſhall be delivered from affliction at the Day of Judgment; and they that diſobey my Commandments, that ariſe againſt the Faith, ſhall dwell eternally in Hell fire. Who is more unjuſt, than he that blaſphemeth againſt God and his Commandments? Such ſhall be puniſhed conformably to the Scripture. When the Angels of Death ſhall cauſe them to die, they ſhall ſay, where be the Idols that you adored inſtead of God? they ſhall anſwer, that thoſe falſe Gods have forſaken them, and ſhall acknowledge their Idolatry; but God ſhall ſay to them, enter into Hell with the Men and Devils that are condemned; they ſhall execrate the Sects that preceeded them, and being aſſembled, they ſhall ſay, Lord, judge them, they ſeduced us, augment their Miſeries in Hell. God ſhall ſay, we will add to their, and your pains, but you underſtand it not. They ſhall ſay among themſelves, we are not the cauſe that you were unbelievers, you were not ſuch to pleaſe us, ſuffer with us the torments that you have merited. I will not open the gate of Heaven to ſuch as diſobey my Commandments, until a Camel paſs through the eye of a Needle, ſo will I chaſtiſe ſigners, Hell ſhall be their Bed, Fire ſhall be their covering; and ſuch as ſhall have done good works, according to their Power, ſhall dwell eternally in Paradiſe. I will remove Deceit far from their heart; Rivers ſhall flow in their Fields with delights; and they ſhall ſay, praiſed be God, who hath brought us hither, otherwiſe we had been in the number of the erroneous: Certainly the Prophets, Gods Meſſengers, taught us the truth, in ſaying, the obſervance of the Commandments of his Divine Majeſty ſhould render us Heirs of Paradiſe. Such as ſhall be ſaved, ſhall tell the damned, that they have found the Grace foretold them of God, and we will demand of them, if they have not met with the puniſhment that his Divine Majeſty did denounce againſt them; they ſaid aloud, Yes, and that the Curſe of God is upon the unjuſt, that miſled Men from his Law, and they ſhall be eternally in the number of the miſerable. * Between the bleſſed and the damned, there is a ſeparation, and a place called Aaraf, or Priſons, wherein are many Perſons, who know the bleſſed and the damned by their Countenances, they call to the bleſſed and ſalute them, yet they go not into Paradiſe, notwithſtanding their great deſire to enter. When they turn their eyes towards the damned; Lord, (ſay they) involve us not in the number of the unjuſt. Such as are in that place, call to the damned, they know them by their Viſages, and ſay, to what ſerved your Riches? and that ye aroſe againſt the Faith, and Commandments of God? Behold the faithful (whom ye contemned) you ſwore they ſhould be deprived of mercy; God hath ſpoken to them, and hath ſaid, enter into Paradiſe, and fear not, you ſhall for ever be exempt from affliction; the damned ſhall cry unto the Bleſſed, Give us of the water which you drink, and the meats that you eat; they ſhall anſwer, The drink and bread of Paradiſe is prohibited to Infidels, who ſported with their Faith, that were proud of the wealth of the Earth, and that ſcoffed at the Commandments of God; he hath forgotten them, becauſe they forgot the coming of the Day of Judgment, and blaſphemed againſt his Precepts. We are come to the Inhabitants of Mecca to inſtruct them in the Alcoran; we teach it unto men, to give them knowledge of the right way, and to acquire the mercy of God, if they believe in that Book: Shall they expect to believe until they know its explication? Its explication ſhall appear at the Day of Judgment; that day, ſuch as ſhall have lived without Faith, ſhall ſay, Certainly the Prophets delivered the Truth; ſhall we partake of their Prayers, will they intercede for us, until we return to the World to do better than we have done, and to obey Gods Commandments? But they ſhall be damned, becauſe of their Blaſphemies. God is your Lord, he created the Heaven, and the Earth in ſix days, and ſitteth on his Throne; he cauſeth the Night incontinently to ſucceed the day; the Sun, the Moon, and the Stars, move at his Command, and all the World obeyeth him; praiſed be God, Lord of the Univerſe: Pray to God privately and publickly, he abhorreth the unjuſt; pollute not the Earth, after the Ordure is removed; pray to God to avoid his Chaſtiſements, and obtain his mercy, which is for the righteous. It is God that ſendeth the Winds to diſſipate the Rain, when they carry the Clouds; we drive them charged with water, into places dry, dead, and ruined, and cauſe the Rain to fall there, that they may produce Herbs and fruits; ſo will we cauſe the dead to ariſe again; perhaps, Men will remember the good Land bringeth forth good Fruits, through the permiſſion of its Lord, and the bad Land produceth only Darnel. I teach my Commandments to ſuch as are not ingrateful: Certainly we ſent Noah to inſtruct Men; he ſaid, O ye people, worſhip one God alone; if you adore other then him, you ſhall be puniſhed at the Day of Judgment; their Rulers anſwered, O Noah! thou art in a great Errour; He replyed, I erre not, I am a Meſſenger ſent from God to preach his Will; I give you moſt wholſome Advice, God hath taught me what you know not. Is it ſtrange to you, that he hath ſent you his Commandment by the Tongue of a Man like your ſelves, to declare to you the torments of Hell? Fear God, he will pardon your ſins; But they belyed Noah, we ſaved him in the Ark, with his Retinue, and drowned thoſe that contemned our Law, they were altogether blind. We ſent Hod to his Brother Aad, and to his Retinue, he ſaid, O ye people! worſhip one God alone, whom will ye adore; or whom fear, but God? The Teachers anſwered, thou art in an extream ignorance; we believe thee to be in the number of Lyars; he replied, I am not a Lyar, I am a Meſſenger ſent from God, to preach his Commandments, I give good and ſalutary Advice, wonder not that God teacheth you his Precepts by the Tongue of a Man, like you, who declareth to you his Pleaſure. Remember that he left you on Earth after Noah, that he encreaſed you in number, force, and power; Call to mind his grace, you ſhall be happy. They anſwered, are we come to this, to worſhip one God alone, and to relinquiſh what our Fathers adored? Shew us the truth, whereof thou doſt preach, if thou art true; he ſaid, the wrath and indignation of God ſhall fall upon you; will you diſpute with us of the Names, that you and your Fathers impoſed on your Idols? God did not enjoyn to worſhip them, neither have you reaſon to do it; expect your puniſhment, I will expect it with perſeverance. Then did we deliver him from their Malice, and all the true Believers that were with him, and deſtroyed thoſe Infidels, by reaſon of their impiety. We ſent Salhe to Temod, and his people; he ſaid to them, O ye people! worſhip but one God, he ſhall ſhew you a Miracle in this * Camel, ſuffer it to feed on the Earth, and do to it no harm, leſt you be chaſtiſed: Remember, how God left you on the Earth after Aad, he gave you to dwell in the Valleys, in the Plains, and Mountains; Remember God, and pollute not the Earth any more. Their Captains who were proud, demanded of the poor, if they believed that Salhe was indeed the Meſſenger of God? they anſwered, We believe in his words, and in his Doctrin; Then ſaid thoſe proud Men, we abjure what ye believe, we condemn him, and they ſlew the Camel of Salhe in Deriſion, diſobeyed the Commandments of God, and ſaid, O Salhe! Let us now ſee the puniſhment that thou didſt preach, if thou art of the Prophets; at the ſame time, an Earthquake, with Thunder ſurprized them, and they remained dead as Carcaſſes in their Houſes. Salhe forſook them, and ſaid, O ye people I declared to you the Will of God with fidelity, but ye deteſt them that affect you, and give you good Counſels. Remember thou how Lot ſpake to the People, will you daily defile your ſelves with Whoredome? and with a filthineſs was that never yet ſeen in the World by any your Predeceſſors? Will you love Men better than Women? Will you love ſin rather than Piety? They ſaid, Let us expel Lot and his Family from our City, for that they will not contaminate themſelves with us, but God delivered him out of their hands, and thoſe of his Houſe, except his Wife, who continued with them that were puniſhed: We cauſed a Rain to fall upon them, that deſtroyed all of them. Conſider the end of the wicked: We ſent Chaib to the Countrey of Madian, he ſaid, O ye people, worſhip one God alone, weigh with good Weights, meaſure with good meaſure,

* The Mahometan Doctors believe, that ſuch as ſhall have done as much good as evil, and whoſe ballance ſhall not decline, neither on the Scale of good works, or of bad, ſhall dwell in the place called Aaraf, with them that have done neither good nor evil; and this place is between Hell and Paradiſe.

* The Turks believe that Salhe through Gods permiſſion Metamorphoſed a Rock into a Camel.

Meaſure, and retain nothing from your Neighbour: Poſſeſs not the high ways, to give terrour to the people, neither divert true Believers from the Law of God: Remember, that you were but a ſmall handful of Men, and he cauſed you to multiply; conſider the end of the wicked; If any among you embrace the Faith, and others contemn it, have patience, until God judge your differences, there is no better Judge than he; Their Teachers ſaid; O Chiab, we will baniſh thee from Madian, thee and thoſe that are of thy Faith, if thou art of our Religion; he anſwered, ſhould I not abhor your Religion, I ſhould blaſpheme againſt God, who hath delivered me, I will follow it, if it pleaſe God, he knoweth all things, I will commend my ſelf wholly to the Will of his Divine Majeſty; Lord judge our Controverſie, thou art the beſt Judge of the World. Then ſaid their Teachers to the people, if you follow Chaib, you are damned; not long after an Earthquake, and Thunder ſurprized them, and in the Morning they were found dead in their Houſes; ſuch as belyed Chaib, found no ſafety in their Habitations, they were wretched, he abandoned them, and ſaid, O ye people! I have preached to you the Will of God with fidelity; I will no longer afflict my ſelf with the Malice of the wicked. We inflicted Sickneſs and Poverty on them that diſobeyed the Prophets, whom we ſent to the Inhabitants of Madian; peradventure they will be converted. We proved them through Diſeaſes and Health, and gratified them in many Occurrences, yet they ſaid, our Fathers were afflicted with Sickneſs and Poverty, we ſhall be as they, but we chaſtiſed them for their ſin, when they leaſt conſidered it. Had the Inhabitants of Mecca had our fear before their eyes, and obeyed our Commandments, we had opened to them the bleſſing of Heaven and Earth; we will puniſh them, becauſe they are impious. Some there be, that ſhall be afflicted in the Night, when they ſleep; and others, that ſhall be tormented by day, when they ſport, and recreate themſelves; they believed God to be a deceiver, and are damned. God guideth into the right way true Believers, and makes them Heirs of the Earth; after their Parents; had he ſo pleaſed, he might have deſtroyed all the World, he might have hardned the hearts of the people, and no man had hearkned to his word. I recount what things befel that * City, many Prophets have been ſent to its Inhabitants, and wrought many Miracles, yet would they not relinquiſh their former impiety; thus have we hardned the hearts of Infidels; they violated their Promiſes, and we found moſt of them to be wicked and diſobedient. We ſent Moſes to Pharaoh, and his people, he to them ſhewed Miracles, which through their Malice they contemned, but conſider the end of thoſe wicked men; Moſes ſaid unto Pharaoh, I am a Meſſenger ſent from God, the God of the Univerſe; when I ſpeak of God, I deliver the Truth; I am come, through his Command, to tell thee, thou muſt diſmiſs with me the Children of Iſrael, and no longer detain them in thy Dominions. Pharaoh ſaid, if thou comeſt from God, and art true in thy ſayings, let us ſee ſome Miracles; then he caſt upon the ground his Staffe, which was changed into a Serpent, ſhewed his hand, that appeared exceeding white to the eyes of the Spectators.

* To Mecca.

The Doctors of Pharaoh ſaid, this Man is a Magician, he would have us to abandon our Countrey, what is your opinion? detain him Priſoner, and his Brother, and ſend into your Cities, to aſſemble Magicians. The Magicians of Pharaoh appearing before him; they ſaid, what ſhall be our reward, if we ſhall be Victorious? He replyed to them, you ſhall be well rewarded, and ſhall be of them that approach my Perſon. They ſaid, O Moſes, wilt thou firſt caſt down thy Staffe on the ground, or ſhall we ours? Moſes bad them caſt down theirs, which they did, enchanting the eyes of the Spectators, and terrifying them with an extraordinary enchantment; God inſpired Moſes to caſt down his Rod, which devoured the Staves of the other, and the Truth appeared above falſhood, and above the Vanity of their Actions; they were vanquiſhed, to their confuſion, forſook their Magick, and proſtrating themſelves on the Earth, uttered theſe words; We believe in the Lord of the Univerſe, the Lord of Moſes, and of Aaron; Pharaoh ſaid to them, Ye believe in the God of Moſes without my permiſſion; this is a deceit, invented by you, to drive the people out of my Dominions; but you ſhall ſoon know the puniſhment that I will lay upon you, I will cut off your feet and hands, and command you to be crucified. They anſwered, We recommend our ſelves wholly to the Will of God, whatſoever is thy revenge on us; thou ſhalt not hinder us to believe in the Miracles that we ſee, neither to obey the Commandments of his Divine Majeſty; Lord give us patience, and to die in the number of true Believers. Then ſaid Pharaoh's Doctors, diſmiſs Moſes, and his people, that they may go whither they ſee good, to poſſute the Earth, that they may leave thee in quiet with thy Gods: He ſaid, I will cauſe their Children to be ſlain, their Wives to be abuſed, and I will inflict upon them a thouſand torments. Moſes ſaid to his people; Implore ſuccours of God with patience, and Prayers, the whole Earth is Gods, he giveth it to inherit, to whom he ſeeth good: the other World is for the righteous. They ſaid, O Moſes! We before thy coming, deſired the death of our Enemies; he replyed, God will not deſtroy your Enemies, to leave you alone upon the Earth, he ſhall behold your Actions. We afflicted Pharaoh and his Subjects with Famine, perhaps unbelievers will conſider it. When any happineſs befel them, they ſaid, they well deſerved it, and when they fell into Miſery, they affirmed Moſes and his people to be the cauſe of it; It is God that puniſhed them, but of this moſt of them were ignorant. They ſaid unto Moſes, ceaſe to ſhew us thy Miracles to inchant us, we will not obey thee: We ſent upon them a Deluge, Graſshoppers, Lice, Frogs, and Blood, one after another; nevertheleſs they were proud, and in the number of the wicked. When our wrath fell upon them, they ſaid, O Moſes! call upon thy Lord, that he give us what to thee he promiſed, remove his diſpleaſure from us, we will believe thee, and will diſmiſs with thee, the Children of Iſrael: When we delivered them from affliction, they ſharpned their Tongues, murmured, and violated their Promiſes: we avenged our ſelves upon them, and drowned them in the Sea, for that they contemned our Miracles, and we gave the Weſt and Eaſt to the Children of Iſrael, who were humble before us; we gave them our bleſſing, our word was accompliſhed upon them, becauſe of their perſeverance, and we deſtroyed the Armies of Pharaoh. The Children of Iſrael having paſt the Sea, met with Men that adored Idols, and ſaid, O Moſes! make unto us Gods, like to the Gods of this people; he anſwered, ye are ignorant; theſe Men are wretched, what they do is but ignorance and Vanity; ſhall I deſire that you worſhip other Gods, than God that preferred you to all the World? We have delivered you from Pharaoh's people, who cauſed you to endure great torments, they murthered your Children, abuſed your Wives, and you ſuffer heavy afflictions for the puniſhment of your ſins. We detained Moſes on the Mountain thirty Nights, and ten other Nights, which is in all forty Nights; when he went up, he ſaid to his Brother Aaron, be thou my Lieutenant, command this people in mine abſence, and follow not the path of the wicked. When Moſes at the time appointed arrived at the top of the Mountain, and that his Lord ſpake to him, he ſaid, Lord permit me to ſee thee: he ſaid, thou ſhalt not ſee me; behold this Mountain, if it continue firm in this place, thou ſhalt be able to ſee me; when the Lord appeared upon the Mountain with his light, it was reduced to aſhes, and Moſes amazed, fell on the ground as dead. When he aroſe again, he ſaid, Bleſſed be the name of God, I deſire to obey him, and believe that no Man living is able to behold him. He ſaid to Moſes, I have choſen, and preferred thee to all the World, I have made thee a Prophet, thou haſt talked with me, receive the Grace which I have beſtowed on thee, and be not ingrateful. We gave to him the Tables, whereon was written what was neceſſary for the Salvation of Men, and we ſaid to him, receive with affection, what I give thee, and command thy people to obſerve the Contents of thoſe Tables. I will precipitate into Hell ſuch as tranſgreſs my Commandments; I will deprive the proud of my Graces, they will not believe in my Law, although they ſee all the Miracles in the World, if they ſee the right way, they will not follow it; they ſee the way of Errour, and purſue it; becauſe they have abjured my Commandments, and rejected my Grace, the good works of them that diſobey me, and that believe not in the Reſurrection, are unprofitable, they ſhall be chaſtiſed after their Demerits. The people of Moſes, after his departure, adored the Calf, a bellowing God; ſaw they not, that it ſpake not to them; neither could conduct them into the right way? Nevertheleſs they adored it, for which they were greatly to blame. When this Calf fell to the ground, and they found their errour, they ſaid, if God have not pity on us, we ſhall be miſerable. When Moſes returned, he ſaid to them, whom did ye obey after my departure? You were too haſty to worſhip that Idol; he in diſpleaſure caſt againſt the ground the Tables that God had given him, took his Brother by the head, and dragging him to him, ſaid, Son of my Mother, how haſt thou governed this people? I wanted power, replyed he, and could not divert them from their evil; it wanted little but they had ſlain me, do me no harm; rejoyce not my Enemies with my miſery, and account me not with thoſe that adored Idols: Moſes ſaid, Lord pardon me, and my Brother, give us thy mercy; thou art the merciful of the merciful. The wrath of God, and the infamy of the World, ſhall fall upon them that worſhipped the Calf, and blaſphemed againſt God; he will be pitiful to ſuch as ſhall repent, and believe in his Divine Majeſty. The diſpleaſure of Moſes being allayed, he again took the Tables, whereon was written the way of Salvation, for ſuch as have the fear of their Lord before their eyes; he cauſed to be ſeparated from his people, at a time appointed, threeſcore and ten Perſons, who were ſurprized with an Earthquake, and with Thunder; and ſaid, Lord, thou couldeſt have deſtroyed them, before they adored the Calf; wilt thou deſtroy us all, becauſe of the ſin of the ignorant that are amongſt us? Thou haſt deſired to prove this people; thou guideſt, and cauſeſt to erre whom thou pleaſeſt; thou art our Protector, pardon our ſins; for thou art altogether merciful; give us thy Grace in this World, and guide us to the Day of Judgment, near to thy Divine Majeſty: He ſaid, I will puniſh as I ſee good, my mercy embraceth the whole World; it is for ſuch as have my fear before their eyes, that pay Tithes obey, my Commandments, follow the right way, believe in the Prophet, * who can neither write nor read, and what is written in the Old Teſtament, and the Goſpel; he ſhall command them things honeſt; he ſhall prohibit things uncivil; he ſhall teach them what meats are clean, and forbid them to eat what is unclean; he ſhall deliver them from Ceremonies, weighty and troubleſome, and from the Chains that ſtrictly bind them: Such as ſhall believe in him, that ſhall honour him, that ſhall defend him from his Enemies, and follow the light that we ſhall ſend him, ſhall be happy. Say unto the people, I am indeed a Meſſenger ſent from God, to whom appertaineth the Kingdom of the Heavens, and of Earth; there is but one God alone, he giveth Life and Death, as ſeemeth good to him. Believe in God, and in his Prophet, who can neither read nor write. Such as ſhall believe in God, in his word, and follow the Prophet, ſhall not erre; they ſhall follow a very good way. There are ſome of the Children of Iſrael that knew the truth, and judge with equity. We divided them into twelve Tribes, when Moſes required drink for his People, we inſpired him to ſtrike the Rock with his Rod, whence flowed twelve Fountains, and every one knew the place where he ſhould drink; we covered them with the ſhadow of Clouds; we cauſed Manna and Quails to deſcend upon them, and commanded them to eat of the good things which we gave them. They did not hurt us (when they murmured) but afflicted themſelves. It was ſaid to them, Dwell in this City, and eat therein what ſhall pleaſe you; enter at the gate with adoration, and beg pardon of your ſins. I will pardon you, and will augment the graces of the righteous; nevertheleſs, the wicked that were among them, altered the words that were ſpoken to them, and perverted them; and we ſent upon them our indignation from Heaven, becauſe of their impiety. Aſk of them concerning a Village that was upon the ſhore of the Sea, whoſe inhabitants obſerved not the Sabbath, and fiſhed on the day of reſt; they ſaw in that day, Serpents appear upon the water, and other days they ſaw none. Thus were they tryed, becauſe of their diſobedience:

* This is Mahomet. See Kitab el tenoir.

The Turks believe that Mahomet could neither write nor read.

This is the Holy Land. See Gelaldin.

A party of them ſaid, Fiſh not O People, it is loſt labour; God ſhall deſtroy and chaſtiſe them with grievous torments, then their Doctors ſaid, They ſhall implore pardon of the Lord, perhaps they will fear to offend him another time. When they rejected what we taught them, we ſaved ſuch among them as abſtained from evil-doing, and grievouſly afflicted the wicked, becauſe of their diſobedience; when they gloried in their ſin, we ſaid to them, Be ye contemned, and abhorred as Apes; thy Lord ſhall ſend to them at the Day of Judgment, perſons to torment them; he is exact in puniſhing the wicked, and merciful to the righteous. We ſent upon them good and evil, to prove them, peradventure they will be converted. Their poſterity left a progeny, heirs of their Doctrine; nevertheleſs, they returned to their ſins, and ſay, the Lord ſhall pardon them; they beg pardon of him, and return daily to their ſin: Shall not account be required from them, of what is ordained in the Scripture? To wit, not to ſpeak of God, but with truth: They have read the Truth, but have not comprehended it. Paradiſe is only for the righteous; I will not deprive them of recompence, who make their prayers at the time appointed, and obſerve what is contained in the Scriptures. Remember thou, how we raiſed a Mountain over them, to ſhelter them, and how they believed it would fall upon their heads; we ſaid to them, Learn with affection what we teach you, and remember; perhaps you will fear diſobedience. Thy Lord cauſed to come out of Adams Reins, all his Poſterity; and asked them, ſaying, Am not I your Lord? they anſwered, yes, thou art our Lord, we know it well: They cannot therefore ſay at the Day of Judgment, That they knew not his unity; they ſhall ſay for excuſe, Our Fathers adored many gods before us, we are their Poſterity; wilt thou deſtroy us, becauſe of their iniquity? Thus do I diſcover my myſteries to Men; it may be they will be converted. Relate to them the Hiſtory of him that ſaw our miracles; he was diſpoiled of his underſtanding, the Devil followed it, and he was in the number of the wretched. Had we ſo pleaſed, we had exalted him through the knowledge of our wonders, among the Doctors; but he crouched to the ground, and followed his own appetite, like to a chafed Dog; if thou chaſe him with Choler he putteth forth his Tongue; if thou leave him at reſt, he will ſtill put forth his Tongue, like to the Infidels, that contemn our inſtructions; if thou recount to them our miracles, or do not recount, perhaps they will be converted, perhaps they will not be converted, and ſhall be like ſuch as have abjured our Commandments, and injured their own Souls. He whom God guideth, is well guided; and he whom God miſ-leadeth, is in the number of the miſerable. We have created Hell to puniſh Devils and Men; they have hearts, and comprehend not the truth; they have eyes, and ſee it not; ears have they, and hear it not; they are like to Beaſts, and worſe than Beaſts; they are altogether ignorant. The moſt beautiful names of the World appertain to God: Beſeech him by the beauty of his name, and depart from them that depart from the truth, through the names that they impoſe on their Idols; they ſhall be chaſtiſed after their demerits. Some there be that follow the truth, and judge with equity. I will by degrees puniſh them that ſhall reject our Commandments, when they ſhall think thereon. I will defer their puniſhment ſome time, becauſe my wrath is violent: Remember they not, that they ſaid, Mahomet is poſſeſt of the Devil? On the contrary, he declareth the joys of Paradiſe, and preacheth the torments of Hell. Conſider they not the Kingdom of Heaven and of Earth, which God hath created of nothing? The fear of Death ſhall arrive before they have acknowledged their ſins; in what will they believe, if they have no Faith in the Alcoran? He whom God ſhall miſ-lead, ſhall find none to guide him; he ſhall leave Infidels, confounded in their diſobedience. They ſhall enquire of thee concerning the Hour and Day of Judgment. Say unto them, No Man knoweth it but God; but the greateſt part of the World believe it not. I have not power to do either good or evil of my ſelf, if God do not permit it; if I knew the future, I ſhould provide wealth to preſerve me from poverty! I am ſent only to declare the joyes of Paradiſe, and preach the torments of Hell to them that believe in God; he it is that created you of one ſole perſon, and created his ſpouſe of his Rib, to dwell with her; When ſhe doubted of being with Child, ſhe ceaſed not to travel as ſhe was wont; but when her conception rendred her heavy, they both beſought God, their Lord, and ſaid, Lord give an happy progeny, to the end we may be in the number of them that return thee thanks for thy favours. When God gave them a Son, a righteous Man, they aſſociated him in what he had given them; and all of them exalted the glory of his Divine Majeſty, above the Idols of the Infidels, that adored things which could create nothing, that are things created, and can do neither good nor harm. If you call Idolaters to the right way, they will not follow you; if ye invoke Idols, miſery ſhall be upon you; will you be mute, to profeſs the unity of God? Will you worſhip the Creatures, inſtead of the Creator? Go, adore your Idols, and may they hear your prayers, if you believe them to be Gods? Have they Feet to walk, Hands to touch, Eyes to ſee, and Ears to hear? Say unto them, If ye invoke your Idols, and conſpire againſt me, you ſhall find none to protect you, God is my protector, he hath cauſed the Alcoran to deſcend from Heaven, he is the defendor of the righteous; what ye adore, can neither benefit nor hurt you; If thou invokeſt Idols, they ſhall not hear thee, they ſhall look upon thee, and ſhall not ſee thee; do what is lawful to be done, command things honeſt, and depart from the ignorant; if the Devil would ſeduce thee, truſt in God, he heareth and knoweth all things; ſuch as fear him, remember his mercies and chaſtiſements when they are tempted of the Devil. Although Infidels know the Truth, the Devil ceaſeth not to continue them in their ſin, they always follow their impiety; If thou goeſt to them to inſtruct them, they ſay, thou ſingeſt an old Song, ſay unto them, I do what my Lord inſpired into me, what I teach you, is the light of Faith, the right way, and the grace of God for them that believe in his Divine Majeſty; for ſuch as hear the Alcoran, and ſtudy it, perhaps God will give you his mercy. Remember thou God in thy Soul, worſhip in publick and private, pray unto him evening, and morning, and be not in the number of the ignorant. The Angels that are near to thy Lord, neglect not to worſhip him, they praiſe and adore him with humility.

See Gelaldin.

CHAP. VIII.

The Chapter of the Spoil, containing ſeventy and five Verſes, written at Medina.

Mahomet's Men differed concerning diviſion of the ſpoyl, which they took at the Battel of Beder; Mahomet divided it among them. See Gelaldin.

IN the name of God, gracious and merciful. They will demand of thee, to whom appertaineth the ſpoyl? Say unto them, the ſpoyl appertaineth to God, and his Prophet; Fear God, live with mutual amity, and obey his Divine Majeſty, and his Prophet, if you believe in his Law; Such as fear when they hear mention of God, who augment their faith, when they have heard relation of his miracles, who truſt in him, who perſevere in their prayers, and diſpend in pious works ſome part of their wealth, believe in the unity of his Divine Majeſty; they have the degree of their habitation in Paradiſe, ſhall receive from their Lord pardon of their ſins, and exceeding great treaſure. When thy Lord cauſed thee to go out of thine Houſe to go againſt the Infidels, a party of the true believers had a great averſion to fighting, they diſputed with thee the neceſſity of Combates, having ſeen and known that their Enemies led them to a certain Death; Call to mind, that God promiſed you that a party of the Army of the Enemies ſhould obey you. Deſire you other thing than the glory and honour of Victory? God confirmeth the Truth by his words, and deſtroyeth the wicked, he ratifieth the Truth, and deſtroyeth falſhood, although it be contrary to the will of the impious. Remember, that your Lord heard you, when you of him implored ſuccours, and that he aſſiſted you with a thouſand of his Angels ſent from Heaven; God ſent you this aid, only to let you know his grace, and to confirm your hearts; Victory proceedeth from God, he is Omnipotent, and moſt prudent: Remember that God covered you with a ſecure ſleep, and cauſed Water to deſcend from Heaven, to waſh, purifie, and deliver you from the malice of the Devil. Plant in your heart generoſity, and patience, and go on with aſſurance. God hath ſaid to his Angels, I will be with you, confirm the ſteps of the true believers; I will caſt fear into the heart of the wicked, ſtrike them on the head, ſmite them on the fingers, and feet, becauſe they have contradicted my will, and that of the Prophet. God ſeverely chaſtiſeth ſuch as diſobey his Commandments, and oppoſe the will of his Prophet; the unbelievers have heretofore taſted of his puniſhments in this World, and ſhall in the end feel the pains of the fire of Hell. O ye who believe in God! turn not the back to the wicked, as vanquiſhed, when they approach to fight you, he that ſhall turn the back, ſhall return in the wrath of God, and be thrown headlong into the fire of Hell. You ſlew not the Infidels at the fight of Beder, God himſelf ſlew them. See Gelaldin.

* Thou didſt not caſt Stones againſt them, God did caſt them to advantage the true believers; he underſtandeth whatſoever they ſay, and knoweth all their actions: certainly, he will augment the affliction of the wicked. When ye required victory, it was given you; if you relinquiſh your impiety, you ſhall do well; if you return to fight againſt the Prophet, know that he will protect him againſt you; your Men of War ſhall advantage you in nothing, notwithſtanding they be numerous; for that God is with the true believers. O ye that believe, obey God and his Prophet, depart not from him, ſince ye have heard the Commandments of his Divine Majeſty, be not as thoſe that ſay, We have heard, and were deaf and dumb. The ignominy and miſery that God layeth on beaſts, is to be deaf and dumb, and to want the uſe of reaſon: Had God ſeen any good inclinations in the Infidels, he had not left them in their deafneſs; but although they had heard clearly, they ſhould have always departed from his Law, and have been obſtinate. O ye that believe in God! obey God and the Prophet, demand life eternal in your prayers, and know that God will ſeparate the Gall from the Liver; he will ſeparate the Infidel from the True believer, and you all ſhall appear before him, to be recompenſed and chaſtiſed for your works; fear the puniſhment that ſhall be inflicted, eſpecially on the ſeditious, and ingrateful, God is ſevere in his chaſtiſements; Remember that in the territory of Mecca ye were but an handful of weak Men, and with fear of being taken, and deſtroyed by the unbelievers; God ſaved, protected, and enriched you with all manner of good things, peradventure ye will give him thanks. O ye that believe! betray not God, nor the Prophet, neither ſuch as confide in you, and have entruſted their wealth in your hands, otherwiſe your riches, and Children ſhall torment you in the other World. There is with God great reward for the righteous. O ye that believe! if ye fear God, he ſhall remove your enemies far from you, and pardon your ſins, his goodneſs is infinite. The wicked have conſpired againſt thee, to puniſh and ſlay thee, or drive thee from Mecca; but God hath rendred their conſpiracy ineffectual, he knoweth all the deſigns of conſpirators. When his miracles were related to them, and his Commandments taught them, they ſaid, we have heard them, we had ſaid the like things, had we ſo inclined; it is but a Song, and a Fable of old Men: Remember thou, how they ſaid, my God, if what Mahomet declareth be true, cauſe a ſhower of Flint-Stones to fall upon us, and rigorouſly chaſtiſe us; He ſhall not chaſtiſe them, when thou art with them, neither when they beg pardon of him; Who is he that is able to hinder God to puniſh them? They are not in his grace, when they hinder True believers to enter the Temple of Mecca; he protecteth only ſuch as have his fear before his eyes, but moſt of them underſtand it not. Their prayers are very light, they go hand in hand in the Temple, but ſhall one day feel the puniſhment of God, becauſe of their impiety. The unbelievers that expend their wealth to turn the People from the Law of God, ſhall have ſorrow for their expence, they ſhall be infamous, and precipitated into the fire of Hell, God ſhall ſhall ſeparate the good from the wicked, he ſhall caſt the wicked headlong into Hell fire, and they ſhall be in the number of the damned: if they repent, he will remit what is paſt, and if they return to fight againſt the Prophet, they ſhall be entreated as the firſt: kill them, to avoid ſedition, that there may be no Law in the World, but the Law of God; If they forſake their impiety, God ſhall behold their actions, if they depart from the faith, know, that God alone is your Lord, and Protector. The fifth part of the ſpoil that you ſhall gain from your Enemies, appertaineth to God, the Prophet, his Parents, Orphans, the Poor, and to Pilgrims that are in want; obſerve what is above ordained, if ye believe in God, in what we have inſpired into our * Servant, and in the day, wherein the diſtinction of the good and the bad was known at the encounter of the * two Camps: God is Omnipotent, ye were in an high place, the neareſt to Medina, your enemies were afar off, by the Vally, and the enemies Cavalry below you; had ye promiſed to give Battel, ye had tranſgreſſed your promiſe, by reaſon of the great number of Infidels; but what God will, is ſpeedily executed, he ſhall deſtroy ſuch as are wicked, having ſeen that Battel, an evident ſign of the true miſſion of the Prophet, and ſhall give life to True believers; he underſtandeth and knoweth all things, he cauſed you to ſee in a Dream your enemies in a ſmall number; had he made them to appear numerous, ye had feared to fight, but he delivered you from fear; he knoweth what is in the hearts of Men: When he cauſed you to appear in their view, he made you ſeem few in number, to accompliſh his will, all things depend on God. O ye that believe! make an Halt, when you are in view of your enemies Troops, and pray to God with affection, perhaps you ſhall be happy, obey God, and the Prophet, his Apoſtle; if diſorder and terror ſurpriſe you, you ſhall loſe your reputation; perſevere, God is with them that continue to do well. Be not like them that went out of their Houſes wit diſſembled joy, and hypocriſie, and turn the people from the right way, God knoweth all their actions; The Devil cauſed them to find pleaſure in their doings, ſaying to them, none ſhall this day obtain victory over you, I will be with you; and when they beheld the two Camps in Battalia, he returned on his ſteps, fled, and ſaid, I am innocent of the evil that you commit, * I ſee what you ſee not, I fear the Omnipotent God, he is ſevere in his puniſhments. The wicked, and ſuch as were weak in their faith, ſpeaking of the True believers, ſaid, Theſe Men glory in their Law: It was replyed to them, he that relyeth on God, ſhall find him to be more powerful than his enemies, and that he is moſt prudent in whatſoever he doth. Thou ſaweſt the Angels that ſlew the Infidels, they did beat them behind and before, and ſaid to them, taſte the torments of the fire which you have merited, God is not unjuſt to his Creatures. The people of Pharaoh were Infidels, and thoſe that preceded them, contemned the miracles and Commandments of God, but he rigorouſly chaſtiſed them, he is Omnipotent, and moſt ſevere in his puniſhments, he ſhall deſtroy them that alter the graces he hath given to the People, until they have altered the grace he hath conferred on themſelves.

Pharoahs people were Infidels, their Predeceſſors diſobeyed the Commandments of thy Lord; but we deſtroyed them becauſe of their ſin, we drowned them for that they were unjuſt; The wicked are like to beaſts, they ſhall never believe in God. Such as promiſed not to aſſiſt the unbelievers, and violate their promiſe, had not the fear of God before their eyes; if thou meet them in a journey, ſeparate thy ſelf from them, their puniſhment purſueth them, peradventure they will conſider it. If you fear that any one will betray you, and be wanting to their word, receive no promiſe from him, neither promiſe him any thing, God abhorreth Traytors: Believe not that Infidels eſcape the puniſhment of God, return with your whole ſtrength to fight againſt them; the halters of your horſes ſhall terrifie the enemies of God, and of you, and of other perſons who ye know not, but God knoweth them all. Your expence for his ſervice, ſhall be payed you, and no injuſtice ſhall be done to you. If thine enemies incline to peace, thou ſhalt do ill to incline, as they, truſt in God, he underſtandeth what they ſay, and knoweth whatſoever they do; if they deſire to betray thee, God ſhall protect thee; and all true believers endeavour to unite their hearts; but although thou ſhouldſt expend all the riches of the World, thou ſhalt not be able to unite them, God ſhall one day unite them, he is Omnipotent, and prudent in all his works. O Prophet! the protection of God ſufficeth thee, and the righteous that follow thee. Exhort the true believers to fight againſt Infidels; If ye be twenty aſſembled with reſolution and perſeverance, ye ſhall vanquiſh two hundred Infidels; if ye be an hundred, ye ſhall overthrow a thouſand; the unbelievers are ignorant; but God will lighten your burthen, he knoweth your weakneſs; if ye be an hundred true believers, ye ſhall defeat two hundred Infidels; if ye be a thouſand, you ſhall ſubdue two thouſand by the permiſſion of God, he aideth ſuch as expect his ſuccors with perſeverance. The Prophet cannot be a priſoner; he ſhall eſtabliſh himſelf on Earth with advantage, over unbelievers; Ye deſire the wealth of the Earth, and God will give you the treaſures of Heaven, he is Omnipotent and wiſe. If God had not taught you his Commandments, ye ſhould have ſuffered great torments; eat of clean beaſts that he hath permitted you to eat, and fear God, he is gracious and merciful to them that have his fear before their eyes. O Prophet! ſay to them that ſhall be priſoners in thy hands, God knoweth what is in your hearts, he ſhall reward you for what ye ſhall have loſt, and ſhall pardon your ſins; if you be converted, he is gracious and merciful. If they betray thee, they betrayed God before thee, ſeparate them from the True believers, God knoweth all things, and is moſt prudent in what he ordaineth. Such as have believed in God, as have departed from the wicked, as have employed their wealth, and perſons to fight for the Law of God; Such as have protected the Prophet, and defended him, are all protectors, and friends to each other; you ſhall have no conſideration of the alliance of the True believers, that deſert not the company of Infidels, until they be ſeparated from them. If they require of you ſuccors touching Religion, you are obliged to protect them, except againſt ſuch as have confederacy with you, God ſeeth all your actions. The Infidels protect each other, if you obey them, great diſorders ſhall enſue, and many ſeditions in the Earth. Such as have believed in God, as have deſerted the wicked, as have fought for the Law of God, as have eſtabliſhed the Prophet, and defended him againſt his Enemies, are indeed faithful and true believers, they ſhall receive from God pardon of their ſins, and exceeding great treaſures. Such as having believed in God, have departed from the wicked, and have fought with you, are yours, they ſhall be the Heirs of their Parents, God hath ſo appointed it, he knoweth all things.

CHAP. IX.

The Chapter of Converſion, containing an hundred twenty and ſeven Verſes, written at Medina.

Reader, this Chapter beginneth not as the reſt, with theſe words, In the name of God, gracious and merciful; becauſe theſe are words of Peace and Salvation, and for that in this Chapter, Mahomet commandeth to break Truce with his Enemies, and to aſſault them. Many Mahometan Doctors have entituled this the Chapter of Puniſhment, or Pain. See the Expoſition of Gelaldin, and that of Bedaoi, and Kitab el tenoin.

A Letter Patent from God, and his Prophet, to the unbelievers, with whom ye have made Truce. Travel in ſafety the ſpace of four Months, know, ye ſhall not render God impotent, and that he will lay ſhame upon your forehead. Advice for the People, at the Day of great Pilgrimage, from God, and his Prophet: God approveth not the action of them that adore Idols, his Prophet is innocent from that ſin; If ye repent, ye ſhall do well, if ye abandon the Law of God, know, ye ſhall not eſcape the puniſhment of your crime; preach to the unbelievers, that they ſhall ſuffer grievous torments, except thoſe with whom ye have made Truce, who fail not from what they have promiſed, and that protect none againſt you. Obſerve exactly until the prefixed time, what you have promiſed them, God loveth them that fear him; When the Month of Heram ſhall be paſt, kill them where you ſhall meet them, take them Slaves, detain them Priſoners, and obſerve where they paſs to lay ambuſh for them; if they be converted, if they pray at the time appointed, and pay Tythes, leave them in quiet, God is merciful to them that repent. If the Infidels demand Quarter of you, give them Quarter, to the end they may learn the word of God; teach them his Commandments, for they are ignorant. How ſhould they have Truce with God and his Prophet? If they believe neither in the one, nor the other, except them with whom you entred Truce in the Temple of Mecca? If they obſerve their promiſe to you, obſerve what ye promiſed to them, God loveth ſuch as have his fear before their eyes: How ſhall they have Truce with you? If they have advantage over you, they will reſpect neither your alliance nor confederacy; They will ſpeak well of you, and contemn you in their heart, the greateſt part of them are impious, they have preferred the riches of this World to the Commandments of God, and have hindred the People to follow his Law, as if they knew not what they did; they bear no reſpect to the True believers, wherein they are exceedingly to blame. If they turn, and make their prayers at the time appointed, if they pay Tithes, they ſhall be your Brethren in God. I teach the myſteries of faith to ſuch as have underſtanding to comprehend them, if they break their promiſe, and diſturb them of your Religion, kill their Captains, as perſons without faith, they will perhaps put an end to their impiety. Slay ſuch eſpecially that renounce their faith, who have endeavoured to drive the Prophet from Mecca, and have begun to ſlay you, will you fear them? Will ye be terrified by them? It is reaſonable that ye fear God; if ye believe in his Law, fight them, God ſhall chaſtiſe them by your hands, he ſhall render them diſhonourable, and protect you againſt them, he ſhall fortifie the hearts of True believers, and expel melancholy, he pardoneth whom he ſeeth good, knoweth all things, and is moſt prudent in what he ordaineth. Think ye to be forſaken of God, and that he diſcerneth not them that have fought gallantly for his Law, from ſuch as have adored Idols, and diſobeyed his Prophet? The True believers abandon not their Religion another time to profeſs it: God knoweth all your actions, Infidels muſt not enter into the Temple of Mecca, knowing that they are Infidels, the good works which they ſhall do in this World ſhall be unprofitable, and they ſhall dwell eternally in the fire of Hell. They that believe in God, and the Day of Judgment, that make their prayers at the time appointed, pay Tithes, and worſhip one God alone, ſhall viſit the Temples of his Divine Majeſty, and ſuch as fear the Creatures more than the Creator err from the right way; We have ordained that ſuch as ſhall bear freſh Water to Pilgrims, and them that ſhall viſit the Temple of Mecca, ſhall be in the number of them that believe in God, and the Day of Judgment. Such as fight for the faith are not all equal in graces, and merits before God, he guideth not the unjuſt. Such as have believed in God, as have departed from the wicked, and employed their wealth and perſons to fight for his Law, ſhall have a particular degree, and a particular place near to his Divine Majeſty, they ſhall be the more happy. God through his goodneſs declareth to them, that they ſhall enter into delicious Gardens, where they ſhall remain eternally, there is with God a very great reward. O ye that believe! obey not your Fathers, nor your Brothers, that love rather to follow impiety, than the faith. Such as ſhall obey them, ſhall offend exceedingly; if your Father, your Children, your Brothers, your Wives, your Parents, your Friends, the wealth that you have gained, the fear of looſing your riches, and apprehenſion of poverty, have more of power over you than God and his Prophet, and hinder you to fight for the faith, the Commandment of God ſhall be executed againſt you, he guideth not the wicked, and hath protected you in many occaſions. Remember the day of Battle of Hanin, when when ye rejoyced in the multitude of your Men, it did not advantage you, fear made you find the place too narrow for flight, and ye turned the Back as vanquiſhed: Remember, that God, at that time, put his Prophet, and the true Believers in a place of ſafety, and ſent inviſible Troops to chaſtiſe the Infidels, he pardoneth ſins as ſeemeth good to him, he is gracious and merciful. O ye that believe in God! Unbelievers are unclean, permit not that they enter into the Temple of Mecca after this year, if ye have apprehenſion of want, God ſhall enrich you with his Grace, if it pleaſe him, he is Omniſcient and moſt prudent. Fight againſt them that believe not in God, nor the Day of Judgment, that forbid not to act what God hath prohibited, and his Prophet hath forbidden, and that judge not according to the Law of truth, wherein they were inſtructed, who heretofore received the written Law: they chuſe rather to pay Tribute, than to be converted, therefore are they contemptible. The Jews have ſaid, that the Son of God is moſt powerful; the Chriſtians, that the Meſſiah is the Son of God; their words are like to the words of the Infidels that preceded them, but God ſhall lay upon them his curſe. Conſider how they blaſpheme; they adore their Doctors, and Prieſts, and the Meſſiah alſo, the Son of Mary; who commanded them to worſhip one God alone, there is but one ſole God: praiſed be God, there is nothing equal to him; they would extinguiſh the light of God with their mouth, but he ſhall not ſuffer them; he ſhall cauſe it to appear, notwithſtanding it be vexatious to the Infidels. He hath ſent his Prophet to conduct Men into the right way, to preach the Law of Truth, and to make it eminent above all other Laws of the World, againſt the Will of Idolaters. O ye that truly believe! many of the Doctors and Prieſts eat unprofitably the ſubſtance of the people, and divert them from the Law of God: declare to ſuch as treaſure up, and expend nothing in Pious works, they ſhall ſuffer great torments at the day when the fire of Hell ſhall be kindled upon them, it ſhall burn their Forehead, ſides, and back, it ſhall be ſaid to them, behold the wealth which ye have treaſured up for your Souls, taſte the fruits of your Treaſures, which ye have amaſſed. When God created the Heaven and the Earth, he ordained the year of twelve Months, amongſt which four are priviledged. Offend not God, eſpecially in thoſe Months; fight at all times againſt Unbelievers, as they will fight againſt you, and know that God is with them that have his fear before their eyes. Sloth and forgetfulneſs abound in impiety; God miſleadeth through negligence the Unbelievers, that prefer one Month to another, in imitation of what is commanded: they permit to do what God hath forbidden, and delight in the Malice of their Actions, but God is not the guide of the wicked. O ye that believe! wherefore have ye inclined to the Earth? Why did ye prefer the wealth of this World to that of Paradiſe; when you were commanded to go forth of your Houſes to fight for the Law of God? The Riches of this World are contemptible, if you conſider thoſe of Heaven; if you leave not your Houſes to fight with the Prophet, God ſhall ſeverely puniſh you, and put other Perſons in your places; you ſhall not protect the Prophet, God alone is his Protector; he protected him when he went out of Mecca; he, with his Companion, they being both in a Cave, he ſaid to his Companion, afflict not thy ſelf, God is with us; He hath defended, and ſuccoured us by inviſible Troops; he hath debaſed the word of Unbelievers, and exalted that of true Believers; he is Omnipotent and wiſe. Fight according to your power for the Law of God, you ſhall do well if you have knowledge to underſtand it; if you require the wealth of this World, Honour, and Reputation, they are not far from you, they follow you at hand, but the puniſhment of Crimes and Miſery are as yet far remote of Infidels; they ſwear by the Name of God, that they were unable to go out of Mecca with the Prophet, in which they deſtroy their Souls, for God knoweth them to be Lyars: excuſe them not, that thou knoweſt not them that ſpoke truth, and thoſe that were Lyars. True Believers will not excuſe themſelves from fighting, or employing their wealth and Perſons for the Law of God; he knoweth ſuch as fear him. They that believe not in God, neither the Day of Judgment, refuſe to go with thee, they doubt the Myſteries of Faith, but ſhall continue in their doubt, to their confuſion; had they inclined to go out againſt the Enemy, they had Arms to perform it; God contemned their going out, rendred them negligent, and cauſed them to remain with the ſick, the Women, and Children; had they gone forth with you, they had brought with them more of diſorder than affection to the Service of his Divine Majeſty; they hate you, nevertheleſs you hearken to them: God knoweth them that are to blame, they hated thee heretofore, accuſed thee of their miſchief, until, through the permiſſion of God, the truth appeared againſt their Will; many of them ſaid, excuſe us, and ſcandalize us not, and they fell themſelves into ſcandal, and impiety: but Hell is the Habitation of thoſe wicked Perſons; if good happen to you, they are diſcontented; if evil befal you, they ſay, they took heed to themſelves, and foreſaw it, and depart from you with joy; ſay unto them, nothing befel us, but what God had ordained, he is our Lord; all true Believers are reſigned to the Will of his Divine Majeſty; ſay unto them, will ye expect, that one of the two Graces (either Victory, or Martyrdom) befal us? we will expect with you, until God hath chaſtiſed you by our hands; expect, we will expect with you: ſay unto them, expend through force or affection for the glory of God; your works ſhall not be accepted of him, becauſe you are Infidels, your Alms ſhall be unprofitable, for that you believe not in God, nor in his Prophet; ye praiſe not God, but with negligence, and with regret for what you ſpend for his Service. Be not then amazed at the quantity of their Treaſures, neither the number of their Children; God ſhall make uſe of them to puniſh them in this World, and ſhall deſtroy them with their wickedneſs. They ſwear by the name of God, that they are yours, and are not, and fear to be diſcovered; if they meet with any Den, Cave, or Houſe, wherein to hide them, they ſpeedily repair thither. There be of them that ſay, it is ignominious to give Alms; if they give Alms it is with Choler; if they gave them for the love of God and his Prophet, they would ſay, God is our Benefactor; he will give us through his Grace, and to the Prophet, whatſoever ſhall be neceſſary, our hope is in him. Alms are appointed for the poor, for them that recommend themſelves to God, to redeem Slaves, for ſuch as are in Debt, and neceſſitous, God knoweth all things, and is moſt prudent in what he ordaineth. There be among them, who deprave the Prophet, and ſay, he ſhall underſtand what we ſay; ſay unto them, ſhould it be to you a great advantage to hear well? The Prophet believeth in God, and teacheth true Believers the Truth; the mercy of God is for them that believe in his Divine Majeſty; Such as detract from the Prophet, ſhall feel grievous torments; they ſwear by the Name of God, that they deſire to content God, and his Prophet; it is reaſonable that they content them, if they be good Men; know they not, that ſuch as tranſgreſs the Will of God, and that of his Prophet, ſhall be eternally damned? The wicked fear leſt God ſhould diſcover to the righteous the Malice that they conceal in their Souls, and that they contemn them; Say unto them, ye ſhall be contemned, for God bringeth to light what you fear. If you queſtion them concerning what they ſay, they will anſwer for excuſe, that they had no evil intent, and that they but jeaſt; ſay unto them, will you jeaſt with God, with his Commandments, and his Prophets? There is none excuſe for you, ye are truely impious; if God pardon any one of you, he ſhall rigorouſly puniſh ſuch as perſiſt to offend him. The wicked teach among them impiety to their Poſterity, they depart from the truth; they go hand in hand, and agree to diſobey God; they forget God, and God forgetteth them; he hath prepared Hell for them, where they ſhall remain eternally; he hath Curſed them, and they ſhall feel the torment of infinite pains. The wicked that were before you, ſhall undergo them like you, they were more powerful than you, they poſſeſſed ſtore of wealth, and had many Children, they poſſeſſed part of their ſubſtance, and ye poſſeſs yours, as did your Predeceſſours; ye were plunged in impiety, as they were plunged; but the good works that they have done in this World, ſhall be to them unprofitable, and at the Day of Judgment, they ſhall be in the number of the miſerable. Have they not known the Hiſtory of their Predeceſſours; the Hiſtory of the people of Noah, of Aad, of Temod, of Abraham, and the Cities that were ſubverted? The Prophets preached to them the Commandments of God, who did to them no injuſtice; they drew affliction on themſelves, through the Enormity of their Crimes. The true Believers mutually obey each other; they command to do what things are honeſt, prohibit to act what is not approved; they make their Prayers at the time appointed, diſtribute Tithes, obey God and his Prophet; God ſhall remit to them their ſins, he is Omnipotent, and hath promiſed to them Gardens, wherein flow many Rivers, and an Habitation full of content in Eden; he hath promiſed them his Grace, which is the perfection of felicity. O Prophet! fight againſt the Infidels, fortifie thy ſelf againſt them, Hell ſhall be their Habitation; they ſhall ſwear by the Name of God, that they have not traduced thee; nevertheleſs they have detracted and uttered words full of impiety: they have denied to have been enriched through the grace of God, and of his Prophet; if they turn, they ſhall do well; if they abandon the Faith, God ſhall puniſh them in this World, and in the other, with grievous torments, and on Earth they ſhall find no Protector; there be of them, who have inclined to capitulate with God, and have ſaid, if God doth good to us, we will believe in him; when he did good to them, they were Niggards, and avaritious; they have erred, and diſobeyed his Commandments, but he chaſtiſed them, becauſe of their impiety; he hath imprinted it in their hearts until the Day of Judgment, for that they have diſobeyed him, becauſe they violated their Promiſes, and by reaſon of their Lies; know they not that God underſtandeth what they conceal in their hearts? and that he knoweth what is preſent, paſt, and future? There be of them, who deride the true Believers, that give Alms according to their power; God ſhall deride them, and they ſhall feel the rigour of eternal pains; implore pardon for them, or implore it not, when thou ſhalt beg ſixty and ten times pardon for them, God ſhall not pardon them, becauſe they are ingrateful towards him, and his Prophet, God doth not guide them that diſobey him; they rejoyced to be left behind the Prophet, when he went to fight for the Service of God, they had an averſion to fight, and employ their Perſons and Goods for the Service of his Divine Majeſty; they ſaid, we will not go out of our Houſes with this heat; ſay to them, Hell is much more hot, could you comprehend; they ſhall laugh a little in this World, and ſhall weep much in the other, for a puniſhment of their ſins. If thou meet them, and they demand permiſſion to go out with thee, to fight for the Faith; ſay unto them, you ſhall not go out, neither ſhall ye ever fight againſt the Enemy with me, ye were ſlothful and Cowards the firſt time, remain with the Unbelievers; pray not for them after their Death, and ſtay not at their Tombs, becauſe they believed neither in God, nor his Prophet, and died in their wickedneſs. Be thou not aſtoniſhed, neither at the abundance of their wealth, nor the number of their Children, God will make uſe of them, to chaſtiſe them in this World, and will deſtroy them in their impiety. When command was ſent to them to believe in God, and fight with his Prophet, the moſt powerful among them deſired thee to excuſe them, and ſaid, leave us with them that continue in their Houſes, and deſire to remain with the ſick, the Women and little Children: God hardened their hearts, and they ſhall never learn the truth. The Prophet and true Believers that were with them, and fought, and employed their Perſons, and goods for the Service of God, ſhall be bleſſed; he hath prepared for them Gardens, wherein flow many Rivers, with perfection of felicity. Some of the Arabians came to excuſe themſelves of going to the War, and ſuch as renounced God and the Prophet, remained in their Houſes, but they ſhall reſent grievous torments, becauſe of their wickedneſs; the ſick, the impotent, and thoſe that want means to be preſent at the War, offend not God in abiding in their Houſes, provided they be faithful to his Divine Majeſty, and his Prophet. The righteous are not obliged to do but what is in their power, God ſhall be to them gracious and merciful. Such as repaired to thee to fight, and whom thou didſt diſmiſs for want of occaſion, did not offend God; they returned to their Houſes with tears in their eyes, with diſcontent to have wanted means to employ in the Service of his Divine Majeſty, the War is appointed to ſuch as intreat thee to exempt them that are rich, and and have wealth to ſubſiſt, they require leave to remain with their Wives and Children, God hath hardned their hearts, and they know it not; they ſhall come to excuſe themſelves, when thou ſhalt meet them; Say unto them, excuſe not your ſelves, I do not believe you, God hath given us to underſtand your News, he and his Prophet likewiſe hath rendred your good works vain and unprofitable; ye ſhall one day appear before him that knoweth what is paſt, preſent, and future, he ſhall cauſe you to remember whatſoever you have done, and ſhall puniſh you according to your demerits. They ſhall conjure you by the Name of God, when you approach them, to depart from them; depart from them, they are full of uncleanneſs, Hell ſhall be their Habitation, where they ſhall be tormented for their Crimes. They ſhall beſeech you to love them; if you love them, know, that God abhorreth them that diſobey him: The Arabians, who obſerve not the Precepts which God hath ſent to his Prophet; are ye more impious and ingrateful? God knoweth all things, and is moſt prudent. There be Perſons among the Arabians, who account it loſt Money that they expend for the Service of God, and protract their departure, to retard yours, and make you to attend; the Wheel of miſery is upon them, God underſtandeth whatever they ſay; and knoweth all their Actions; there be among them who believe in God, and the Day of Judgment; they eſteem that their expence for the Service of God draweth them nigh to his Divine Majeſty, and they invite the Prophet to pray for them, God ſhall give them his mercy, he is gracious and merciful to them that obey him. They that firſt arrived at Medina, the firſt of them that went out of Mecca, to depart from the wicked, ſuch as were at the Battel of Beder, and ſuch as imitated them in well doing, ſhall injoy the Grace of God, he hath prepared for them Gardens, wherein flow many Rivers, with ſupreme felicity. There be Arabians about you, and in Medina, they affect impiety; you know them not, but I know them all, I will chaſtiſe them twice on Earth, (to wit, through Ignominy and death) and they ſhall feel in the other World exceeding great torments. Others there be, that confeſs their ſins, and who do good and evil works; peradventure God will pardon them, he is altogether gracious and merciful; take of their ſubſtance for Alms, thou ſhalt render them righteous, and ſhalt purifie them, pray for them, thy Prayers ſhall procure them the mercy of God, he underſtandeth and knoweth all things. Know they not, that God accepteth the converſion of his Creatures, that their Alms are pleaſing to him, and that he is gracious and merciful? Say unto them, do what ſhall pleaſe you; God, his Prophet, and the true Believers ſhall ſee what you do, you ſhall one day appear before him, who knoweth the preſent, paſt, and future; he ſhall make you to know whatſoever ye have done, and ſhall chaſtiſe you after your demerits. There be others that attend the pleaſure of God, either his grace, or his wrath, his puniſhment, or his mercy, God underſtandeth what is in their Souls, and is moſt wiſe. They that eſteemed, that the Temple built by Unbelievers, to reduce the righteous, to diſtinguiſh the wicked from the good, and to obſerve ſuch as had before fought againſt God, and againſt his Prophet, is the Temple of his Divine Majeſty, ſwear that they deſire to do well, and that their intention is moſt honeſt, but they are Lyars, and God ſhall be witneſs of their falſhood; make not thy Prayers in that Temple, make thy Prayers in the Temple founded on the fear of God, that is reaſonable; there be Perſons in that Temple who deſire to be purified, God loveth ſuch as have a clean Soul; Who is he that buildeth beſt, he that foundeth his building upon the fear of God, or he who layeth the Foundation of his building upon the brink of a Ditch of Sand, which falleth, and ruineth it ſelf? They who eſteem the Temple built by Unbelievers, to ſeduce the people, to be the Temple of God, ſhall be with that Temple, and with the Infidels, that built it, burnt in the fire of Hell; God guideth not the unjuſt, their building ſhall ſerve only to torment them, God knoweth their deſign; and is moſt wiſe; he purchaſeth of true Believers their Souls and Goods, and giveth them Paradiſe; if they be ſlain, or if they ſlay when they ſhall fight for the Faith, they ſhall have what he hath promiſed to them in the Old Teſtament, the Goſpel, and in the Alcoran: Who better ſatisfieth what he hath promiſed, than God? Declare to them that they have made a good purchace, they have gained the height of Felicity. Such as are firm in their Faith, who pray, honour, and worſhip God, who obſerve his Commandments, and all true Believers, ſhall enjoy the delights of Paradiſe, with all manner of content. The Prophet, and true Believers ought not to ask pardon of God for Infidels, notwithſtanding they be their Parents; having had knowledge that they are damned, becauſe of their infidelity. Abraham prayed not for his Father, untill he had promiſed him to adore one God alone; when he knew his Father to be an Enemy to God, he declared himſelf an Enemy to his ſin, he ceaſed praying for him, although he was exceeding charitable, and patient in his afflictions. God miſ-leadeth not them that he hath put into the right way, he giveth them to underſtand what they ought to do, he knoweth them that deſerve to be ſeduced, and ſuch as merit to be guided through the right way. The Kingdom of Heaven and Earth is Gods, he giveth life and death to whom he ſeeth good: Who except God ſhall protect you? he hath given his Grace to the Prophet, and to ſuch as followed him in his affliction, although it wanted but a little, that the hearts of many of them inclined not to the party of the Unbelievers, but he pardoneth them; he hath been gracious and merciful to three Perſons who deſerted the Prophet, and were ſorry for their Errour, they knew there was no ſure refuge, but in God, he pardoned them, when they were converted, he is gracious and merciful to ſuch as repent. O ye that believe! Fear God, be righteous; the Inhabitants of Medina, and the Arabians, that dwell about that City, ought not to contradict the Will of the Prophet of God, neither diſlike what he approveth, becauſe they have endured neither thirſt, nor pain, nor anguiſh for the Service of his Divine Majeſty; they have not been trampled under foot by their Enemies, they ſhall irritate the Infidels, and ſhall receive no diſpleaſure; on the contrary, they ſhall acquire merit, and perform a good work. God doth not deprive them of recompence that do well, he ſhall write down their expence for his Service, and the number of the Idols that they ſhall deſtroy, for reward of their good works. It is not neceſſary that all the faithful go to the War, it is ſufficient, that of every Lineage, and of every Nation there go a party, while the reſt ſhall learn the Laws and Myſteries of Faith, to inſtruct their Companions, when they ſhall return from their Voyage, perhaps they will fear the chaſtiſement of God. O ye that believe in God! fight againſt them that would cauſe you to be defiled in impiety, be valiant, and know that God is with them that have his fear before their eyes. When God cauſed to deſcend from Heaven, any Chapter of the Alcoran, ſome of them ſaid, through diſdain, that will encreaſe the Faith of this people. Certainly it augmenteth the Faith of true Believers, it rejoyceth them, and enflameth the wrath of his Divine Majeſty upon Infidels, who perſiſt in their pollutions, and dye in their wickedneſs. They know not that God tryeth the good, once, or twice a year, they will not be converted, it is loſt time to preach to them. When God ſent from Heaven any Chapter of the Alcoran, they beheld each others, and ſaid, doth any one ſee us? They returned in their impiety, and God turned their heart from the right way, for that they would not learn the Truth. God hath ſent you a Prophet of your own Nation, who, with Paſſion, deſireth to deliver you from your obſtinacy, and is extreamly affected to inſtruct you in the way of Salvation, God is mild, and pitiful towards true Believers. If they abandon the Faith, ſay unto them, God is my Protector, there is but one ſole God, I recommend my ſelf to the Will of his Divine Majeſty, he is the Lord of the Majeſtick Throne.

CHAP. X.

The Chapter of Jonas, containing an hundred and nine Verſes written at Mecca.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful; I am God the merciful. The Precepts contained in this Book proceed from the Omnipotent; Doth the people wonder that we have inſpired a Man to preach to the wicked the torments of Hell, and to declare to true Believers, that they ſhall find true what their Lord to them hath promiſed? The wicked ſay, that it is but Sorcery and enchantment. Certainly God is your Lord, who created Heaven and Earth in ſix days, and ſitteth on his Thone, diſpoſing all things; no Man interceedeth for his Neighbour without his permiſſion, he is your God and your Lord, worſhip him alone, will ye not conſider it? you all ſhall be one day aſſembled before him; he promiſed with truth, that he will cauſe Men to dye, and raiſe them again, to recompence ſuch as have believed in his Law, and done good works: The Unbelievers ſhall drink a boyling drink, and ſhall endure great torments, becauſe of their impiety. He it is that gave light to the Sun, and brightneſs to the Moon, that created the ſigns to know the number of years, the account of Months, and of whatſoever he hath created, theſe things teach with truth, the Miracles of his Divine Majeſty, to ſuch as have knowledge to underſtand them; the difference of Day and of Night, and what God hath created in Heaven and in Earth, are marks of his Unity to them that have his fear before their eyes. They who believe there is no Reſurrection, ſuch as place their content in the wealth of this World, they that truſt in their Riches, and that are ignorant of the Commandments of God ſhall be precipitated into the fire of Hell, becauſe of their ſins, and the true Believers ſhall be conducted by his Divine Majeſty into delicious Gardens, wherein flow many Rivers, they ſhall there find whatſoever they ſhall deſire, and ſhall ſay at the beginning of their Prayers, praiſed be God; afterwards they ſhall ſay, Salvation be to God; and at the end of their Prayers, praiſe be to God, Lord of the Univerſe. Although God doth ſometimes ſuddenly chaſtiſe Men, he always attendeth the time of their Deſtiny. I will leave them that ſhall not believe in the Reſurrection, in their Errours, to their confuſion; When Man is afflicted, he invoketh us ſtanding, ſitting, lying, and in all poſtures, and when we have delivered him from his affliction, he perſiſteth in his wickedneſs. It ſeemeth good to the wicked to do in this manner, we deſtroyed their Predeceſſours when they believed not in the Prophets, neither obeyed the Precepts that we ſent them, and have eſtabliſhed you on the Earth in their place after them, to ſee your Deportments. When thou teacheſt our Commandments to them that believe not in the Reſurrection; they ſay, that the Precepts of the Alcoran are altogether contrary to what thou preacheſt, and that thou haſt altered them; Say unto them, I have no Will to alter them of my ſelf, I do but what is inſpired into me of God, I fear to be puniſhed at the Day of Judgment, ſhould I diſobey his Divine Majeſty; Say unto them, Had it pleaſed God, I had neither read, nor taught you his Commandments, I ſojourned a long time with you, before I taught you, will you not learn them? Who is more unjuſt than he that blaſphemeth? God doth not aid the Infidels that worſhip what can neither benefit nor hurt them, and ſay, their Idols ſhall intercede for them; will you inſtruct God in any thing that he knoweth not, of what is in Heaven or in Earth? Praiſed be God, he hath no Companion. Men were all of one Religion before Infidelity took place, and if God had not ſaid that he would defer the puniſhment of the wicked until the Day of Judgment, he had already deſtroyed them in this World, becauſe of their impiety; They ſay, we will not believe in the Prophet, if God make not ſome Miracles to appear in him; Say unto them, God knoweth what ſhall be; expect, I will expect with you: When we gave them to taſte of content after their affliction, they had ſubtilty upon our Commandments: Say unto them, God is more ſubtile than you, his Meſſengers ſhall write your ſubtilties; he it is that made Men to travel upon the Earth and Sea; It is he that ſendeth them a favourable wind to rejoyce them in their Ships; when Tempeſt ſurprizeth them, they believe that the Waves will overwhelm them, then they invoke God, with deſire to embrace his Law, and ſay, if God doth deliver us from this danger, we will believe in his Unity, and return him thanks for this mercy; and being delivered from peril,

peril, perſiſt in their wickedneſs. O People! you draw miſchief on your ſelves, you require nothing but the wealth of this World, you all ſhall appear before us to be judged according to your works; the life of the World is like to the Rain, which we cauſe to deſcend from Heaven, it cauſeth with mixture all ſorts of herbage to ſpring forth, for the nouriſhment of Men, and Beaſts. When the Earth is adorned with Flowers, and enriched with its Fruits, the Inhabitants oftentimes believe they have the power to cauſe their production; then ſend we our chaſtiſements Day and Night upon the Earth, and render it as mown, and as if the Day before it had brought no Fruit. Thus do I diſcover Myſteries to ſuch as have knowledge to comprehend them. They beg their Salvation of God; he ſaveth and putteth in the way of Salvation whom it pleaſeth him. He ſhall not cover the Viſage of them that have done good works, they ſhall appear without ſhame, and dwell in Paradiſe, where they ſhall remain eternally; and ſuch as ſhall have done evil ſhall be puniſhed after their demerits, they ſhall be covered with ſhame, and none ſhall be able to protect them, they ſhall be as if a great part of the obſcurity of the Night had covered their countenance, they ſhall be condemned to the fire of Hell, where they ſhall dwell eternally. Think on the Day, wherein we will aſſemble all the World, and will ſay to the Infidels, Hell ſhall be your habitation; where be the Idols you adored? we have ſeparated you from each other. Their Idols ſhall ſay to them, You have not worſhipped us, God is witneſs; was there any thing between us and you, that rendred us ignorant of your adorations? That Day ſhall every one ſee what he hath done, and know that God is Truth it ſelf; their Idols ſhall be ſeparated far from them, and they ſhall underſtand their blaſphemies. Say unto them, who enricheth you with the wealth of Heaven and Earth? Who cauſeth life to come out of death, and death out of life? Who diſpoſeth all things in the World? They ſhall anſwer, it is God: Say unto them, why have you not therefore his fear before your eyes? God is indeed your Lord; what is there after the Truth, but falſhood? How will you depart from his Law? his Word ſhall be accompliſhed againſt Infidels. Say unto them, Have your Idols the power to cauſe Men to die, and to make them riſe again? God cauſeth them to die, and to riſe again; how ſhall they be able to blaſpheme after theſe reaſons? Say unto them, Are your Idols able to conduct you into the right way? God guideth the People into the way of Salvation; who ought rather to be followed, he that guideth the People into the right way, or he that miſleadeth them? What reaſon have ye to follow the evil way? The greateſt part of them follow but their own opinion, but their opinion is not conformable to the Truth; God knoweth all their actions, there is no falſhood in the Alcoran, it confirmeth the ancient Scriptures, and perſpicuouſly explaineth them; there is no doubt, but it proceedeth from the Lord of the Univerſe. They ſay Mahomet hath invented this Book; ſay unto them, Come and bring any thing that reſembleth it in Doctrine and Eloquence, and call the Idols which ye adore, we ſhall ſee if you are ſincere; on the contrary, they have blaſphemed, and have talked of what they underſtood not, when they heard the expoſition of the Alcoran: Thus did their Predeceſſors; but conſider what is the end of the unjuſt; There be among them, who will believe in this Book, and others that will not believe; Thy Lord knoweth them that defile the Earth; if they ſlander thee, ſay unto them, I will anſwer with my actions, and ye ſhall anſwer with yours, ye are innocent of what I act, and I am innocent of what ye do. There be perſons among them that have inclination to hear thee, but art thou able to cauſe the deaf to hear? Should they not be deaf, they would learn nothing; Others there be, who look toward thee, but art thou able to guide the blind? ſhould they ſee clearly, they would not follow the right way; God doth no injuſtice to Men, they do injury to themſelves, through the enormity of their offences. I will cauſe them to riſe again at the Day of Judgment, as if they had remained but one hour of a day in the Grave; they ſhall know each other, and the wicked who have not believed in the Reſurrection, ſhall be damned: I will ſhew thee many of them whom I will chaſtiſe; I will cauſe thee to die before they be chaſtiſed, and they all ſhall appear before me to be judged; God is witneſs of their actions, he ſhall puniſh them according to their demerits; every Nation of the World hath had a Prophet ſent from God, who hath judged with reaſon, and without injuſtice, the differences that were among them touching Religion: They have ſaid, at what time ſhall the wrath of God appear? Say unto them, I, of my ſelf, can neither procure good nor evil, if God doth not permit it; every one hath his deſtiny, when the time of their deſtiny arriveth, they can neither retard, or advance it one hour. Have ye conſidered the puniſhment which God heretofore ſent, by day, and by night againſt the wicked? When ye felt it, ye believed it, and fell into it headlong. It ſhall be ſaid to the wicked at the Day of Judgment, taſte eternal torments, ſhall you not be puniſhed according to your demerits? They will aſk of thee, if the pains denounced againſt the wicked, and if the Reſurrection be matters of Truth? Say unto them, yes, my Lord is moſt exact in his words, and all the Treaſures of the World ſhall not be able to redeem one Soul. They ſhall repent of their ſins, when they ſhall feel the puniſhment of their offences, but ſhall be condemned without injuſtice; whatſoever is in Heaven and in Earth appertaineth to God, he is exact in his Promiſe, yet the greateſt part of the World do not know him. He it is who cauſeth to die, and giveth life, and ſhall aſſemble Men at the Day of Judgment. O People! God hath ſent you inſtructions, and remedies for your infirmities; he hath ſent a guide to conduct true believers into the way of his mercy; it ſhall be to them of more advantage, than the treaſures that they accumulate: Have ye conſidered the good things which he hath created for you? Ye have appointed one part to be eaten, and have prohibited to eat of another: Hath God permitted you to blaſpheme againſt him? The opinion of ſuch as blaſpheme againſt God, ſhall be but miſery at the Day of Judgment; God is full of goodneſs for the people, but moſt of them are ingrateful. In whatſoever place thou art, whether thou teach what is contained in the Alcoran, or whether thou labour, I am always preſent, nothing is concealed from thy Lord, of whatſoever is in Heaven and Earth; be it great or little, all is written in the intelligible Book, that explaineth all things. There needeth no fear for ſuch as recommend themſelves to God, they ſhall be exempt from the pains of Hell. The true believers who have his fear before their eyes, ſhall ſuffer no torments in the other World; it is declared to them on Earth, that they ſhall have all content, the word of God admits of no alteration; they ſhall enjoy perfection of felicity in Paradiſe. Afflict not thy ſelf for the words of the impious, vertue proceedeth from God, he underſtandeth, and knoweth all things; whatſoever is in Heaven and in Earth appertaineth to him: They who worſhip Idols, follow but their opinion, and are lyars; God hath created the night for repoſe, and the day for labour; ſuch as hear his Word, find therein marks of his Omnipotency. They have ſaid, Do ye believe that God hath a Son? Praiſed be God, he is moſt rich, and hath no need of any perſon, he poſſeſſeth whatſoever is in Heaven, and Earth; you have no reaſon in what ye alledge; will you ſpeak of God what ye know not? God doth not aid in this World them that blaſpheme againſt him, he ſhall cauſe them to feel after their death great torments, becauſe of their impiety: Inſtruct them in the Hiſtory of Noah, how he ſpake to his People, and ſaid, O People! if my abode with you, and the preaching of the Commandments of God be irkſom to you, know, that all my ſupport is in God; aſſemble your Doctors, with your Idols, and conceal not what ye do; go whither you will, ye ſhall find none to protect you; if ye contemn my inſtructions, I require not of you a reward for my pains; I deſire to receive of none other than God the Omnipotent, and recommend my ſelf to the will of his Divine Majeſty. They ſlandered Noah, then did we ſave him in the Ark, and them that were with him; we prolonged their poſterity on Earth, and drowned the wicked; conſider the end of ſuch as heard the Word of God, and contemned it. We ſent to them other Prophets after Noah, they made them to ſee Miracles, and gave them moſt ſalutary inſtructions; but they did not believe in what they had no will before to believe. Thus I harden the heart of the wicked. We after them, ſent Moſes to Pharoah, and his Subjects, with our miracles they aroſe againſt our Commandments, when the truth was preached to them, and ſaid, it was but Magick and Enchantment. Moſes ſaid to them, Will you ſay that the Truth is Sorcery? God doth not aſſiſt Magicians and Sorcerers; they ſaid, Art thou, with thy Brother, come to divert us from the Religion of our Fathers, and to be eſteemed on Earth? We will believe in thy words. Then Pharaoh commanded to ſummon the moſt skilful of his Magicians; they being aſſembled, Moſes ſaid to them, caſt down what ye have a will to caſt down on the ground; having caſt down their Cords and Staves, Moſes ſaid to them, know ye none other thing but Magick? God ſhall render it vain, and unprofitable; he abhoreth ſuch as defile the Earth, he confirmeth the Truth through his Word, although it be againſt the will of the wicked; Few Men believed in Moſes, becauſe of their fear to diſpleaſe Pharaoh, and his Miniſters; Pharaoh was powerful on Earth, and in the number of the wicked. Moſes ſaid, O People! if ye believe in God, reſign your ſelves to his will; they anſwered, All our confidence is in God; Lord, do not thou abandon us to the malice of the unjuſt; deliver us through thy mercy from the hands of Infidels. We inſpired Moſes and his Brother to dwell ſome time in Egypt with their people, and to make Oratories in their Houſes, therein to make their prayers, and preach to true believers. Lord, ſaid Moſes, thou haſt enriched Pharaoh and his people in this World; they go aſtray from the way of thy Law; confound their riches, and harden your hearts, they will not believe until they ſee thy judgments, and feel the effect of thy wrath; he ſaid, I have heard the prayers of you both; be faithful in your Embaſſie, and follow not the way of the ignorant. We gave paſſage through the Sea to the Children of Iſrael; Pharaoh purſued them with hatred and envy, until his people were drowned. Then ſaid Pharaoh, believe there is none other God, but the God of the Children of Iſrael, and I wholly recommend my ſelf to his Will. Thou doſt now believe in God, O Pharaoh! and wert before diſobedient to his Commands, filling the Earth with they enormities, I have delivered thee from this peril, that thou maiſt be an example to poſterity; for many among the people are ignorant of my Omnipotency. We gave the Children of Iſrael to dwell in places full of delights, and enriched them with the good things of the Earth; they knew the differences that aroſe among them touching Religion, thy Lord ſhall judge them at the Day of Judgment. If thou doubteſt what we have taught thee, repair to them that have read the Scripture before thee; what thy Lord hath taught thee is moſt true; be not thou of them that doubt, neither of ſuch as derogate from the Commandments of God, thou ſhalt be in the number of the wretched. Thoſe whom God will chaſtiſe, ſhall not believe in his Divine Majeſty, ſhould they behold all the miracles of the World, until they ſee the torments of Hell. The faith is exceeding profitable to the Cities that have received it; when the Inhabitants of the City of Jonas embraced it, we delivered them from our puniſhment, we delivered them from ignominy, and enriched them until the time appointed; if it pleaſed thy Lord, all the World ſhould believe in him; wilt thou abhor the People until they believe in God? No Man can embrace the faith without his permiſſion, he ſendeth his indignation againſt them that diſobey his Commandments: Say unto them, Conſider all that is in Heaven and Earth, miracles and preaching are of no uſe to ſuch as will not believe; ſhall they expect what their Predeceſſors expected? Say unto them, expect I will expect with you. I will deliver my Prophets, and the true believers, from the torments of Hell, it is reaſonable that I deliver them that obey my Commandments. O People! who cauſeth you to doubt of the Law which I teach you? I will not worſhip the Idols that you adore, I worſhip one God alone, who ſhall cauſe you all to dye; I will embrace his Law, it commandeth to profeſs his Unity, I am not of them that ſay, he hath a Companion equal to him. Adore not what can neither benefit, nor hurt thee, if thou do it, thou ſhalt be in the number of the unjuſt. If God will afflict thee, none can deliver thee from affliction; if God will do good to thee, none can deprive thee of his grace, he hath given it to whom ſeemeth good to himſelf, he is gracious and merciful. O people! God teacheth you the truth; whoſoever ſhall follow the right way, ſhall ſave his Soul, and whoſoever ſhall go aſtray, ſhall deſtroy it. I am not your Tutor, I do but what is inſpired into me; I have patience in my perſeverance, I will expect the judgment of God, there is no better Judge than he.

CHAP. XI.

The Chapter of Hod, containing an hundred twenty and three Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the name of God, gracious and merciful: I am the merciful God. The ſigns contained in this Book, are moſt true, they proceed from the moſt wiſe, who knoweth all things. Worſhip ye but one God alone, I preach to you from him the torments of Hell, and declare the Joys of Paradiſe, that ye may implore pardon of his Divine Majeſty, and be converted; he ſhall give you an happy Life in the World, until the time appointed, and ſhall reward every one according to his works. I fear, leſt you ſhould be chaſtiſed at the Day of Judgment; if you forſake the right way, you all ſhall be aſſembled before God to be judged. The heart of the impious inclined to hatred of the Prophet, and they would have concealed themſelves for ſome time from God; they are covered with their garments, that they may not be known, but God knoweth what is in their Souls, he underſtandeth whatſoever they conceal, and whatſoever they make manifeſt. All the Creatures of the World live of his grace, he knoweth the place of their repair, and the place where they muſt die, all is written in an intelligible Book, that explaineth all things. He it is that created Heaven and Earth in ſix days, his Throne was before upon the Waters (the Alcoran) exhorteth you to well-doing. If thou ſaiſt to the wicked, that they ſhall riſe again after their Death, they will ſay, it is but Witchcraft and Sorcery; if we retard ſome time to chaſtiſe them, they ſay, there is no puniſhment for their crimes; but they ſhall not avoid it, in the day when it ſhall appear, and they ſhall feel the rigour of the pains which they contemn. If we confer riches, and health on the impious, and deprive them of them, they deſpair in their impiety; if we give them good after their evil, they ſay, miſery hath forſaken them, they rejoyce, and become arrogant. Such as are humble and patient in their afflictions, and do good works, ſhall obtain pardon of their ſins, and a very great reward. Perhaps thou wilt forget to teach ſomething of what I have inſpired into thee, and be afflicted, becauſe they ſay, that what thou ſpeakeſt ſhall bring thee no profit. Certainly, thou art ſent only to reprove them of their ſin, thy Lord is Omnipotent, and ſhall chaſtiſe them after their demerits. Aſſuredly, they will ſay, thou haſt * forged the Alcoran, and that it is of thy invention; Say unto them, Come and bring with you ten Chapters of your invention, like to the Alcoran in inſtruction and eloquence, and call to your aid the Idols that ye adore; if you be righteous, if they hear not your prayers, neither afford you ſuccours, know then, that the Alcoran deſcended from Heaven, through Gods permiſſion, and that there is but one ſole God, will ye not truſt in him? I will beſtow the riches and honours of the Earth, on many perſons that effect them, and in the end they ſhall be confined in the fire of Hell, and the good works that they ſhall do in this World, ſhall be unprofitable in the other. They who obſerve what God hath ordained, ſtudy the Alcoran, and believe that it proceedeth from his Divine Majeſty, to teach the right way, and to obtain his mercy, as before it, was the Book of Moſes. Such as ſhall believe in the Alcoran, ſhall be happy, doubtleſs the fire of Hell is prepared for the Infidels who will not believe therein, but the greateſt part of the World is incredulous: who is more impious than they that blaſpheme againſt God? Such Men ſhall not ſee his face; the Angels ſhall ſay, at the Day of Judgment, behold them that have been impious, a curſe is upon them, and upon the unjuſt that have miſ-led the people from the right way, they were indeed Infidels. Such Men ſhall not eſcape the puniſhment of their crimes on Earth, they ſhall find none that is able to protect them but God, he ſhall augment their pains, becauſe they would not abandon their wickedneſs, neither receive the light of faith. Such are miſerable Men, their Idols ſhall not afford them ſuccors, they doubtleſs ſhall be eternally damned: and ſuch as ſhall believe in God, do good works, and be converted, ſhall dwell for ever in Paradiſe. The wicked are as deaf, and blind, and the True Believers are like thoſe who have good ſight and perfect hearing; ſhall they be in parallel to each other? will ye never conſider it? We ſent Noah to reprove Men for their ſins, he ſaid to them, worſhip but one God alone, otherwiſe I fear ye ſhall be chaſtiſed at the Day of Judgment; The Doctors of the Infidels anſwered him, we ſee thee to be a Man, like us, and that ſuch as follow thee are Poor People, blind, and without counſel; we perceive not that thou haſt any grace, that ought to prefer thee to us; contrariwiſe, we believe thee to be a lyar; he ſaid, O people! know ye not that God hath taught me what I preach to you, that he hath given me the grace of Prophecy, and deprived you of it? Shall I exhort you to acknowledge his grace, ſeeing you abhor him? O People! I require no recompence of you for my pains, God will reward me largely, I deſire not to baniſh True Believers from my company, they ſhall one day appear before their Lord, but I perceive that ye are ignorant. O People! who ſhall hinder God to puniſh me, if I abuſe True Believers? Will ye not conſider it? I ſay not that I poſſeſs the treaſures of God, I know not what ſhall be; I ſay not that I am an Angel, I ſay not to them whom you contemn, that God ſhall enrich them, God knoweth what is in their Souls; ſhould I maintain ſuch diſcourſe, I ſhould have great blame. They ſaid, O Noah! we have a long time diſputed together; if thou art ſincere, let us ſee the pains which thou preacheſt to us; God, ſaid he, when it ſhall pleaſe him, ſhall cauſe you to ſee them, you ſhall not eſcape them, my inſtructions ſhall be to you unprofitable; if God will prove you, he is your Lord, and you ſhall one day be aſſembled before him to be judged. Will the unbelievers ſay, that thou haſt forged the Alcoran, and that it is of thine invention? Say unto them, if I have invented it, ſin will be upon me, and I am innocent of your blaſphemies. God inſpired into Noah, that none ſhould believe in his words, but ſuch as had already believed in him: He ſaid unto him, Build an Ark conformable to the inſpiration that we have ſent thee, but ſpeak no more to me of the unjuſt, they ſhall be drowned; the paſſengers derided him and his Ark; he ſaid to them, ye ſcoff at me, I will laugh at you, and we ſhall ſee them that ſhall beſt underſtand; he whom God ſhall chaſtiſe, ſhall be covered with ſhame, and perpetually tormented. When our will was to deſtroy that People, and the light of the morninng appeared, and the Water boyled in Noah's Pot, we commanded him to charge his Ark with two Beaſts of every kind and Species; all creatures were deſtroyed, except thoſe, of whic we before made mention, as well ſuch as believed, as them that did not believe, and that but a few: Noah ſaid unto them, aſcend the Ark in the name of God, who ſhall cauſe it to ſwim, and to Anchor; the Lord is gracious and merciful towards us. When the Ark began to float, like to a Mountain, Noah called to one of his Sons who ſtayed on the Earth, and ſaid, my * Son, come up into the Ark with us, and remain not with the Infidels; he anſwered, I will aſcend an high Mountain, that ſhall ſave me from the Waters; Noah ſaid to him, none is able this day to deliver thee from the puniſhment of God, if it be not through his mercy; The Waters being riſen, he was in the number of them that were drowned: God commanded the Earth to drink its Water, and the Heavens to pour down no more Rain; the Water diminiſhed upon the Earth, after the People were drowned, and the Ark reſted upon the Mountain called Gioudy; thus were the unjuſt extirpated; Noah prayed to his Lord, and ſaid, Lord, my Son that remained in the Waters was of my Lineage, thou didſt promiſe me to ſave my Family, thou doſt exactly perform thy promiſe, thou art true in thy words, and moſt juſt in thine actions: O Noah! anſwered God, that Son is not of thy Linage, he hath offended me, and diſobeyed my Commandments, do not enquire of me concerning that which thou oughteſt not to know, otherwiſe thou ſhalt be in the number of the ignorant: Lord, ſaid Noah, I will take heed, through thine aſſiſtance, to enquire of thee what I ought not to know, if thou haſt not pity on me, I ſhall be in the number of the miſerable. God ſaid, O Noah! deſcend from the Ark with Salvation, and bleſſing upon thee, and upon a part of them that are with thee; I will enrich the other part with the wealth of this World, to puniſh them moſt ſeverely at the day of Judgment. I teach what ſhall be, what neither thou, nor thy people have not yet known; be patient in thine afflictions, Paradiſe is for them that have my fear before their eyes. We ſent Hod to the People of Aad, his Brother; ye ſaid unto them, O People! adore but one God alone, otherwiſe ye ſhall be in the number of Infidels, I require of you no recompence for the pains I take in preaching to you, he that created me, ſhall reward me; will ye never be wiſe? implore pardon of God, be converted, and obey his Divine will, he ſhall ſend you Rain from Heaven, and ſhall encreaſe your ſtrength, and riches, be not in the number of the wicked; they anſwered, O Hod! thou ſheweſt us no reaſons to prove thy ſayings, thy words ſhall not make us to quit our Gods, we give no credit to thy diſcourſe, and tell thee, that ſome one of our Gods ſhall ſeverely chaſtiſe thee; He ſaid, take God and your ſelves to witneſs that I am innocent of the ſin that you commit, in adoring Idols; if you conſpire againſt me, none ſhall be able to protect you at the Day of Judgment, I recommend my ſelf to the will of God, mine and your Lord, he conſerveth all the creatures of the Earth, and loveth them that follow the right way. I have diſcharged my duty and commiſſion, I have taught you what God commanded me, if you go aſtray, he ſhall eſtabliſh another people in your place, you do him no harm through your impiety, he exactly obſerveth whatſoever is done in the World. When we deſtroyed that people, we by our eſpecial grace delivered Hod from their malice, and all the True Believers, that were with him, we delivered them from great affliction. The people of Aad contemned the Commandments of God, and diſobeyed his Prophets, they followed the will of the obſtinate, were curſed in this World, and ſhall be acccurſed at the Day of Judgment, becauſe they diſobeyed his Divine Majeſty, with deſign to extirpate the people of Hod, his Brother. We ſent Salhe to Temod, his Brother, and his people; he ſaid to them, O people! worſhip one God alone, he it is who hath created you of the duſt of the Earth, and filled it with many ſorts of Fruits, that you might inhabit it; beg pardon of him, and be converted, he hearkeneth to his creatures, and heareth their prayers: they anſwered, O Salhe! it was hoped thou wouldſt have been our Captain, before the prohibition was made, to adore the Gods of our Fathers, we exceedingly doubt of what thou preacheſt; O People! ſaid Salhe, know ye not that God taught me what to you I preach, and that he hath given me his grace? who ſhall protect me if I diſobey him? You can but augment my pain, ſhould I believe you. O People! this Camel, which God for you hath created, ſhall be to you a miracle, and inſtruction, ſuffer it to feed, and do it no harm, leſt you be ſuddenly chaſtiſed. They through contempt, wounded the Camel. Then ſaid he unto them, ye ſhall live in your Houſes for the ſpace of three Days before ye be deſtroyed; what is foretold to you, is no Fiction: when we deſtroyed them, we, through our eſpecial grace ſaved Salhe, and the true believers that were with him;

* Gelaldin ſaith, that he was called Kinan.

The Turks believe that Salhe changed a Rock into a Camel.

him; thunder ſurprized thoſe Infidels, and in the Morning they were found in their Houſes dead, extended as Carkaſſes: Thus did Temod and his people contemn the Commandments of God, to their diſadvantage. Our Meſſengers that came to Abraham's Houſe, declared to him the Birth of Iſaac, Jacob, and their Poſterity; they mutually ſaluted, when they entred into his Houſe, he cauſed roaſted fleſh to be brought to them to eat, and perceiving that they did not eat, contemned them in himſelf, and was terrified with their coming; they ſaid unto him, fear not, we are ſent to Lot, to extirpate the Inhabitants of his City; Abraham's Wife being preſent, began to laugh, when they foretold the Birth of Iſaac, Jacob, and their Poſterity; ſhe ſaid, ah God! ſhall I bear a Son, I who am old, and have an Husband extreamly aged? this would be a Miracle; they anſwered, are ye aſtoniſhed at the power of God? O ye of the Family of Abraham! God hath given you his Bleſſing, praiſe and glory are due to him in all places. When Abraham was freed from his fear, and they having announced the Birth of his Children, he diſputed with them a long time, touching the Inhabitants of the City of Lot; he was of a middle diſpoſition, and frequently repeated the Praiſes of God. The Meſſengers ſaid unto him, O Abraham! put an end to thy Queſtions, the hour is come, wherein God hath commanded to deſtroy them, they ſhall undergo inevitable torments. When they arrived in Lot's Houſe, he was grieved, in that he was not able to ſecure them from the inſolence of the people; he ſaid, behold here a day extreamly difficult to paſs; The Inhabitants of the City having knowledge of their arrival, repaired to Lot's houſe to continue their filthineſs: Lot ſaid unto them, O people! I have two Daughters, whom I will give you, fear God, trouble me not, abuſe not my Gueſts; is there none among you to ſhew you your Errour? They anſwered, thou well knoweſt that we have nothing to do with thy Daughters, thou knoweſt what we require; he ſaid, were I of ſufficient power, I would dwell in a fortified place to avoid the aſſaults of your Malice: Then ſaid the Meſſengers of God unto him, O Lot! we are Angels ſent from God, thoſe Villains ſhall not approach thee, go this Night out of the City with thy Family, none ſhall look back but thy Wife; ſhe ſhall feel the puniſhment prepared for the wicked, they ſhall be puniſhed early in the Morning; be gone ſpeedily, the day approacheth; when we deſtroyed them, we turned the City upſide down, and cauſed it to rain upon them ſtones marked with fire, to confound them. Such chaſtiſement is not far from the Infidels (that are in Mecca.) We ſent Chaib into the Countrey of Madian, he ſaid, O people! worſhip one God alone; weigh with good Weights, and meaſure with good meaſure; detain nothing from your Neighbour, and defile not the Earth, if ye believe in God, otherwiſe I fear you may be puniſhed at the Day of Judgment; the little that ſhall remain, ſhall bring you more of content, than all that ye can purloin, in weighing with falſe Weights, and meaſuring with falſe meaſure. I am not ſent to be your Tutor, but only to declare the word of God: they ſaid, O Chiab, doth thy Law enjoyn us to abandon the Gods of our Fathers, and hinder us to make of our Goods what ſhall ſeem good to us? thou art not of an Humour good enough to be our Director. He ſaid, O people! ſee ye not that God hath taught me what I preach? He hath given me wealth for ſubſiſtence; I contradict you in nothing but what is forbidden you, I will do nothing but what is reaſonable, and conform the moſt I ſhall be able to Juſtice; my whole ſupport is in God, I recommend my ſelf to the Will of his Divine Majeſty, before which I muſt one day appear. O people! take heed leſt ye become Criminal, if ye forſake the Company of the righteous, and leſt that befal you, that hapned to them who would not believe Noah, Hod, Salhe, and Lot; the puniſhment of God is not far from you; beg pardon of him, and be converted, he is merciful and amiable. They ſaid, O Chaib! we underſtand not all that thou ſayeſt; we ſee thee amongſt us without force, and power; wert thou not accompanied, we would ſtone thee; thou ſhalt have no Dominion over us. He ſaid, O people! eſteem ye my Company, and fear ye it more than God? Have ye turned the back towards him? He knoweth all your actions, live after your own manner, I will live after mine, you ſhall hereafter know your Errour; he whom God will chaſtiſe, ſhall remain in perpetual miſery, you ſhall ſoon underſtand who ſhall be the Lyar, you or I; expect the iſſue, I will expect with you: when we commanded to deſtroy them, we (through our eſpecial Grace) preſerved Chaib, and the true Believers that were with him; Thunder ſurprized thoſe wicked ones, and they in the Morning remained dead, extended as Carkaſſes in their Houſes. Thus were the Inhabitants of Madian chaſtiſed like the people of Temod. We ſent Moſes to Pharaoh and his Doctors, with Miracles with Arguments and Reaſons moſt clear and intelligible; but thoſe Doctors followed his Will, and obeyed his Commandments, notwithſtanding they were contrary to Reaſon; they ſhall follow him at the Day of Judgment, as they followed him upon Earth; that day ſhall they be accurſed, and ſhall find none that ſhall be able to protect them: the puniſhment of Mecca ſhall be like to that I relate to thee; there be of its Inhabitants who ſubſiſt, and that do not ſubſiſt, and are no more; we have done them no injuſtice, they have drawn miſchief on themſelves, and their Idols have been of no uſe to them, but to augment their miſery, when God hath commanded to deſtroy them: Thus hath God ſurprized the Inhabitants of Mecca, he hath chaſtiſed them, becauſe they were unjuſt; this ſhall ſerve for example to them that fear the Day of Judgment; all Men ſhall there be gathered together, all the World ſhall ſee it; I will retard it until the time appointed, that day ſhall no Man ſpeak without my permiſſion; there be that ſhall be miſerable, and others who ſhall be happy; the miſerable ſhall dwell in the fire of Hell, they ſhall cry and complain ſo long as the Earth and the Heavens ſhall endure, and ſo long as it ſhall pleaſe God, who doth as ſeemeth good to himſelf: The happy ſhall enjoy Paradiſe, where they ſhall abide eternally, ſo long as Earth and Heaven ſhall endure, and ſo long as it ſhall pleaſe God. Doubt not what the Unbelievers worſhip, they adore but the Idols which their Fathers worſhipped; aſſuredly I will chaſtiſe them as their Fathers were chaſtiſed. Moſes preached the Old Teſtament, yet did the wicked contradict his Precepts; had not God ſaid that he will not puniſh them, untill the Day of Judgment, he had already deſtroyed them, becauſe they are in an exceeding great Errour; thy Lord ſhall reward every one according to his works, he knoweth all their Actions. Obſerve exactly what hath been commanded you, with them that are converted; tranſgreſs not the Law of God, he beholdeth whatſoever you do. Incline not to the affections of the unjuſt, leſt the fire of Hell ſurprize you, and you be deprived of protection. Pray to God Evening and Morning, and a part of the Night; prayers blot out ſins; it is the Doctrin of Preachers; be patient, and perſevere, God will not deprive the righteous of their reward: He prohibited your Predeceſſours and their Poſterity to defile the Earth; nevertheleſs there were few among them that abſtained; the unjuſt acted whatſoever pleaſed them, and were guilty before God. He ſhall not deſtroy Mecca, if the Inhabitants thereof obey his Commandments; and if it pleaſed him, the whole World ſhould be of one Religion; they to whom he giveth his Grace, tranſgreſs not his Will, his Word ſhall be accompliſhed, and Hell ſhall be filled with Devils, and the wicked of all Nations. They have recounted to thee, and thou underſtandeſt, whatſoever things are neceſſary for them, and what the Prophets have heretofore taught; thine heart hath been ſtrengthened, they contain the truth, and they ſhall be for a Leſſon to true Believers. Say unto Infidels, do on your part as ye ſhall underſtand, we will do on our part as we underſtand, and attend the iſſue, we will attend it with you; whatſoever is in Heaven, and in Earth appertains to God, all Men ſhall be aſſembled before him, worſhip him, reſign your ſelves to his Will, he knoweth whatſoever the people doth.

CHAP. XII.

The Chapter of Joſeph, containing an hundred and thirteen Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful. I am the merciful God. Theſe ſigns are the ſigns of the Book which diſtinguiſheth good from evil. We have cauſed to deſcend from Heaven the Alcoran, written in the Arabick Tongue, peradventure ye will learn it. I deliver unto thee in the Alcoran, one of the beſt things that I have inſpired into thee. Thou wert before the coming thereof, in the number of the ignorant. Remember thou, that Joſeph ſaid to his Father, My Father, I ſaw in a Dream eleven Stars, the Sun, and the Moon, I ſaw them adoring me. My Son, ſaid his Father, diſcover not thy Dream to thy Brothers, they will conſpire againſt thee, the Devil is an open Enemy to Men, thou ſhalt be elected of the Lord in this World, he ſhall teach thee the explication of Dreams, he ſhall accompliſh his Grace upon thee, and upon the Lineage of Jacob, as he did accompliſh it upon thy Fathers, Abraham and Iſaac; the Lord knoweth all things, and is moſt wiſe. The Hiſtory of Joſeph ſhall ſerve for example to Poſterity; remember thou, how his Brothers ſaid, our Father loveth our Brother Joſeph more than all us together, he is in an exceeding great errour, let us kill Joſeph, and caſt him into ſome ſecret place remote from us, his abſence will render the Face of our Father more gentle toward us; after his death we will be converted. One of them ſaid, you ſhall not do well to kill him, but caſt him into the Well, ſome Paſſengers will take him, and carry him into an unknown Countrey: They ſaid to their Father; Father, wherefore doſt thou not ſend Joſeph into the Fields with us? we will be very careful, he ſhall ſport and recreate himſelf; I fear, ſaid he, that ye will neglect to preſerve him; doſt thou fear (ſaid they) that a Wolf ſhould devour him in our Preſence, and that we want ſtrength to defend him? In the Morning they led him with them, and caſt him into a Well. We inſpired him to Propheſie to them what ſhould befal them for the miſchief they acted, but they wanted knowledge to comprehend it; they in the Evening returned to their Fathers houſe, with eyes full of diſſembled tears, and ſaid unto him; Father, we ſported, and ran who ſhould run the beſt, Joſeph remained with our Baggage, a Wolf came that devoured him; thou wilt not believe us although we ſpeak the truth; then they ſhewed him his Shirt, which they had ſprinkled with Blood; it is you that hath done it, ſaid he, you ſhall anſwer before God, he is my Protector, and was patient, without lamenting. There paſt that day * a Caravan near to that Well, who deſiring to draw water to drink, let down a Bucket, on which Joſeph took hold to get out; they gave him Cloathes, led him away ſecretly, and ſold him at a good rate for ready Money; they would not kill him, in which they were honeſt Men. He that bought him in Egypt, commanded his Wife to have care him, that he might one day be uſeful for their Service, and be to them inſtead of a Son. Thus did we eſtabliſh Joſeph in the Countrey of Egypt, and taught him the expoſition of Dreams, thy Lord is Omnipotent, but few Men know him: when Joſeph came to the Age of Manhood, we gave him knowledge and prudence; thus do we reward the righteous. His Maſters Wife became amorous of his Beauty, ſhe one day ſhut him into her Chamber, and ſolicited him with love; God defend me (ſaid he) to betray my Maſter, and be unchaſte (he was in the number of the righteous) and fled to the Door; his Miſtreſs ran after him, and to ſtay him, tore his Shirt through the back: She met her Husband behind the Door, to whom ſhe ſaid, what other thing doth he merit, who would diſhonour thine houſe, than to be impriſoned, and ſeverely chaſtiſed? Lord, ſaid Joſeph, ſhe ſollicited me, that Infant which is in the Cradle, and of thy Parentage ſhall be witneſs: Then the Infant in the Cradle ſaid, if Joſeph's Shirt be torn before, ſhe hath ſpoken truth, and Joſeph is a Lyar; if the Shirt be rent behind, Joſeph hath delivered the truth, and ſhe a lyar: then her Husband beheld Joſeph's Shirt torn behind, and knew that it was extream malice, and ſaid to Joſeph, take heed to thy ſelf, and beware this act be not divulged, do thou, ſpeaking to his Wife, impſore pardon for

* The Levantins Well; * Caravan, a number of Perſons travelling together.

for thy fault, thou art truly guilty. The Women of the City ſaid among themſelves, that the rich Man's wife was amorous of his Slave, and that ſhe had ſollicited his love, and had erred from the right way, which ſhe underſtanding, made them an exceeding fair Feaſt, and cauſed Joſeph to enter the Parlour where they ſate; while they carved their meat, they were ſo ſurprized, and entangled with Joſephs beauty, that they inſtead of carving their meat, cut their fingers. O God! ſaid they, this is not a Man, but an Angel; then ſaid ſhe unto them, behold him whom I loved with ſo much Paſſion: ſhe another time importuned him, to ſatisfie her deſire, and perceiving that he would not condeſcend to her Will, menaced him with the Priſon, and to make him miſerable: O God! ſaid Joſeph, I had rather be a Priſoner, than do what ſhe deſireth, deliver me from her Malice, defend me from inclining to her lubricity, and from being in the number of the wicked: his Lord heard his Prayer, he underſtandeth and knoweth all things. This Woman ſeeing Joſeph's reſolution, judged it requiſite to impriſon him for ſome time; he was put Priſoner with two Men, one of which told him that he had dreamed that he preſt Grapes to make Wine; the other ſaid, that he dreamed that he carried Bread upon his head, which the Birds did eat, they demanded of him the interpretation of their Dreams, becauſe he ſeemed to them to be a good Man; he ſaid to them, before ye Breakfaſt, I will interpret your Dreams. I will firſt tell you what God hath taught me, and how I quit, and abandon the Law of Infidels, and embrace the Law of our Fathers, Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, we ought not to worſhip many Gods; ſuch as believe in the Unity of God, are endued with his Grace, but few Men give him thanks. O Priſoners! who hath more power, Idols, or one ſole God, who is Omnipotent? The Gods which ye adore are but Idols, whom ye and your Fathers call by ſuch a Name, as ſeemeth good to you, ye have no reaſon to worſhip them; God doth not enjoyn you this, he commandeth you to worſhip him alone; this is the right way, but the greateſt part of the World of this are ignorant. O Priſoners! the one of you ſhall give Wine to drink to his Maſter, the other ſhall be hanged, the Birds ſhall feed on his head, the interpretation that ye have required ſhall be accompliſhed. He beſought him that ſhould be ſaved, to remember him when he ſhould be near to his Maſter; but the Devil cauſed him to loſe the remembrance of Joſeph, who remained Priſoner the ſpace of nine years: At that time the King of Egypt ſaw in a Dream ſeven fat Kine, which ſeven lean Kine devoured; and ſeven green ears of Corn, with ſeven dry ears, of which he required the interpretation of his Doctors; they anſwered, that the Dream was very obſcure, and that they knew not the interpretation; the Priſoner that had been ſet at liberty, ſaid, that he would forthwith give the interpretation of the Dream, remembred Joſeph, and calling him unto him, ſaid, O righteous Man! explain unto us what is the ſignification of ſeven fat Kine, devoured by ſeven lean, and ſeven green ears of Corn, and as many dry, peradventure I ſhall return to the King and his people, and they ſhall underſtand the interpretation of this Dream. Joſeph ſaid to him, ye ſhall ſow the Earth ſeven years following, which ſhall abound in Fruits, preſerve your Harveſt in the ears, and take only what ſhall be neceſſary for life; after this, there ſhall come ſeven years barren, and unfruitful, in which the people ſhall ſuffer much. The King of Egypt having learned the interpretation of this Dream, commanded to call Joſeph; the Meſſenger ſaid unto him, O Joſeph! return to thy Maſter, and require of him the meaning of the Women who did cut their fingers, he hath knowledge of their Malice, hath cauſed them to aſſemble, and demanded of them what was their deſign, when they ſollicited thee with love; they anſwered, they knew no ſin in thee, and his Wife confeſſed the truth, ſaying, ſhe had importuned thee, but that thou art a very juſt Man. Joſeph anſwered, by this it appears that I am no Traitor to my Maſter in his abſence, God guideth not Traitors; I will not ſay, I am a Man without ſin, the Spirit of Man inclineth to evil, except ſuch to whom God had given his particular Grace, he is gracious and merciful to whom ſeemeth good to him. The King having talked with Joſeph, entred him into the number of his Domeſticks, and made him ſuper-intendent of his * revenues, becauſe he knew him to be a Man of Spirit, faithful, and thrifty. We, by our eſpecial Grace, eſtabliſhed Joſeph in the Countrey of Egypt, where he did what ſeemed good to him. I deprive not the righteous of their reward on Earth, the recompence of the other World is yet greater for them that believe in my Law, and have my fear before their eyes. The Brethren of Joſeph returned to buy Corn; he ſaid to them, when ye ſhall come again, bring with you your young Brother by the Father, you ſhall find I will make you good meaſure, and lodge well my Gueſts; if you bring him not, there ſhall be no Corn for you, approach not this Kingdom without him: They anſwered, Lord, his Father loveth him exceedingly, nevertheleſs we ſhall endeavour to perform what thou enjoyneſt us; he commanded his Servants to put their money for Corn in the bottoms of his Brethrens Sacks, perhaps, ſaid he, they will return, or acknowledge this favour when they ſhall come into their Countrey. When they arrived at their Father, they ſaid, Father, there is no more Corn for us, if our young Brother go not with us, if he go thither, we ſhall have good meaſure, and we will be careful of him. You will be careful, ſaid he, as you were heretofore of your Brother Joſeph; God will defend him better than you, he is the merciful of the merciful. When they poured forth their Corn, they found their Money at the bottoms of their Sacks, and ſaid, our Father, what ſhall we deſire more, our money is reſtored to us, and we have Bread for our Family, permit that our Brother go with us, we ſhall have better meaſure, that is a ſmall thing to the King of Egypt; I will not ſend him with you unleſs ye all ſwear before God to bring him back again, if there be no great impediment. They ſwore to fulfil his Will; then ſaid he, I take God to be witneſs of your Oath: O my Sons! enter not all together into the City, but go in at ſeveral Gates, to the end the people may not be jealous of you; God commandeth what to him ſeemeth good, I relye on him, all true Believers ought to reſign themſelves to his Divine Will; they entred the City as their Father enjoyned them, to content him; being arrived before Joſeph, he took his little Brother by the hand, and ſaid to him, trouble not thy ſelf for what ſhall become of thy Brethren; having filled their Sacks, he cauſed a Cup adorned with precious ſtones to be put into the Sack of his little Brother; cauſed it to be given out, that they of the Caravan had ſtoln the Kings Cup; and ſent Men after them to ſearch; thoſe ſtrangers proteſted they ſaw it not, and that they came not into Egypt to ſteal, that they were Sureties for each other, and that he who had ſtoln it, deſerved puniſhment. The Cup was found in the Sack of his young Brother; he cauſed him to be apprehended, and accuſed them all of Theft; Lord, ſaid they, his Father is old, he will be extreamly afflicted for his abſence, take one of us in his place, thou ſhalt in the end find us to be honeſt Men: God forbid, ſaid he, that I ſhould detain other than him who was found guilty of Theft, that would be injuſtice; finding themſelves out of hope to free their Brother, they ſaved themſelves in a ſecret place remote from the City; where the eldeſt ſaid to his Brethren, you know the Oath we took at our departure, and how heretofore we intreated Joſeph; I will not go out of Egypt without my Fathers permiſſion, God is moſt juſt, he ſhall diſpoſe of me and my Brother as ſhall pleaſe him, return to your Father, and ſay unto him, thy Son was taken in Theft, we ſaw him, and endeavoured to our power to deliver him, they of the Caravan ſhall be Witneſſes. Jacob ſaid at their return, they were the cauſe of that accident that did not diſpleaſe you; and he took patience, ſaying, God perhaps will favour my Sons to return in health; he knoweth in what condition I am, he is moſt prudent in what he ordaineth. He retired from among his Sons extreamly afflicted, and bewailed the loſs of his Son Joſeph; had his eyes continually covered with tears, and he bore in his heart great ſorrow. His Sons ſaid unto him, Doſt thou yet remember Joſeph, to add to thy grief, and haſten thine end? I am (ſaid he) extreamly deſolate, I leave all to the Will of God; he hath taught me what ye know not. My Sons return into Egypt, and enquire tidings of your two Brethren, deſpair not of the Spirit of God, none deſpair of Gods Spirit, but the wicked. When they came unto Joſeph, they ſaid unto him, The Famine that is in our Countrey, hath extreamly afflicted us, it hath often conſtrained us to come to buy Corn; thou, of thy favour, haſt made us good meaſure; thou haſt cauſed our Money to be reſtored for Alms, God will reward thee, he recompenceth ſuch as are Almsgivers. He ſaid unto them, Ye remember what ye did unto your Brother Joſeph: They replyed, Certainly thou art not Joſeph. I am Joſeph, ſaid he, and behold my Brother Benjamin. God hath given us his Grace; he rewardeth him that hath his fear before his eyes, and is patient in his afflictions; he depriveth not the righteous of recompence. God, ſaid they, hath poured his favours upon us in ſaving thee, whom we have exceedingly offended. Be not (ſaid he) aſhamed, God this day pardoneth you that ſin, he is gracious and merciful; return to your Father, and bear to him this Shirt, caſt it upon his face, he ſhall recover ſight, and return hither with him, and with your whole Family. The Caravan was then half way upon return, when Jacob ſaid to them that attended him, I ſmell the odour of my Son Joſeph; you deride me, but what I ſpeak is moſt true: They told him, that he was ſtill in his old Errour; ſome days following, one of his Sons arrived with tidings of Joſeph, and caſt the Shirt that he had given, him upon him; and incontinently he recovered his ſight, and ſaid, Did I not always tell you, that I knew what ye knew not; they ſaid, Our Father pardon us, and ask the forgiveneſs of God for us, who have exceedingly offended him: He anſwered, I will beg pardon of God for you, he is gracious and merciful. When they arrived before Joſeph, he took his Father by the hand, ſaying, Enter without fear into Egypt, cauſed him to ſit down, and his Brethren fell proſtrate before him. My Father, ſaid he, behold there the interpretation of mine old Dream, God hath rendred it true, he hath favoured me, in delivering me from Priſon, and conducting you hither; he hath put an end to the jealouſie wich the Devil had procured between me and my Brethren. The Lord is liberal to whom ſeemeth good to him; he knoweth what is neceſſary for his people, and is moſt prudent in what he ordaineth. Lord, thou haſt given me wealth, and knowledge to interpret Dreams. Creator of Heaven and Earth, thou art my Protector, give me the Grace to die in thy Law, and place me in the number of the righteous. This Hiſtory of Joſeph, is an ancient Hiſtory which I relate to thee. Thou wert not with his Brethren when they conſpired againſt him; nevertheleſs, the greateſt part of the people are incredulous. Demand no reward of them for having preached the Alcoran, it inſtructeth only the wiſe. How many ſigns be there in Heaven and Earth, of the Unity of God? yet the people believe not therein, and moſt of them adore Idols; aſſuredly God ſhall puniſh them at an unexpected hour, and in a time which they know not. Say unto them, Behold the right way, I call to the way of Salvation and Light, ſuch as follow me. I return thanks to God, for that I am not in the number of Unbelievers. We ſent aforetime none but Men to inſtruct the people; will not Men conſider what hath been the end of the wicked that were before them? Paradiſe is for them that are righteous; will ye not be converted? They cauſed the Prophets to loſe all hopes of their Converſion, and believed them to be Lyars; but we protected them, and delivered from their Malice ſuch as ſeemed good to us. Nothing ſhall exempt the wicked from the puniſhment of their pains; they ſhall ſerve for example to Men of Spirit. The Alcoran containeth no blaſphemies, it confirmeth the ancient Scriptures, and teacheth True believers the way of Salvation.

He ſpeaketh to Mahomet.

CHAP. XIII.

The Chapter of Thunder, containing forty three Verſes, written at Mecca. See Gelaldin and Bedaoi.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful; I am the moſt wiſe and merciful God. Theſe Precepts are the Precepts of the Book ſent to thee from thy Lord; it is a thing moſt true, but few Men incline to believe it. It is ſent from God, who raiſed Heaven without a Prop, and with a Column, that appeareth, and ſitteth on his Throne,

Throne, diſpoſing all things. He cauſeth the Sun and Moon to move, until the day appointed; he diſpoſeth all things at his will, and manifeſteth to Men the ſigns of his Omnipotency. Peradventure you will believe in the Reſurrection of the fleſh. He it is that hath extended the Earth, raiſed the Mountains, cauſed the Rivers to flow, who created of all ſorts of Fruits, the Male and Female, and covereth the Day with the obſcurity of the Night. Theſe things are ſigns of his unity to ſuch as conſider them. He hath created many Fields of divers ſorts, and Gardens filled with Grapes, and many different Fruits; he created Date Trees, thick as Groves, and Foreſts, and others that are ſcattered through the Fields; ſome are moiſtened with Waters, and others have a more pleaſing taſte. Theſe things are ſigns of his unity to ſuch as conſider them. Thou art amazed at the lies of Infidels, be aſtoniſhed at their diſcourſes; when they deny the Reſurrection, and ſay, What, ſhall God yet once again create us of the duſt of the Earth? When we ſhall be Earth, ſhall we be a new people? They are impious, they ſhall have Oaks upon their Necks, and ſhall remain eternally in the fire of Hell; they precipitate themſelves into eternal pains, and contemn the mercy of God, ſo did their predeceſſors; but God is gracious to ſuch as convert. Chaſtiſe ſeverely the obſtinate Infidels. They have ſaid, We will not believe in the Prophet, unleſs we ſee ſome miracle to appear. Say unto them, I am not ſent but to preach the word of God. He hath ſent perſons to every Nation, to teach them the right way; nothing is hid from him in the World; he knoweth what Women bear in their Womb; he knoweth the time and period of every thing, the preſent, paſt, and future; he is great and Omnipotent. He underſtandeth what you keep ſecret, and what ye make manifeſt; he knoweth where they be who cover themſelves with the obſcurity of Night, and them that travel in the clearneſs of Day; every one hath his guardian by his commandment, who obſerveth what he doth, and depriveth none of grace, that hath not offended his Divine Majeſty, and none can hinder him to puniſh whom it ſeemeth good to him. He it is, who giveth you to ſee the lightning which terrifieth Men, and nouriſheth his Creatures by the Rain which he cauſeth to fall; he created the Clouds charged with moyſture, cauſeth Thunder to make a noiſe, darteth the Thunderbolt, and ſtriketh whom it pleaſeth him; the Angels tremble in his Preſence, yet do the wicked diſpute his Omnipotency. He it is who ought to be implored; the prayers of them who implore another God are ineffectual, they are like to ſuch as are very thirſty, and ſtretch forth the hand towards a Fountain, to which they cannot reach; the prayers of the wicked are impiety: Whatſoever is in Heaven and in the Earth, the ſhadow of the Morning, the obſcurity of the Evening humble themſelves before God, through force or affection. Say unto them, Who is the Lord of Heaven and Earth, but God? Who, except God ſhall protect you? your Idols can neither benefit, nor hurt you: Is the blind like unto him that ſeeth clearly? Is darkneſs like unto light? Shall they adore the Creatures inſtead of the Creator? God hath created all things, and is Omnipotent; he cauſeth Rain to deſcend from Heaven, and Rivers covered with Foam, to flow in the Valleys. The Gold, the Silver, and Metals which ye melt to adorn and enrich your ſelves, are like unto Froth. Thus doth God teach what is profitable, and what unprofitable; Froth ſuddenly vaniſheth, and is of no utility to Men: So falſhood vaniſheth before [illegible]. Thus doth God ſpeak through a Pa[illegible], to them that obey him, and giveth them Paradiſe. All the riches of the Earth, and as much again, cannot ranſom the Infidels, they ſhall be eternally tormented in the fire of Hell. Who knoweth, that the truth contained in this Book, was not ſent to thee from God? He that doubteth is blind; Men of Spirit do not doubt. They who ſatisfie what they promiſe to God, who tranſgreſs not his Commandments, who have his fear before their eyes, who apprehend the Day of Judgment, who are patient in their afflictions for love of his Divine Majeſty, who make their prayers at the time appointed, who give alms privately and publickly, and blot out their offences with good works, ſhall be bleſſed. They ſhall enter into the Garden of Eden with their Father, their Wives, and Families; the Angels ſhall viſit them, ſhall ſalute them, and ſay, Behold the recompence of your perſeverance, behold eternal grace. Such as ſhall ſwerve from their promiſe, and diſobey the Commandments of God, and pollute the Earth, ſhall be accurſed of God, and ſeverely chaſtiſed; he giveth, and depriveth of wealth, as ſeemeth good to him. The unbelievers rejoyce in the riches of the Earth; but thoſe riches are of little value, if they conſider them of the other World. They ſay, If Mahomet doth not make ſome miracle to appear from God, we will not believe him. Say unto them, God guideth, and miſ-leadeth whom it pleaſeth him; he confirmeth the hearts of them that have faith in his Law; the remembrance of God confirmeth the hearts of True Believers: Such as ſhall do good works, ſhall be happy. We have ſent thee, as we did ſend other Prophets, to them that preceded thee. Teach the people what we have inſpired into thee: When they ſhall diſobey thee, ſay unto them, God is my Lord, there is but one God alone, I am wholly reſigned to his Divine Will; my refuge is in his goodneſs. If the Alcoran ſhould make Mountains to go, ſhould it cauſe the Earth to open, and the Dead to ariſe, all would proceed from God. True Believers ought not to deſpair of any thing, God ſhall guide all the World into the right way when it ſhall pleaſe him; and unbelievers ſhall not eſcape the puniſhment of their crimes. Thou ſhalt dwell with them until the word of God be fulfilled: He ſwerveth not from what he promiſeth; they derided the Prophets that came before thee, I prolonged the time of their puniſhment, and in the end rigorouſly chaſtiſed them; and with what afflictions? Doth not God behold the actions of every Man? They have ſaid, God hath Companions, to whom they have given names after their fancy; will you inſtruct God in any thing? The wicked take delight in their wickedneſs, and are gone aſtray from the right way. He whom God ſhall miſ-lead, ſhall find none to guide him, he ſhall be afflicted in this World, and yet more in the other. None ſhall be able to ſave him, but God; Paradiſe is promiſed to them that have his fear before their eyes; they ſhall enjoy eternally all manner of content, ſuch is the end of the righteous; and Hell is prepared for Infidels. They, to whom we have given the knowledge of Scriptures, rejoyce in the Doctrine which we have ſent thee; there be that abjure one part; ſay unto them, I recommend unto you only the worſhip of one ſole God, who is the aſſ[illegible] refuge of the righteous. We have ſent [illegible] Alcoran in the Arabick tongue, to the end the Arabians may comprehend it: If thou doſt follow the will of unbelievers, having had the knowledge of the unity of God, who ſhall be able to ſave or protect thee? We ſent Prophets before thee; commanded them to marry, and they had Children. Prophets cannot perform miracles without the permiſſion of God, and the end of every thing is written in his Book; he blotteth out, and leaveth permanent what ſeemeth good to him, he cannot alter. I perceive that ſome of the wicked have a deſign to murther thee; thou art obliged only to preach to them, I will keep an account of their ſins to puniſh them. See they not that their Countries and poſſeſſions diminiſh daily through thy Conqueſts? God commandeth what pleaſeth him, no Man can eſcape his judgments, he is moſt exact in his account: their predeceſſors uſed ſubtilties as they, but God is more ſubtile than they; he well knoweth the good and evil which every one doth: they ſhall one day underſtand who muſt have Paradiſe. They ſay thou art no Prophet, ſay unto them, It is ſufficient that God is witneſs of the truth between you and me; who is he that knoweth what is written in the Book of his Divine Majeſty?

CHAP. XIV.

The Chapter of Abraham, containing fifty Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the name of God, gracious and merciful; I am the merciful God. That Book! We have ſent it to thee to bring the People out of darkneſs, to guide them to the light, and the way of thy Lord, always victorious and glorious; Whatſoever is in Heaven, and in Earth, is Gods; miſery is upon unbelievers, they ſhall undergo at the end of the World exceeding great torments. They who prefer the wealth of this World to that of Heaven, who go aſtray from the way of the Law, and would pervert it, are in a great error, far from truth; The Prophets ſpake the language of them to whom they were ſent to inſtruct them, God guideth and miſ-leadeth whom to him ſeemeth good, he is Omnipotent and prudent. We ſent Moſes with prodigies, to bring the Children of Iſrael out of darkneſs, and to conduct them to light, he taught them the Commandments of the Law, to ſerve for inſtruction to ſuch as ſhall perſevere to do well, and ſhall not be ingrateful for the favours they have received. Moſes ſpake to his people, and ſaid, Remember the grace of God towards you, he delivered you from the Men of Pharaoh, who cauſed you to ſuffer great afflictions, who murthered your Children, abuſed your Wives, and laid upon you great evils (ſent from God, becauſe of your ſins.) The Lord hath ſaid, if ye be not ingrateful, I will augment my graces upon you; if ye be impious, you ſhall be afflicted. Moſes ſaid to his people; if you and all Men be impious, know, that God will be always glorious, and hath no need of you. Know ye not what befel (before you) the people of Noah, Aad, Temod, and their Poſterity, that none had knowledge of but God, becauſe of their great number? He ſent them his Commandments by his Prophets, they bit their fingers for anger, and ſaid unto them, we renounce, and condemn your Doctrine: The Prophets ſaid unto them, is there any doubt in the belief of the unity of God, Creator of Heaven, and Earth? he calleth you to remit your ſins, and deferreth your puniſhment until the day appointed: They anſwered, Ye are Men like unto us, will you hinder us to adore the Gods of our Fathers? Produce arguments of ſtrength ſufficient to prove what you preach; the Prophet replyed, We are Men as you are, but God giveth his grace to whom ſeemeth good to him; we are come to you through his permiſſion, the true believers ought to truſt in him; wherefore ſhould we not be reſigned to the will of God, who hath guided us into the right way? we will continue in well-doing, the righteous truſt in his Divine Majeſty. Then ſaid the Infidels unto them, we will baniſh you from our Country, if you be not of our Religion; but God inſpired into them, that the Infidels ſhould periſh, and that they ſhould inhabit the Land after them; that he would protect ſuch as ſhould have his fear before their eyes, and fear the pains that are prepared for the wicked. The Prophets were protected of God, and the obſtinate wicked were deſtroyed: they ſhall be precipitated into Hell, and drink of Water full of Corruption, Urine and Blood; Death ſhall appear on all ſides before their eyes, before they have ſwallowed that Drink; they ſhall not dye in that miſery, they ſhall ſuffer yet greater pains. The good works which the wicked have done, are like to Duſt carried away by an impetuous Wind, they ſhall be unprofitable to them, and they ſhall be extirpated, becauſe they depart from the truth: See they not that God hath created Heaven and Earth? that he can deſtroy them, and create in their place a new people, if it ſeem good to him? This is not difficult to God, all things are known to him. The more impotent of them that have followed the wicked, ſhall ſay at the Day of Judgment, we obeyed you, will you this day deliver us from the puniſhment of God? They ſhall anſwer, had God guided us into the right way, we had conducted you thither, we are alike miſerable with you, we cry and lament in our miſery, but find neither refuge nor protection. The Devil ſhall ſay unto them, what God hath promiſed to you is infallible, I foretold it to you, I cauſed you to tranſgreſs his Commandments through my temptations; I had none other power over you, but to tempt you, you did me no harm when ye hearkened to me, you drew miſchief on your ſelves, I am not your Tutor, neither are you mine, I was impious, when heretofore I ſuffered you to adore adore me; Hell is prepared for you, and for all unbelievers, there ſhall they endure great torments, and the righteous ſhall enter into Paradiſe, wherein flow many Rivers, where they ſhall dwell eternally, with all manner of bleſſedneſs and content; Seeſt thou not how God ſpeaketh by a Parable? A good word is like to a good Tree that hath taken Root in the Earth, and hath raiſed its Branches to Heaven, and produceth its Fruit in due time, through the permiſſion of his Divine Majeſty; he teacheth the people his Parables, perhaps they will be mindful: An evil word is like to a bad Tree, that hath been torn from the Earth, there is nothing to ſuſtain it, and it is without Root, or Fruit: God fortifieth the true believers through his word in this World, and in the other, and cauſeth the unjuſt to err, he doth what to him ſeemeth good: Seeſt thou not them that have changed his grace into impiety, and have made ſuch as have followed them to dwell in the Houſe of perdition? They ſhall abide eternally in the fire of Hell. They ſay, that God hath a Companion equal to him, and err from the way of his Law; Say unto them, ye ſhall have wealth in this World, but Hell is your Rendezvous. Say to the true believers, who make their prayers at the time appointed, and give alms in private, or publick, that the day ſhall come wherein they ſhall neither buy nor ſell, and where every one ſhall be recompenſed for his works. Say unto them, God hath created the Earth, and the Heavens, he maketh the Rain to deſcend from Heaven, which cauſeth to ſpring forth all ſorts of Fruits to enrich you, he created the Ship, that through his permiſſion ſaileth on the Sea, he created the Rivers, the Sun and the Moon, which move continually, he created the Day and the Night, and beſtoweth on you whatſoever ye deſire, his favours towards you can neither be numbred, nor recounted, nevertheleſs the inhabitants of Mecca are always impious and wicked; Abraham ſaid, Lord protect this City, and make it to be the refuge of the World; Keep me and my Children from the worſhip of Idols, they have ſeduced a part of the People; he that ſhall follow me, and profeſs thy unity, ſhall be mine; if any one diſobey me, thou art gracious and merciful: Lord, one part of my Lineage inhabiteth Mecca, in a place unfruitful, give them the grace to perſevere in thy ſervice, incline the hearts of Men to affect them, enrich them with the Fruits of the Earth, peradventure they will thank thee; thou knoweſt whatſoever is in the World, I know it not; nothing that is in Heaven, or in Earth is hid from thee; praiſed be God, who hath given me Iſmael and Iſaac in mine old age, he heareth prayers when it pleaſeth him; Lord, give me and my Poſterity the grace to perſevere in well-doing, hear my prayers, pardon me, and pardon my Father, and all true believers at the Day of Judgment. Think not that God is ignorant of the actions of Infidels, he deferreth the puniſhment of their crimes until the day that all Men ſhall have their eyes opened: that day ſhall they behold their ſins before their eyes, and their hearts ſhall be full of deſolation; If thou preacheſt to the people the Day of Judgment, hath God (will the wicked ſay) preſerved us to this preſent time, to do what thou doſt appoint us? Say unto them, have ye not ſworn heretofore, that there is no Reſurrection? Ye have dwelt with the unjuſt, ye have ſeen how they have been chaſtiſed, and how we have ſpoken to you in Parables. Certainly they conſpire, but God knoweth their conſpiracy, their policy is to tempt the prophet, to ſee if he will make the Mountains to move. Think not that God will violate what he hath promiſed to the Prophets, he is Omnipotent, and avengeful. Conſider the day wherein the Earth and Heavens ſhall change their face, and all people ſhall riſe again; that Day ſhall one ſole God Omnipotent command Men to come out of their Monuments; Thou ſhalt that day ſee the wicked bound in their Chains, their Garments ſhall be full of Pitch, and Guitran, their Faces ſhall be covered with Fire, that Day ſhall he recompence and chaſtiſe every one according to his works, he is exact to keep account; This Book was ſent to inſtruct the People, and teach them that there is but one God; the wiſe will remember.

CHAP. XV.

The Chapter of Hegir, containing ſeventy and ſeven Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the name of God, gracious and merciful. I am the merciful God. The ſigns are the ſigns of the Alcoran, which diſtinguiſheth good from evil. How may the Infidels hope what the True Believers hope for? depart from them, let them eat the ſubſtance of the poor, let them become rich, and content themſelves in their hopes, they ſhall ſee one day what their end ſhall be; We have deſtroyed no City until the time deſtined to its ruine was expired, there is no Nation that can advance or retard its deſtiny. The wicked have ſaid, O Man! who believeſt that the Alcoran was ſent to thee, we will affirm that thou art a Sorcerer, until the Angels do aſſure us that thou art true: The Angels ſhall not deſcend to the Earth, unleſs to chaſtiſe them, and they ſhall not be able to retard the time of their puniſhment; we certainly have ſent the Alcoran upon Earth, and will preſerve it without alteration; we heretofore ſent Prophets one after another, the wicked ſcorned and contemned them; thus I imprint impiety in the hearts of the wicked, they ſhall not believe in the Prophet, and ſhall incur the puniſhment of their predeceſſors; ſhould we open the entrance of Heaven, and ſhould they behold the Angels go in, and go out at the ſhadow of the gate, they would yet ſay, their eyes were inchanted, and that they were bewitched; we created ſigns in Heaven, and adorned them with Stars, to content the minds of them that conſider them; we ſheltered them from the aſſaults of the Devil, but the Butterfly followeth every thing that ſhineth, and believeth it to be a Star; we extended the Earth, and raiſed the Mountains with proportion; we have made it to produce all ſorts of Fruits to ſuſtain and enrich you; we have reſerved in our power the Keys, of the treaſures thereof, to diſtribute to them by meaſure what ſhall be neceſſary, we cauſed a freſh wind to ariſe, and ſent Rain to water them; it is not you that cauſed the fruits thereof to ſpring forth; it is we who give life and death, and diſpoſe of all things in the World. We know who they were that did precede you, and who they ſhall be that ſhall ſucceed you; I will aſſemble all at the end of the World to be judged; we created Man of the ſlime of the Earth, and before him the Devil, of fire, without ſmoak. Remember thou, that God ſaid to his Angels, I will create Man of the ſlime of the Earth, I will breath upon him, to give him life; proſtrate your ſelves before him; the Angels adored him, except the Devil; God ſaid unto him, Wherefore doſt thou not adore Man? He replied, I will not adore him, thou haſt created me of fire, and him of the mire of the Earth: He ſaid, get thee out of Paradiſe, thou ſhalt be baniſhed, and accurſed until the Day of Judgment. Lord, ſaid the Devil, lay, not thy curſe upon me until the Day of Judgment; he ſaid, thou ſhalt be accurſed until the Day nominated; Lord, ſaid the Devil, I will tempt all the Creatures, becauſe thou haſt tempted me; I will cauſe them to diſobey thy Commandments, except ſuch as ſhall truſt in thee, and recommend themſelves to thy Divine Will. God ſaid, this is the right way, thou haſt no power over the righteous who follow my Law, but only over the Infidels, for whom Hell is prepared. Hell hath ſeven Gates and every Gate hath its particular work; the righteous ſhall dwell in Gardens, adorned with fair Fountains, we will free them from all rancour; they ſhall repoſe upon Beds like Brethren, with reſpect, and affection, and ſhall be in eternal felicity. Declare to them that worſhip me, that I am gracious and merciful, and my chaſtiſements are ſevere and rigorous. Preach unto them the Hiſtory of the Gueſts of Abraham, they ſaluted him when they entred his Houſe; Abraham was terrified at their coming: they ſaid to him, fear not us, we are the Meſſengers of God; we declare to thee that thou ſhalt have a Son, who ſhall be a great perſonage: Do you tell me (ſaid he) that I ſhall have a Son in my old age? why ſpeak ye in that manner? We tell thee the truth, deſpair not of the grace of God, none but the wicked deſpair: O Meſſengers of God! (ſaid Abraham) what do ye require? We are ſent to deſtroy the Infidels, and to preſerve the whole Family of Lot, except his Wife, ſhe ſhall remain with them that ſhall be puniſhed. When theſe Meſſengers came to Lot's Houſe, he told them, he knew them not; they ſaid to him, we are come to thee, to clear this people of their doubt of God's Omnipotency; what we ſpeak unto thee is moſt true; cauſe thy Family this night to go out of the City; and follow their ſteps, that none among you look behind him, and go whither you ſhall be commanded; the wicked ſhall in the morning be deſtroyed. The Inhabitants of the City came to Lot's Houſe to ſee thoſe ſtrangers; Lot ſaid unto them, I beſeech you defile not your ſelves, with my Gueſts, fear God, and diſhonour not your ſelves, behold my Daughters, take them; They ſaid, We do not hinder thee to lodge thy Gueſts, and remained confounded in their drunkenneſs. In the morning Thunder ſurpriſed them, we overthrew the City upſide down, and cauſed it to rain Stones with Fire, that utterly deſtroyed it. This ſhall ſerve for example to Paſſengers that ſhall ſee thoſe Ruines, and for a mark of the Omnipotency of God, to them that ſhall believe in his Divine Majeſty. They that inhabited the Wood near to Medina were impious, but we avenged us on them, they ſerved for example to poſterity, as did the People of the City of Lot. They that dwell in the Valley of Hegir, have defamed the Prophets; we gave them to ſee our Miracles, and taught them our Commandments, they contemned them, but they repoſed in the morning in their Houſes built upon the Mountains, and in their Fortreſſes; when Thunder ſurpriſed them, their treaſures did not ſave them, and they were all deſtroyed. We created the Heavens and the Earth to be ſigns of the Truth, and of our Unity: The hour of Judgment approacheth, abſent thy ſelf from thy People with mildneſs, thy Lord who created all things, knoweth all. We taught thee ſeven ſigns, and the moſt precious Alcoran. Tarry not to conſider the divers ſorts of riches which the wicked poſſeſs; afflict not thy ſelf, if they perſiſt in their impiety; Say unto them, I preach none other thing, but the Word of God, and the pains of Hell. We will chaſtiſe the wicked, as we chaſtiſed them that divided the Alcoran, who approved one part, and rejected the other. I am thy Lord, I will require of them an account of their actions, preach what hath been commanded thee, and depart from Infidels, we will preſerve thee from them that ſhall ſcorn thee, as likewiſe from ſuch as adore Idols; I know that thou wilt be grieved at their diſcourſe, but praiſe and adore the Lord until Death.

That is, the Preface of the Alcoran, containing ſeven Verſes.

The Chapter of the Bee, containing an hundred and eight Verſes, written at Mecca.

See Gelaldin.

IN the name of God, gracious and merciful. The chaſtiſement of God is not far remote; deſire it not before its time; praiſed be God, he hath no Companion, he cauſeth the Angels to deſcend, and ſendeth his inſpirations to whom it pleaſeth him; preach his power, and the pains of Hell to unbelievers; there is no God but he, fear him, he created the Earth and the Heavens, he is more powerful than your Idols, and created Man of the Mire of the Earth, nevertheleſs he is obſtinate in his pride; he created clean Beaſts for your uſe, you draw (from them) great emolument, and advantage, to cloth and nouriſh your ſelves, ye ſee their beauty when they feed; and when they lead them to paſture, they bear the burthen, and whatſoever ye will ſend into Cities, what ye cannot carry without them, but with exceeding great travel; God is gracious and merciful towards you; he created Horſes, and Mules, and Aſſes to bear you; he created many glorious things, of which you have not knowledge. He teacheth them the right way, who who obſerve his Commandments; had it pleaſed him, he had guided all into the way of his Law. He ſendeth you water from Heaven to take away thirſt, and cauſeth plants to bring forth, and Trees that nouriſh your flocks; he maketh the Olive Trees to produce, the Date Trees, Vines, and all ſorts of Fruits. Theſe things are Arguments of his Unity, to ſuch as conſider them; he created the Night, the Day, the Sun, the Moon and the Stars, that move at his Pleaſure, theſe things are ſigns of his Omnipotency to them that are wiſe; He created whatſoever is on Earth of divers Colours, kind, and Species; he created the Sea, which affordeth you Fiſh, Pearls, and other precious ſtones to adorn you; thou ſeeſt how the Ships ſail upon the Waters, and divide the Waves for the advantage of Commerce, peradventure you will give God thanks for his Favours. He raiſed the mountains to make firm the Earth, and to hinder it to move, he created the Rivers, and eſtabliſhed ways to guide you; he made the Stars to conduct you by Night upon the Sea, and the mountains to direct you in your way by Day: who but he could have created what he hath made? will you never conſider it? It is not in your power to keep account of his Mercies, he is altogether gracious and merciful, and knoweth the ſecret of your Souls: the Idols that ye adore can create nothing, but are things dead, without motion, and know not in what time the World ſhall riſe again; your God is one ſole God; ſuch as believe not the end of the World, ſuch as deny his Unity, and boaſt of their falſe belief, are abhorred of his Divine Majeſty; when they are interrogated concerning what God hath inſpired into Mahomet; they anſwered, that he preacheth Fables of Antiquity, but they ſhall bear their Burthen at the Day of Judgment, who have ſeduced them from the right way, and have not known it. They that were before them were deceivers, God overthrew their Habitations, the Ruins fell upon them, and he chaſtiſed them, when they leaſt thought of it; he ſhall make them aſhamed at the Day of Judgment, and ſhall demand of them, where be the Idols for which they diſputed againſt true Believers? Such as have knowledge of Gods Commandments, aſſure that ſhame ſhall be upon the Foreheads of Infidels, and that the Angels ſhall cauſe them to die, becauſe of the enormity of their ſins; They will ſay at the hour of death, that they believe in God, and are penitent for their faults: God knoweth what they have done; he ſhall command them to enter into Hell, where is the abode of the proud: He ſhall command them who have his fear before their eyes to enter the houſe of Eternity, and the Gardens of Eden, wherein flow many Rivers, there ſhall they dwell eternally with the height of their deſire. Shall the wicked continue in their ſin, until the Angels cauſe them to die, or until the Day of Judgment? Thus did their Predeceſſours. God was not unjuſt towards them, they drew miſchief on themſelves through their iniquity; they were chaſtiſed and felt the puniſhment which they had deſpiſed; they have ſaid, had it ſo pleaſed God, our Fathers and we had adored him alone; ſo ſpake their Predeceſſours. The Prophets are not obliged, but to preach and inſtruct the people: We ſent a Prophet to every Nation, to inſtruct it, and to command the worſhip of one ſole God, and to quit the Adoration of Tagot, and of Idols; God guided ſome into the right way, and others were ſeduced; conſider what is the end of the wicked; if thou endeavoureſt to put them into the right path, thou ſhalt loſe thy time, God guideth not them that deſire to erre, they ſhall be deprived of Protection at the Day of Judgment: they have ſworn by their Faith, that God will not make the dead to riſe again, but he ſhall cauſe them to riſe again, to chaſtiſe them according to his Promiſes; but the greateſt part of Men do not know it, did they know it, they would acknowledge their Errours, and the impious would acknowledge their blaſphemies. When we willed any thing, we ſaid, be thou, and it was: They that depart from the wicked for the love of their Lord, and ſhall convert themſelves, ſhall be rewarded in this World, and yet more in the other, had they knowledge to underſtand it. Such as patiently endure the injuries of Unbelievers, and truſt in their Lord, ſhall be recompenced when they leaſt think of it. We heretofore ſent but Men to preach our Law; ask of them that have knowledge of the written Law, if it be not true? We have ſent to them the Alcoran; to the end thou mayſt inſtruct Men in our Commandments, peradventure they will conſider it. The Earth ſhall produce nothing to them, that ſhall conſpire againſt the Prophet, they ſhall be chaſtiſed when they leaſt think of it; God ſhall afflict them in their commerce, they ſhall not eſcape his puniſhment, and their ſubſtance ſhall diminiſh by little and little before their eyes; God is gracious and merciful to them only that honour him: See they not the ſhadow of that which God hath created, ſometimes at the right hand, ſometimes at the left, to adore his Divine Majeſty, they certainly are contemptible; whatſoever is on the Earth, and in the Heavens, Beaſt, and Angels, worſhip God with Humility, fear their Lord, and obey his Commandments. God hath commanded them to worſhip and to fear one God alone, to whom obedience is due eternally; whom will ye fear but God? who but God ſhall protect you? when evil befalleth you, you have recourſe to his Divine goodneſs; being delivered, ſome of you give him thanks, and yet believe not in his Law: You ſeek only the riches of the Earth, but you ſhall ſee what ſhall be your end; they ſay, that their wealth proceedeth from their Idols: by God! an account of their blaſphemies ſhall be required of them; they affirm that God hath Daughters; aſſuredly they deceive themſelves, and are not well ſatisfied, when it is ſaid to them, that a Daughter is born to them; they fly ſuch as declare to them the puniſhment of their ſins, God ſhall leave them in ignominy, and they ſhall be contemned as the Earth which they trample under their Feet; becauſe they believe not in the Day of Judgment, miſery ſhall perpetually purſue them; God ſhall command for ever, and be eternally powerful and Victorious. Should God chaſtiſe Men when they offend, he ſhould leave no living Creature upon the Earth, he deferreth their puniſhment until the time appointed, they can neither advance nor retard it; they affirm God to have that which themſelves are not ſatisfied to have; they lye, when they ſay that Paradiſe is for them, doubtleſs they are erroneous, and ſhall be precipitated into the fire of Hell. By God! we have ſent heretofore Prophets to the people, the Devil ſeduced Men, and was Maſter of the wicked in this World, but in the other they ſhall reſent great torments: We have ſent thee the Alcoran, to clear to Men the doubts touching Religion, and to guide true Believers into the right way. God ſendeth rain from Heaven to refreſh the Earth, this is an evident ſign of his Omnipotency, to them that hear his word; ye have yet a token of his Omnipotency in the Beaſts that give you Milk, to nouriſh you, and another mark in the Fruits of the Earth, in the Fruits of Date Trees, and the Vines, from which you extract Wine, and receive profit. Theſe things are ſigns of his Omnipotency, to ſuch as comprehend them. The Lord inſpired the Bee to dwell in the Fields, to lodge in Trees, in Hives, and to eat of all ſorts of Fruits, it produceth Honey of divers colours, that ſerveth for a remedy to the diſeaſes of Men; theſe things are ſigns of Gods Omnipotency to them that conſider them. God hath created you, and ſhall cauſe you to dye; There be Perſons among you that ſhall be full of ignominy in their life, to the end they may underſtand that God is Omnipotent, conferreth benefits on ſome more than on others: Slaves have no part in the faculties of their Maſters, neither are they aſſociate with them, (nevertheleſs they aſſociate to God another God equal to him, and blaſpheme againſt his Grace.) God hath created you Men, and Women, and hath given you Children, and Children to your Children, he hath enriched you with the riches of the Earth; Will you after this Grace believe in your Idols, which are things inanimate, vain, and unprofitable? Will ye be ingrateful for the benefits of God? Will ye worſhip what can neither benefit nor hurt you? Believe not that there is another God Companion and aſſociate with God? He knoweth what ye know not, he teacheth you a Parable: A Slave that is poor cannot give Alms, and he who is rich giveth Alms ſecretly and publickly, as he ſeeth good; are they both alike? Ought they to be put in Parallel? Praiſe be to God: Certainly, the greateſt part of Men know not his Graces, he teacheth you a Parable! Behold! two Men; the one was born deaf, and dumb, and given in charge to his Guardian, he knoweth not how to imploy him, he is capable neither of doing, nor ſpeaking well, is he like to him that ſpeaketh, that underſtandeth, teacheth Men Juſtice, and followeth the right way? Whatſoever is in Heaven, or on Earth appertaineth to God, when he commandeth any thing, it is performed in the twinkling of an eye, yea ſooner, he is Omnipotent: He it is that cauſeth you to come out of the Womb of your Mother, that giveth you hearing, ſight, and ſenſe, perhaps ye will return him thanks; See ye not the Birds that fly in the Air; who ſuſtaineth them but God? It is an evident ſign of his Omnipotency for the true Believers, he hath given you Houſes to inhabit, and the Skins and Furrs of Beaſts to cover you, he hath given you their Hair, and Wooll, to furniſh your Houſes, and enrich you; he created Trees and Clouds to overſhadow you, made the Mountains and Caves to cover you from rain, created Garments to defend you from the heat of the Sun, and the rigour of Cold, he hath accompliſhed his Grace upon you, peradventure you will reſign your ſelves to the Will of his Divine Majeſty, and poſſeſs his Unity. If the Unbelievers depart from the way of the Law, thou art obliged only to preach to them intelligibly; they know the Grace of God, and contemn it, for that the greateſt part of them are impious; preach unto them the Day, wherein I will raiſe again all the Nations of the World, and the Prophets and Apoſtles who have preached to them my Commandments, there ſhall be no excuſe for Infidels, neither ſhall they find protection, or relaxation of their Miſeries: When they ſhall behold their Idols, they ſhall confeſs that they were miſled, they ſhall underſtand the Unity of thy Lord, and that their Idols are not able to intercede for them. God hath added to the puniſhment of Infidels, hath ſent them evil upon evil, becauſe they hinder the World to follow his Law: Preach unto them the Day, wherein I will cauſe to riſe again all the Nations of the World, with the Prophet who preached to them, to be Witneſs of their Actions; I will be Witneſs againſt them of thy Nation; I have ſent thee the Book that unfoldeth the Myſteries of my Law, to guide the people into the right way, and to declare the Joys of Paradiſe to ſuch as profeſs my Unity. God commandeth you to do only that which is reaſonable, he commandeth you to give Alms, and to do good to your Parents, he forbiddeth Whoredom, diſobedience, and injuſtice, enjoyneth you to do good, perhaps you will conſider it. Perform what ye have Promiſed to God, break not promiſed Faith, ye call God to be Witneſs of your Promiſes, he knoweth all your Actions. Do not like the Woman who ſpun a Thread, folded it, and afterwards entangled and ſpoyled it, believe not that there is deceit and errour in your Law; If the Unbelievers be more in number than you, God permitteth it, to prove you; he ſhall clear to you at the Day of Judgment the doubts that be among you; had it ſo pleaſed him, you all had obſerved one and the ſame Law; he guideth, miſleadeth whom it pleaſeth him, and will exactly require of you an account of your Actions. Believe not that there is deceit in your Law, take heed of ſtumbling; having once confirmed your ſteps, ye ſhall be ſeverely chaſtiſed, if ye ſeduce the people from the right way; do not violate what ye have promiſed to God, for any price, his Grace is of more advantage to you than the wealth of the Earth, had ye knowledge to underſtand it; your wealth is periſhable, and the riches of Heaven are eternal; he ſhall recompence them that perſevere in well-doing, and whoſoever ſhall do good works, ſhall be bleſſed in this World, and in the other. When thou ſhalt read the Alcoran, implore God to deliver thee from the Malice of the Devil, abominable to all the Creatures, he hath no power over them that truſt in his Divine Majeſty, his power extendeth over ſuch as go aſtray, who obey not him, and adore many Gods. When we alter any Precepts (God well knoweth what he ordaineth) they ſay thou art a Lyar, but the greateſt part of them are ignorant; Say unto them, that aſſuredly the Holy Ghoſt hath taught it from thy Lord, to confirm Believers in their Faith, and to guide into the right way them that profeſs his Unity, and to announce to them the Joys of Paradiſe. I know, that they will ſay that a Man hath taught him the Alcoran. He whom they preſume to have taught him, is a Perſian by Nation, and ſpeaketh the Language of the Perſians, and the Alcoran is in the Arabick Tongue, full of inſtruction and eloquence. They who will not believe in God, ſhall ſuffer great torments; ſuch as renounce his Commandments, blaſpheme againſt his Divine Majeſty; thoſe that reject his Law, after having profeſſed it, ſhall feel the effect of his wrath, and be puniſhed for preferring the Wealth of the Earth to the riches of Heaven; God guideth not unbelievers. They in whoſe hearts he hath imprinted diſobedience, thoſe whom he hath deprived of hearing, and ſight, are ignorant, they doubtleſs ſhall be at the end of the World in the number of the damned; he is merciful to them that convert, and repent to have miſſead the People from the right way, and perſevere in obedience to his Commandments. Be thou mindful of the day, wherein man ſhall diſpute againſt himſelf, and every one ſhall be rewarded according to his works without injuſtice. God teacheth you a Parable; behold a free and priviledged City, on the which God poureth his graces on all ſides with abundance, and is ingrateful for his benefits; but he ſent upon it miſery, famine, and fear, becauſe of its ingratitude. God hath ſent to the Inhabitants thereof a Prophet of their Nation, they have ſlandered him, and were chaſtiſed, becauſe of their ſin. Eat of what God hath given you, and give him thanks for his grace; if it be he whom ye worſhip, he forbideth you to eat of Carrion, of Blood, and Swines-fleſh, and whatſoever is not ſlain in pronouncing the Name of God; he will be gracious and merciful to them who ſhall eat through neceſſity, without deſign to offend him. Lie not, in ſaying, Behold that which is permitted to be eaten! blaſpheme not againſt God; ſuch as blaſpheme againſt him, ſhall not proſper in this World, and in the other ſhall ſuffer grievous torments. We did heretofore prohibit the Jews to eat of what we have recounted to thee; we did to them no injuſtice, they drew miſchief on themſelves through their ſin; thy Lord is gracious and merciful to them that ignorantly offend him, who convert, and do good works. Abraham was obedient to God, and profeſſed his unity, he adored not Idols, and gave thanks to God for his Mercies; God elected, and guided him into the right way, he gave him wealth in this World, and placed him in the other, in the number of the bleſſed. We have inſpired thee to follow the Law of Abraham, he profeſſed the Unity of God, and adored not Idols, he eſtabliſhed the Sabbath among the Jews, of which they diſpute; God ſhall judge their difference at the Day of Judgment. Call the People to the Law of God with prudence, and preachings, and diſpute againſt them with good arguments, God knoweth them that depart from the right way; if they evilly intreat you, intreat them as they ſhall intreat you; if ye be patient, patience is advantagious to them that take it willingly, have patience for the love of God, and afflict not your ſelves with the deportments and malice of the wicked. God is with the Righteous, who have his fear before their eyes.

The Jews and Chriſtians.

CHAAP. XVII.

The Chapter of the Voyage by Night, containing an Hundred and eleven Verſes, written at Mecca.

Reader, The Turks believe that this Night of the Voyage Mahomet aſcended into Heaven with the Angel Gabriel: He was mounted on a white Burac, which is a beaſt partly Mule, partly Aſs, and partly Horſe. He ſaw all the Prophets that preceded him, all the wonders of Paradiſe, and ſaw God, who ſate on his Throne. See Kitab el tenoir, Tefſſir anf Giauhoir, and the Expoſition of Gelaldin. The Bedaoi intituled this Chapter, The Chapter of the Children of Iſrael.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful. Praiſe be to him, that cauſed his ſervant to go in one night from the Temple of Mecca, to the Temple of Jeruſalem; we have bleſſed that Temple, and whatſoever is about it, in token of our Omnipotency. We gave to Moſes the Old Teſtament, to inſtruct the Children of Iſrael, and to deter them from the worſhip of any other God, but of me; to forbid them to adore the Lineage of Noah, or the Lineage of them that we preſerved in his Ark. Noah is my creature, and my ſervant, acknowledging my benefits; we prohibited in Scripture the Children of Iſrael, to defile twice the Earth, leſt they kindled too great a fire; when that befel you, we ſtirred up our ſervants againſt you, and they entred by force into the midſt of your houſes; this was as ſoon executed as promiſed. In the end, we gave you advantage over your Enemies; we gave you Wealth, and Children to ſuccour you, and ye were more numerous than the Infidels; the good and the evil that you ſhall do, ſhall be for your ſouls. We ſtirred up the wicked againſt you, becauſe of your ſins, to afflict you through the Murther, and Bondage of your perſons; and they deſtroyed the Temple of Jeruſalem, as they had ruined it the firſt time. Your Lord ſhall pardon you, if you convert; we have eſtabliſhed Hell for a perpetual Priſon of Infidels. The Alcoran guideth the Righteous into the right way, it declareth to them a great reward, preacheth to the wicked the torments of Hell; and exhorteth men to well-doing, although they are inclining to evil, and prompt to ſin. We created the Day and the Night, they are two ſigns of our Omnipotency: We cauſed the Night to paſs away, and the Day to appear for labour; and to the end ye might know the number of Ages, of Months, and of Years; we explained our Myſteries without obſcurity, and have enjoyned every one to bear the burden of his iniquities at the Day of Judgment; that day will make men to ſee the account of their ſins, they ſhall be recompenced and chaſtiſed according to the good and the evil that they ſhall have committed, and none ſhall bear the burden of his Neighbour: We ſent to the People Prophets and Apoſtles to preach to them our Commandments, before they were chaſtiſed, before the deſtruction of a City: we advertiſed the Principal Inhabitants thereof; when they diſobeyed us, we chaſtiſed them according to our word, and deſtroyed them. How many Cities have we ruined ſince Noah's flood? The ſins of the People are known to their Lord; he giveth the riches of this world to them that deſire them, to cauſe them to fall headlong into Hell, where they ſhall repent of their iniquites, and be deprived of mercy. He who ſhall labour to acquire the riches of Heaven, ſhall be protected of thy Lord in this world, and enriched with the Treaſures of Heaven in the other. Conſider, how we prefer our Creatures one to another; the reward of Heaven is much greater than that of the Earth. Believe not that there be two Gods, otherwiſe you ſhall repent of it, and be deprived of protection at the day of judgment. Thy Lord hath ordained to worſhip him alone, and to honour your father and mother, eſpecially in their old age, and ſay nothing to them that may afflict them, neither vex them; ſpeak to them with reſpect, do not contemn them, pray to God to compaſſionate them, as they have pitied you, when they brought you up in your infancy. God knoweth whatſoever is in your ſouls; he will be merciful to you, if ye obey him. Give to your parents what appertaineth to them, do good to the poor, and to pilgrims, be not prodigal, the prodigal are brethren of the Devil, ingrateful for the favours of their Lord. Contemn not the poor, if ye deſire to obtain the mercy of God, ſpeak to them with mildneſs, and endeavour to content them; do not entirely ſhut your hands, neither altogether extend them; if ye do otherwiſe, ye ſhall offend. Thy Lord giveth, and taketh away his graces, as ſeemeth good to him; he knoweth his people, and underſtandeth all their actions. Slay not your children for fear of neceſſity, I will give whatſoever ſhall be neceſſary for them; the murther of children is an exceeding great ſin, flie whoredom, it is a thing unclean, kill no man without reaſon; we have commanded to purſue him that ſhall have ſlain his neighbour, but let not the heir ſin maliciouſly, proſecuting the innocent for the guilty. The innocent is in Gods protection: take not the goods of Orphans, and be careful of them, until they be in years of diſcretion; ſatisfie your promiſes, an account ſhall be required of you; meaſure with good meaſure, and weigh with juſt weights. Buſie your ſelves not with that which you ought not to know. There ſhall be required of you an account of the ſins ye have committed, in ſeeing, hearing, and thinking. Be not proud, ye ſhall never be ſo long as the Earth, neither ſo high as the Mountains; ſuch ſins are exceeding great before thy Lord: It is one part of what he hath inſpired into thee, to preach to his people: Say not, there be two Gods, leſt thou be confined to the fire of Hell. Your Lord hath elected you, with all thoſe men and women that obey his Commandments, for his ſons and daughters, as the Angels; yet ſay not that God hath children. We made mention in the Alcoran of whatſoever is neceſſary to be preached to the people; ſay unto them, If there be a God with God, as ye affirm, invoke him that hath his Throne in Heaven; praiſed be God, he hath no Companion, he is moſt high and great. The ſeven Heavens praiſe him, and all that is on Earth glorifie him, but ye comprehend it not; he is gracious and merciful. We will ſeparate thee from the wicked; we will harden their hearts, and ſtop their ears: When thou ſhalt read the Alcoran, and ſay, There is but one God, they will turn the back, and deride thee, I know what they deſire to hear, they would have the people to hearken to the words of the unjuſt, who ſay, That thou art a Sorcerer, and a Magician; conſider to whom they compare thee; they certainly are in error, and are not able to find the right way. What! we are (ſay they) bones and fleſh, ſhall we riſe again, and become new Creatures? who ſhall cauſe us to riſe again? Say unto them, Although ye be ſtone, iron, bones, and fleſh, he who firſt created you, ſhall raiſe you again. They ſhall ſhake the head at thee, and ask of thee, In what time they ſhall riſe again? ſay unto them, Peradventure it ſhall be ſuddenly. When ye ſhall be called out of the graves by the Commandment of God, ye will believe that ye have remained but very little time in the world; then ſhall the Infidels confeſs, that the Devil hath deceived them, and that he is their open enemy. Your Lord knoweth you all, he will pardon, or chaſtiſe you, as ſeemeth good to him: We have not ſent thee to be their guardian; thy Lord knoweth whatſoever is in Heaven and in Earth. Certainly, we gave graces to ſome Prophets, which we gave not to others; and we gave the Pſalter to David; Say unto the Infidels, invoke the Idols which ye adore, and ſee if they are of power to deliver you from affliction. They that implore God, deſire to be nigh unto him: who are they that ſhall neareſt approach his divine Majeſty, they who hope in his mercy, or ſuch as fear his puniſhment? Certainly his puniſhment ought moſt to be feared. We will deſtroy all the Cities of the world before the day of Judgment, and chaſtiſe the wicked with rigorous torments; this is written upon the Tables kept in heaven; nothing hath hindred us to manifeſt the miracles which the inhabitants of Mecca deſire to ſee, but the contempt ſhewed by their predeceſſors. Temod ſaw the miracles of the Camel, and contemned it; I will no more ſhew miracles, but to make the people to apprehend the torments of hell. Remember thou, that we have ſaid to thee, that thy Lord knoweth all that the world doth; that which we gave thee to ſee (in the voyage by night) is to prove the people as the curſed tree, which is ſpoken of in the Alcoran; there be perſons that will believe it, others that will not believe; but I will try them, to augment their confuſion: Remember thou, that we commanded the Angels to humble themſelves before Adam, and that they did humble themſelves, except the devil; who ſaid, Shall I adore him whom thou haſt created of the earth? who is he whom thou haſt preferred to me? Certainly, if thou tarry until the day of Judgment, I will deſtroy his race, except that ſmall number that ſhall be under thy protection. Thy Lord ſaid unto him, Get thee hence, hell ſhall be thy puniſhment, and the puniſhment of them that ſhall follow thee; deceive by thy ſpeeches them whom thou ſhalt be able to deceive, ſeduce whom thou canſt ſeduce with the wealth of the earth, cauſe them to exerciſe Uſury, and commit the ſin of whoredom; tell them, there is neither Reſurrection nor Judgment; whatſoever thou ſhalt promiſe them ſhall be but vanity and falſhood; thou ſhalt have no power over them that ſhall worſhip me, I will protect them againſt thee. It is your Lord, who cauſeth the ſhip to travel upon the waters, for the advantage of traffique; when the tempeſt chargeth you, your Idols forſake you, he alone is able to protect you, nevertheleſs when he hath cauſed you to arrive at the Port, you deny his Unity, and follow your impiety; believe ye that he will another time make the ſea calm to you? and he will ſend you a favourable wind, if ye do not acknowledg him your protector? Believe you to return again to the ſea? He ſhall ſend you an impetuous wind, that ſhall overwhelm you, with your impiety,

and ye ſhall find none to protect you againſt him. We have conferred on men many favours, we have conducted them on the earth, and ſea, enriched with all ſorts of riches, and gratified them above all creatures of the earth; preach to them the day wherein I will aſſemble before me all the Nations of the World, with the Prophet that ſhall have preached to them. He to whom ſhall be given the Book of the Accompt of his works in his right hand, ſhall read his accompt entirely, no injuſtice ſhall be done to him, and he ſhall be happy. He that ſhall be blind in this world, ſhall be ſo in the other, and ſhall not ſee the right way. They would divert thee from performing what we have inſpired into thee, to induce thee to blaſpheme againſt me. If thou do it, thou ſhalt be of their friends; were it not for the ſtrength that we have given thee, they would make thee to incline to their impiety; hadſt thou done it, we had given thee to taſte of great afflictions in this world, and in the other; thou hadſt found none to protect thee againſt us; it wanted not much, but they had affrighted thee at Medina, to cauſe thee to go out of it; had they driven thee thence, they had not continued there long after thee. We heretofore ſent our Prophets to inſtruct the people in our Law, thou ſhalt find therein nothing to change; make thy prayers when the Sun ſhall ſet, at the beginning, and at the end of the night, and at the dawning of day, the Angels ſhall be witneſſes of thine oriſons; ſpend one part of the night in prayer, this ſhall be an augmentation of merit, thy Lord ſhall eſtabliſh thee in the place of his glory: Say, Lord, into whatſoever place I go, make me to enter, and go forth with truth, give me thy protection; Say, that truth is come, and that vanity is vaniſhed; this Book ſhall heal the people of their error, it ſhall bring them into the way of mercy, and encreaſe the miſery of unbelievers. We have exhorted men to abandon their impiety, they have not done it, and deſpaired when they were touched with affliction; Say unto them, Each of us doth after his will, and God knoweth him that followeth the right way; they ſhall demand of thee concerning the Soul: Say unto them, the ſoul is an effect of God, he hath given you very little knowledge; aſſuredly, had it ſo pleaſed him, he could have deprived you of the knowledge he hath given you, you ſhall find nothing that is able to protect you but his mercy: Say unto them, If the devils and men were all aſſembled againſt me, they ſhould not be able to compoſe a Book like the Alcoran. We have taught in the Alcoran whatſoever is neceſſary for the ſalvation of men, nevertheleſs the greateſt part of the people depart from the Truth, and ſay, We will not believe thee, unleſs thou cauſe fountains to ſpring out of the Earth, and make in this place a garden, beautified with Date-Trees, and Vines, with rivers flowing in the midſt, or unleſs we ſee deſcend from Heaven a part of the pains which thou preacheſt; we will not believe thee, unleſs God and the Angels come to thy aſſiſtance, unleſs thy houſe be of fine gold, and that we ſee the Book of Truth ſent from heaven; we will not believe in thy Parchment, unleſs we ſee deſcend from heaven a Book which we may be able to read: Say unto them, Praiſed be my Lord, am I any thing but a man ſent from him? what hindereth men to believe, ſince there hath been ſent to them a Pilot to conduct them into the way of ſalvation? They ſay, that thou art a man, and not an Angel: Say unto them, ſhould the Angels have inhabited the earth, God would have ſent an Angel to inſtruct them; it ſufficeth, that he is the witneſs of mine actions between you and me, he knoweth and ſeeth all things; he whom God guideth, is well guided, and ſuch as God ſhall cauſe to err, ſhall find none to put them into the right way; he will aſſemble all of them at the day of Judgment, they ſhall be infamous, deaf, mute, and blind, and condemned to the flames of hell, becauſe they are wicked, and have ſaid through deriſion, that they are bones, and fleſh, and that they ſhall riſe again as new creatures; ſee they not that God hath created heaven, and earth? that he can create yet more, and hath eſtabliſhed a deſtiny indubitabe, and infallible? The unbelievers are exceedingly too blame: Say unto them, ſhould you poſſeſs all the treaſures of the world, yet would ye fear to make expence for the ſervice of God; man is too avaricious; We gave to Moſes nine marks of our Omnipotency, known to the children of Iſrael; Pharaoh told him that he was a Magician; Aſſuredly, ſaid Moſes, the ſigns and miracles that thou ſeeſt, proceed from God, Lord of heaven and earth; I believe, O Pharaoh! that thou forſakeſt the truth: Then would Pharaoh have driven him out of Egypt, but we drowned all thoſe that were with him, and commanded the children of Iſrael to inhabit the land; we will aſſemble them at the end of the world, to reward them after their works: We have indeed ſent thee the Alcoran from heaven, to proclaim the joys of Paradiſe, and to preach the torments of hell; we have ſent it, to the end thou maiſt teach it to the people; we have ſent it clear, and intelligible, that it may be underſtood, according to occurrences. Say unto them, Believe, or believe it not; when thoſe that have knowledge in the written Law heard it read, they proſtrated themſelves on the ground with humility, and ſaid, Praiſed be God, what he promiſeth, is infallible, and incontinently is his command executed; they wept, proſtrating the face towards the earth, and the reading of the Alcoran augmented their devotion: Say unto them, Implore God, call God merciful, all his Attributes are moſt glorious. Make it not appear to the world how often thou ſhalt pray, neither how often thou ſhalt read the Alcoran; and fear not to pray to God, and to read (the Alcoran), follow in this the middle path, and ſay, Praiſed be God, he hath no Son, he hath no companion, neither protector to preſerve him from contempt; his greatneſs is perfect and compleat.

CHAP. XVIII.

The Chapter of the Cave, containing an hundred and ten Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful. Praiſe be to God, who hath ſent the Alcoran to his ſervant. There is no contradiction in this Book; it teacheth the right way; it preacheth to the wicked, that they ſhall ſuffer great torments, and proclaimeth to the righteous, that they ſhall enjoy an eternal felicity; he preacheth the torments of Hell, principally to ſuch as affirm, That God hath a Son; they are ignorant, like to their predeceſſors; they are ignorant in their diſcourſe, and utter nothing but blaſphemies, Wilt thou deſtroy thy ſelf in following their footſteps? If they believe not in the Alcoran, they ſhall one day have ſorrow, and ſhall repent it. We adorned the Earth, with whatſoever is upon it, for the advantage of men. One part thereof is happy and plentiful, and the other unfruitful, and deſart. Do ye not believe that the ſleepers that entred the Cave, and the Paper wherein their names were written, be our miracles? When thoſe men entred the Cave, they ſaid, Lord, give us thy mercy, and guide us into the right way. Then did we cauſe them to ſleep for the ſpace of ſome years, and awaked them, having continued ſome time in that Cave, to make it appear which of the two Religions was the moſt juſt. I will relate to thee their Hiſtory with truth; they were young men, who had the fear of their Lord before their eyes; we ſtrengthned them, and encreaſed their faith; when they were with the Infidels, they ſaid, Our God is Lord of heaven and Earth, we will never worſhip but one God, otherwiſe we ſhall ſeparate our ſelves from the truth: This people have adored Idols without reaſon: who is more unjuſt than he, who blaſphemeth againſt God? When they deſerted the Infidels, they worſhipped one God alone. Enter into the Cave, God ſhall make his mercy towards you to appear, and ſhall guide you through a path ſmooth and pleaſant. When the Sun aroſe, he caſt his rayes on the right ſide of their Cave, and on the left, at his going down; they in the mean time were in the moſt ſpacious place of this Cave. This is one of Gods miracles; he whom he guideth, is well guided; and whom he miſleadeth, ſhalt find none to give him ſuccor, or to guide him. Believe ye that they ſhould be awake? Aſſuredly they ſlept and turned themſelves, ſometimes to one ſide, ſometimes to another: Conſider how their Dog extended his feet before that old habitation of ſtone; if any one had entred towards them, he would have cauſed them to fly, and had affrighted them. In the end we awaked them, and they mutually enquired of each other in what place they were, and how long they had there continued; one of them replyed, That they had been there a day or two; then they all ſaid, God knoweth the time that we have abode here, ſend one of us to the City with money to buy bread and meat; let him not be fearful, neither make himſelf known to any; if we be known, they will murther or conſtrain us to follow their Religion in which we ſhall be eternally miſerable. Thus did we ſtir up the people againſt them, to the end they might know that thy Lord is true; when he ſaid, He will cauſe the dead to ariſe again, the Reſurrection is indubitable; nevertheleſs unbelievers diſpute among them, concerning the Hiſtory of the Sleepers, and ſay, That they built a ſecret place to retire themſelves. God knoweth the Truth. The True believers believe that they made no building; the Infidels ſay they were five, and that their dog was the ſixth, they ſpeak by opinion; but the True believers affirm them to be ſeven, and their dog to be the eighth. Say unto them, My Lord knoweth how many they were: few perſons, except God, know their number; Doubt no more the Hiſtory of the Sleepers, the matter is averred and known: diſpute no more with the Jews, and ſay not, I will do this to morrow, without ſaying, If it pleaſe God. Call God to mind after thou haſt forgot him, and ſay, The Lord ſhall guide me, and teach me the Hiſtory of the Sleepers, who remained in Cave three hundred years: there be who affirm they continued there nine hundred years. Say unto them, God knoweth the time of their abode there, he knoweth whatſoever is in Heaven, and Earth, he underſtandeth and ſeeth all things, he alone diſpoſeth every thing, and hath no companion: Preach what thy Lord hath inſpired into thee, his word admitteth of no alteration, there is no ſafer refuge than in him; dwell with thoſe that invoke him morning and evening, and deſire to ſee his face: depart not from their company, if thou deſireſt to have content of life in this world: obey not thoſe whoſe heart we have hardned, and are unmindful of us; follow not their impiety; whatſoever they do, is but offence and ſin. Say unto them, the truth proceedeth from your Lord; who ſhall deſire [it] ſhall be True believers, and who ſhall not deſire [it] ſhall be an Infidel, we have prepared Hell to chaſtiſe the impious, and priſons wherein to detain them. They ſhall implore ſuccors againſt the melting pit, into which they ſhall be plunged, as into waters, it ſhall roſt their faces, and ſhall be their drink: I will not fruſtrate of reward them that ſhall have done well; they ſhall enjoy the delights of the gardens of Eden, wherein flow many rivers; they ſhall have bracelets of fine Gold; they ſhall be cloathed with green, with Scarlet, with ſhining colours, and ſhall ſit on thrones, with an eternal felicity. Declare to them this parable: there were two men, I gave to the one of them gardens wherein are ſtore of fruits; he in contempt told his companion, that he was more wealthy and powerful than he, and entred into his gardens, being an Infidel, and an Idolater, and ſaid, I do not think theſe ſhall ever have an end, they ſhall endure a long time without withering: His companion ſaid to him: If thou doſt not acknowledge this to proceed from God, and if thou be ingrateful towards him that created thee of duſt, and made thee a man, thou ſhalt ſoon find thy gardens ruined: this cometh from God my Lord, who hath no companion: all ſtrength and truth proceedeth from his divine Majeſty: If I have leſs of ſubſtance than thou, God can give me fruits more fair than thoſe of thy gardens, or ſend thunder that ſhall deſtroy them, he ſhall fill them with water of rain, that ſhall encompaſs them, and hinder thee to approach [them.]

See Galaldin.

[them.] In the morning this Infidel found his gardens deſtroyed to the very roots; he was extreamly perplexed, by reaſon of the expence he had made to plant them evenly; and he ſaid, Would to God I had not adored Idols: He ſhall find none that is able to protect him at the day of Judgment, but God, all protection and grace iſſueth from his divine bounty, and the end of the righteous ſhall be happy. Speak unto them this parable, The life of the world is like unto rain fallen from Heaven, that refreſhed and revived the herbs of the Earth, and in the morning were dry as chaff, carried away by the wind; God is omnipotent: Riches and Children are the ornaments of this life, but good works are eternal, they are acceptable to God, and give us hope of his grace. Be thou mindful of the day when the mountains ſhall walk, and thou ſhalt ſee the Earth to be plain; that day we aſſemble the good and the wicked, and will not fail of my word to any perſon; that day ſhall the Infidels beſeech the Lord to ſave them, he ſhall ſay unto them, You came unto us naked; as when we at firſt created you, and ye believed on Earth, that there was no reſurrection; Then ſhall he give to every one the Book, wherein ſhall be written the accompt of their ſins; Thou ſhalt ſee the wicked trembling with fear, ſaying, behold here our deſtruction! What is there in this Book? It containeth their venial and mortal ſins, and detecteth their offences, they ſhall find the number of their crimes before their eyes: Thy Lord is unjuſt to none; Remember thou that we commanded the Angels to proſtrate themſelves before Adam, and that they humbled themſelves, except the Devil, who was in the number of Angels, he diſobeyed his Lord; nevertheleſs Adam and his poſterity have obeyed him, although he is their open enemy, and particularly of the Infidels. Conſider ye not that God created Heaven and Earth, and he made you, and hath no need to be aided of you? Be thou mindful of the day, when it ſhall be ſaid to Idolaters, Call upon your Idols that ye have worſhipped, for remiſſion of your ſins; they ſhall implore them, but none ſhall hear their prayers, we have ruined them; the wicked ſhall behold the fire, into which they ſhall fall, and find none to ſave them. We taught men in the Alcoran, many parables, yet do the wicked abound in queſtion, and diſpute too much; What hindreth men to believe, ſince there is come to them a guide, to conduct them into the right way? If they beg not pardon of God, what hapned to their predeceſſors, and at Beder, ſhall befall them, they ſhall be viſibly puniſhed; I ſend Prophets only to anounce the joys of Paradiſe, and to preach the torments of Hell; the unbelievers diſpute vainly, to obſcure the truth, they deride my Commandments, and the fire of Hell; who is more unjuſt than he who knoweth the Commandments of his Lord, and diſobeyeth him, and forgetteth his paſt ſins? We have hardned their hearts, they ſhall not underſtand the Scripture; we have ſtopped their ears, they ſhall hear nothing; if thou calleſt them to the right way, they ſhall not follow thee, thy Lord is gracious and merciful; ſhould he chaſtiſe them after their demerits, he ſhould forthwith deſtroy them, he tarrieth until the time that he hath promiſed to puniſh them, and they ſhall find none of power to protect them. We have deſtroyed Cities, when their inhabitants have offended, and we prefixed the day of their ruine. Remember thou that Moſes ſaid to his ſervant, I will travel inceſſantly, until I ſee a place where two ſeas meet, although I travel an Age. When he came to that place, he and his ſervant forgot their fiſh, he had taken his way through the Sea: Having continued their voyage ſome time, Moſes was an hungry, and demanded ſomewhat to eat of his ſervant, who ſaid to him, Saweſt thou what hapned at the Rock? I have forgotten our fiſh, the Devil made me to forget it, he miraculouſly took his way through the Sea; that Rock is the place which we ſeek: they both returned on their ſteps, diſcourſing together, until they came to that Rock, where they found one of our ſervants, on whom we had conferred our graces, and inſpired knowledge; Moſes ſaid unto him, Permit me to follow thee, that thou mayſt teach me knowledge, and inſtruct me; He replied, Thou wilt not be able to abide patiently with me; How wilt thou patiently endure to hear a thing which none in the world ever knew? Moſes ſaid, Thou ſhalt find me exceeding patient, and I will not diſobey thee; He anſwered, If thou follow me, enquire nothing of me, and hear only what I ſhall ſay to thee. They went together, and they being in a boat, he brake a plank; Moſes ſaid to him, Thou haſt broken this veſſel, to drown us, it is a ſtrange thing; He anſwered, Did not I tell thee, that thou wilt not be able patiently to abide with me? Moſes replied, Excuſe me, and afflict me not, I had forgotten what thou didſt enjoyn me? They went on together until they met with a child, whom he ſlew; Moſes ſaid to him, Thou haſt ſlain an innocent, that hath not ſlain any one; thou haſt done a thing without reaſon, and that ought not to be approved: He anſwered, Did I not ſay, thou wilt not be able patiently to abide with me? Moſes ſaid to him, Excuſe me this time alſo, if I demand ought elſe of thee, abandon me. They continued their way unto a Village, where the inhabitants refuſed them bread; at that time they found a wall ruined, which he raiſed again; Moſes ſaid to him, Thou ſhouldſt have been payed for repairing this wall, if thou wouldſt; He anſwered, Now behold the place of our ſegration, nevertheleſs I will explain to thee what thou wert impatient to learn. That boat belongeth to two poor men, who labour on the ſea to gain their ſubſiſtence, I would have pierced it, to preſerve it to thoſe poor men, becauſe there was an Infidel Prince, who by force ſeized on the good veſſels for his ſervice. That Infant which I ſlew was an Idolater, the ſon of a true believer, a righteous man; we feared he might cauſe his father to ſin, and ſeduce him into his error, and infidelity; the Lord through his goodneſs would have him to be deſtroyed, to deliver his father from his malice. The wall appertaineth to two infant Orphans of this City, there is under it a treaſure that belongeth to them, their father was a righteous man, God through his goodneſs willeth that the treaſure be preſerved for them, until they attain to years of Diſcretion; he likewiſe willed me to do what I have done: behold the expoſition of what thou wert impatient to learn. If any one enquire of thee concerning Alexander the great, relate to them his Hiſtory. We gave him on earth what he deſired, he went as far as the Weſt, where he found a fountain guarded by a man, who ſaid to him, O Alexander! chaſtiſe men through the murther of their perſons; Bondage and Ranſom; he anſwered, I will put to death unbelievers in this world, and the Lord ſhall puniſh them in Hell, and the righteous ſhall enjoy the glory of Paradiſe; I will tell the wicked, that God hath given us what we have deſired. After this, he continued his way until he came to a place, where the Sun riſeth; he found that it riſeth in a Countrey, where they have nothing to ſhelter them from its heat, the thing is ſo: we taught Alexander how to ſhelter himſelf; he followed his way, until he arrived between two Mountains, inhabited of a Nation that ſpake a Language which he could hardly underſtand; they ſaid to him, O Alexander! Jagog, and Magog defile the Earth, canſt thou put between them and us an obſtacle, to hinder that they may not come to us? God, ſaid Alexander, hath not given me means to do it; but aſſiſt me with your power, I will put between them and you a ſtrong ſeparation; give me Iron that can cut Stones, that I may build betwixt the two Mountains, and that I may fortifie the way that divideth them; blow when the Iron ſtriketh the Stones, to kindle fire, and pour on molten Braſs to joyn the Stones and Iron together; if they come, they cannot pierce through the Mountains, neither find a way to come to you, this is a favour which God conferreth on you, his promiſes are infallible; when the hour arriveth, he is true in what he promiſeth; we will permit them to mix each with other; we will aſſemble all of them when the Trumpet ſhall ſound; then we will open Hell to the wicked, and to ſuch as would neither ſee, nor hear the Alcoran; Do they imagin them that worſhip me to be their gods? We have prepared Hell to puniſh them. Say unto them, ſhall I relate unto thee what ſhall befal the damned? Their works ſhall be unprofitable in this World, although they think to do well, good works are unprofitable to them that contemn the Commandments of their Lord, and believe not in the Reſurrection; they ſhall not want ballance at the Day of Judgment; Hell ſhall be their habitation, becauſe they deride our Commandments, and our Apoſtles, and Prophets: The Righteous ſhall enjoy eternally the delight of Paradiſe without diſcontinuation. If the Sea were Ink, to write the wondrous works of my Lord, it will ſooner have an end than his Miracles: Say unto the Infidels, I am a man like you, God hath taught me that there is but one God; he that believeth in the Reſurrection, ſtudieth to do good works; worſhip but one God, who is without a companion.

CHAP. XIX.

The Chapter of Mary, containing Four-ſcore and Eighteen Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful: God is the rewarder, conductor, (of the Righteous) liberal, wiſe, true: Zachary, the Servant of thy Lord, remembred his Grace, when he in ſecret prayed to his Lord, and ſaid, Lord, my bones are become feeble, and mine Head is White with Old age; Lord; I was never rejected in my prayers, hear my Petition, give me a Son to ſucceed me, that may be mine Heir, Heir of the Lineage of Jacob, and be pleaſing to thee. O Zachary! I declare unto thee, that thou ſhalt have a Son, named John, no man hath yet been called by that name; he ſaid, Lord, how ſhall I have a Son, my Wife is barren, and I am too old? It was anſwered him, the thing ſhall be as I have ſaid unto thee, it is eaſie to thy Lord, who created thee; he ſaid, Lord give me ſome ſign of the Conception of my Wife; he ſaid to him, Thou ſhalt not ſpeak for Three nights. Then went he out of his Oratory, and made ſigns to the People, to make their prayers Evening and Morning. Oh John! learn the Scripture with affection; we from his Infancy gave him knowledg, clemency, charity, piety, affection towards his Father and Mother, and not violence and diſobedience. We bleſſed the day of his Nativity, the day that he ſhall die, and the day that he ſhall riſe again. Remember thou what is written of Mary, ſhe retired towards the Eaſt, into a place far remote from her Kindred, and took a Vail to cover her, we ſent her our Spirit in form of a man; ſhe was afraid, and ſaid, God will preſerve me from thee, if thou have his fear before thine eyes; he ſaid, Oh Mary! I am the Meſſenger of God thy Lord, who ſhall give thee a Son, active, and prudent: She anſwered, How ſhall I have a Son without the touch of man? I deſire not to be unchaſte; he ſaid, The thing ſhall be as I have told thee, it is facile to thy Lord; thy Son ſhall be a token of the Omnipotency of God, and of his ſpecial grace towards ſuch as ſhall believe in his Divine Majeſty; ſhe became with Child, and retired ſome time into a place remote from People, where ſhe ſuſtained the dolours of Child-birth, at the foot of a Date-tree, and ſaid, Why am I not dead? Wherefore am I not in the number of perſons forgotten? The Angel ſaid to her, Afflict not thy ſelf; God hath placed a brook under thee, ſhake the foot of this Palm, and the Dates ſhall fall, gather them up, eat and drink, and waſh thine eyes; ſay unto them that thou ſhall meet, that thou faſteſt, and haſt made a Vow not to ſpeak to any one, until the faſt be accompliſhed. Her Parents met her while ſhe bare her Infant, and ſaid unto her, Oh Mary? behold a ſtrange thing; Oh Siſter of Aaron! thy Father did not command thee to do evil, neither was thy Mother unchaſte; ſhe made ſigns to her Infant to anſwer them; they ſaid, How ſhall the Infant in the Cradle ſpeak? Then her infant ſpake, and ſaid, I am the Servant of God, he hath taught me the Scripture, hath made me a Prophet, bleſſed me in all places, and commanded me to pray unto him; he hath recommended to me purity through the whole courſe of my life, and to honour my Father and Mother; he hath not made me either violent or malicious, praiſed ſhall be the day of my birth, the day that I ſhall die, and the day of my reſurrection. Thus ſpake Jeſus, the Son of Mary, with truth, of which ye doubt: God approveth not the diſcourſe of them that ſay he hath a Son; praiſed be God, when he willeth any thing, he ſaith, Be thou, and it is; he is mine and your Lord, worſhip him, this is the right way; there be perſons, who in this regard have been of different opinion, but miſery is upon the incredulous. They ſhall be miſerable at the Day of Judgment. The Infidels are manifeſtly erroneous from the right way; if thou preach to them the torments of Hell and their ignorance, they will not hear thee. We are Lords of whatſoever is on Earth, and diſpoſe of every thing at our pleaſure, they ſhall be one day aſſembled before us to be judged. Remember thou what is written of Abraham, he was a Righteous man, and a Prophet, he ſaid to his Father, Adore not what neither ſeeth, nor ununderſtandeth any thing, and that cannot be profitable; I know what ye know not, follow me, and I will conduct you into the right way; worſhip not the Devil, he is diſobedient unto God; otherwiſe I fear that God may chaſtiſe you, and you may be in the number of the damned. He anſwered, Oh Abraham! doſt thou abhor my Gods? Unleſs thou change thy diſcourſe, I will ſtone thee, depart from me for a long time; he ſaid, May God inſpire you, I will pray for you, he is exceeding good, and will hear my prayers; Whom will ye adore, when I ſhall be gone from you? Worſhip God my Lord, and your prayers ſhall be heard; he departed from them, and worſhipped one God: We gave him two Sons, Iſaac and Jacob, both Prophets, we conferred our grace upon him, with an eloquent and true Tongue. Remember thou what is written of Moſes, he was a Righteous man, our Prophet and Meſſenger; we called him on the right ſide of the Mount Sinai, drew him near unto us, and taught him our ſecrets; we through ſpecial grace gave him a Brother, named Aaron. Remember thou what is written of Iſmael, he exactly obſerved what he promiſed, was a Prophet, and an Apoſtle of the Lord, preached Purity, and recommended to men to make their prayers often, and was pleaſing to his Lord. Remember thou what is written of Enoch, he was a juſt man, and a Prophet, and we took him up to an exceeding high place. God gave his grace to theſe men, among the Prophets of the Lineage of Adam, among them whom we cauſed to embark with Noah, among thoſe of the Lineage of Abraham, and Iſrael, and among thoſe that we aſſembled and guided into the right way. When the miracles of the merciful were related to them, they fell proſtrate, and adored him with tears in their eyes; their Poſterity forſook their footſteps, abandoned the Law, and followed their own Appetites; but they ſhall be precipitated into Hell, except ſuch as ſhall be converted, and do good works, they ſhall enter into Paradiſe, and no injuſtice ſhall be done to them; they ſhall enter into the Garden of Eden; what the merciful [God] doth promiſe, is infallible; they ſhall hear nothing ſpoken in Paradiſe that ſhall diſpleaſe them; they ſhall hear the ſalutation of Angels, and Morning and Evening ſhall have what they deſire; ſuch is Paradiſe, which God giveth to his Creatures that have his fear before their eyes. I * deſcend not from Heaven, but by the permiſſion of thy Lord, he is maſter of our actions in Heaven and Earth, and of whatſoever is between them; he hath not forgot thee, worſhip him, and perſevere in thy adoration, knoweſt thou any perſon that is named, like him? Man ſaith, What, ſhall I dye and riſe again? He conſidereth not that God hath created him of nothing; I will one day aſſemble the Infidels, and Devils, I will cauſe them to appear at the Gate of Hell upon their Knees, and will caſt upon them all manner of miſery, becauſe they have encreaſed their impiety towards their Lord. I know ſuch as deſerve to burn in Hell, they ſhall be thrown thither headlong, this is a moſt juſt Sentence pronounced by the Lord. I will ſave the Righteous, and forbid Infidels to fall on their Knees before Idols: when the unbelievers, and many of the Faithful heard my Commandments preached, they ſaid among themſelves, that they were in a better way than their Neighbour; how many have we deſtroyed before them, in paſt Ages, more Rich than they, and Hypocrites like unto them? Say unto them, God prolongeth the life of the erroneous, that they may know their errors, and learn the knowledge of the pains prepared for them, they ſhall underſtand who ſhall be the moſt miſerable: And who ſhall have been moſt weak in their Faith, and leaſt affectionate to the Service of his Divine Majeſty; God ſhall encreaſe their Faith, who ſhall follow the right way; and ſuch as be obedient to him, ſhall enjoy his grace. Haſt thou conſidered the action of the wicked? They demand, if they ſhall have Riches and Children after their Reſurrection? Would you know what ſhall be? would you capitulate with the merciful? I will not do it; I will write all that they ſay, and will add to their miſeries; I will give to them in this World, what they require, and they ſhall riſe again naked (without treaſure, and Children.) They adored Idols, to have their protection. Certainly they erred in that adoration; they ſhall renounce them, and be their enemies at the Day of Judgment. Seeſt thou not, how we have ſent the Devils againſt unbelievers, to ſeduce them? Be not impatient to ſee them puniſhed, they ſhall be judged at the day appointed. Be thou mindful of the day, when I ſhall aſſemble all the Righteous in the preſence of God, and precipitate all the wicked into Hell; their prayer ſhall not be heard, except ſuch as have accompliſhed their promiſes made to the merciful. They have ſaid, Do ye believe that God hath a Son? You utter a ſtrange thing; it wanteth not much, but that Heaven and Earth open themſelves, and that the Mountains fall with their utter deſtruction. They call God, God the Son; God hath not to do with a Son; whatſoever is in Heaven and Earth adore him; he knoweth the account and number of all things of the World: Men ſhall appear before him at the Day of Judgment, and the True believers that ſhall do good works, ſhall be beloved of his Divine Majeſty. We have ſent thee the Alcoran, written in thine own Language, that thou maiſt proclaim the delights of Paradiſe to them that fear me, and preach the Torments of Hell to ſuch as diſpute with obſtinacy againſt the Faith. How many of the wicked have we deſtroyed in paſt Ages? Haſt thou heard ſpeak of them? Haſt thou heard mention of their Memory?

CHAP. XX.

The Chapter of Beatitude, and of Hell, containing an hundred and thirty Verſes, written at Mecca.

Reader, the Mahometans have entituled this Chapter Tche, which is two letters of the Arabique Alphabet, to wit, Tt and He, where in this place, Tt ſignifieth Thoûba, that is to ſay, Beatitude; and He Haoihe, that is to ſay, Hell. See the gloſs, and interpretation of Gelaldin, and Bedaoi; they have intituled this, The Capter of Beatitude and of Hell.

IN the name of God gracious and merciful. We have not given thee the Alcoran to torment thee, but to inſtruct therein the righteous. It was ſent thee by him that created the Heavens and the Earth; the merciful ſitteth on his Throne; whatſoever is in Heaven and Earth, whatſoever is between them and beneath the Earth, appertaineth to him. He knoweth thy thoughts, he underſtandeth what thou keepeſt ſecret, and what thou makeſt manifeſt. God! there is but one God, all the glorious names of the world are due unto him. Knoweſt thou the Hiſtory of Moſes? When he beheld the fire, he ſaid to his family, Stay ye here, I ſee a great fire, I will bring to you a ſpark, and you ſhall find in it the right way. When he approached, it was ſaid unto him, O Moſes! I am thy Lord, put off thy ſhooes, thou art in the holy Valley of Tol, I have elected thee among my people, Hear my word, and receive mine inſpirations; I am God, there is none other God but I, worſhip me alone, and make thy prayers as it is ordained. The hour unknown to the world approacheth, wherein I will recompence and chaſtiſe every one after his works: Take heed leſt the wicked ſeduce thee from the right way; if thou follow their appetite, thou ſhalt be deſtroyed; Is it not what thou haſt ſworn to me? he anſwered, Lord, I will apply my ſelf unto thee, and will lean upon my ſtaff; I will beat the fruits of the Trees to make them fall upon my flocks; I have yet another manner to nouriſh my ſheep with this ſtaff; I will make uſe of it to defend, and preſerve them from miſchief? God ſaid unto him, O Moſes! caſt that ſtaff to the ground, behold a Serpent, it creepeth, take it, and be not afraid, I will cauſe it to return to its former condition; draw back thine hand, and put it under thy arm, it ſhall become white and ſhining, without harm, and pain, it ſhall be a moſt certain ſign of my Unity, I will give thee to ſee the miracles of my Omnipotency; Go to Pharoah, he is in an exceeding great error, and ſeduced from the right way: Moſes ſaid, Lord, rejoyce my heart, and facilitate my commiſſion, unlooſe the knot of my tongue, that they may underſtand my ſpeech: give me Aaron to aſſiſt me in this buſineſs, that I may praiſe thee, and highly exalt thy glory, thou only art our protector. God ſaid, Thy prayer is heard, we were favourable to thee another time, when we inſpired thy mother to put thee into a coffer, and expoſe thee to the river of Nile; the water drove thee to the ſhore, whence Pharoah took thee; I cauſed thee to be beloved of him, to have care of my people; when thy ſiſter ſought tidings of what was become of thee, ſhe ſaid, Who will guide us where he is? who will conduct us to him that keepeth him? we ſent thee back to thy mother, to ſtop her tears, and put an end to her affliction. Thou ſleweſt a man, we have deliver'd thee from the hands of thine enemies, and have approved thy perſeverance; thou haſt continued ſome time with the inhabitants of Madian; after this we ſent thee to preach our Commandments; I have made choice of thee, go with thy brother to Pharoah, and lie not in ſpeaking of me, he is gone aſtray from the right way; ſpeak to him both of you, with mildneſs, peradventure he will hearken to you, and will fear the fire of hell; they anſwered, Lord, We fear that he may torment, and riſe up againſt us: he ſaid, Fear nothing, I will be with you, hear what he will ſay, conſider his actions; addreſs your ſelves to him, and ſay, We are the Meſſengers of the Omnipotent God; diſmiſs with us the children of Iſrael, and no more torment them, we are come hither by the Commandment of God, thy Lord. Salvation is for ſuch as follow the right way, damnation for them that blaſpheme againſt his Law, and depart from his Commandments; Pharoah ſaid unto them, Who is your God? Moſes ſaid, My God is he that created the world, and guideth men into the right way. Pharoah ſaid, what law did your predeceſſors obſerve? what is become of them? Moſes anſwered, God knoweth in what condition they are; nothing is concealed from God, he extended the earth, and eſtabliſhed the ways; he cauſeth rain to deſcend from heaven, and maketh to ſpring forth the plants, herbs, and fruits which ye eat, and that nouriſh your flocks. Theſe things are ſigns of his Omnipotency to them that underſtand them. We created you of earth, and to earth will we make you to return, and will cauſe you to come out of it once again; we ſhewed miracles to Paroah, but he was incredulous, contemned them, and ſaid, O Moſes! Art thou come to drive us out of our Dominions with thy Magick? I will ſhew thee [Magick] like to thine; let us meet at a place and day prefixed between thee and me, to come together; Moſes ſaid unto him, Let us make choice of the day of your feaſt; if it ſeem good to you the people may aſſemble at the Sun riſing: After this diſcourſe, Pharoah withdrew, recollected all his ſubtilties, and at the day and hour prefixed, came with his people to the place appointed, where Moſes was, who ſaid unto them, Miſery is upon you, blaſpeme not againſt God, he will puniſh you, and deſtroy them that blaſpheme againſt him; The people of Pharoah differed in opinion what they ſhould do, kept their deſign ſecret, and ſaid to Pharoah, Theſe two men are Magicians, they would chaſe you from your Country, through their Magick, and ſeduce your ſubjects from your Religion; recollect your ſubtilties and power, and chuſe perſons capable to diſpute againſt them, this day ſhall be happy to him that ſhall be victorious, They ſaid to Moſes, Wilt thou firſt caſt thy ſtaff on the ground, or ſhall we ours? Their cords and ſtaves aroſe againſt Moſes through their Magick, and crawled: Moſes ſpake low, between his teeth; we ſaid unto him, Fear nothing, thou ſhalt be victorious, caſt thy ſtaff in thy right hand on the ground, it ſhall devour what they have done, it is but witchcraft and magick, magick, that produceth neither Profit nor Content. Then fell the Magicians of Pharoah proſtrate on the ground, and ſaid, We believe in the God of Aaron and Moſes; Pharoah ſaid unto them, believe ye in him without my permiſſion? Moſes is your maſter, I will cut off your right feet, and your left hands; or your left feet, and your right hands, and cauſe you to be hanged on Palm-trees, that ye may know who is the more ſevere in his chaſtiſements, I, or the God of Moſes; they ſaid, the miracles that thou haſt ſeen, have they not touched thee? He that created us, doth things which are not in thy power to perform; thy power extendeth only in this World, we believe in God our Lord, who will pardon our ſins; thou art the cauſe that he abhorreth us with our magick, he is more powerful than thou, and Eternal; Hell is prepared for Infidels, they ſhall find repoſe neither in their life nor death; and the righteous that ſhall do good works, ſhall eternally enjoy the pleaſures of the gardens of Eden, wherein flow many delicious Rivers, ſuch is the reward of them that are purged from their ſins. We ſaid unto Moſes, Go out by Night with my People, and make them a drie Path through the Sea, fear not that thine Enemies may overtake thee, neither be afraid of being drowned, Pharoah ſhall follow them with his Troops; I will overwhelm in the Sea, and will miſlead him with his People, he ſhall not follow the right way. O Children of Iſrael! We delivered you from your Enemies, and conducted you towards the mountains of Sinai: We cauſed Manna and Quailes to deſcend upon you, and ſaid, Eat ye of the good things that we have given you, and be not ungrateful, otherwiſe my wrath ſhall fall upon you; he upon whom mine indignation ſhall fall, ſhall be thrown headlong into the Fire of Hell; I will be merciful to ſuch as ſhall convert, do good works, and follow the right way. O Moſes! who preſſed thee to abſent thyſelf from thy People? He anſwered, behold he that followeth my ſteps, I am come up to receive thy Commadments. We after thy departure eſtranged thy People from thee, and Samery ſeduced them from the right way; he returned upon his ſteps to his People, in great diſpleaſure, and ſaid, O ye People! did not God promiſe to you all manner of content? He protracted the effect of his promiſes, becauſe of your ſins, will you that his wrath fall upon you? Wherefore have ye tranſgreſſed what ye promiſed to me? They ſaid, we have not tranſgreſſed our promiſes of our own accord; we took the moſt weighty ornaments of the People, and caſt them into the Fire, Samery himſelf did caſt them in; he made the body of a bellowing Calf, and ſaid, with his followers, Behold there your God, the God of Moſes whom he hath forgotten; Saw they not that this Calf ſpake not to them, and that it had not power to do good or evil? Aaron had ſaid unto them, before the coming of Moſes; O ye People! you have been ſeduced by this Calf; the merciful is your God, and your Lord, Follow and obey me: They ſaid, Shall we abide here until Moſes return? Moſes at his return ſaid unto Aaron, What hindred thee to follow me, when thou ſaweſt them to turn aſide from the Law of God? Wherefore haſt thou diſobeyed me? O Son of my Mother! (ſaid Aaron) drag me not by the Beard and Hair, I feared to diſpleaſe thee, if I forſook the Children of Iſrael, and diſobey thy Commandments; Moſes ſaid unto Samery, what was thy deſign? He anſwered, I ſaw what this People ſeeth not, I took an handful of the Earth of the footſteps of the Meſſenger of God, and made the Figure of a Calf, the faireſt that I could; Moſes ſaid unto him, Go, get thee from among us; thou ſhalt fly the preſence of men all the days of thy life; thou ſhalt ſay unto them, Come not nigh me, touch me not, the time of thy puniſhment is appointed, thou ſhalt not eſcape it; behold thy falſe god, behold the Calf which thou haſt adored, I will cauſe it to burn, and will caſt the aſhes thereof into the Sea; your God is one God, and there is none other God, but the God that knoweth all things: Thus do I relate to thee things paſt; we have ſent thee the Alcoran, ſuch as ſhall abjure it, ſhall bear their burthen at the Day of Judgment, and be eternally tormented; I will one day require an account of their burden, and will aſſemble them with all their ſubtilties; when the Trumpet ſhall ſound, they ſhall demand of each other, how long they have continued in the World? They ſhall ſay, That they have remained there but Ten days and Ten nights, I know all that they will ſay; the moſt prudent among them ſhall ſay, that they have been but one day. They ſhall enquire of thee concerning the Mountains; Say unto them, God ſhall tear them up, and level them with the Earth, thou ſhalt ſee them levelled and beaten down: Then ſhall men without retardment follow him that ſhall ſummon them to univerſal Judgment, they ſhall humble themſelves before God, thou ſhalt that Day hear low and humble voices, that day ſhall prayers be ineffectual, except of them that ſhall be pleaſing to God, whom he will permit to ſpeak. He knoweth whatſoever men do in this World, and what muſt befall them in the other, and they know it not, they ſhall humble themſelves, and hang down the Head before the Living and Eternal Lord; all Infidels ſhall be damned, and the Righteous of Truebelievers that have done good works, ſhall not fear injuſtice. We have ſent the Alcoran in the Arabique Tongue, it teacheth men our Commandments, peradventure they will fear impiety; it teacheth them what they ought to know; Exalt the glory of God, King of the World, he is truth itſelf; preſs not thy ſelf to read the Alcoran, until thou haſt well underſtood it. Say, Lord encreaſe my knowledge; We heretofore prohibited Adam to eat of the forbidden fruit, he was unmindful of our Commandment, I found in him no perſeverance. Remember thou that we commanded the Angels to humble themſelves before him, they humbled themſelves, except the Devil, who refuſed to do it. Remember that we ſaid, Adam, the Devil is thine enemy, and the enemy of thy Wife, he will endeavour to make you miſerable, to cauſe you both to go out of Paradiſe, where thou ſuffereſt neither hunger nor thirſt, nor cold, nor heat; the Devil tempted them, and ſaid, oh Adam! I will conduct thee to the Tree of Eternity, a treaſure that ſhall never periſh; they did both eat of the fruit of that Tree, then knew they their filthineſs, and took the leaves of Trees to cover their nakedneſs; Adam diſobeyed his Lord, and became miſerable, nevertheleſs he heard, and pardoned him, and ſhewed him the right; he ſaid, deſcend from Paradice, ye Enemies of each other, I will hereafter ſend you a guide, he that ſhall follow him, ſhall not err, and ſhall be bleſſed; he that ſhall go aſtray, and will not believe in me, ſhall be miſerable in the World, and blind at the Day of Judgment; that Day ſhall he ſay, Lord, wherefore haſt thou made me blind? I had good ſight when I was in the World: I did this day forget thee, as thou didſt forget my Commandments; thus do I intreat Infidels. The torments of the other World are more grievous than thoſe of the Earth, and of longer continuance; do not unbelievers tremble, when they conſider how many men upon Earth we have deſtroyed in paſt Ages? Their miſery ſhall ſerve for example to them that are wiſe; had not thy Lord ſaid, that he will defer the puniſhment of the wicked until the time appointed, he had already deſtroyed them. Be patient, and endure their Diſcourſe, praiſe thy Lord before the Sun ariſe, before it ſetteth, an hour before Night, and at the end of Day thou ſhalt do a thing acceptable to him: The life of the World is ſweet to tempt you, but the Riches of thy Lord are better, and Eternal. Command the People to make their prayers at the time appointed, and be not impatient towards them; I require no Riches of thee, I will enrich thee, and in the end Paradiſe ſhall be for the Righteous. The unbelievers have ſaid, if Mahomet ſheweth not ſome Miracle from God, and knoweth not the expoſition of the Books of our Predeceſſors, we will not believe in him; we before his coming deſtroyed many wicked perſons, who ſaid, Lord, hadſt thou ſent us a Prophet, we had obſerved thy Commandments, before we became infamous, and laden with ignominy; Say unto them, every one expecteth his end; expect ye, and ye ſhall one day know them that follow the right way, and have not erred.

CHAP. XXI.

The Chapter of the Prophets, containing an Hundred and Twelve Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the Name of God, Gracious and merciful. The Day approacheth wherein the People ſhall render an account of their actions, but they conſider it not, and depart from the Commandments of God; if they hear them, they laugh, they underſtand them not, and keep ſecret their evil intentions. Is not Mahomet a man like to you? Will ye ſay that he is a Magician? You ſee the contrary; God heareth whatſoever is ſpoken, both in Heaven and Earth, and knoweth all things. They ſay, certainly Mahomet hath dreamed what he ſpeaketh, he hath invented it, and is a Poet, we will not believe him, unleſs he ſhew ſome Miracle, as did the Prophets that were before him. We have layed waſte many Cities, becauſe their inhabitants were incredulous; we ſent before thee but men who were inſpired of us; Enquire of them, to whom heretofore was given the knowledge of the written Law, if ye know it not; they were men that did eat and drink, and were mortal; we effected what we promiſed to them, we preſerved them with ſuch as believed, and deſtroyed the incredulous; we have ſent you a Book to inſtruct you, will ye underſtand it? How many Infidel Cities have we made deſolate? How many new People have we eſtabliſhed in their place? When they felt our puniſhment, they fled; fly not, and return to what hath delighted you, return into your houſes, peradventure ye will yet covet the Riches of the Earth; they ſaid, Miſery is upon us, we are too blame; thus did they talk, until they were deſtroyed. We have not created Heaven and Earth, and whatſoever is between them, to ſport with; had it been our will that they ſhould have ſcoffed on Earth, they ſhould ſcoff likewiſe in Heaven. On the contrary, I oppoſe the truth to falſehood, to confound it, and in effect it doth confound it. Miſery ſhall be upon you, becauſe of your blaſphemies; whatſoever is in Heaven and Earth, is Gods; the Angels are not aſhamed to worſhip him, they praiſe him Day and Night, and exalt his glory without blaſphemy. The Infidels worſhip Gods made of Earth; have they power to create any thing? Were there in Heaven, and on Earth another God, they would not accord; praiſed be God, Lord of the Univerſe, what the Infidels relate, is untrue. He asketh no counſel when he will do any thing, as do men; will they worſhip any other God but him? Say unto them, produce your arguments, behold what we have to ſpeak unto you, behold our reaſons, and thoſe of our predeceſſors; Certainly, the greateſt part of them are ignorant of the Truth, and go aſtray. We inſpired into all the Prophets which we ſent, that there was but one God that ought to be worſhipped. They ſaid, believe ye that the Angels are the Sons of God? Praiſed be God; on the contrary, they are his Creatures, he loveth them, they ſpeak not but after him, and obey what he commandeth them, he knoweth all their actions paſt, and future; they pray for no man but through his permiſſion, and fear to diſpleaſe him. Who among them will ſay I am God, inſtead of God? He ſhall be caſt headlong into the Fire of Hell; thus do I intreat unbelievers. Know they not that the Heavens and the Earth was ſhut up? VVe opened them, and gave life to every thing, through the Rain which we made to deſcend; will they not believe in my unity? VVe created the Mountains to hinder the Earth to move, we made therein ways large and ſpacious for our Creatures, we covered it with the Heaven, and have exempted it from falling, nevertheleſs they depiſe our Commandments. It is the Lord who created Day and Night, the Moon and the Sun, all things praiſe and exalt him in Heaven; we created no Perſon to dwell for ever on Earth; all men ſhall taſte of Death, I will prove you with good and evil, and ye ſhall appear before me to give account of your actions: The Infidels ſcoff at you, when they ſee you, and ſay, behold them that deride our gods! They obey not the Commandments of God; he created man of duſt, and ſhall ſhew you the effects of his Omnipotency; be not impatient to ſee the puniſhment of the wicked, who ſay, when ſhall be the Day of Judgment? Did they know it, they would remove the Fire from their backs and viſages; that Day ſhall ſurprize them, it ſhall aſtoniſh them when they think leaſt of it; they cannot retard it, and ſhall be deprived of protection. Certainly, they ſcorned the Prophets that were ſent before thee, but they were puniſhed after their demerits. Say unto them, who but the merciful [God] preſerveth you Day and Night? Nevertheleſs ye reject his Commandments; Have they any other God but me, that is able to ſave them? Their gods cannot defend themſelves: I will not protect them, yet will I enrich them, as I enriched their fathers, and will prolong their life, to puniſh them on Earth; Know they not that their eſtates diminiſh on all ſides ſides through thy Conqueſts? Is it ſo, that they are victorious? Say unto them, I preach to you what God hath inſpired into me, but the deaf hear not when they are exhorted; When they are a little touched with the chaſtiſements of God, they ſay, oh miſery! We are too blame, and are unjuſt; I will weigh their works at the Day of Judgment, that I may do injuſtice to no perſon, of the weight of a grain of Muſtard-ſeed, and will moſt exactly account. We gave to Moſes and Aaron the Book that diſtinguiſheth good from evil, and commanded them to preach our Commandments to them that had our fear before their eyes. That Book is bleſſed, and was ſent from us; nevertheleſs, unbelievers reject and condemn it. We heretofore inſtructed Abraham in the right way, and knew that he was a Righteous man. Remember thou that he ſaid to his Father, and his People, What Idols do ye adore? They ſaid, We find that our Fathers adored them; he ſaid unto them, your Fathers and you were exceedingly erroneous: They ſaid, Doſt thou ſpeak the truth, or doſt thou jeſt? He ſaid, Certainly your Lord is the Lord of Heaven and Earth, I ſwear to you that he created them; Having convinced thoſe Idolaters, he ſaid, By God, I will make war upon your Idols, he broke them with an Hatchet in their abſence, except the greateſt Idol, on which he hung his Hatchet, and ſaid, Peraventure they will accuſe him to have broken the other: Seeing at their return their Idols broken, they ſaid, who hath in this manner handled our gods? He is impious; we heard it is a young man, named Abraham, who derideth them, bring him before the eyes of the People, perhaps they ſhall find witneſſes of his action. They ſaid unto him, Oh Abraham! It is thou that haſt ſo abuſed our gods; he ſaid on the contrary, it is that great Idol; they enquired of each other if thoſe Idols ſpake, and if they had motion; afterwards they returned to themſelves, and ſaid to the People, Ye are too blame to adore thoſe Idols; he threw them headlong againſt the ground, and they ſaid, Oh Abraham! Thou well knoweſt that they ſpake not at all; he anſwered, Why therefore do ye worſhip what can neither benefit nor hurt you? You defile your ſelves in adoring them inſtead of God. Do ye not know him? Then they ſaid, Burn Abraham, and let us defend our Gods, if ye are Righteous men; but we commanded the Fire to loſe its heat, to preſerve Abraham; they would have tormented him, and we deſtroyed them; we ſaved him, as we preſerved Lot; we conducted him into the Land of Bleſſing, gave him Iſaac, and Jacob, and the Children of their Children, Righteous men, and True believers, to inſtruct the People in the way of Salvation; we inſpired them to do good works, to pray at the time appointed, to pay Tithes, and to worſhip us; we gave to Lot prudence and knowledge, and delivered him from the Inhabitants of the City, who were the moſt vicious upon Earth; we were gracious to him, becauſe he was Righteous. Remember Noah, and that he heretofore invoked us; we heard his Prayer, and delivered him from great danger, and all that were with him in the Ark; we delivered him from the hand of the wicked, whom we drowned. Remember David, and Solomon, who rendred Juſtice in the Field, whereinto the Flocks of the Village entred by Night without Shepherds; we are witneſs of their Judgments, we inſtructed Solomon in Juſtice, we gave him Prudence and Knowledg; the Mountains adored us with David, and with him the Birds praiſed us; we were with them when they praiſed us. We taught you the manner of ſowing [Seed] to preſerve you from neceſſity; peradventure ye will be thankful to me. We commanded the Winds to obey Solomon, and know all that he did. The Devils obeyd him, they dived into the Sea, to fiſh for Gems for him, and travelled alſo in other matters; and we hindred them to act miſchief againſt men. Remember Job, who prayed to his Lord, and ſaid, I am in exceeding great affliction; thou art the merciful of the merciful: We heard him, and delivered him from his affliction; gave to him our grace, and to his family, and to them that were with him, who had patience, and truſted in me. Remember Iſmael, Enoch, * Delcafel, and Zachary, they perſevered in well doing; we gave them our grace, becauſe they were Righteous. Remember Jonas, who forſook his People in diſpleaſure; he believed I could do nothing againſt him; but he cryed in the dark, and ſaid, There is no God beſides thee, praiſed be thy Name; I am to blame for having offended thee. We heard him, and delivered him from his diſaſter. Thus do I protect True believers, when they invoke me. Remember Zachary, who made his Prayer, and ſaid, Lord, I know there is no better Heir in the World than thy ſelf; yet let me not dye without iſſue: We heard his requeſt, gave him a Son, named John, and rendred his Wife fruitful. All theſe Prophets went on with alacrity to do well, and invoked us with humility, with deſire to obtain our grace, and with fear of the torments of Hell. Remember Mary, whoſe womb I bleſſed; we inſpired into her our Spirit, and gave her a Son, a Miracle in the VVorld. Your Law is one onely Law, and I am one onely God, worſhip me, and be not impious; ye all ſhall appear before me to be judged. I will protect the True believers that ſhall have done good works, and will write what they ſhall do for their reward. Miſery is upon the Cities that we have ruined; their inhabitants ſhall not return into the World, until the paſſage be opened to Jagog and Magog, and they come running from the eminent places of the Earth; then ſhall the Day of Judgment approach; the promiſed Truth ſhall not be far off, it ſhall trouble the ſight of the wicked, who ſhall ſay, O miſery! We are miſerable, we did not foreſee this diſaſter, we have been exceedingly blame for having offended God. It ſhall be ſaid unto them, Ye worſhipped inſtead of God, the firebrands of Hell, into which ye ſhall be caſt headlong: Had your Idols been Gods, as ye believed, they ſhould not have entred Hell; they, and thoſe that have adored them, ſhall be eternally damned; they ſhall groan, complain, and ſhall not be heard: Such as ſhall be in Paradiſe, ſhall be far remote from them; they ſhall not hear their howlings, and ſhall enjoy eternally what they ſhall deſire; the crys of the Damned ſhall not afflict them; the Angels ſhall meet them when they come out of their graves; and ſhall ſay, Behold now the day that was foretold you in the World; a Day wherein we will open the Heavens, and the Book of the account of all men, as we promiſed to your predeceſſors. We exactly perform what we promiſe; we have written in the Old Teſtament, and afterwards in the Alcoran, That the Righteous ſhall inherit the Earth: This Book ſhall teach the way of Paradiſe to them that ſhall worſhip me: We had not ſent thee, but in favour of men; ſay unto them, them, God hath always inſpired into me, that your God is one God, will ye not obey him? If they go aſtray, I have taught you how they muſt be intreated. Say unto them, I know not whether the puniſhment denounced to you ſhall be ſpeedy, or tardy. God knoweth what is known, and unknown in the World; I know not whether he will try you, or defer his puniſhment until the time appointed: He is a moſt juſt Judg, and moſt merciful; he is not ſuch as ye ſpeak him.

* Delcafel is Ely. See the Book compoſed by Abdelbaky.

CHAP. XXII.

The Chapter of Pilgrimage, containing Seventy and Seven Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the Name of God, Gracious and Merciful. O ye People! fear God. The Earthquake that ſhall happen at the Day of Judgment ſhall be wonderful; ye ſhall that day ſee Mothers forget their Children, and every one ſhall bear his own burden; ye ſhall ſee men drunk, not with Wine, but amazed and aſtoniſhed at the great judgments of God. There be, who diſpute of the Deity with ignorance, and follow the will of the Devil, voluntary, and obſtinate: It is written, he ſhall ſeduce them that obey him, and ſhall conduct them into Hell. O ye People! if ye doubt of the Reſurrection, conſider how we created you of the duſt of the Earth; with a little Water ſprinkled upon the Duſt of the Earth; with congealed blood, and a little fleſh intirely, and not intirely formed. I form in the wombs of Women, what ſeemeth good to me at the time appointed; I cauſe you to come forth Children, then I give you life, and make you to arrive to the Age of Virility; ſome die young, and others live to extremity of Age, to the end they may learn to live well. Conſider the Earth, dry, dead, and barren; when we ſhall cauſe Rain to fall, it ſhall change the face, ſhall produce and nouriſh its fruits of all ſorts, fair, and pleaſing: Becauſe God is truth it ſelf, he raiſeth again the dead, and is Omnipotent. There is no doubt but the Day of Judgment approacheth, and that God will cauſe the dead to riſe again. There be men that diſpute of God without knowledg, without reaſon, without authority, and go aſtray from the way of his Law; they ſhall be full of ignominy and ſhame in this World, and ſhall feel in the other, the pains of Hell. God doth no injuſtice to his People. There be who who adore him with ſcruple; if good befal them, they perſevere to adore him; if evil, they return to their impiety, and loſe the riches of Earth, and the riches of Heaven: Theſe two loſſes are exceeding great; they invoke Idols inſtead of God; they invoke what can neither benefit, nor hurt them: Such prayers are by-ways, far remote from the Commandments of God; they worſhip that which doth rather miſchief, nor advantage them. Certainly, God ſhall make the True-believers, that do good works, to enter into Gardens, wherein flow many Rivers; he doth what ſeemeth good to him. He that is angry that God giveth ſuccor, and protection to Mahomet in this World, and in the other, let him tye a Cord to a Beam of his Houſe, and hang himſelf; he ſhall ſee if his choller will be allayed. God hath ſent the Alcoran, as heretofore he ſent the other Scriptures; it containeth his Commandments, clear and intelligible; it guideth into the right way whom it pleaſeth him: He at the Day of Judgment ſhall judg the differences that are between the Faithful, and Infidels; between the Samaritans, the Chriſtians, and Idolaters; he is Omniſcient. Seeſt thou not that all that is in Heaven, and on Earth, the Sun, the Moon, the Stars, the Mountains, Trees, and Beaſts, adore him? Many worſhip him with zeal, but many likewiſe merit to be puniſhed: None ſhall eſteem him, whom God ſhall deſpiſe; he doth as ſeemeth good to him. Theſe two contrary parties, the Believers and the Infidels, have diſputed of the Deity; but the Infidels ſhall be encompaſſed with flames of Hell, they ſhall have Shirts of Fire, boyling Water ſhall flow in upon their Heads; the Fire ſhall burn what is in their Bellies, and ſhall roaſt their Skin, they ſhall be beaten with Clubs of Iron; when they think to go out of this Fire, they ſhall enter further into it, and be eternally tormented. God ſhall cauſe the True-believers, that have done good works, to go into Gardens, wherein flow many Rivers; they ſhall be adorned with Bracelets of Gold, and Pearls; they ſhall be clothed with Silk, and enjoy Eternal felicity, becauſe they have profeſſed his Unity; and the Infidels ſhall ſuffer great torments, for that they have hindred the People to imbrace the Faith, and viſit the Temple of Mecca, which God hath eſtabliſhed to be therein adored of all the World: He that ſhall be ſollicited to viſit it, and ſhall enter it, with deſign to return to his impiety, ſhall be ſeverely puniſhed. Remember, that we ſhewed to Abraham the place to build the Temple of Mecca; that we commanded him to adore me alone, and to purge my Temple from Idols, for the ſatisfaction of them that ſhould there make proceſſions. Men ſhall come thither to viſit thee from all parts, on foot, and on Horſe-back; they ſhall receive profit, they ſhall there make their prayers at the times appointed, and the days nominated; they ſhall thank the Lord for his benefits towards them, and the Riches which he hath given them; and ſhall make likewiſe proceſſions at the old Temple. He that ſhall reverence it, ſhall do exceeding well, and ſhall be recompenced of his Lord. It is lawful for you to eat of all clean Beaſts, except of ſuch as have been heretofore prohibited: Depart from the pollution of Idols; beware of bearing falſe witneſs, and be obedient to God. He that ſaith, God hath a Companion, is like to him that fell headlong from Heaven, whom the Birds devoured, and the wind caſt into a remote place, full of miſeries. He that ſhall reverence the ſigns of the power of God, will not doubt of his Law, and ſhall be rewarded for his good works at the time appointed, if he viſit the old Temple of Mecca. We have given to all Nations of the World a Law to offer their Sacrifices, and to return thanks to their Lord, for having given them advantage above all ſorts of Beaſts. Your God is one God, obey his Commandments, proclaim a great reward to them that are obedient to him, to them that tremble with fear, when they hear mention of his name; that are patient in their adverſity, that pray at the time appointed, and diſpence in alms ſome part of the wealth that we have given them. We have created the female Camel for a ſign of our unity, ſhe ſhall be profitable to you in this World. Remember to pronounce the Name of God, when ye ſhall ſacrifice her, ſtanding on her feet; when ſhe ſhall fall dead on the ground, eat of her fleſh, if it like you, and give to eat to ſuch as ſhall require it. We have made her ſubject to you; peradventure ye will be thankful to me for this grace. God promoteth before him, neither the flesh of this Beast, nor the blood, but onely the good works that ye perform. He hath thus subjected it, That ye may exalt it, and give him thanks for having guided you into the right way. Proclaim to the righteous, That God will remove far from them the malice of the wicked; he abhorreth Traytors, and the ingrateful: Declare to such as fight against Infidels, to repair the injury they have done them; that God is sufficiently powerful to protect them. When they were driven from their houses without reason; they said, God is our Lord; Had not God stirred up the people against each other, the Covents of the Religious, the Churches of the Christians, the Synagogues of the Jews, and the Temples of the Believers, had been ruined, (through the multitude of the wicked, and their malice,) The name of God is exalted in the Temples of believers, and therein is his Law defended and protected. God is most strong; he hath all power over his people. Those whom God hath established on Earth, with victory over their enemies, make their prayers in the manner ordained; pay Tithes, and enjoin to do what is honest and civil; forbid to do what is prohibited of God, who knoweth the end of all things. If the Infidels traduce thee, their predecessors traduced Noah, Aad, Chaib, Abraham, and Lot, they also slandered Moses: God for a time deferred their punishment, but in the end most severely chastised them. How many Cities have we destroyed, because of their impiety? We have overthrown, and made them desart, through the death of their inhabitants. Shall those of Mecca walk for ever upon Earth, with an hard heart, without reflecting upon what hath heretofore befalln the Infidels? Their eyes are not blind, but their hearts are blind, and hardned: They will require thee to cause the wicked to be speedily chastised; God will not go against what he hath promised: One day before thy Lord is as a thousand years before men. How often hath the punishments of impious Cities been deferred, that in the end were destroyed? The whole world shall one day be assembled before me, to be recompenced after their merits. Say unto them; O people! I preach unto you publickly the torments of Hell; such as shall believe, and do good works, shall receive pardon of their sins, and a precious treasure; they that shall endeavour to make void the faith, shall be damned. We sent our Prophet to read only our Commandments to the people; the unbelievers read many things that are not in the Alcoran; but God hath made vain what the Devil had there inserted, and confirmed the precepts of his Law: What the Devil there inserted, serveth for sedition to them that are weak in their faith, and have an hard heart. The Infidels are in an exceeding great error, and are far from the Truth. Such as have the knowledge of Scripture, know that the Alcoran is truth it self, which proceedeth from thy Lord: They believe in it, and humble their heart in reading it. God guideth into the right way such as believe in the truth: The Infidels shall be in doubt, until they be surprized of the day of Judgment. That day shall they be rigorously chastised, that day shall God command, and judg the good and the bad; the righteous that shall have believed, and done good works, shall enter into delicious Gardens, and the Infidels that shall have disobeyed his Commandments, shall suffer exceeding great torments. They that departed from Mecca, and went to Medina, to abandon the society of unbelievers, and were slain, or died of sickness, shall be rewarded of his divine Majesty. God is the greatest benefactor in the world; he shall give them to enter where they shall desire; he is omniscient, and most merciful. The believers that shall take revenge of the injury that the unbelievers have done them; shall be protected of God: He is gracious and merciful towards his people; he maketh day to enter into night, and night into day; he heareth the prayers of True believers, and seeth whatsoever they do; and will protect them, because he is truth it self. Idols are but vanity; and God is most high and omnipotent. Dost thou not consider that God sendeth the rain from Heaven, and that the Earth becometh green? He is benign to his people, and knoweth all [things] whatsoever is in Heaven and Earth, is his; he hath no need of his people, and ought to be exalted. Seest thou not that God hath subjected to you all the beasts that are upon the earth? Seest thou not that the ship runneth upon the sea, through his command, to transport you and your substance? Seest thou not, that he hindreth Heaven to fall upon the Earth? certainly he is benign, and merciful; He it is that hath given you life and death, he shall make you to die, and shall raise you again, nevertheless man is ingrateful for his favours. We have given a law to all the Nations of the World, to guide them into the right way; if they observe it, they will not dispute against thee. Invoke thy Lord, thou art in the right way; if they dispute against thee, say unto them, God knoweth all your actions, he shall judge your differences at the day of Judgment: knowest thou not that God knoweth whatsoever is in heaven or in earth? All is written, and this is most easie to his divine Majesty. Idolaters adore without reason, Idols that understand not whether they be gods or no, that shall be without protection at the day of Judgement; when they preach to men my Commandments, they know by their countenance those that are impious, and ingrateful for my graces; they would with wrath fall upon them that instruct them. Say unto them, I declare unto you things more grievous: God hath prepared the fire of hell to chastise Infidels. O people! A parable is related to you, hear it. All the Idols that ye adore, cannot create a flie, when they shall be assembled to do it; if the flies corrupt any thing that is offered to them, they have not the power to drive them away, because of their impotency, and the weakness of them that adore them: They praise not God in that manner as is just and reasonable, he is most strong, and most powerful; he hath chosen messengers to bear and execute his Commandments among Angels and men; he heareth whatsoever they say, beholdeth whatsoever they do, he knoweth whatsoever they have done, and all things obey him. O ye that believe! honor and worship your Lord, and do good, perhaps you shall be blessed: Fight for the establishment of his Law with affection, he hath chosen you to follow it; he hath not given you a Law heavy and troublesom, It is the Law of Abraham your Father, he hath stiled you the Resigned to God, before the coming of the Alcoran: the Prophet shall testifie against you at the day of Judgment, and ye shall testifie against the people, that the Prophet hath preached to them the right way; persevere in your prayers, pay tithes, and trust in God, he is your Lord and your Protector.

CHAP. XXIII.

The Chapter of True believers, containing an Hundred and Eighteen Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the Name of God; gracious and mericiful. Certainly the true believers ſhall be bleſſed, that make their prayers with humility; they abſtain from reviling, they pay tithes, they commit not whoredom, they touch not other women than their own, and their ſlaves; ſuch as covet other, tranſgreſs the bounds of reaſon; they that faithfully preſerve what hath been entruſted to them; they that effect what they have promiſed, and that make their prayers at the time appointed, ſhall be heirs of Paradiſe, where they ſhall dwell eternally. We formed man of the duſt of the Earth, with mire, blood congealed, with a little fleſh and bones, which we inveſted with ſkin; we another time created him, when we breathed to him the Soul into the Body, and bleſſed him, as one of our faireſt Ornaments. O men! ye all ſhall die, and ſhall riſe again at the Day of Judgment; we created above you, Seven Heavens, and have care of the conſervation of all People that are beneath; we ſend Water from Heaven to ſatisfie your neceſſities; we make it to fall upon the Earth, and have power to cauſe to paſs away and deprive you [of it.] We have created, and made gardens to bring forth Date-trees, Grapes, and many other fruits, by which ye live; we created trees in the Mountain of Sinai, that produce Oyl, and * tincture; ye receive great advantage by beaſts, they ſuſtain you with Milk, and afford you many other profits, ye mount them; and Ships alſo to carry you whither ye deſire to go. We ſent Noah, who ſpake to the People, and ſaid, worſhip one God alone, what other god will ye implore but him? Will ye not fear to worſhip another? The chief among the People that were Idolaters, ſaid to their adherents, This man is a man like your ſelves, he would appear, and be eſteemed more than you; if God would be adored alone, as he ſaith, he would cauſe an Angel to deſcend, that ſhould bring his Commandments; we have not heard ſpoken to our Predeceſſors, what he ſaith; he is a man poſſeſſed of the Devil, tarry, and ye ſhall ſee what will become of him: Then Noah ſaid, Lord, protect me againſt them, and defend me from their Blaſphemies; we commanded him to build an Ark, when our Commandment was given to deſtroy the wicked, and when the Water of his Caldron boyled, we commanded him to enter into the Ark, with two beaſts of every kind and ſpecies; all men we deſtroyed, except them of whom we have before ſpoken, (we ſaid unto him) ſpeak not to me for Infidels, they ſhall be drowned, when thou ſhalt have taken order for every thing that muſt enter into the Ark with thee. Say, praiſe be to God, who hath delivered us from the malice of the wicked; Lord, give us to deſcend in a bleſſed place, thou art the beſt Pilot in the World. It was a ſign of my Omnipotency to prove the People of Noah: We created after them another People, to whom we ſent an Apoſtle, to inſtruct them to worſhip one God; and he ſaid, What God will ye adore other than God? Will ye not fear his wrath? Their Doctors that were impious, who denied the Reſurrection of the fleſh, and on whom we had conferred the Wealth of the Earth, ſaid, he is a man, he eateth and drinketh like you, if ye obey not a man like to your ſelves, ſhall ye be deſtroyed? Doth he promiſe you to return into the World, after having been bones and duſt? O abuſe! O abuſe! ye are abuſed in what he promiſeth, he is a man like others, he is a lyar, we will not believe him; That Apoſtle ſaid, Lord, preſerve me from their Blaſphemies, they ſhall repent ſuddenly of their impiety; then thunder ſurpriſed them, and deſtroyed them, as they deſerved; we made the Land dry and barren without fruit, and created other perſons in their place. Man cannot die before his hour, and none can retard it; we ſent our Apoſtles and our Prophets to inſtruct the People, but they were ſlain one after another, every Nation traduced the Prophet that we ſent them, and we made them ſerve for examples to Poſterity, and deſtroyed the wicked. We ſent Moſes and his Brother Aaron to Pharoah, and his Doctors, with our Miracles, and with moſt intelligible reaſons; they aroſe againſt the Faith, they tormented the Children of Iſrael, and ſaid, ſhall we believe in a man like to our ſelves, of them that obey us? They ſtandred both of them, and were in number of the damned. We gave to Moſes the Book of the Law, peradventure it will guide the Children of Iſrael into the right way; we created Jeſus, and Mary his Mother, they are ſigns of our Unity; we eſtabliſhed them in an eminent place, where they ſtayed near a Fountain. O Apoſtles and Prophets! eat of the Fruits of the Earth, and do good, I know whatſoever ye do; your Law is one Law, and I alone am your Lord; take heed to your ſelves, follow not the Law of the Infidels, every one liketh what he doth, depart from the wicked, and leave them in their errors, an account ſhall be required of them of the riches, and of the Children that we have given them, but they know it not. Such as fear the puniſhment of their Lord, that obey his Commandments, profeſs his Unity, give Alms of the ſubſtance that he hath given them, and fear in their Heart, that they are not acceptable to them, ſhall appear in his preſence; ſuch as ſhall obey him, ſhall enjoy his grace; he requireth not of any man what he is unable to perform. We have a Book that declareth the truth, no injuſtice ſhall be done to him that ſhall do what he is able; certainly the Infidels are in ignorance of the Alcoran, they act what is quite contrary, to that which is commanded True believers; but we have puniſhed the chief among them in their proſperity. Be not this Day reſolute, ye ſhall not be protected of us. Our Commandments are taught you, nevertheleſs ye are returned upon your ſteps, and are riſen againſt the Faith, and in diſcourſing by Night, withdrew your ſelves from the Righteous. Conſider they not the words [of the Alcoran?] Doth it contain any thing that hath not been ordained to their Predeceſſors? Know they not the Prophet that God hath ſent to them? Wherefore will they not acknowledg him? Will they ſay that he is poſſeſſed of the Devil? On the contrary, he teacheth them the truth, nevertheleſs the greateſt part of them deteſt him; if their will had place, Heaven and Earth, and whatſoever is betwixt betwixt them, ſhould be confounded; we have inſtructed them in the Law, which they ought to obſerve, but they have renounced it; Doſt thou require of them any recompence for thy inſtructions? Thy Lord ſhall reward thee, there is none that is of power to recompence thee better than He. Call them to the right way; ſuch as ſhall not believe the Reſurrection, ſhall err. If we pardon and deliver them from affliction, they will ſtill continue in their errors, to their confuſion; we heretofore chaſtiſed them, nevertheleſs they humble not themſelves, neither implored their Lord; and when we opened upon them the gate of our Judgments, they became deſperate. God hath given you ſight, hearing and ſenſe, but few among you return him thanks; he it is that hath created you of earth, ye ſhall one day be aſſembled before him to be judged; he it is that giveth life and death, and maketh the difference of day and night, will you not honor him, neither conſider? On the contrary, they have ſaid, as did their predeceſſors, wherefore ſhall we die? our bones ſhall be duſt, and ſhall we riſe again? This was heretofore promiſed to our fathers, and to us, certainly it is but an old ſong; Say unto them, to whom appertaineth the earth, and whatſoever is in the earth, if ye know [its Creator and King?] They will ſay, it is God's; Say unto them, know ye not then, that he that created you can raiſe you again? Who is Lord of the ſeven heavens? who poſſeſſeth the throne of heaven? They will ſay, it is God; ſay unto them, will ye not fear then, to worſhip any other God but him? Say unto them, who is King of all things? who ſuſtaineth them, and is ſuſtained of none? They will ſay, that it is God; Say unto them, why then do ye deceive your ſelves? we have taught them the truth, but they have rejected it, and ſaid, that God had a ſon; were there another God with God, the one would undo what the other hath done, and they would riſe the one againſt the other. Praiſed be God, what they affirm is not true, God knoweth that is paſt, the preſent and the future, he hath no companion; Say, Lord, give me to ſee the effect of all that thou haſt promiſed to them, and put me not among the unjuſt, deliver us from evil, and do good to us, I know their impiety; Lord deliver me from the temptations of the devil, deliver me from their malice; when any one among them dieth, he ſaith, Lord, permit me to return into the world, I will do better than I have done; there is no return, it is to ſpeak in vain, there is an obſtacle behinde them, that detaineth them until the day of Judgment; when the Trumpet ſhall ſound, nothing ſhall retard them, they ſhall not glory, nor diſcourſe with each other; the ballance of the bleſſed ſhall be heavy with good works, and the ballance of the curſed ſhall be light of good works. Have not my Commandments been preached unto you, wherefore did ye contemn them? They ſhall ſay, Lord, our miſery prevailed over us, we are miſled, Lord deliver us from this miſery, the contrary was promiſed to us, truly we are exceedingly too blame. It ſhall be ſaid unto them, depart into the fire, and never ſpeak to come out. Many of them that worſhip me, ſay, Lord, we believe in thee, pardon our ſins, thou art merciful. Ye have derided them, O ye wicked! and have deſpiſed my Commandments, but I will reward them for their perſeverance, and they ſhall be bleſſed. It ſhall be ſaid to thoſe that riſe again, how many years have ye remained in the earth? they ſhall anſwer, we have been there a day, or ſome days; ask of the Angels appointed to keep the account, ye have been there but a litte time, did ye know it, do ye believe that I have created, and aſſembled you before me in vain? Praiſe and exalt God, King of Truth, there is no God but he, he is King of heaven; he is void of reaſon that invoketh another god with Him, he ſhall give account of his actions, and the Infidels ſhall be miſerable: Say, Lord, pardon the ſins of the righteous, thou art the great merciful.

CHAP. XXIV.

The Chapter of Light, containing Seventy and four Verſes, written at MEDINA.

IN the name of God, gracious and merciful. We have ſent this Chapter containing our Commandments clear and intelligible, peradventure ye will learn them. The † Catamite and the Concubine ſhall be whipt with an hundred ſtripes; take heed leſt clemency cauſe you to forget the precepts of the Law of God, believe in his divine Majeſty, and the day of Judgment; Some of the True believers ſhall be witneſſes of their puniſhment: The Catamite lying with a Concubine, or an Infidel, the Concubine lying with a Catamite or Infidel, theſe things are forbidden the True believers. He that ſhall accuſe an honeſt woman of adultery, ſhall be whipt with twenty four ſtripes, unleſs he prove his accuſation by four witneſſes, and ſhall never be credited in teſtimony. They that do ſuch things, are without the obedience of God, except thoſe that repent, and ſatisfie what they owe, God ſhall be to them gracious and merciful. They that ſhall accuſe their wives of adultery, and have no witneſſes, ſhall ſwear four times that they ſpeak the truth, and ſhall the fifth time call for the curſe of God to be upon them, if they be lyars. The wife ſhall be exempt from puniſhment, if ſhe ſwear four times that her husband is a lyar, and if the fifth time ſhe pray that the wrath and indignation of God may be upon her, if what her husband hath ſaid be true; in this manner doth God gratifie you, that ye may underſtand the truth, he is moſt gracious and moſt wiſe. That Troup that made defection from the True believers with a lye, and falſe teſtimony, did you no harm; on the contrary, they did advantage you; every one ſhall bear the burden of his ſins, the moſt malicious among them ſhall be thrown headlong into the torments of Hell; It was an happineſs that ye heard the ſenſe of the Believers from their own mouth, when they ſaid, that thoſe men lyed impudently; if they had not preſented thoſe four witneſſes, they had found none other, they are lyars, without the grace and mercy of God, they ſhould have already felt great torments in this world, and in the other, becauſe of that impoſture: When they ſpake of what they were ignorant, ye deemed it to be nothing; but it is an exceeding great ſin before God, if when ye heard it, ye ſaid, that to ſpeak of thoſe things did not concern you, ye knew it to be an impoſture, God forbiddeth you to relapſe, if ye believe in his Law, he thus declareth to you his pleaſure, he he is Omniſcient and moſt Prudent; ſuch as deſire to caſt obloquy among the True-believers, ſhall be rigorouſly chaſtiſed in this World, and in the other, God knoweth that of which ye are ignorant: Had not God been favourable to you, he had chaſtiſed you in burning fury, he is gracious and merciful. Oh ye that are True-believers! follow not the foot-ſteps of the Devil, he will enjoyn you vice and ſin; had not God gratified you with his Mercy, not any among you ſhould have been purged from that impoſture; but God purifieth whom he ſeeth good, he heareth all, and knoweth all your intentions. The moſt rich, and powerful among you have not ſworn to do no good to their Parents, the Poor, or to them that fight for the Law of God, nevertheleſs they do it not to them, and flie them; deſire they not that God ſhould pardon them? He is neither gentle nor pitiful but towards True-believers. They that accuſe of immodeſty, Women chaſte, innocent, and faithful, ſhall be accurſed in this World, and ſhall ſuffer great torments at the day, when their Tongues, their Hands, and their Feet ſhall teſtifie againſt them; at the ſame time ſhall God pay to them what ſhall be due unto them without injuſtice, and they ſhall know that God is truth it ſelf. The wicked Women ſhall ſpeak as the wicked men, and the wicked men as the wicked Women: The good [Women] ſhall ſpeak as the good [men] and the good [men] as the good Women; the good are innocent of the impoſture of the wicked, they ſhall enjoy the Grace of God, and the Treaſures of Paradiſe. Oh ye that are True-believers! enter not into anothers Houſe without permiſſion; if ye ſalute them that dwell there, ye ſhall do well; peradventure ye will be mindful; if ye find none of the Houſe, enter not without permiſſion; if they ſpeak to you to return, ye ſhall return, it is better (than to ſtay at the door) God beholdeth all that ye do, ye ſhall not offend God to enter into houſes inhabited, if ye have affairs there, God knoweth all your intentions. Speak unto the True-believers, that they contain their ſight, that they be chaſte, that they do good, and that God knoweth all their actions. Speak unto the True-believing Women, that they contain their ſight, and that they be chaſte, that they ſuffer nothing of their beauty to be ſeen, but what ought to be ſeen; that they cover their boſom, and their viſage, that they permit them not to be be ſeen, but by their Husbands, their Children, the Children of their Husbands, their Brothers, their Nephews, their Siſters, their Women, and their Daughters, Maid-ſervants, and Slaves, by their Domeſtiques, that are not capable of Marriage, by Children that regard not the beauty of Women; and that they move not their feet, to ſhew they are well ſhod. Implore pardon of God, peradventure ye ſhall be happy; many Maidens of your own Religion, the Daughters of the Righteous, or your Slaves, if they be poor, God ſhall enrich them with his Grace, he is moſt liberal and Omniſcient. Such as have not Means to Marry, ſhall live chaſtly, until God hath given them means: Such as have deſire to marry their Slaves, ſhall have power to paſs a Contract of Marriage, if they know them to be wiſe, and ſhall give them part of the wealth that God hath beſtowed on them. Deſpiſe not your Wives that are chaſte, to commit Whoredom, if ye deſire good in this World; if ye contemn them, God ſhall be to them propitious and merciful; we have ſent to you theſe Precepts, clear and intelligible, like to them that were taught your Predeceſſors, to be preached to the Righteous; God illuminateth the Heaven and the Earth, as the Lamp that is in the Lanthorn of Chryſtal, fed with Oyl of the bleſſed Olive; it ſeemeth to be a Star full of Light, which goeth neither to the Weſt, nor to the Eaſt, and yeildeth brightneſs upon brightneſs; God guideth by his light whom it pleaſeth him, he teacheth his People Parables, and is Omniſcient; he permitteth you to praiſe him in your Houſes, there to be mindful of his name, and to exalt him evening and morning. Oh ye men! your affairs ought not to hinder your remembrance of his divine Majeſty, to make your prayers at the time appointed, neither to pay Tithes. Fear the day when the hearts of men ſhall be perplexed, and their ſight troubled, when God ſhall reward and chaſtiſe every one after his works, and ſhall augment his grace upon the good; he enricheth with his innumerable benefits whom to him ſeemeth good. The good works of the wicked are like to miſts in a ſpacious plain, they ſeem to be water when afar off, and being approached, nothing is to be there found; They ſhall find before God the Book, wherein is written whatſoever they have done, he ſhall puniſh them according to their demerits, he is exact to keep account. Their actions are moreover like to the darkneſs that is in the bottom of the ſea, that is covered with wave upon wave, obſcurity and darkneſs upon one another; he that is in this darkneſs cannot ſee his hand; he that ſhall not be illuminated by God, ſhall not ſee a jot: Seeſt thou not, that whatſoever is in Heaven and Earth exalteth the glory of God? the Birds extend their wings before him to praiſe him, he heareth the prayers of all his creatures, and underſtandeth the praiſes that they give him, he knoweth all that they do, he is King of Heaven and earth, the refuge of all the world: Seeſt thou not how he aſſembleth the clouds? how he placeth them one upon another? Conſidereſt thou not how the rain falleth through their pores? and that God cauſeth freſh water to deſcend from the mountains? He hath given it to whom ſeemeth good to him, he cauſeth the brightneſs of lightning to approach men, which blindeth their ſight, and overwhelmeth the day with night? Theſe things are ſigns of his omnipotency, to them that conſider them: He created of a little water, all ſorts of living Creatures; ſome creep upon the Earth, others walk upon two feet, and others upon four; he created what pleaſed him, he is omnipotent. Certainly, he hath ſent a Law clear and intelligible, to conduct into the right way whom it ſhall ſeem good to him. The Infidels ſay, We believe in God, and his Prophet: nevertheleſs a party among them abandon his Law, and believe not in his divine Majeſty: When they are called before God, and before the Prophet, to judge their differences, many among them refuſe to come; if they come, it is with contempt. They are greatly afflicted at heart, do they fear that God and his Prophet will do them injuſtice? On the contrary, they themſelves are unjuſt. When the True believers are called before God, and the Prophet, to be judged, they ſay, We have heard and obeyed; they are not ignorant. Thoſe that ſhall obey God, and his Prophet, ſhall be bleſſed. Many ſwear to fight gallantly for the Faith, when they ſhall be commanded to march againſt the enemy; ſay unto them, Swear not, your obedience to the Prophet ſhall be preferred to your oaths, God knoweth whatſoever ye do; ſay unto them, Obey God, and his Prophet; if they be diſobedient, they ſhall bear their burden, and ye ſhall bear your own; if ye obey, ye ſhall follow the right way. The Prophet is obliged onely to preach intelligibly; God promiſeth to the True believers, that ſhall do good works, that they ſhall live long upon Earth, as he promiſed to them that were before them, that they might eſtabliſh the Law that he gave them; he ſhall change their fear into aſſurance; he ſhall deliver them from terror, that they may adore him alone, without Companion. He that is wicked, will depart from the obedience which he oweth to God: Make your prayers at the time appointed, pay Tithes, and obey the Prophet, God ſhall give you his mercy. Believe not that the Infidels are more powerful on Earth than we; they ſhall be precipitated into the fire of Hell. O ye that are True believers! your Slaves and your Servants of free-condition ſhall require leave of you, to enter where ye ſhall be thrice, viz. Before the Prayer at break of Day, after Noon, and after Supper; they ſhall not offend in entring without leave, where ye ſhall be at another time; they enter there to ſerve you. In this manner doth God teach you his Commandments; he knoweth the humor of his Creatures, and is moſt prudent in all that he ordaineth. It is ordained to your Children, when they ſhall be at age of diſcretion, to demand of you permiſſion to do what they ſhall deſire, as did your Predeceſſors: Thus doth God teach you his Commandments; he is gracious and merciful. The old and decrepit Women ſhall not offend God, to quit their vails, and diſcover their faces; provided it be without vanity, and deſign to ſhew their Ornaments: If they abſtain, they ſhall do well, God heareth whatſoever ye ſay, and knoweth all that is in your hearts. The Blind, the Lame, the Sick, and you alſo, ſhall not ſin, to eat in the Houſe of your Children; at the Houſe of your Father and Mother, Brothers, Siſters, Uncles, Aunts, Friends; and in the Houſe of your Servants; ye ſhall not offend God, if ye eat together, or apart. When ye ſhall enter into any Houſe, ſalute each other from God, with bleſſing and affection. Thus doth God teach you his Commandments, peradventure you will learn them. When thoſe that believed in God, and his Prophet, repaired to the Prophet, they retired not without his permiſſion. Such as required leave (to depart) believe in God, and his Prophet; if they require leave of thee for any buſineſs, licence whom ſhall ſeem good to thee, and pray to God for them; he is gracious and merciful. Call not the Prophet, as ye call one another among you: God knoweth ſuch as ſhamefully depart out of the Temple, and the Trench. Such as diſobey his Commandments, ought to take heed, leſt ſome miſchief befal them, and that they ſuffer not great torments: Whatſoever is in the Heavens, or on Earth, is God's; he knoweth if ye are zealous in your faith, or be hypocrites; he knoweth the Day wherein all the World ſhall be aſſembled before him [to be judged.] In that day ſhall men ſee what they have done; he knoweth all things.

CHAP. XXV.

The Chapter of the Alcoran, containing Seventy and ſeven Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful: Praiſed be he that ſent the Alcoran to his Servant to inſtruct the World; he is King of the Heavens and Earth; he hath no Son, nor Companion in his Reign; he created and ordained every thing. The Infidels worſhip Gods that can create nothing, and are things created; they can neither do them good nor evil, they can give neither Life nor Death, neither cauſe them to riſe again. They ſay that the Alcoran is but a fable of thine invention, invented with the aſſiſtance of ſome other Perſon; but they lye and blaſpheme. They ſay that it is but an old Song, and a fable of the Ancients that thou writeſt, and that thou ſtudieſt Morning and Evening. Say unto them, It was ſent by him that knoweth all things in Heaven and Earth, altogether gracious and merciful. They ſaid, Who is this Prophet? He eateth Bread and Meat; and walketh through the ſtreets; we will not believe him, unleſs that an Angel deſcend from Heaven to preach to us with him; unleſs that Angel enrich him, and that he have a Garden full of good and ſavory fruits; he is but a Wizard, or one poſſeſſed of the Devil. Conſider to what they compare thee; certainly they are in error, and cannot find the right way. Praiſe and bleſs him that is able to beſtow on thee a greater good, when it ſhall ſeem good to thee, to wit, Gardens, wherein flow many Rivers, and Houſes of pleaſure. They have denyed the certainty of Univerſal Judgment, and we have prepared the Fire of Hell to puniſh them; wrath ſhall carry them away with terrible crys: when they ſhall behold the place of the aſſembly of Judgment; when they ſhall there appear, they ſhall be deſperate, and ſhall cry, O miſery! Cry not O miſery, cry O miſeries! (in the Plural) Ask of them which is better, and more advantageous, that, or Paradiſe, which is prepared for the recompence of the righteous, where they ſhall dwell eternally with all manner of felicity; this is it that God hath promiſed, and that which was impetrated of his Divine Majeſty, (for them that have his fear before their eyes) I will one day aſſemble Idolaters, with their Idols; God ſhall ſay unto them, you are they who have ſeduced my creatures from the right way; they ſhall ſay, praiſed be thy Name; we ought to have worſhipped none but thy Divine Majeſty; but the wealth that thou gaveſt to our Magiſtrates, and their life, which thou didſt prolong, cauſed them to forget thy Commandments; they were pernicious men in that they abjured thy Law, they cannot this day be exempt from the puniſhment of our crimes, neither protect us againſt thy wrath. The Idolaters ſhall be rigorouſly puniſhed; the Prophets that we ſent before thee, did eat Bread and Meat, and walked through the ſtreets; we prove them one after another: Perſevere, God beholdeth them that are patient. Thoſe that believe not in the Reſurrection, have ſaid, The Angels are not deſcended from Heaven, we have not ſeen God; they are become proud, and are fallen into an exceeding great error, but the wicked ſhall one day be without comfort; when they ſee the Angels, they ſhall cry, help, help! We will ſet before their eyes all the ſins that they have committed; the good works which they ſhall think to have done, ſhall be like to duſt, which the wind carryeth away; and the bleſſed ſhall enjoy a moſt certain good, they ſhall hear of nothing but what contenteth them. When the Heaven and the Air ſhall divide themſelves, and the Angels ſhall deſcend, then ſhall the truth appear, and the merciful ſhall Reign; that day ſhall be tedious to Infidels, they ſhall bite their fingers, and ſay, would to God I had followed the Prophet and his Apoſtle! Oh miſery! would to God I had not contracted amity with ſuch an Infidel, he ſeduced me from the right way, he hindred me to believe in the Alcoran which God ſent; certainly the Devil hath tempted men. Then ſhall the Prophet ſay, Lord, ſuch as have followed me, have obeyed what is written in the Alcoran, and the Infidels have rejected it. We have appointed an enemy among the wicked, to every Prophet of them that were before thee, but it ſufficeth thee that God guideth and protecteth thee. The Infidels have demanded, if the Alcoran was ſent all at once; I have ſo done to confirm the truth in thy heart, I have ſent it piece by piece, they ſhall not ſhew thee any thing like unto it; I have inſtructed thee in the Truth, clear and intelligible; the incredulous ſhall be confined in the Fire of Hell, and be moſt miſerable. Certainly, We gave to Moſes the Book of the Law, we ſent with him his Brother Aaron to aſſiſt him, and ſaid unto them, Go both of you, preach unto Infidels, we will deſtroy them, unleſs they be converted. When the People of Noah deſpiſed our Commandment, we drowned them, and made them ſerve for example to Poſterity, and prepared great torments for the impious. Remember Aad, Temod, and thoſe that dwelt nigh unto the Well, a long time after them; we ſpake to them in Parables, and deſtroyed them. Oh ye wicked! conſider the miſery of the City, upon which fell that miſchievous Rain, that deſtroyed them, becauſe the Inhabitants believed not in the Reſurrection. When the Infidels ſaw thee appear, they derided thee, and ſaid, This Prophet would ſeduce us, and make us to abandon our God; we had patience, and deferred our puniſhment. They ſhall know at the Day of Judgment them that have been ſeduced; Haſt thou conſidered the action of him that ſpake of his God after his fantaſie? Wert thou his Tutor, to hinder him to ſpeak? Doſt thou believe that the greateſt part of the wicked, hear, and underſtand what thou ſpeakeſt to them? They are like Beaſts, and worſe; Seeſt thou how thy Lord ſheddeth the Roſe? Were it his will, it ſhould be permanent, the Sun hath cauſed it to melt, and attracteth it gently to himſelf. He it is that created the Night for repoſe, and the Day for labour. He it is that ſendeth the Winds by his ſpecial grace, he maketh Rain to deſcend from Heaven, to refreſh the Earth, to give it life, to water the beaſts, and for the contentment of men; we have divided it among them, that they may be mindful of our grace, nevertheleſs, the greateſt part of them are ungrateful. Had we ſo pleaſed, we had ſent to every City a preacher, to preach unto the Inhabitants the Torments of Hell; obey not Infidels, preach to them frequently what is written in the Alcoran. It is God that hath ſweetned the water of Euphrates, that joyned the two Seas, that made them Salt, and put between them a ſeparation, to hinder them to mix? He created Man and Woman of a little water, to increaſe and multiply together; thy Lord can do whatſoever him pleaſeth, yet do the Infidels adore what can neither benefit nor hurt them, and aſſiſt the devil their maſter to tempt the world; We ſent thee only to preach the torments of hell, and to proclaim the joys of Paradiſe: Say unto them, I require not of you reward for my preaching, he that ſhall be acceptable to God, will follow the way of his Law: Praiſe and exalt thy Lord, truſt in him, he knoweth all the ſins of men; he created the heavens, and the earth in ſix days, and ſitteth on his Throne; learn this of him that knoweth it. When it was ſaid to the Infidels, worſhip the merciful [God;] they ſaid, what mercifil? ſhall we worſhip what ye appoint us? and they added to their impiety. Bleſſed be he that created the ſigns of heaven, that created, the Sun and the Moon, full of Brightneſs and light, and hath made the dayes to ſucceed each other, to return him thanks for his graces. The ſervants of the merciful, that walk with humility, that ſalute the ignorant when they ſpeak to them; Such as pray to, and worſhip God day and night; ſuch as ſay, Lord, deliver us from the torments of hell; thoſe that fear God, that are not prodigal, nor covetous, that follow the middle way, betwixt prodigality and avarice, thoſe that worſhip one God, that kill no man but with reaſon, and following the Commandments of God, and that are not luxurious, ſhall enjoy eternally the grace of God; ſuch as do the contrary ſhall be chaſtiſed, their puniſhment ſhall be augmented at the day of Judgment, and they ſhall be damned for ever, except him that ſhall be converted, and ſhall have done good works, God ſhall give him pardon of his ſins, he is gracious and merciful. They, who do good works and repent, who make no falſe oath, who are humble, and are not (wilfully) deaf and dumb when they hear the Alcoran read, and ſay, Lord, give us and our poſterity children, that may be the light of our eyes, and be obedient to thee; work in us a fear to diſobey thy Commandments; ſuch perſons ſhall enjoy eternally the delights of Paradiſe, for reward of their perſeverance; they ſhall there find ſalutations, and benedictions, with immenſe graces. Say unto the wicked, God will not enlighten you, neither hearken to your prayers, becauſe ye have traduced his Prophet; the time of the puniſhment of your crimes ſhall ſuddenly arrive.

CHAP. XXVI.

The Chapter of Poets, containing an hundred and twenty ſeven Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the name of God, gracious and merciful: God is moſt pure, he underſtandeth all things, he is moſt wiſe. Theſe ſigns are the ſigns of the book that diſtinguiſheth truth from falſhood; wilt thou deſtroy thy ſelf, becauſe men are impious? If I will, I can cauſe my judgments to deſcend upon them, that ſhall humble them, they deſpiſe my Commandments; they ſcoff, but ſhall be rigorouſly puniſhed; See they not how many fruits we have made to ſpring out of the earth? It is a token of our Omnipotency, nevertheleſs the greateſt part of them believe not that thy Lord is the omnipotent, and the merciful. Inſtruct them how thy Lord ſaid unto Moſes, thou ſhalt be my meſſenger to the Infidels, and the people of Pharoah, that they may have my fear before their eyes. Moſes ſaid, Lord, I fear they may traduce me, and that my tongue cannot be looſed; ſend with me my brother Aaron, they know the fault I have committed, and will put me to death. Moſes ſlew a Egyptian. The Lord ſaid to him, they ſhall not put thee to death, go both whither I command you, I will be with you, and will hear what they ſay; ſay to Pharoah, that ye are the Meſſengers of the Lord of the World, and let him diſmiſs with you the Children of Iſrael; Pharoah ſaid unto Moſes, have I not ſeen thee within this houſe a little Child? Didſt thou not dwell with us many years? Diſt thou not kill a man? Thou art impious. Moſes ſaid, I did what I did, I was in the number of the ſeduced, I fled when I feared you; ſince that time God hath given me knowledg, and placed me in the number of his Prophets and Apoſtles; he hath ſent me his grace, to ſet before thee the evil that thou doſt commit; in cauſing thy ſelf to be adored of the Children of Iſrael; Pharoah ſaid unto him, who is that God of the World? He anſwered, it is the Lord of Heaven and Earth, and of whatſoever is between them. Pharoah ſaid to them that were about him, Hear ye not what he ſaith? Moſes continued his [ſpeech] and ſaid, my Lord is your God, the God of your Fathers, and of your Predeceſſors. Pharoah ſaid, this Prophet that is ſent to you is a fool; Moſes ſaid, I am indeed the Meſſenger of the Lord of the Weſt and Eaſt, if ye had underſtanding to know him: Pharoah ſaid, if thou worſhip any other God but me, I will cauſe thee to be put unto the bottom of a Pit; Moſes ſaid to him, Wilt thou do it, ſeeing I am come to thee with reaſons ſo ſtrong, and arguments ſo infallible? Pharoah ſaid unto him, Bring thy reaſons if thou art true: Then he caſt his ſtaff on the ground, and it was changed into a Serpent; he drew his Hand out of his boſom, it appeared white, and ſhining to the Eyes of the ſpectators. Then ſaid Pharoah to them that were about him, Certainly, behold here a skilful Magician, he would drive you from your Country through his Magick, what ſay ye? They anſwered, He, with his Brother, muſt be terrified, and men muſt be ſent into all thy Cities, to aſſemble the moſt knowing Magicians of all thy Dominions; when they came together at the day appointed, it was demanded of them, if they were called to follow the magick of Moſes, and of Aaron? They ſaid, what ſhall be our reward if we be victorious? Pharoah ſaid unto them, Yes, ye ſhall be rewarded, and be among them that approach my Perſon. Moſes ſaid unto them, will you caſt your ſtaves on the ground, or ſhall I firſt caſt mine? They caſt their cords and their ſtaves firſt, ſaying, With the aſſiſtance of Pharoah we ſhall be victorious; then Moſes caſt his Rod on the ground, which devoured their cords and ſtaves; when they beheld this miracle, they fell proſtrate, and ſaid, We believe in the Lord of the World, God of Moſes and Aaron; Pharoah ſaid to them, If ye believe in Moſes without my permiſſion, ye ſhall ſee what ſhall befal you; he is your Maſter, he underſtandeth Magick better than you; I will cauſe your right feet and left hands, or your right hands and left feet to be cut off, and cauſe you all to be hanged; they ſaid, This ſhall do us none harm, we ſhall return before God our Lord, we hope that he will remit our ſins, becauſe we ſhall be the firſt Converts. We ſaid unto Moſes, go with the Children of Iſrael, my ſervants, and fear not the People of Pharoah that ſhall follow thee: Pharoah ſent his Commiſſioners through his Dominions to aſſemble the People, and ſaid, (ſpeaking of the Children of Iſrael) thoſe men are few in number, they have diſpleaſed me, but I will well awake them. We moved Pharoah and his People to depart out of Egypt, to purſue the Children of Iſrael; we cauſed them to quit their Gardens, Fountains, and Houſes of pleaſure, and made the Children of Iſrael heirs of their treaſure, they ſurpriz'd them at the riſing of the Sun; when the Children of Iſrael beheld them, they ſaid, we are overtaken: Moſes anſwered, No, my Lord is with me, he ſhall guide me; then we inſpired Moſes to ſtrike the Sea with his Rod, incontinently it divided it ſelf on both ſides, like two Mountains; we ſaved him, and all that were with him, and drowned the men of Pharoah; which ſhall ſerve for an example to the incredulous and obſtinate, thy Lord is Omnipotent and merciful. Relate to unbelievers the Hiſtory of Abraham, when he ſaid to his Father and his People, whom do ye adore? they anſwered, We adore our Idols; he ſaid unto them, Do they hear you when ye invoke them? Do they good unto you when ye worſhip them, or miſchief when ye neglect them? they anſwered, We find that our Fathers worſhipped them as we do; Abraham ſaid unto them, you and your Fathers worſhip vain things, ye adore only Idols, mine Enemies; I will not worſhip them, I will worſhip the Lord of the World, who created, guideth, and nouriſheth me, who giveth me health when I am ſick, who maketh me to live, and will cauſe me to die, and from whom I hope for pardon of my Sins at the Day of Judgment: Lord give me the knowledg of thy will, grant that my Tongue and Words may be credited as true, by Poſterity; put me into the number of the Heirs of Paradiſe; pardon my Father, who hath been in the number of the erroneous, and make me not aſhamed at the Day of the Reſurrection; at the Day, when riches and Children ſhall be unprofitable, except to ſuch as ſhall have an heart eſtranged from Impiety; God ſhall make the righteous to approach to Paradiſe, and the wicked to ſee Hell: They ſhall ſay, Can the Idols that ye adore ſave you? Can they ſave themſelves? They ſhall be, with you, their adherents, and the devils, thrown headlong into the fire of hell: the Idolaters ſhall diſpute in hell, with them whom they have worſhipped, and ſhall ſay, By God, we were abuſed when we adored you, the wicked ſeduced us, we have none this day to intercede for us, neither friend to protect us; could we return into the world, we would believe in the Law of God; this diſcourſe ſhall be for example to the wicked that believe not that thy Lord is the Omnipotent and merciful. The people of Noahs time ſlandered the Apoſtles and Prophets that were ſent to them; Noah their brother ſaid unto them, Fear God, I am his Meſſenger, ſent to preach unto you, fear God, and obey him, I require no recompence for my inſtructions, God the ſole Lord of the world ſhall reward my labours, fear and obey him; They ſaid, ſhall we believe in thee, and thy followers, who are infamous? He ſaid, I know not what they do, my Lord keepeth accompt of their actions; if ye knew the right way, ye would not worſhip Idols; I drive not true believers from my ſociety, I am ſent only to preach the torments of Hell. They ſaid O Noah! if thou quit not this diſcourſe, thou ſhalt be ſtoned; Noah ſaid, Lord, this people is impious, judge our difference, deliver me from their malice, and all true believers that are with me; We preſerved him, and thoſe that were with him in the Ark, and deſtroyed them that remained on the earth: This is an evidence of our Omnipotency, yet the greateſt part of Infidels believe not that God is omnipotent and merciful. The people of Aads time traduced the Apoſtles and Prophets that were ſent unto them; Hod his brother ſaid unto them, fear God, I am his Meſſenger, ſent to preach unto you with fidelity. Fear God and obey him; I require of you no recompence of my preaching, the Lord of the Univerſe ſhall abundantly reward me. Will ye Build Towers, ers, and lofty Palaces, as if ye would dwell eternally in the world? Will ye be cruel, without compaſſion on your ſelves? Fear God and obey him; fear him who giveth you his grace, beſtoweth on you wealth, children, gardens, and fountains; I fear that ye ſhall ſuffer grievous pains at the day of Judgment: They ſaid unto him, Art thou come to be preached unto, or to preach to us? Thou relateſt to us old mens Fables; They ſlandered him, and we deſtroyed them: this is a token of our Omnipotency, nevertheleſs the greateſt part of Infidels believe not thy Lord to be Omnipotent and merciful. The people of Temod belyed the Prophets that were ſent unto them; his brother Salhe ſaid unto them, fear God, I am a meſſenger ſent from God to preach to you, fear God and obey him; I require of you no recompence for my preaching, the Lord of the Univerſe ſhall recompence my labours; will ye forſake eternal riches, to cleave to the wealth of this world, to put your truſt in your gardens, your fountains, your tillages, your dates, and fruits? ſhall ye be eſteemed prudent if ye build houſes of pleaſure in the mountains? fear God, obey his Commandments, and obey not the wicked, that defile the earth, and do no good. They ſaid unto him, thou art a Magician, and an Inchanter, thou art but a man like unto us, ſhew us ſome miracle, if thou be indeed a Prophet ſent from God; he ſaid, behold there a Camel, he hath a place to drink at a day appointed, ye likewiſe have it to drink as he, do him no harm, otherwiſe ſhall ye be puniſhed at the day of Judgment. They did hurt this Camel through contempt, but had cauſe to repent it, and were ſeverely puniſhed. This is an example for poſterity; nevertheleſs the greateſt part of Infidels believe not that thy Lord is altogether gracious and merciful. The Citizens of Lot traduced the Prophets that were ſent unto them; Lot their brother ſaid, fear God, I am a faithful Meſſenger ſent from him, to preach to you, fear God, and obey him, I require of you no reward for my pains, God will reward me; will ye cleave to the world to reject that glory that he hath created for you? ye forſake good to embrace evil. They ſaid, O Lot! if thou change not this diſcourſe, we will baniſh thee from our City, he ſaid, perhaps I am one of thoſe whom ye abhor; Lord deliver me, with my family, from their hands. We ſaved him with all his family, except his wife, who remained with the inhabitants of the City, we cauſed to fall upon them a rain that deſtroyed them. This is an example for poſterity, nevertheleſs the greateſt part of Infidels believe not that thy Lord is Omnipotent and merciful. They that inhabit the † Foreſt, ſlandered the Prophets that were ſent unto them; Chaib ſaid to them, fear God, I am a faithful meſſenger ſent from him, to preach unto you the torments of hell; fear God, and obey him, I require no reward of you for my preaching, the Lord of the Univerſe ſhall recompence me: Meaſure with good meaſure, and weigh with good weights, detain nothing from your neighbour, defile not the earth, fear him that created you, and all thoſe that were before you: They ſaid unto him, thou art a Sorcerer, thou art but a man like us, we believe thee to be a lyar; if thou art indeed ſent from God, cauſe a part of heaven to fall upon us; he anſwered, God knoweth that of which ye are ignorant; they traduced him, but were chaſtiſed, being covered with a cloud that rained upon them a ſhower of fire, and they were burned, as if it had been the day of Judgment: this is a token of my Power, but the greateſt part of Infidels believe not that thy Lord is Omnipotent and merciful. Certainly the Alcoran was ſent by the Lord of the world, the faithful Spirit inſpired it into thine heart, that thou mayſt preach to the people the pains of Hell in the Arabique tongue; the Scriptures heretofore made mention [of it;] if the Infidels of Mecca are ignorant of it, the Doctors of the children of Iſraël have knowledg to underſtand it, although that we have not ſent it in the language of the Perſians, yet ceaſe not to inſtruct them in that which they know not; we have imprinted a lye in the hearts of the wicked, they ſhall not believe what is written in the Alcoran, until they ſee the puniſhment prepared for Infidels at the day of Judgment; that day ſhall come at unawares, of which they are ignorant. They ſay, let us tarry, and not believe as yet, in what is contained in that book; are they impatient until they ſee their puniſhment? Haſt thou ſeen how they have ſome years deferred it, and how, in the end, that which we promiſed befel them? their riches were to them unprofitable. We have not deſtroyed Citi.s without having forewarned them of their deſtruction, we are unjuſt to none. The devils did not bring the Alcoran, it was to them of none advantage, they could not compoſe it, they are remote [from the Angels] and cannot hear their ſpeech; ſay not there is another God with God; if thou ſay it, thou ſhalt be chaſtiſed; preach the torments of Hell to them that ſhall follow thee; be humble and civil to True believers; if they diſobey thee, ſay unto them, I am innocent of what ye do, and am reſigned to the Will of God, Omnipotent and merciful: He beholdeth thee when thou doſt pray, and worſhip him; he heareth and knoweth all things. Shall I tell ye to whom the Devils addreſs themſelves? They apply themſelves to Lyars, they tell to them what they have heard ſpoken, but they all lye. The erronous imitate the Poets; they are confuted in their Diſcourſe, and ſay, they have done what they have not, except thoſe that believe in God, that do good works, who often think of his Divine Majeſty, and that have been protected againſt the injuſtice of Infidels; the unjuſt ſhall know, that they ſhall one day riſe again.

CHAP. XXVII.

The Chapter of the Piſmire, containing Fourſcore and thirteen Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the Name of God, Gracious and Merciful. God is moſt pure, he underſtandeth all. Theſe myſteries are the myſteries of the Alcoran, which diſtinguiſheth the Truth from a Lye; it conducteth men into the right way, and proclaimeth the Joys of Paradiſe to ſuch as believe in the Law of God, who make their prayers at the time appointed, pay Tithes, and have knowledg of their end. They that believe not in the Day of Judgment, like well of what they do; and are in confuſion, they ſhall in the end be in the number of the damned. The Alcoran was conveyed to thee from the moſt prudent, that knoweth all things.

things. Remember thou that Moſes ſaid to his Family, I ſee a Fire, I go to it, I will bring you tydings, I will bring you a ſpark, peradventure you ſhall be warmed; when he drew near to the Fire, he heard a voice that ſaid to him, oh Moſes! that which is in this Fire, and whatſoever is about it, is bleſſed; praiſe is due to God, Lord of the Univerſe; I am God Omnipotent, and Eternal; Caſt thy ſtaff on the ground: When Moſes beheld his ſtaff to move, as it had been alive, he went back very ſorrowful, and returned no more; Fear not that ſtaff, my Meſſenger and my Prophets have no fear in my preſence; he that ſhall be converted, ſhall find me gracious and merciful. Put thine Hand into thy Pocket, it ſhall come forth white, without harm, it ſhall be one of the Nine marks of my Omnipotency. Pharoah, and his Miniſters were altogether erroneous; when they ſaw my Miracles, they ſaid that they were but Sorcery; they deſpiſed them, and encreaſed their impiety; Conſider what is the end of the wicked, and how they have been deſtroyed; We gave knowledg to David and to Solomon; they ſaid, God hath gratified us above many of his Servants that have believed in his Omnipotency; Solomon was David's Heir, and ſaid to the People, we underſtand the Language of Birds, we know whatſoever can be known, it is an exceeding great Grace. Solomon's Army being one day aſſembled before him, compoſed of Men, Devils, and Birds, he lead them to the Valley of Piſmires; a Piſmire their Queen, cryed out, Oh Piſmires! enter into your Houſes, leſt Solomon and his Troups trample you under foot, without knowledg of it. Solomon hearing theſe words, remained ſome time without ſpeaking, and in the end began to laugh, ſaying, Lord aſſiſt me, that I may give thee thanks for the benefits and graces which thou didſt confer upon my Father; if I do well, thou wilt accept it, place me through thy Mercy in number of them that exalt thy glory; he called for the * Whoop, and ſaid, Wherefore ſee I not the Whoop? Is ſhe in the number of the abſent? I will puniſh and put her to death, if ſhe have not a lawful excuſe; not long after, ſhe humbled her ſelf before Solomon, who asked her whence ſhe came? She anſwered, I come from ſeeing what thou ſeeſt not, I come from the Kingdom of Saba, whence I bring certain tidings; I have found a woman, their Queen, who hath whatſoever is neceſſary for a King; ſhe hath a great and magnificent Throne, I have found that ſhe with her Subjects adore the Sun, the Devil cauſed them to delight in this their action, he hath ſeduced them from the right way, and they ſhall be in error until they worſhip one God; who ſendeth Rain from Heaven, and maketh the Earth to produce Plants and Fruits, who knoweth whatſoever is in the hearts of men, and what they utter; God! There is but one God, Lord of the Univerſe. Solomon ſaid, I ſhall ſoon ſee if thou ſpeak truth, or whether thou be in the number of the Lyars; Go, bear to her this Letter, and obſerve what ſhe and her People ſhall anſwer; at her arrival, the Queen ſaid to her Miniſters, Oh ye that are raiſed to dignity in my * dominions; a Letter is given me from Solomon, of this tenour. In the Name of God gracious and merciful, riſe not up againſt me, and obey me. Give me counſel, ſwhat I ought to do, I will do nothing without your advice, and what you ſee not with your eyes: They anſwered, Our welfare and miſery depend on thee, command whatſoever ſhall ſeem good to thee, and we will obey thee. She ſaid, When Kings enter a City, they introduce many diſorders; they abaſe, and humble the chief of the Inhabitants, and the moſt eminent; if Solomon and his People come hither, they will uſe [us] in the like manner. I think it requiſite to ſend to him an Ambaſſador with ſome preſents, perhaps he will take a reſolution to return. When the Ambaſſador arrived in Solomon's preſence, he ſaid unto him, Do ye bring me preſents? God hath beſtowed on me more riches then on you, preſents rejoyce you, becauſe ye love them: Return to them that ſent you, I will go viſit them with Forces ſo great, that they ſhall not be able to reſiſt; I will drive them out of their Dominions, and they ſhall be miſerable, if they obey me not: Then he ſaid to his People, Sirs, who will bring to me the Royal Seat of that Woman, before ſhe and her ſubjects obey me? One of the Devils ſaid unto him, I, I will bring it before thou ariſe from thy place; I am ſtrong enough to bear it, I will carry it carefully. One of them that attended Solomon, who knew the Scriptures, ſaid, I will bring it to thee in the twinkling of an eye: When Solomon beheld this Throne before him, he ſaid, Behold here a favour of God, to try if I would acknowledg his benefits. He that returneth thanks to God for his graces, performeth his duty; he rejecteth him that is ungrateful. I will try if ſhe followeth the right way, or whether ſhe be in the number of the ſeduced. They changed ſomething in her Royal ſeat, to try if ſhe would know it, when ſhe arrived in Solomon's preſence. At her arrival, they ſhewed it her, and asked if it reſembled her own; ſhe replyed, It reſembleth it, as if it were the ſame: She had knowledg of the right way; but that which the People, and ſhe adored, inſtead of God, had ſeduced them from the obedience of his divine Majeſty. They ſpake to her to enter into a gallery, when ſhe beheld the pavement, ſhe believed it to be Water; and in lifting up her Robe, fearing to wet it, diſcovered her Leg. Solomon told her, that the pavement was of polliſhed glaſs, and exhorted her to embrace the Law of God. Then ſhe ſaid, Lord, I am too blame, in having offended thee; I am obedient with Solomon, to the Commandments of the God of the Univerſe. We ſent Salhe to Temod, and his People, to exhort them to worſhip one God: He ſaid unto them, O People! flie to the Mercy of God; if ye implore pardon of him, ye ſhall be pardoned. They ſaid, Wouldſt thou draw us into thine error? And into the error of them that are with thee? He ſaid, God ſhall chaſtiſe you, ye are Seditious. They were Nine perſons in the City that defiled the Earth, and did no good; they ſaid among them, Let us this Night kill the Prophet, and his adherents; We will ſay to them that ſeek him, That we ſaw him not, neither them that ſlew him; and will ſwear that we ſpeak truth: They were cunning, but we were more ſubtil than they, and they knew it not. Conſider what was the iſſue of their ſtratagems; we deſtroyed them with their followers; and their Houſes are become deſart, becauſe of their impiety. This ſhall ſerve for example to them that have knowledg of our Omnipotency: We ſerved the Prophet, and all the True believers that were with him. Remember thou the Hiſtory of Lot, who ſaid to his Citizens, Will ye always defile your ſelves in uncleanneſs, in each others view? Will ye love men more than women? Ye are ignorant. They replyed, Let us drive Lot and his Family out of our City; they defile not themſelves like us. We pre-ſerved him, with all his Family, except his Wife; ſhe remained among them that were chaſtiſed. We cauſed it to Rain upon them, a Rain that gave them to know the ſeverity of our chaſtiſements. Say unto them, Praiſed be God, that deſtroyeth the wicked, and Salvation to all thoſe who he hath choſen; are they not more happy, than ſuch as believe there are many Gods? Who created the Heavens and the Earth? Who cauſed Rain to fall from Heaven? Who hath made many delicious Gardens to bring forth? You have not the power to cauſe the plants to ſpring forth, without the aſſiſtance of God. Certainly unbelievers do err from the right way. Who hath eſtabliſhed the Earth, and made the Rivers to flow? Who hath made heavy the Mountains? Who but God hath put ſeparation that is between Seas? The greateſt part of the World know it not. Who rendreth men miſerable? Who delivereth them from affliction when they invoke him? Who hath cauſed you to multiply, and leave your Poſterity on Earth, but God? Nevertheleſs few men give him thanks. Who guideth in the darkneſs of the Earth and Sea? Who but God ſendeth the Winds, the forerunners of Rain? He is moſt high, and moſt powerful, but the wicked will not conſider the effects of his Omnipotency. Who formeth men? Who maketh them to live, die, and riſe again? Who enricheth them with the Wealth of Heaven, and of Earth, but God? Say unto them, produce your reaſons, bring your arguments, if what ye alledg be true, ſay unto them, None but God knoweth what is in Heaven and Earth, no man knoweth the future, preſent and paſt; do men know the day of the Reſurrection? Contrariwiſe they doubt, and are blind. The wicked have ſaid, What? we ſhall be duſt, as are our Fathers; and ſhall come forth out of our Graves! This was heretofore promiſed to our Fathers, and to us, this is but a Fable of old men: Tell them, that they conſider not what was heretofore the end of the wicked; afflict not thy ſelf, for that they conſpire againſt thee, and that they demand at what time they ſhall ſee the puniſhment that is foretold them: Say unto them, it is not far from you, ye throw your ſelves headlong into it, but God is pitiful towards his People, nevertheleſs the greateſt part give him no thanks for his Grace, thy Lord knoweth what is in their Heart, and whatſoever they ſpeak; there is nothing in Heaven or Earth, that is not written in a moſt intelligible Book; the Alcoran explaineth to the Children of Iſrael the greateſt part of their difficulties, it will guide them in the right way, and deliver from Hell them that ſhall believe thee; thy Lord ſhall judge them at the day of Judgment, he is Omnipotent and wiſe; truſt thou in God, thou art in the way of truth; the Dead and Deaf ſhall not hear thee, and unbelievers ſhall depart from thee penſive and aſtoniſhed; thou oughteſt not to guide the blind, neither to make the deaf to hear, except ſuch as ſhall believe in the Alcoran, and be obedient, when the time of the puniſhment that is denounced againſt them ſhall be come; we will cauſe a Beaſt to come from under the Earth, that ſhall ſpeak unto them, and ſhall ſay, The People believe not in the Law of God, they know not his wondrous works. Be thou mindful of the Day, when I will aſſemble a Multitude of all Nations that have diſobeyed my Commandments, to give account of their actions: I will ſay unto them, Ye have traduced my Prophets, ye know not what ye ſaid, What have ye done? Then ſhall they be puniſhed for their ſins, and be inexcuſable, they ſhall not ſpeak a word. Do not Infidels ſee that we have created the Night for reſt, and the Day for travel? This is a ſign of my Omnipotency; be thou mindful of the Day wherein the Angel ſhall ſound the Trumpet, and whatſoever is in Heaven and Earth, ſhall tremble with fear, except ſuch as ſhall be in the favour of God; that Day ſhalt thou ſee the Mountains ſuſpended, to move like the Clouds; this ſhall be a work of God, who created all things; and knoweth their end; he that ſhall have done good works, ſhall be rewarded, he ſhall be without fear; and they that had done evil, ſhall remain in the Fire of Hell; it ſhall be ſaid unto them, Are ye not chaſtiſed according to your demerits? Say unto the People, I command you to worſhip the Lord of this priviledged † City, all things appertain to him; I command you to believe in the Unity of his Divine Majeſty, and to ſtudy the Alcoran; who ſo doth good, ſhall find good. Say unto them that ſhall be ſeduced, I am ſent only to preach the Torments of Hell: ſay to True believers, Praiſed be God that hath given you to ſee his Miracles, and hath given you knowledg of the right way; thy Lord is not ignorant of what they do.

CHAP. XXVIII.

The Chapter of Hiſtory, containing Fourſcore and Eight Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful. God is moſt Pure, he underſtandeth all things, and is moſt Wiſe. Theſe myſteries are the myſteries of the Book that diſtinguiſheth the Truth from a Lye. I relate to thee the hiſtory of Moſes, and of Pharoah with Truth, for the contentment of True believers. Pharoah was powerful on Earth, he entreated his Subjects as ſeemed good to him, he tormented one party, and murthered their Children, he abuſed their Wives, and was of them that defiled the Earth; I gave my Grace to them that were afflicted on Earth; I made them ſucceſſors of Pharoah's Kingdom, I eſtabliſhed them in his Dominions; I made Pharoah, Haman, and their Army to ſee what they moſt feared; we ſaid to the Mother of Moſes, give ſuck to thy Child; if thou feareſt that they will miſchief him, caſt him upon Nile, fear not, neither afflict thy ſelf, I will reſtore him to thee between thine Arms, and place him in the number of Prophets. The domeſtiques of Pharoah found him upon the Water, and ſaved him, to be one day their enemy, and to torment them, becauſe Pharoah, Haman, and their People were Infidels. Pharoah's wife ſaid unto him, I entreat thee not to ſuffer this Infant to be ſlain, mine eyes rejoyce to ſee him, he ſhall one day be profitable for our ſervice, as our Son; but they were ignorant of what ſhould befal them; the Heart of his Mother was freed from fear, when ſhe beheld him in the hands of Pharoah's wife, and ſcarce could ſhe refrain to let them know that ſhe was his Mother; we cauſed her to have patience, and ſhe had faith in our promiſes: ſhe ſpake to his ſiſter to follow him ſtep by ſtep, ſhe followed afar off, without intimation that ſhe was his ſiſter, or that ſhe regarded regarded him. We had before prohibited Moſes to ſuck the milk of any other nurſe, than that of his mother; his ſiſter ſaid to Pharoah's ſervant, will ye that I provide you a nurſe, and people that ſhall carefully nouriſh him? We cauſed him to be reſtored to his mother, to nurſe him; ſhe ceaſed from her ſadneſs, when ſhe knew, and ſaw that God was ſincere in what he had promiſed, but the greateſt part of the people know it not. When Moſes was aged, about thirty three years, we gave him knowledg and wiſdom; thus do I reward the righteous; Moſes entring one day into the City, met two men that fought; the one was of the Children of Iſrael, and the other was an Egyptian, and of his enemies, whom he aſſaulted and ſlew; after this he ſaid the Devil tempted me, he is the open enemy of men; Lord, I have offended thee, pardon me; he pardoned him, he is gracious and merciful; Lord, ſince thou haſt been ſo gracious to me, I will never give aid or ſuccour to Infidels. He contined in the City with fear, and kept himſelf upon his guard; on the morrow he again met him, whom the day before he had defended, who fought likewiſe with another Egyptian, and required his aſſiſtance; Moſes ſaid unto him, Thou art ſeditious; he replyed, oh Moſes! wilt thou ſlay me, as thou didſt ſlay him yeſterday? Wilt thou be a murtherer of all men, or a juſt man? Not long after a man came [in haſt] to him from the utmoſt part of the City, who ſaid unto him, oh Moſes! the Officers of Pharoah have conſpired againſt thee, they deſire to put thee to death; ſave thy ſelf, and follow my counſel; He departed from the City with fear, keeping himſelf upon his guard, beſeeching his Lord to deliver him from the hands of Infidels; he went towards Madian, and ſaid, Lord ſuffer me not to follow an evil way; He met a great number of perſons that made their flocks to drink, he with them found two maids that could not water their Cattel, he ſaid unto them, what do ye two do here? We have not ſtrength to draw water to give our beaſts to drink, we tarry for the Shepherd, our father is too old to draw [it.] He drew water out of the well to water their Cattel, and withdrew to a ſhade, becauſe of the heat of the Sun, ſaying, Lord, I am deprived of all the graces which heretofore thou didſt confer on me; I am now poor and neceſſitous. One of thoſe maidens came to ſeek him, and baſhfully ſaid unto him, My father calleth thee, to recompence thee for the pains thou haſt taken in watering our cattel; When he was in the old mans preſence, he related what had befaln him. The old man ſaid, Fear nothing, I will deliver thee from the hands of the wicked; one of his daughters ſaid to her ſiſter, Give to this man to eat, and reward his pains, he aſſiſted us with affection; their Father ſaid unto him, I will marry thee to one of my two daughters, on condition, that thou wilt have a care of my flocks the ſpace of eight years; ten years if it pleaſe thee, ſaid Moſes; I will not forſake thee, thou ſhalt find me an honeſt man, I will ſerve thee the two terms, either eight or ten years, as ſhall ſeem good to thee, God is witneſs of what I ſay. After the term expired, Moſes forſook the houſe of his father in law; withdrawing with his wife, he beheld afar off a great fire on the ſide of the mountain, and ſaid to his wife, tarry here, I ſee the fire of the Omnipotent, I will ſpeedily return, I will bring you a ſpark, peradventure you ſhall be warmed: when he drew near to this fire, they cried unto him from the right ſide of the valley, from an eminent place, and from a buſh, Oh Moſes! I am God, Lord of the Univerſe, caſt thy ſtaff on the ground; when he beheld his ſtaff to move, as it had been alive, he fled for fear, and returned no more: O Moſes! draw near, and fear not, thou art in a place of ſafety, put thine hand into thy pocket, it ſhall come out white and ſhining, without harm; draw back thine arm into thy ſleeve, it ſhall return to its former condition; thy ſtaff and thine hand ſhall be two ſigns of my Omnipotency to Pharoah and his Miniſters, who diſobey my Commandments; Moſes ſaid, Lord, I have ſlain an Egyptian, I am afraid they will take away my life, command Aaron, who is eloquent, to go with me, to aid me, and to confirm what I ſhall ſay, I fear they will traduce me; I will give thee thy brother for thine aſſiſtant, I will give to you both ſtrength to defend your ſelves from their malice; go, do what is commanded you, ye ſhall be victorious, and all thoſe that ſhall follow you: when Moſes came to Pharoah, he made him to ſee my miracles, and preached my Commandments to his Miniſters; they ſaid, this is but magick and witchcraft, we have not heard theſe things to have been ſpoken to our predeceſſors. Moſes ſaid, the Lord knoweth him that teacheth the right way, and him that ought to have part in Paradiſe, Infidels ſhall be moſt miſerable. Pharoah ſaid to his Miniſters, do ye know any other God but me? O Haman! let me offer ſacrifices, and build a Temple; ſhall I deceive my ſelf with the God of Moſes? I believe him to be in the number of lyars. He became proud on earth, with his Miniſters, and they believed that they ſhould never be aſſembled before me to be judged: we ſurprized him with his people, and cauſed him to periſh in the Sea; conſider what is the end of unbelievers; we abandoned them, and they are in the number of the condemned to the fire of hell. They ſhall finde none to protect them at the day of Judgment; we curſed them on earth, and at the day of the Reſurrection they ſhall be abominable to all the world. We taught Moſes our Commandments, after the deſtruction of many Infidels before his coming. We gave him the Book, to be a light to the people, to conduct them into the right way, and acquire our grace, peradventure they will remember. Thou wert not with Moſes when we ſpake to him; to him we created another age after him, thou didſt not at that time dwell with the Inhabitants of Madian, neither didſt thou teach them our Commandments; it is we that have inſtructed thee in the Hiſtory of paſt ages; thou wert not on the mountain when we ſpake to Moſes; we ſent thee through our ſpecial grace, to preach to men the torments of hell; they have not yet had a preacher like unto thee, perhaps they will conſider it; when they felt any puniſhment for their ſins, they ſaid, Lord, hadſt thou ſent us an Apoſtle to inſtruct us, we ſhould have obeyed thy Commandments, and have believed in thy Law: and when on our part they were inſtructed in the Truth, they ſaid, doth Mahomet work miracles like Moſes? Do they not traduce what Moſes did, when they ſay, that Moſes and Mahomet are two apparent Sorcerers? and when they ſaid that they believed neither Prophet, nor Scripture? Say unto them, bring any book from God, that better teacheth the right way than the Old Teſtament, and more ſavingly than the Alcoran, I will follow it, if ye ſpeak the truth; If they be not heard when they ſhall require this book, know, that they follow only their own appetites and their impiety; who is more erroneous than he that followeth but his own paſſion, and is not guided of God? He guideth not Infidels; Certainly we have ſent them the Alcoran, peradventure they will believe in it; they, to whom we heretofore ſent this Book, believe in the contents thereof; when they hear it read, they ſay, we believe in thoſe words, it is the very Truth that proceedeth from God; we believe in the Unity of his Divine Majeſty, they ſhall be doubly rewarded, becauſe they have perſevered in well-doing; they have overcome evil through their good deeds, and have expended in good works part of the Wealth that we gave them. When they heard the Faith evil ſpoken of, they withdrew themſelves, took leave of the company, and ſaid, Ye ſhall anſwer for your ſelves, and we for our actions. Regard not the ignorant, thou ſhalt not convert all them that thou ſhalt deſire to convert; God converteth, and guideth into the right way whom he pleaſeth, and knoweth ſuch as ſerve him. They ſaid, if I follow with thee the right way, I muſt forſake my Country. Shall not I eſtabliſh them in a place of ſafety, where they ſhall find all ſorts of fruits to enrich them? But the greateſt part of the People know it not. How many Cities have we deſtroyed, that took pleaſure in their evil life? No man inhabited them any more, except very few, and we became heirs of their riches. God ſhall not deſtroy Mecca, until he have ſent an Apoſtle to inſtruct the Inhabitants thereof in the right way: God deſtroyeth not a City, if the Inhabitants be not unjuſt, and diſobey not his Commandments; the Wealth of this World which ye poſſeſs, pleaſeth you, but the Riches of Heaven are much better, and eternal; will ye not underſtand it? Have we not kept promiſe with them to whom we promiſed Paradiſe? And with them to whom we promiſed the Riches of this World, and in the end were in the number of the damned? Be thou mindful of the day when thy Lord ſhall call them, and ſay unto them, where are your Idols, which ye believed to be my Companions? The chief of them ſhall ſay, Lord, behold thoſe that were ſeduced like us, we are innocent of their Idolatry, they adored not us; they ſhall ſpeak that day to the Idolaters to invoke their Idols, but they ſhall not hear them, they ſhall be viſibly chaſtiſed on Earth: Be thou mindful of the day when thy Lord ſhall call them, and ſay unto them, Wherefore have ye not believed my Apoſtles and my Prophets? They ſhall be confounded, and remain dumb. He that ſhall be converted, and do good works, ſhall be happy. Thy Lord createth what pleaſeth him, and maketh choice of what ſeemeth to him good. Praiſed be God, he hath no Companion, he knoweth what is in the hearts of men, and what they make manifeſt; he is God, there is no God but he, praiſe is due to him in the beginning, and in the end, he commandeth over all things, and all People ſhall one day be aſſembled before him to be judged; ſay unto them, Had God given a continual Night, even until the Day of Judgment, what other God is there that is able to give you light? Will ye not hear me? Had God given you a continual Day, until the Day of Judgment, what other God could have given the Night to refreſh you? Will ye not conſider his benefits and his grace? He hath created the Night for repoſe, and the Day for Labour, peradventure ye will give him thanks. Be thou mindful of the Day, when thy Lord ſhall call the Infidels, and ſhall ſay unto them, where are the Idols that ye worſhipped? We will call a witneſs of every Nation, and will ſay to the Idolaters, Bring your arguments that may prove the Plurality of Gods; Ye ſhall this day know your Blaſphemies, and that there is but one God. Caron was of the People of Moſes, he was proud, becauſe of his riches; we gave give ſo great treaſures, that many men were burthened when they conveyed away the Keyes. Remember how his People ſaid unto him, Rejoyce not above meaſure in thy great wealth, God abhorreth them that rejoyce without reaſon; beg of him Paradiſe; with thy Riches forget not to do good in this World, give alms of the ſubſtance which God hath given thee, be not diſobedient to him on Earth, he abhorreth thoſe that diſobey him; theſe Riches were given thee, becauſe thou didſt inſtruct the People in the Old Teſtament; knoweſt thou not that God deſtroyed in times paſt many rich and opulent perſons? Who is more ſtrong, more powerful, more rich than God? He will not enquire of the wicked the number of their ſins, he knoweth all, and the accompt. Caron one day went forth into publick, with all his retinue; they that affected the wealth of this World, ſaid, Would to God we had as much wealth as Caron; he is happy! but the more knowing among them ſaid, Ye are unhappy, the grace of God is more advantageous to them that believe in his Law, and do good works, than all the Treaſures of Caron; none ſhall receive his grace but ſuch as ſhall obey him, and perſevere in obedience to his Commandments. • We deprived Caron of all his Treaſures, and none was able to protect him againſt us; then they that had coveted his riches, ſaid, oh Miracle! God giveth to, and depriveth of wealth whom to him ſeemeth good; Had not God given us his Grace, we had been neceſſitous; certainly the wicked ſhall be miſerable; I will beſtow Paradiſe on them that hate Vanity and diſorder upon the Earth, and ſhall have my fear before their eyes; whoſoever ſhall do good, ſhall find good; who doth evil, ſhall be chaſtiſed after his demerits. He that hath taught thee the Alcoran, ſhall cauſe thee to return to the * place that thou deſireſt: Tell the inhabitants of that place; that God knoweth them that teach the right way, and ſuch as go aſtray, Thou didſt not expect the Alcoran, it is a ſpecial grace of thy Lord; aſſiſt not the Infidels, and take heed leſt they ſeduce thee, after having learnt what hath been taught thee; preach to the People the Unity of God, be not in the number of them that believe many Deities, adore God alone, there is no God but he; all things ſhall have an end, except his Face, he commandeth over every thing, and all men ſhall one day appear before him to be judged.

The Chapter of the Spider, containing Sixty nine Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful. I am God moſt Wiſe. Men have believed that it is ſufficient to ſay, We believe in God, and that they be not proved: Certainly God proved their Predeceſſors, and knew ſuch as were zealous in his Law, and them that were Infidels. Do they who have done evil, think to eſcape the puniſhment of their Crimes, and not not to be judged? Such as hope to ſee God, ſhall behold him at the time appointed by his divine Majeſty; he underſtandeth and knoweth all things. He that fighteth for the faith, fighteth for his ſoul: certainly God hath no need of men, their ſins ſhall be pardoned who ſhall believe in his divine Majeſty, and ſhall do good works. We enjoyned the children of Iſrael to honour their father and mother, and to do good to them; if they preſs thee to worſhip many Gods, thou ſhalt be damned, if thou give ear to them; obey them not in this matter, ye ſhall be aſſembled before me, I will ſet before you all that ye have done, I will reward you according to your works, and place ſuch as ſhall have obſerved my Law in the number of the bleſſed. There be men who affirm, that they believe in God, and are impatient when evil befalleth them from God to prove them: If God give victory to the True believers, they ſay, that they are on their ſide, but doth not God know what is in their heart? He knoweth them that believe in his Law, and thoſe that are impious. The Infidels ſaid to the True believers, do like us, follow our way, we will bear your ſins; They will not bear them, they are lyars, they ſhall bear their own burdens; ſhall not an account of their ſins be required of them at the day of Judgment? We ſent Noah to inſtruct men; he lived upon the Earth nine hundred and fifty years. The Flood ſurprized, and deſtroyed the people of his time, becauſe they were unjuſt, and we ſaved Noah, and thoſe that were with him in the Ark; this ought to ſerve for example to all the world. Remember Abraham, who ſaid to his people, Adore one God, and fear him, ye ſhall do well, if ye have knowledge to comprehend it; ye worſhip but Idols, and are but lyars, thoſe whom ye worſhip cannot benefit you, implore ſuccor of God, worſhip him, and give him thanks for his graces, ye ſhall one day appear before him, if ye traduce me; thoſe that were before you traduced the Prophets, Gods Meſſengers: Meſſengers are obliged only to diſcharge their meſſage; are ye ignorant that God cauſeth men to dye, and ſhall raiſe them again? it is a thing eaſie to God: Walk through the Earth, and conſider how God hath extirpated your predeceſſors, and created after them another people, certainly he is omnipotent. He puniſheth and pardoneth as he ſeeth good, you all ſhall one day be aſſembled before him to be judged; you ſhall not render him impotent, either in Earth, or in the Heavens; ye ſhall find none of power to protect, or defend you againſt his divine Majeſty; ſuch as obey not his Commandments, who believe not the reſurrection, and deſpair of his mercy, ſhall ſuffer great torments. The people anſwered, kill Abraham, and burn him; but God delivered him from the fire that they had kindled, which ſhall ſerve for example to True believers. He ſaid unto them, ye adore only Idols, becauſe of your love to the wealth of the world; ye ſhall deſpiſe and curſe each other at the day of Judgment. Hell ſhall be your habitation, and ye ſhall be deprived of protection. Lot believed in his words, and ſaid, I will retire to the place which my Lord ſhall appoint me; he alone is omnipotent, and moſt wiſe. We gave to Abraham two ſons, Iſaac and Jacob; we cauſed Prophets to be born of his race, and taught his progeny the Scripture; we rewarded him in this world, and he ſhall be at the day of judgment in the number of the bleſſed. Remember Lot, who ſaid to his people, Ye defile your ſelves with filthineſs, unknown to any before you; ye incline to the love of men, ye rob upon the high ways, and defile one another. This people anſwered, Let us ſee the judgments of God, if what thou ſpeakeſt be true. Then he ſaid, Lord protect me againſt unbelievers. When our Meſſengers came towards Abraham, to declare to him that he ſhould have children; they ſaid unto him, We will ruine Lots City, and deſtroy all the inhabitants thereof, becauſe they are impious. Abraham anſwered, Lot dwelleth in that City; they ſaid, We know all that is within it, and we will preſerve him, with all his family, except his wife, ſhe ſhall be in the number of them that ſhall be puniſhed. When our Meſſengers arived at Lots houſe, he was troubled, in that he had not ſtrength ſufficient to defend them from the malice of the people; they ſaid unto him, Fear nothing, neither afflict thy ſelf. We will preſerve thee and all thy family, except thy wife; ſhe ſhall abide among them that ſhall be deſtroyed; we will cauſe the indignation of God to fall upon this City, becauſe of their impiety; it ſhall ſerve for example to poſterity. We ſent Chaib to his brethren, the inhabitants of Midian; he ſaid unto them, Worſhip one God, fear the day of Judgment, and defile not the Earth. They impudently traduced him, but were ſurprized by an Earthquake, and remained dead in their houſes, as carkaſſes. We deſtroyed Aad, and Temod, their ruine is yet apparent in the places of their habitations; the Devil tempted and ſeduced them from the right way, notwithſtanding they knew their error. We deſtroyed Caron, Pharoah, and Haman; Moſes preached to them my Commandments; they contemned them, and became proud in the Earth, but eſcaped not the puniſhment of their crimes. We chaſtiſed ſome by an impetuous wind, and others were ſurprized by thunder; we deprived them of their riches, and they were drowned. God was not unjuſt towards them, they drew miſchief on themſelves through their impiety. They that worſhip Idols are like to the Spider; ſhe buildeth her houſe of her cob-web that cannot defend from heat or cold. They would not adore Idols, did they underſtand what they do; God ſeeth what they worſhip, he is omnipotent and wiſe. I teach the people theſe parables, and none but the wiſe underſtand them. Truly God created Heaven and Earth, it is a ſign of his Omnipotency to True believers. Inſtruct them in the book that is inſpired into thee; make thy prayers at the time appointed, prayers divert men from ſin; to be mindful of God is the beſt work thou canſt perform, he knoweth all the actions of men. Diſpute with mildneſs againſt them that have knowledg of the written Law; except againſt the wicked that are among them. Say unto them, We believe in what hath been taught you, and in what hath been taught us: Your God, and our God is one God; we are reſigned to his divine will. We have ſent thee the Alcoran, as we ſent to them the Old Teſtament: Such as underſtand the Old Teſtament, believe in the Truth of the Alcoran. Thou haſt not written it with thine own hand; hadſt thou written it, thou hadſt cauſed them to doubt, who deſire to make it void: Certainly it containeth and teacheth intelligibly the Commandments of the Law; none but Infidels reject it. They have ſaid, We will not believe in this Book, unleſs God work in it ſome miracle. Say unto them, Miracles proceed from God, I am ſent only to preach the torments of Hell. Is it not ſufficient, that we have ſent thee the Alcoran to inſtruct them? It containeth the effects of my mercy and precepts, neceſſary for their ſalvation. Say unto them, it ſufficeth that God is witneſs of mine actions, betwixt you and me; he knoweth whatſoever is in Heaven, and in Earth: They that believe in Idols, and have not faith in God, are damned. They urge thee to make them ſee the puniſhment of their crimes; if the time were come, they ſhould ſoon feel it; they ſhall reſcent it, when they leaſt think of it, but they know it not; they ſhall preſs thee to make them ſee it. Say unto them, Hell is prepared for Infidels. When they ſhall be plunged in torments over their heads, and under their feet, it ſhall be ſaid unto them, Taſte the puniſhment which ye have deſerved. O ye people that believe! The Earth is ſufficiently large and ſpacious for you, to ſeparate your ſelves from the wicked; worſhip me alone, all Creatures ſhall die, and be aſſembled before me to be judged. The True believers that ſhall have done good works, ſhall inhabit Paradiſe, wherein flow many rivers; wherein is the reward of the righteous, of them that perſevere to do good, and are patient in their affliction, and truſt in their Lord. How many beaſts be there that have not wherewith to live? God nouriſheth them, and you alſo; he underſtandeth and knoweth all things. If thou ask of the Infidels, who created Heaven and Earth, the Sun, and the Moon? they will ſay, It is God. Wherefore then do they deny his Unity? God enricheth and impoveriſheth whom pleaſeth him, he is omniſcient. If thou demand of them, who cauſeth the rain to fall from Heaven, to give life to the Earth, after the death thereof? they will ſay, It is God. Say unto them, Praiſed be God, that ye avouch it; nevertheleſs, the greateſt part of men underſtand it not. The life of this world is but ſport and vanity, life is in Paradiſe, had they knowledge to comprehend it. When they enter into a ſhip, and ſee the tempeſt, they call upon God and proteſt to profeſs his Law: And when he hath preſerved them on the Land, they are ingrateful for his grace, and return to their Idolatry, they ſhall too late underſtand their error. Knew they not that we have eſtabliſhed in Mecca all ſafety and freedom? and that men are taken away by violence to be ſlain, and made ſlaves? believe they in things unprofitable? ſhall they be ingrateful for the graces of God? who is more impious than he that blaſphemeth againſt God, and impugneth the known Truth? is there no place in Hell for the wicked? I will guide into the right way them that ſhall fight for the Faith; God is with them that do good.

CHAP. XXX.

The Chapter of the Grecians, containing ſixty Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the Name of God gracious and merciful. I am the moſt wiſe God. The Grecians were vanquiſhed upon the frontier of the Perſians; but ſhall be victorious before the end of ſeven years. God diſpoſeth all things from the beginning to the end. When they ſhall be victorious, the True believers ſhall rejoyce in the victory that God ſhall give them; he protecteth whom to him ſeemeth good; he is omnipotent and merciful. He hath promiſed them victory, and departeth not from his promiſes; of which the greateſt part of men are ignorant; they affect the life of this world, and conſider not their end: Will they not conſider that God hath created the heavens and the earth, and all that is in them? and hath appointed to every thing a limited and prefixed time? Certainly the greateſt part of the people believe not in the Reſurrection: Will they not conſider the end of their predeceſſors; who were more powerful and wealthy than they? God hath ſent to all an Apoſtle to teach them his Law, he hath done to them no injuſtice, they have drawn miſchief on themſelves through their iniquity; the end of the wicked ſhall be like to their works, they deſpiſe the Commandments of God, and deride them, but God ſhall cauſe them to die, and riſe again, and all ſhall be aſſembled before him at the day of Judgment; that day ſhall they be deſperate, their Idols ſhall not intercede for them, they ſhall forſake them, and they ſhall be ſeparated from the true believers. Such as believe in God, and do good works, ſhall enjoy the delights of Paradiſe, and the wicked ſhall be chaſtiſed according to their demerits. Praiſe God, pray unto him evening and morning, praiſe is due to him in heaven and earth; pray unto him before the Sun ſet, and at the hour of noon; he maketh the dead to come out of the living, and the living out of the dead; he cauſeth the barren earth to revive, and grow green after its death; in like manner will he cauſe you to ariſe again, and come out of your ſepulchres: it is a ſign of his Omnipotency, to have created you of earth, to have given you fleſh and bones, and to have created the woman (of the rib of the man) to dwell with him; he hath commanded you to love mutually, and to exerciſe charity among you, theſe things are ſigns of his Omnipotency to them that conſider his graces. The creation of heaven and earth, the diverſity of tongues, the differences of your viſages, and of your colour, the night created for repoſe, and the day for travel, the lightning that terrifieth the people, and which through rain cauſeth the earth again to flouriſh, are ſigns of his Omnipotency; It is a token of his Omnipotency to ſuſtain the heaven, and the earth; ye ſhall come out of your ſepulchers when he ſhall call you, whatſoever is in heaven and earth obey him; he cauſeth men to die, and to riſe again, he alone is God in heaven and earth, he is Omnipotent, and knoweth all things. He ſpeaketh to you in a parable, drawn from your ſelves; your ſlaves, are they your companions? do they equally partake with you in the goods which God hath given you? How then will ye ſay that God hath a companion equal to him? Thus do I unfold his myſteries to perſons that have knowledg to comprehend them; certainly the wicked have followed their appetites with ignorance; who ſhall guide him whom God ſhall cauſe to err? he ſhall find no protector; embrace the law of Salvation, God hath eſtabliſhed it, that men may obſerve it; It admitteth no alteration, but the greateſt part of the world are ignorant of it: Fear God, make your prayers at the time appointed; be not like to them that ſay, God hath a companion; neither like to them that are at preſent in the number of Heretiques, and were before as ye are; every Sect is pleaſed in its opinions, when any evil befalleth them that call upon God, and are converted; nevertheleſs ſome of them return to their Idolatry; after the reception of his grace, they are ingrateful. They ſhall awhile be tolertaed, and in the end they ſhall, too late, underſtand their error.

Have

Have we taught them reaſons and arguments, that prove that I have a companion? The People rejoyced when we enlarged to them our Graces; and became deſperate, when evil befel them; ſee they not that I give, and take away Wealth, as to me ſeemeth good? This is a token of my Unity to ſuch as obey my Commandments. Give to your Neighbour what appertaineth to him, and particularly to the poor, and true believers, if ye deſire to ſee the Face of God; ſuch as ſhall do it, ſhall be bleſſed. The Money which ye put to Uſury, encreaſeth in the hands of men, God ſhall not ſuffer it to proſper; the Alms which ye give, ſhall make you to ſee the Face of his Divine Majeſty, and ſhall be doubly reſtored to you. God hath created you, he enricheth you, and cauſeth you to die and riſe again, can your Idols do as much? Praiſed be God, he hath no companion; diſorder appeared in the Earth, and in the Sea, becauſe of the iniquities of men; peradventure they will be converted, when they ſhall feel the puniſhment of their Crimes: ſay unto them, Go throughout the Earth, and conſider the end of your Predeceſſors, the greateſt part of them were Idolaters; embrace the true Law before the Day cometh, when none ſhall be heard; that Day ſhall the wicked be ſeparated from the good, the impious ſhall give an account of their impiety, and ſuch as ſhall have lived well, ſhall enjoy the joys of Paradiſe, the Grace of God ſhall be their recompence, God abhorreth Infidels. It is a ſign of his Omnipotency, to ſend the Winds to bring you Rain, and make you to taſte the Fruits of his Grace; the Ship runneth upon the Water through his permiſſion, for the advantage of your commerce; will ye not be thankful to him for his benefits? We ſent to every Nation Prophets and Apoſtles before thee, they came with moſt intelligible Precepts, and with many Miracles; we chaſtiſed thoſe that ſlandred them, and protected the faithful. God ſendeth the winds that elevate the Clouds, and extendeth them in the Air in many pieces at his pleaſure; he cauſeth the Rain to fall where he liſteth, and rejoyceth whom to him ſeemeth good of them that expect it with impatience; conſider the effects of his bounty; he cauſeth the dry and barren Earth to flouriſh again, and reſtoreth the Dead to Life, he is Omnipotent. We ſent the Winds to aſſemble the Clouds that covered Men with their ſhadow, nevertheleſs they are returned to their impiety; the dead ſhall not underſtand thee, neither likewiſe the dumb, thou art not obliged to lead the Blind, none ſhall hearken to thee but ſuch as ſhall believe in my Law, and be obedient: Say unto them, God created you impotent, he hath given you ſtrength, and after, having reduced you to the weakneſs of Old age, doth what to him ſeemeth good; he knoweth mens ſecrets, and doth what pleaſeth him; the wicked ſhall ſwear at the Day of Judgment, that they have remained but an hour in their ſepulchres; they lye in like manner, when they deny the Reſurrection; the True Believers, that know the Truth, ſhall ſay unto them, Ye have remained there the time appointed in the Book of God, to wit, until the Day of Reſurrection; behold the Day of Reſurrection! ye knew not at what time it ſhould arrive; this day excuſes ſhall be unprofitable to Infidels, they ſhall be deprived of protection. We have taught in the Alcoran all that is profitable for the Salvation of Men; if thou teacheſt them my Commandments, unbelievers will ſay, Thou bringeſt nothing but diſorder; thus God hardneth the hearts of the ignorant. Be patient, and perſevere; what God promiſeth is infallible; beware leſt unbelievers ſhake thy perſeverance.

CHAP. XXXI.

The Chapter of Locman, containing Thirty Four Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the Name of God, Gracious and Merciful: I am the moſt Wiſe God. Theſe Precepts are the Precepts of the Book filled with Doctrine, it guideth into the way of Salvation; the Righteous who make their prayers at the time appointed, that pay Tithes, and believe in the Day of Judgment, they are guided by their Lord, and ſhall be bleſſed. There be who deride this Book, they ignorantly depart from the Law of God, and have deſpiſed it, but ſhall one day be ſeverely puniſhed: When they are taught the Commandments of God, they turn the back with diſdain, they will not hear, and have Ears ſtopped; ſay unto them, You ſhall in the end ſuffer infinite pains: Such as believe in the Law of God, and do good works, ſhall eternally enjoy the Delights of Paradiſe; what God promiſeth, is infallible, he is Omnipotent, and altogether wiſe, he created the Heaven, and ſuſtaineth it without a Pillar, appearing to your Eyes; he lifted up the Mountains upon the Earth, to faſten and hinder it to move; he hath thereon diſperſed many Beaſts, and ſent Rain from Heaven, which cauſeth Plants to ſpring forth, and Herbs of divers ſorts. Behold [here] what God hath created! ſhew me what your Idols have created; aſſuredly Idolaters are manifeſtly ſeduced from the right way. We inſpired knowledg into Locman, and ſpake unto him to give God thanks; he that returneth thanks to God for his Graces, doth good for his Soul. God rejecteth the Ingrateful, and praiſe is due to him in all places. Remember thou that Locman ſaid unto his Son, O my Son! believe not thou, that God hath a companion, it is an exceeding great Sin: We have commanded man to honour his Father and Mother; his Mother beareth him with grief upon grief, and weaneth him at the age of Two years; be thou not ingrateful for God's benefits; honour Father and Mother, thou ſhalt be one day before God to be judged. If thy Parents preſs thee to believe that God hath companions, obey them not, follow the way of them that obey him, all men ſhall be one day aſſembled before him, to be rewarded according to their works. O my Son! if thou doſt evil, of the weight of a Grain of Muſtardſeed, or of the weight of a Rock, or of the greatneſs of Heaven and Earth, God will know it, and put it in account, he is exact and Omniſcient. O my Son! make thy prayers at the time appointed, do what is honeſt and civil, fly what is not approved, and be patient in thy adverſities; regard not the World, diſordered through pride; converſe not with the proud, God deteſteth the haughty; obſerve thy ſteps, walk with modeſty, ſpeak gently, they be perſons that bray like Aſſes when they ſpeak; ſeeſt thou not that God hath created for men all that is in Heaven and Earth, and conferreth on them his Graces in general, and particular? There be ignorant [perſons] that diſpute of the Deity without reaſon; when it is ſaid unto them, Do what God hath appointed, they anſwer, We will do what we ſaw done by our Fathers. They conſider not that the Devil calleth them and their Fathers to to the pains of Hell. He that obeyeth God, and doth good works, faſtneth him to the ſtrongeſt Knot, and will have a care of him at the Hour of his end. The impiety of the wicked ought not to afflict thee, they ſhall be one day aſſembled in our preſence, to be chaſtiſed; I will ſhew them all that they have done, I know what is in the hearts of men, I will prolong awhile their puniſhment upon Earth, and precipitate them in the other World, into the Fire of Hell. Haſt thou not demanded of them who created Heaven and Earth? They ſaid, It is God; ſay unto them, therefore praiſed be God; nevertheleſs the greateſt part of them are ignorant. Whatſoever is in Heaven and Earth is Gods, he hath no want of the World, praiſe is due unto him in all that he doth, if all the Trees of the World were Pens, and the Sea Ink, they could not comprehend the effect of his Omnipotency, he is Omnipotent, and knoweth all things. He created, and ſhall make you to riſe again with one word, he underſtandeth and ſeeth all things. Conſider they not that God cauſeth the Night to enter into the Day, and the Day into the Night; that he created the Sun and the Moon, that move in the Heaven, until the day appointed; he knoweth whatſoever ye do, becauſe he is truly God; they that invoke other than him, invoke things vain and unprofitable; God alone is moſt high, and moſt mighty: Seeſt thou not how the Ship runneth upon the Water, for a token of his Omnipotency, to ſuch as acknowledg his Graces? When the Wars aroſe againſt the Infidels, many called upon God, with reſolution to follow his Law; when he ſaved them on the Land, ſome perſevered to do well, and others returned to their impiety; none but deceivers and ingrateful [perſons] deſpiſe his Commandments. O People! fear God, and the day when the Father ſhall not be able to ſuccour his Child, neither the Child ſerve his Father, God's promiſes are infallible; be not proud of your Riches, neither that God tolerateth and ſuffereth you, he knoweth the time when ye ſhall be chaſtiſed, the hour that the Rain ſhall fall upon the Earth; he knoweth what is in the wombs of women, whether it be Male or Female; none but God knoweth what thou wilt do to morrow; none but he knoweth the place where thou ſhalt die; he knoweth all, he knoweth all.

The Chapter of Worſhip, containing an Hundred and Thirty Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the name of God, gracious and merciful, I am the moſt Wiſe God. Doubtleſs this Book was ſent by the Lord of the Univerſe; will the wicked ſay that thou haſt invented it? On the contrary, it is the truth it ſelf, which proceedeth from thy Lord, to preach to them that heretofore had none to inſtruct them; peradventure they will follow the right way. God created Heaven and Earth, and all that is between them, in Six days, and ſitteth on his Throne; Who ſhall protect you? Who ſhall hear your prayers but he? Will you never conſider it? He diſpoſeth all things in Heaven and Earth, all men ſhall one day be aſſembled before him to be judged; a Thouſand years are but one day before his Divine Majeſty; he knoweth what is paſt, preſent, and future; he is Omnipotent and Merciful, he hath created every thing for his People; he formed man of the Dirt, and Duſt of the Earth, he inſpired the Soul into his Body; he giveth you hearing, ſight, and ſenſe, but few men return him thanks for his Graces. They ſay, What, ſhall we die and return to be a new People? Certainly they believe not in the Reſurrection. Say unto them, The Angel of Death ſhall cauſe you to die, and ye ſhall return before God to be judged. Thou ſhalt then ſee how the Infidel will hang down the Head before their Lord, and ſay, Lord, we now ſee the certainty of the Reſurrection; we this day know the truth of thy words, permit us to return into the World, we will be Righteous, we now underſtand what is profitable and neceſſary for us; we could have given a guide to every Perſon, my word is moſt true, I will fill Hell with the wicked, and Paradiſe with the Righteous; thus ſhall men be rewarded and chaſtiſed according to their works. Taſte (O ye wicked!) the pains that ye have deſerved, in refuſing to believe in this day which ye have found; we leave you in the miſeries due to your incredulity; taſte the eternal torments that ye have merited through your impiety. Such as believe in the myſteries of my Law are humble, they worſhip me alone, and praiſe me when they hear mention of me; they are not proud, rebel not againſt my Commandments: They ariſe from their Bed to make their prayers with fear and hope, and imploy in pious works ſome part of the Wealth that we have given them. No man hath either ſeen or knoweth what God reſerveth to recompence the Righteous for their perſeverance. The believers and unbelievers ſhall not be alike entreated; the believers that have done good works, ſhall enjoy Paradiſe, as the reward of their labours, and the unbelievers ſhall be precipitated into the Fire of Hell, the more they ſhall labour to get out, the further ſhall they enter into it; it ſhall be ſaid to them, Taſte the pains of eternal flames, which ye would not believe. I will make the wicked to taſte of the torments of the World, and the pains of Hell, if they be not converted: Who is more unjuſt, than he that knoweth the Commandments of his Lord, and diſobeyeth them? We will be avenged on his impiety: We gave a moſt true Book to Moſes, to inſtruct the Children of Iſrael; we put into the right way thoſe among them that perſevered in their Faith, and obeyed our Commandments. Thy Lord ſhall judge the difficulties of the Infidels at the Day of Judgment; ſee they not how much People we deſtroyed in times paſt, that repoſed [confidence] in their Houſes? It is a token of our Omnipotency, will they never underſtand it? See they not how I thruſt forth Water in deſart and barren Lands? That I cauſe Herbs to ſpring forth for the nouriſhment of men and beaſts? Will they never conſider it? They demand, when will the Day of Judgment come? Say unto them, that Day ſhall not bring contentment to Infidels, and they ſhall be without protection. Depart thou far from them; perſevere, and attend; they wait an occaſion to miſchief thee, but thou ſhalt ſee them chaſtiſed.

CHAP. XXXIII.

The Chapter of Bands, and Troups of Souldiers, containing fourſcore and ſeven Verſes, writttn at Medina.

IN the name of God, gracious and merciful. Oh Prophet! fear God, and obey not unbelievers, God knoweth all things, and is moſt prudent in what he ordaineth; obſerve what thy Lord hath taught thee, he knoweth the actions of men; recommend thy ſelf to God, it ought to ſuffice thee, that he protecteth thee. He hath not given two hearts unto men; he hath not enjoyned us to call your wives your mothers; thoſe which you call your children, are not all your Children, ye ſpeak it only with the mouth, but God always ſpeaketh the truth, and guideth men into the way of ſalvation. Call your neighbour by the name of his father, this action ſhall be acceptable to God, provided that ye have no evil deſign in the heart; if ye know not his name, call him your brother in God, or Sir; God is gracious and merciful. The Prophet is obeyed of them that believe in God, and honour his wives, as their mothers. Kinſmen are heirs of each other, it is ſo appointed by his divine Majeſty to the Believers that went out of Mecca to follow the Prophet: It is ordained in Scripture to do good to your parents. Remember thou that we received the promiſe of the Prophets of thee, of Noah, of Abraham, of Moſes, and of Jeſus the Son of Mary, (to worſhip but one God) we received a ſtrong promiſe: An accompt ſhall be required of their actions, and the wicked ſhall feel the rigour of infinite pains. Oh ye that believe in God! remember his favour towards you; when ye were charged by troups of enemies, he ſent againſt them an impetuous wind, and troups inviſible to your eyes, to fight them; he ſeeth all that ye do; thoſe inviſible troups came from the Eaſt, and from the Weſt, from above, and below, when your ſight was troubled, and your hearts failed you, becauſe of the great number of your enemies; ye had already conceived a very bad opinion of the Law of God; then were the True believers tryed, they trembled with fear; The wicked, and ſuch as were weak in their faith, ſaid, that whatſoever God and his Prophet had promiſed them, was but abuſe and vanity; Remember thou how a party of them ſaid to the Inhabitants of the Territory of Medina, there is no ſafety for you with Mahomet, return into your houſes; Remember thou how many among them required diſmiſſion, and ſaid, that their houſes were forſaken: Their houſes were not forſaken, but they had a deſign to fly; had they returned to their houſes, they had on all ſides perſwaded them to follow impiety, they ſhould not there have made long abode, becauſe they before had promiſed God not to fly; he would have required an accompt of their promiſes: Say unto them, flight ſhall be to you unprofitable, if ye flie death, for that ye ought no longer to continue in the world: Say unto them, who is able to protect you againſt God when he ſhall reſolve to deſtroy you? take none other protector but him; he knoweth them that were diſſwaded to go to the battel to ſpare their wealth and perſons. They caſt an eye upon thee, when they are ſurprized with fear, they turn their eyes into the head, as a man that dyeth, and when they are delivered from fear, they traduce thee becauſe of their extreme avarice. Such men believe not in God, he rendreth all their works unfruitful; it is a thing eaſie to his divine Majeſty. The Troups of the Infidels believed they were invincible, and when they ſaw the troups of the True believers they deſired to flye. The Infidels deſired to draw the Arabians to their party, and have intelligence to know in what condition you are; had they been of your party, few of them had been ſlain; the adhearing to the Prophet of God ſerveth to you as a Cittadel, it ſerveth as a Bulwark to them that apprehend the day of Judgment, and think often on his divine Majeſty. When the believers ſaid, behold! what God and his Prophet promiſed us, they are ſincere in their promiſes; the ſight of their enemies encreaſed their faith and zeal towards God and his Prophet. There be perſons among the True believers who have performed what they promiſed to God; many of them are dead in obedience to the Commandments of his divine Majeſty, others attend the ſame thing, and ſwerve not from what they have promiſed; God ſhall recompence them for their zeal, and chaſtiſe the Infidels, or pardon them if it ſo pleaſe him, he is gracious and merciful. God ſhall deſtroy the unbelievers with their wrath againſt the believers; he protecteth True believers in combats, he is ſtrong and omnipotent. The Jews deſcended from their Fortreſs, to give aid to the Infidels, but God caſt fear into their hearts; a party of them were ſlain, and the reſt taken ſlaves; they by their death made you heirs of their lands, their houſes, their riches, and fortreſſes which you were not able to conquer; God is omnipotent. Oh Prophet! if thy wives be too ambitious of the wealth of the earth, and of garments too ſumptuous; Call them, Say unto them, that thou wilt deal well with them, and wilt repudiate them with mildneſs and civility. If they love God and his Prophet, if they are virtuous, his divine Majeſty will give them an exceeding great reward: Oh ye wives of the Prophet! ſuch of you as ſhall be unchaſt, ſhall be puniſhed doubly, more than other women, this is a thing eaſie to God; ſuch among you as ſhall obey God and his Prophet, and ſhall do good works, ſhall be rewarded more than other women, an exceeding great reward is prepared for you. Oh ye wives of the Prophet! ye are not like other women of the world; fear God, and believe not in the diſcourſe of ſuch as have deſign to ſeduce you, ſpeak with civility, abide in your houſes; go not forth to make your beauty appear, and to make a ſhew, as did the ignorant of old; pray to God with affection, give alms, obey God and his Prophet, God will deliver you from his wrath, and will purifie you; be mindful of the Law that is taught you in your houſes, he is merciful to them that honour him, he knoweth all the actions of the Prophet, he hath promiſed his mercy, and an exceeding great reward to thoſe (men and women) that ſhall obey his Commandments. Thoſe men and women that believe in his unity, that reſign themſelves to his divine pleaſure, that are patient and humble, that ſpeak the truth, that faſt, give alms, and are chaſte; and the men and women that obſerve his Law, ought not to controul his actions, neither thoſe of his Prophet, nor ſay, that they could do better than they, if they would endeavour [it.] He that diſobeyeth God and his Prophet, erreth from the right way; Remember what thou didſt ſay to him whom God favoured, to receive him into his Law, and whom thou didſt gratisie with liberty, that saidst, Divorce not thy wife, and fear God; thou concealest in thy mind a design which God shall discover, thou feareſt the People, but it is thy duty to fear God alone. When Zeid did repudiate his wife, we married thee to her, to the end there might remain no error among the True believers; when they shall repudiate their wives, they shall observe in repudiating them, what God hath ordained. The Prophet sinneth not in doing what God hath permitted; the Law of God was in this manner observed by our Predeceſſors, and the command of his Divine Majeſty is executed without delay. Such as preach the word of God, his Apoſtles and Prophets, fear none but his Divine Majeſty, it ſufficeth them that they are in his protection. Mahomet is not your Father, he is the Apoſtle of God, and the laſt of all the Prophets, God knoweth all things, there ſhall not come another Prophet after him. Oh ye that believe in God! think frequently on his Divine Majeſty, praiſe him Morning and Evening, he ſhall give you his Mercy; the Angels implore Pardon, that he may deliver from darkneſs; he is merciful to True believers; the Angels ſhall ſalute them on his behalf at the Day of Judgment; he hath prepared for them an exceeding great reward. Oh Prophet! we have ſent thee to be witneſs of the deportments of the People, and as a light to conduct them into the right way; proclaim to the True believers that they ſhall receive of thy Lord an exceeding great Grace; obey not Infidels, nor the wicked, fear not their malice, and truſt in God; thou oughteſt to be ſatisfied that God protecteth thee. O ye that believe! it is not lawful for you to abuſe your wives; if you repudiate them before ye have known them, deal well with them, and diſmiſs them with mildneſs and civility. O Prophet! we permit thee to know the Women to whom thou haſt given dowry, the Women-ſlaves which God hath given thee, the daughters of thine Uncles, and of thine Aunts, that have abandoned with thee the company of the wicked; and the true-believing Wife that ſhall be given thee, if thou wilt marry her, and that ſhe be not the Wife of a True believer. We know what we have commanded True-believers, touching their wives and their ſlaves; we have inſtructed thee therein, to the end thou offend not God, he is gracious and merciful to ſuch as obey him. Thou ſhalt retain whom of thy wives thou ſhalt deſire to retain, and ſhall repudiate ſuch as thou ſhalt deſire to repudiate, and ſhalt lie with them that ſhall pleaſe thee; it is better that thou repudiate them without offending God, than to ſee them male-contented, and ſad; they ſhall be contented with the good that thou ſhalt do to them, in divorcing them; God knoweth what is in your hearts, he is Omniſcient, and moſt merciful. It is not lawful for thee to know other Women than thine own, it is not lawful for thee to exchange them, although the beauty of others pleaſe thee, except thy ſlaves; God regardeth all. O ye that believe! enter not into the houſes of the Prophet without permiſſion, except at the hour of repaſt, and that by chance, and without deſign; if ye are invited, enter with freedom; when ye ſhall have taken your repaſt, depart out of the Houſe, and tarry not to diſcourſe one with another, this moleſteth the Prophet, he is aſhamed to bid you be gone, but God is not aſhamed to tell you the truth. The wives of the Prophet ſhall have the face covered when ye ſhall ſpeak unto them, this better reſented of purity both in them and in you, You ought not to importune the Prophet of God, neither to know his wives; this would be a moſt enormous ſin; if ye conceal any deſign, or diſcover it, know that God knoweth all. They ſhall not offend God in ſuffering themſelves to be ſeen of their fathers, their Children, their Brethren, their Nephews, their Maid-ſervants, and their She-ſlaves, they ſhall fear God, he ſeeth all; God and the Angels * pray for the Prophet. O ye that believe! pray for the Prophet, and obey him: He that ſhall diſpleaſe God and his Prophet, ſhall be accurſed in this World, and ſhall feel rigorous pains in the other; ſuch as do injury without reaſon, to thoſe (men and women) that believe in God, commit an exceeding great ſin. O Prophet! ſpeak to thy wives, and thy daughters, and the wives of True believers, that they cover themſelves with vails, they ſhall be more honoured, and ſhall receive no diſpleaſure, God is gracious and merciful. If the wicked, the whoremongers, and thoſe of Medina, that are weak in their Faith, quit not their Impiety, I will give thee abſolute power over them, and few among them will reſpect thee; but take thou them, and ſlay them whereſoever thou ſhalt meet them, God ſo commanded thoſe that were before thee; thou ſhalt find no alteration in the Law of God: The People will enquire of thee, when ſhall be the Day of Judgment? Say unto them, That God alone knoweth it, and thou knoweſt not if it ſhall be very ſpeedily; but that God hath prepared for Infidels an exceeding great Fire, wherein they ſhall burn eternally, they ſhall find no protection, they ſhall be caſt headlong into the Fire, and ſhall ſay, Would to God we had obeyed his Divine Majeſty, and the Prophet his Apoſtle; they ſhall ſay, Lord, we obeyed our Maſters and Superiors, they ſeduced us from the right way; Lord, chaſtiſe them doubly, and give them thy curſe. O ye that believe! be not like them that diſpleaſed Moſes, he was innocent of the crimes that they laid upon him, he was inſpired of God; fear God, and ſpeak with civility, your works ſhall be acceptable to him, and he ſhall pardon your ſins; he that ſhall obey God, and his Apoſtle, ſhall be happy; fidelity and obedience are pleaſing to him in Heaven and in Earth, and upon the Mountains. Such as depart far [from him] as did Adam, do injury to themſelves, and are ignorant, he ſhall chaſtiſe thoſe (men and women) that ſhall be diſobedient and impious; he will give his grace to thoſe (men and women) that ſhall believe in his Law, he is gracious and merciful to them that obey him.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful. Praiſed be God, whatſoever is in Heaven, and in the Earth, appertaineth to him; praiſe is due unto him, he is moſt Wiſe and Omniſcient: he knoweth whatſoever entreth into the Earth, and cometh out of it, whatſoever aſcendeth to Heaven, and deſcendeth, he is gracious and merciful to his creatures. The wicked demand if they ſhall ſee the Day of Judgment; ſay unto them, yes, and that thy Lord knoweth the time; he knoweth what is paſt, preſent and future, and all that is in Heaven and in the Earth, even to the weight of an Atome; what is yet leſs, and what is yet greater than an Atome, is written in a Book that diſcovereth every thing; he ſhall reward the True believers that have done good works; he ſhall give them his Mercy, and enrich them with with precious treaſures: Such as have endeavoured to ſuppreſs his Law, ſhall feel the effects of his indignation. They that underſtand the Scripture, know that God hath taught thee the very truth, to guide the People into the right way, into the path of honour and vertue; but the wicked ſaid among them, will ye believe a man, who affirmeth, that after your death ye ſhall riſe again, and be new creatures? He lyeth impudently, he is poſſeſſed of the Devil. Certainly they that believe not in the Reſurrection, are in an exceeding great error, and ſhall ſuffer moſt grievous pains; ſee they not what is above, and what is below them? Conſider they not the Heaven and the Earth? If I will, I can render it barren, and cauſe a piece of the Heaven to fall upon them for a ſign of my Omnipotency. We gave our grace to David, and ſpake to the Mountains, Birds, and Metals with him, to praiſe me; we commanded him to make Cuiraſſes, and Iron was ſoft in his hand, as Wax. O Lineage of David! be not ingrateful, I ſee whatſoever ye do. We made the Winds ſubject to Solomon, he commanded them Evening and Morning, from the Eaſt to the Weſt; we gave him a Fountain, and a Brook of diſſolved Braſs; the Devils, through our permiſſion, wrought it to his mind, and we puniſhed in the Fire of Hell ſuch as refuſed to obey him. They built for him lofty Palaces, and * ſpacious houſes; they formed Baſons for Water Channels, and Pools: We ſaid unto him, O Lineage of David! be not ingrateful for my graces, for that few perſons do acknowledg [them.] When he dyed, through our Commandment, nothing diſcovered his death to the Devils, but the worms that had eaten the end of his ſtaff whereon he leaned; when the Devils ſaw him fall, they perceived, that had they known the future, and what was hid from them, they ſhould not have laboured ſo long a time in his Service. The Inhabitants of Saba have a mark of my Omnipotency in their Country, viz. two Gardens, the one on the North ſide, and the other towards the South, (it was ſaid unto them) eat of the good things that your Lord hath given you, and return him thanks; their Country is delicious, God hath been merciful towards them, nevertheleſs they are ingrateful and impious; we ſent the River of Arem that overflowed their Gardens; we changed them into two Gardens of Thorns of Cyprus, and a little * Tamarinde; thus did we puniſh them, becauſe of their impiety. We eſtabliſhed a way with many Cities, for facility of commerce among them, and the City which we bleſſed; and ſpake unto the People to follow that way Night and Day with ſafety, and without fear: They ſaid, God deſtroyeth us through the length of this way; they returned to their impiety, and we diſperſed them upon the Earth, to ſerve for example to Poſterity, and inſtruction to ſuch as perſevere in my Law, and acknowledg my graces. The Devil cauſed them to believe his Opinion, they followed him, except ſome of the True believers that were among them; he had no power over them, but to know them that believed in the Reſurrection, and ſuch as doubt. Thy Lord obſerveth and regardeth all. Say unto them, invoke your Idols, they have not power of the bigneſs of an Atome, neither in Heaven, nor Earth, God hath no Companion, they ſhall find none to protect them at the Day of Judgment, none ſhall intercede for them without the permiſſion of his Divine Majeſty; if they receive any relaxation in their fear, they enquire of each other what God ſpake, and anſwer, that he ſpake the truth; that he is moſt high and moſt mighty; ſay unto them, who enricheth you with the good things of Heaven and Earth? They will ſay that it is God. Say unto them, Who of you, or of us followeth the right way? Or who of you, or of us is ſeduced? Enquire not after our ſins, we are not curious to know what ye do, God ſhall aſſemble us at the Day of Judgment, and ſhall judg our differences with equity, he is an exceeding great Judg; ſay unto them, Let us ſee the Idols that ye have worſhipped; certainly there is but One God, Omnipotent and Wiſe. We have not ſent thee but to declare to men the joys of Paradiſe, and to preach to them the pains of Hell, but the greateſt part knoweth it not; they ask in what time they ſhall ſee the puniſhment that is preached to them; and if thou ſpeakeſt the truth; ſay unto them, when the time thereof is come, ye ſhall not be able to retard, or advance an hour: They have ſaid, That they will not believe in the Alcoran, but thou ſhalt ſee them one day aſſembled in the preſence of thy Lord, thou ſhalt ſee that they ſhall accuſe one another; the Poor ſhall ſay unto the Rich, you have hindred us to obey the Commandments of God; they ſhall anſwer, have we ſeduced you from the way that was taught you? On the contrary, you were wicked and malicious: They ſhall ſay, on the contrary, you employed Night and Day your Artifices to render us ingrateful for the graces of God, and to induce us to believe that he hath Companions equal to him; they ſhall repent of their ſins, when they ſhall ſee their puniſhment; we will lay Chains upon their Necks, and they ſhall be chaſtiſed after their demerits. The chief Inhabitants of the Cities, ſaid to the Prophets that we ſent to them to preach the torments of Hell, that they believe not their words. We have (ſaid they) more riches, and more Children than thoſe that believe in their diſcourſe; we ſhall not be damned, as they affirm; ſay unto them, my Lord giveth and taketh away Riches as ſeemeth good to him, but the greateſt part of the People know it not; your wealth and your children ſhall not give you acceſs to God; ſuch as ſhall perform good works, ſhall be rewarded, and ſhall live eternally in the delights of Paradiſe; they that ſhall endeavour to ſuppreſs our Law, ſhall be caſt headlong into the Fire of Hell: Say unto them, My Lord giveth, and taketh away Wealth as to him ſeemeth good; he maketh vain the alms which ye ſhall give, if ye obſerve not his Law; he is the Rich of the Rich: Be thou mindful of the day, when I ſhall aſſemble the Idolaters, and ſhall ſay to the Angels, Behold them who have adored you; they ſhall ſay, praiſed be God, thou alone art our maſter and protector; they adored not us, they worſhipped the Devil; the greateſt part of them believed in his word, this day they are not able to benefit, or hurt one another; they will ſay to the unjuſt, taſte the torments of Hell Fire, which ye would not believe. They ſaid when thou didſt preach unto them our Commandments, this man would hinder us to worſhip the gods of our fathers, he is a Blaſphemer. They have ſaid, That the Alcoran is but Sorcery and Magick, and read not the books that we have ſent unto them. Their predeceſſors did like them; they traduced our Apoſtles, and hindred them to preach the tenth part of what we had inſpired into them; they traduced them, but how were they chaſtiſed? Say unto them, I preach to you to pray to God two by two, or alone, or in company; ye ſhall know one day, that your friend Mahomet is not poſſeſſed of the Devil, and that he preacheth to you the pains of Hell; I require no reward of you for mine exhortations, God ſhall reward ward me, he ſeeth all. Say unto them, God teacheth his Prophet the Truth, and what is to come; the truth appeared, and falſhood was diſcovered, and the lyars were deprived of his mercy; if I wilfully go aſtray, or if I act what God hath enjoyned me, this ſhall be for my Soul, God heareth, and is preſent at all things. Thou ſhalt ſee the Infidels filled with fear, and affrighted when they ſhall come out of their ſepulchres; they ſhall not eſcape the puniſhment of their incredulity; they ſhall then ſay, That they believe in the Alcoran, but I will ſhew to them from far the Law which they have deſpiſed in the World; they ſhall be precipitated with their ignorance, into a place remote from mercy and pardon, They ſhall be ſeparated from the True believers, becauſe they have doubted the Commandments of the Law of God.

CHAP. XXXV.

The Chapter of the Creator, containing Forty and five Verſes, written at Mecca.

This Chapter is intituled the Chapter of Angels, in the Book Teſſir anf Joahir, which treateth of the Expoſition of the Alcoran in Turkiſh.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful. Praiſe be to God, Creator of Heaven and Earth, who created the Angels, the Meſſengers of his Commandments; they have wings, two, three, and four; he maketh of his Creature what ſeemeth good to him, he is Omnipotent; none can comprehend the Grace that he hath given to his People, it is incomprehenſible, he is Omnipotent and moſt Wiſe. Oh People! remember the grace of God, Is there a Creator beſide him? He enricheth you with the riches of Heaven and Earth, there is no God beſide him. How can the wicked Blaſphem againſt his Divine Majeſty? If they traduce thee, certainly they traduced the Prophets that were ſent before thee; they ſhall be one day aſſembled before God to be judged. Oh ye People! what God hath promiſed is infallible; glory not in the wealth of the Earth, beware leſt the Devil ſeduce you, and render you proud, becauſe that God doth a while defer the puniſhment of your crimes. The Devil is your Enemy, be ye his Enemies, he leadeth them that follow him into the Fire of Hell, where they ſhall ſuffer the rigors of infinite pains; their ſins ſhall be remitted that believe in God, and do good works: Oftentimes, he that delighteth in what he doth, doth believeth he doth well; God miſleadeth and guideth whom it pleaſeth him; be not unwilling to depart from the wicked, God knoweth all their actions. He ſendeth the Winds that drive the Clouds unto barren and drie places, to refreſh the Earth, and cauſe it to revive after its death; in like manner will he raiſe again the Dead. He that affecteth greatneſs, ſhall find in God all manner of greatneſs; good ſpeeches aſcend even to his divine Majeſty, and our good works are acceptable to him. Such as conſpire againſt the Prophet, ſhall endure great torments, and their conſpiracy become vain and unprofitable. God hath created you of duſt and mire, he created you men and women; the Woman neither conceiveth, nor bringeth forth, but through his permiſſion; no man can either prolong or ſhorten his life, but following what is written in the Book [kept in Heaven] theſe things are eaſie to God. Thoſe two Seas are not like to Euphrates, whoſe water is ſweet, and pleaſant to drink; the Water of the Sea is cold, and ſalt, nevertheleſs ye eat of the Fiſh of the one, and the other; Ye Fiſh out of the Sea, Gems to adorn you; you ſee the Ship to run upon the Waters, and cleave the waves, for the advantage of your commerce, peradventure you will return thanks to God for his graces. He cauſeth the Night to enter into the Day, and the Day into the Night; he created the Sun and the Moon, that run in the Heaven till the Day appointed. That God who created theſe things, is your Lord, the Empire of the World is his, the Idols that ye worſhip have no more power than the skin of an Almand; if ye invoke them, they ſhall not hear you, they ſhall deny you at the Day of Judgment, and are not of power to let you know either the joys of Paradiſe, or the torments of Hell. Oh ye People! ye are poor and neceſſitous, ye have need of Gods aſſiſtance, and God hath no want of you; praiſe is due to him in every place; he will deſtroy you, if it ſeem good to him, and create another new People in your place; none ſhall bear the burden of another, be it never ſo light or heavy, no, not when they are near of kin. Preach thou the torments of Hell to ſuch as fear their Lord, without ſeeing him, and make their prayers at the time appointed. He that taketh heed of offending him, laboureth for himſelf; all the World ſhall be one day aſſembled before him to be judged; the blind are not like to ſuch as ſee clear; darkneſs is not like to light; the ſhade and coolneſs are not like to the heat of the Sun; the Living are not like the Dead; God cauſeth himſelf to be underſtood of whom he pleaſeth; thou canſt not make the Commandments of God to be underſtood by them that are in their Sepulchers; we have ſent only to preach the pains of Hell, and the joys of Paradiſe, there is no place in the World where they have not been preached; if the Infidels traduce thee, their predeceſſors likewiſe traduced them whom we ſent heretofore, to preach to them the Myſteries of Faith, and the Scriptures; they were ſurpriſed in their ſins, were rigorouſly chaſtiſed. Seeſt thou not how thy Lord cauſed Rain to fall from Heaven, to make the Earth produce many fruits of ſundry ſorts, and to nouriſh in the Mountains the Goats, the Stags, and Hinds? To nouriſh the Crows and Ravens, the men, and beaſt of divers kinds and form? God gratifieth his Creatures that acknowledg his benefits; he is Omnipotent and merciful. They who devoutly read the Book of God, who make their prayers at the time appointed, and beſtow in pious works, ſecretly or publickly, part of the wealth that we have given them, have hope of a recompence that ſhall never periſh; God ſhall recompence and augment his graces upon them; he is merciful towards the good, and accepteth the acknowledgment of his graces. The Book that we have ſent thee containeth the Truth, it confirmeth the ancient Scriptures, God knoweth and ſeeth all things. We have given the underſtanding of the Alcoran to ſuch as we have choſen among our creatures; there be ſome who have ill diſcharged what we have taught them; ſome have performed what was enjoyned them, and others have taught

taught it with affection and diligence through Gods permiſſion. This is a great grace, they ſhall enter into the Garden of Eden, where they ſhall remain eternally; they ſhall be adorned with Collars of Gold, enriched with precious ſtones, they ſhall be cloathed with fine ſilk, and ſhall ſay, praiſed be God, who hath delivered us from affliction, he is moſt merciful, and accepteth the thanks of his creatures; ſuch as through his ſpecial grace ſhall enjoy the houſe of eternity, ſhall be free from all pain, and the Infidels ſhall be caſt headlong into the fire of Hell. They ſhall not die in thoſe torments, and their torture ſhall never be aſſwaged; thus ſhall the wicked be chaſtiſed, they ſhall in vain implore ſuccour of God, and ſay, Lord deliver us from theſe pains, we will do better than we have done heretofore; I will no more prolong your life on Earth, I have ſent you my Prophets and Apoſtles, They preached unto you my Commandments, you would not hear them, taſte now the pains of Hell, which ye have merited, the wicked ſhall this day be deprived of protection. Certainly God knoweth whatſoever is in Heaven and Earth, he knoweth all that is in the hearts of men. He it is that hath made you to multiply on Earth, impiety ſhall riſe againſt the impious, it ſhall render them abominable before God, and put them into the number of the damned: Say unto them, have ye well conſidered the Idols that ye have worſhipped? Tell me, What have they created on Earth? Were they Gods companions in the Creation of the Heavens? Hath God ſent to them a Book, and reaſons, to authorize their impiety? Certainly the wicked inſtruct one another only in pride and arrogancy; God ſuſtaineth the Heavens and the Earth, he alone is able to ſuſtain them, he is gracious and merciful. The wicked ſwore to fight for the encreaſe of the faith, if there ſhould come to them a Preacher to inſtruct them; and when he came, they augmented their wickedneſs, became proud in the Earth, and conſpired againſt the true believers; their conſpiracy fell upon themſelves, and they can expect none other things than what was ordained againſt their predeceſſors, the Law of God admitteth none alteration. Conſider they not what was the end of their Predeceſſors? who were more wealthy and powerful than they? Nothing is impoſſible to God, he knoweth all things, and is omnipotent. Should God puniſh the people when they offend him, he ſhould leave no living creature on the Earth, he deferreth the chaſtiſement of the wicked until the time appointed; when their time ſhall be come, he will puniſh them according to their demerits, he ſeeth all.

CHAP. XXXVI.

The Chapter intituled, O Man, containing fourſcore and eight Verſes, written at Mecca.

Reader, the Mahometans have intituled this Chapter with two Letters of the Arabique Alphabet, i. s. The Bedaoi ſaith, that i ſignifieth ia, that is to ſay O particula vocativa, and s, is an abreviation, that ſignifieth inſan, [i.e.] Man, and that the Angel ſpeaking to Mahomet, began this Chapter in this manner; O man! I ſwear by the Alcoran, &c. See Teſſir, Kitab el tenoir.

IN the name of God, gracious and merciful. Oh man! I ſwear by the Alcoran, full of Doctrine, that thou art a Prophet, ſent to teach the people the right way. This Book was ſent by the Omnipotent and merciful, that thou maiſt inſtruct men in that which was not taught their Predeceſſors: Certainly, what was ſaid is true, viz. That the greateſt part of them is incredulous; We will put a chain upon their neck and bind their hands to the very chin; they ſhall lift up the head to complain, but we will place before and behind them a great obſtacle, we will cover their ſight with darkneſs, and they ſhall not ſee a jot. Miſery is upon them; whether thou doſt reprove, or not reprove them, they ſhall not be converted. If thou preacheſt to them that believe in the Alcoran, and to ſuch as believe in what they have ſeen, proclaim to them a general pardon of their ſins, and a very great reward. I make the dead to ariſe again, and write exactly in a Book the good and the evil that men commit. Relate to them the Parable of thoſe of the City, whither thy Lord ſent his Prophets; we ſent unto them two Prophets, they ſlandered both of them; we ſuccored them by a third; they all three ſaid to the Inhabitants of this City, we are ſent from God to preach to you his Commandments. They anſwered, ye are but men like us, God hath not ſent us a ſign to make you known, ye are lyars. They ſaid, certainly God knoweth that he ſent us to you; we are obliged only to preach to you his Commandments; They anſwered, would ye make us Infidels like your ſelves? If ye end not this diſcourſe, we will ſtone you, and make you to ſuffer heavy torments. They ſaid, be your evil with you, Who hath heretofore ſo ill inſtructed you? Certainly you are wicked: Then a man came running from the utmoſt part of the City, who ſaid unto them, Oh people! obey the Apoſtles of God, obey them that require no reward from you for the pains which they take in teaching you, and who are in the right way. Wherefore ſhall not I worſhip him that created me, and before whom ye all ſhall be aſſembled to be judged? Will ye worſhip another beſide him? If it be his will to chaſtiſe me, your Idols cannot ſave me, I ſhould be extremely erroneous, ſhould I believe in your Gods; hear and underſtand what I ſay unto you. [Nevertheleſs they ſlew him] and ſaid unto him, Go, enter into Paradiſe; He ſaid, in dying, would to God this people knew the graces that his Divine Majeſty hath conferred on me, he placed me in the number of the bleſſed: After his death we did not ſend Angels from Heaven to chaſtiſe the wicked; I will ſend them but once to deſtroy them; they ſhall one day be dumb, for ſhame that they have not followed the True-believers, and of being mocked by them that I ſent to preach unto them my Commandments: Will they not conſider how much people we have deſtroyed in times paſt, who are not returned, and that ſhall be one day aſſembled before me to be judged? The Earth, dry, dead, and barren, as a ſign of my omnipotency for the wicked; we made it revive, and became green again, and to bring forth fruits, with which they were ſatiate; we there created Gardens, Date-trees, and Vines, we cauſed Fountains to flow; they eat of the fruits which are not the works of their hands; will they not acknowledg the works of their Lord? Praiſe is due to him that created the male and the female of all Plants that the Earth produceth, who created man and woman, and many other things, of which they have no knowledg. It is a ſign of my omnipotency, to ſeparate the day from the night, and to make the Sun to run to his appointed place. We have appointed to the Moon her Signs, ſhe goeth and cometh always through her old way; the Sun neither haſteneth, nor retardeth his courſe at any time, neither doth joyn himſelf by night to the Moon; the night cometh not until the end of the day. And all, to wit, the Moon, the Sun, and the Stars exalt my glory in the Heaven: It is a mark of mine omnipotency, to have born their fathers upon the waters in the Ark, and to have given them veſſels like the Ark to bear them; had it pleaſed me, I had cauſed them to be drowned, without ſuccor and ſalvation; I ſaved them through my ſpecial grace, until the time appointed. The wicked deſpiſe the ſigns of Gods omnipotency, and ſcoffed, when they were required to fear the wrath of his Divine Majeſty, preſent, and to come, and that their iniquities ſhall be forgiven them. When it was ſaid unto them, Give alms of the wealth that God hath given you, they anſwered, ſhall I give him to eat, to whom God ſhall give bread when it ſhall pleaſe him? They are in a very great error. They will enquire of you when the day of Judgment ſhall be; and if ye believe it, tell them that they muſt expect but one ſole voice, that ſhall ſurprize them, they ſhall quarrel, they ſhall not be able to make their Teſtament, neither return to ſee their Parents; in the end they ſhall go out of their Sepulchres, and preſent themſelves before God, when the Trumpet ſhall ſound: Then ſhall they ſay, we are moſt miſerable, to have departed from our graves, behold what God hath promiſed us! The Prophets ſpake to us the Truth, viz. That the world ought to expect but one voice: This day ſhall all men be aſſembled before their Lord, no injuſtice ſhall be done to any perſon, and every one ſhall be rewarded, and chaſtiſed after his works: Such as ſhall go into Paradiſe, ſhall be in exceeding great repoſe, with all manner of contentment, they and their wives ſhall be ſafe from all evils, lying on delicious beds, they ſhall have all ſorts of fruits, and whatſoever they ſhall deſire, they ſhall be ſaluted on the behalf of the Lord, gracious and merciful. God ſhall ſay to the wicked at the day of Judgment; Depart ye this day from the company of the good; did I not forbid you to worſhip the Devil, your open enemy, but to worſhip me alone, and that it was the right way? Did I not tell you that the Devil ſeduced a multitude of the people? Ye would not believe it, behold Hell, that is prepared for you, through your incredulity. I will ſhut their mouth, their hand ſhall ſpeak, and their feet ſhall be witneſſes of their crimes: If we will, we can make the Infidels blind, they ſhall find no way, they ſhall not be able to go or come, and ſhall be ſuccoured of none; had it been our pleaſure we could have transformed them in their houſes, and they had not been able to go forth; I will caſt their head againſt the ground, and will render them infamous, whoſe life I ſhall prolong, and they ſhall not know their errors. We have not made them to underſtand the Myſteries of the Alcoran, but that was not neceſſary; it is but to preach to the living, who comprehend what is ſpoken to them; it is moſt true, that the wicked ſhall be puniſhed: See they not that we alone have created all the Beaſts of the Earth, over which they command? We have made them ſubject to them: Some ſerve them to ride on, and others for their nouriſhment, will they be ingrateful? Nevertheleſs they have worſhipped Idols, they adored what could not deliver them from the pains of Hell. Afflict not thy ſelf at their diſcourſe; I know whatſoever they ſay, and all that they keep ſecret in their ſouls: Doth not man conſider that we created him of duſt? And that he is too arrogant? God hath taught us how he formed his Creatures, nevertheleſs the wicked have ſaid, who is he that can give life to bones that are rotten? Say unto them, he it is that created you at firſt, and that knoweth what he created; he maketh fire to come out of the green woods which ye burn, and created the Heaven and the Earth; cannot he create others creatures like unto you? Yes, without doubt, he createth what pleaſeth him, he knoweth all things; when he willeth any thing, he ſaith, Be thou, and it is; praiſed be he, to whom all things appertain, and before whom you all ſhall return [to be judged.]

CHAP. XXXVII.

The Chapter of Orders, containing Fourſcore Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the name of God, gracious and merciful. I ſwear by the Orders of Angels that worſhip God, and attend his commands, by them that hinder men to obey the Devil, and by them that read and meditate on the Alcoran, that your God is one ſole God, Lord of the Heaven, and the Earth, and of all that is between them, he is Lord of the Weſt, and of the Eaſt. We adorned the Heaven and the Earth with Planets, and have kept them ſafe from the malice of the Devils; they cannot hear what is ſpoken in the Firmament, they are ſhamefully driven away on all ſides, and ſhall be eternally tormented; if they hear any thing ſpoken, they hear it greedily, and follow [it] ſpeedily, but the ſhining Planet purſueth them, [and detecteth their malice.] The wicked have demanded if we created any thing more illuſtrious than they: Certainly we created them all of the duſt of the Earth: Thou art amazed at their blaſphemies, they deride thy amazement, and ſhall never be converted. When they ſhall ſee Miracles, they ſhall ſcoff, and ſay, that it is but evident Magick to believe that they ſhall dye, and after, being earth, bones, and duſt, they ſhall riſe again with their fathers and predeceſſors: Say unto them, that they ſhall riſe again, and that they are ſeduced from the right way; that the world ſhall be but once deſtroyed, and they ſhall ſee what will befall them at the day of Judgment: They ſhall that day ſay they are wretched, and the Angel ſhall ſay unto them, behold the day of Judgment, behold the day that the godly ſhall be ſeparated from the wicked; behold the day which ye would not believe: It ſhall be ſaid to the Angels, gather them together, aſſemble their wives, and their Idols, put them into the way of Hell, and ſtay them, to give account of their deportments, and why their Idols do not ſuccour them. Certainly they ſhall deſire to be in the number of them that have obeyed Gods Commandments. They ſhall quarrel among them, and ſhall ſay, it is you that have ſeduced us from the right way, through your Oaths; ye ſwore that ye followed the Law of God, and obſerved his Commandments: They ſhall anſwer on the contrary, We have no power over you, you your ſelves were in manifeſt error, the word of God ſhall be accompliſhed againſt us, and we ſhall for company ſuffer the tormens of Hell; if we ſeduced you, we were likewiſe ſeduced, and we ſhall this day be your companions in puniſhment. That day ſhall the wicked be in this manner afflicted: they become inſolent on earth, when it is told them there is but one God, and ſay, ſhall we abandon our gods for a fooliſh and lying Poet? on the contrary, he teacheth you the truth, as did the Prophets that were before him; ye ſhall be chaſtiſed, and intreated according to your demerits. Such as ſhall obey Gods Commandments, ſhall have a place of ſafety wherein to reſt, with all ſorts of fruits, in pleaſant gardens, ſitting orderly on delicious beds, with glaſſes full of a drink, pleaſing to the taſte, which ſhall not make them drunk. Their wives white as freſh Eggs, ſhall not caſt an eye upon any but upon them; they ſhall talk together, and one among them ſhall ſay, I had on earth a companion, who asked me if I believed in the Reſurrection; and if after being reduced to earth, bones, and duſt, we ſhall riſe again? come with me, let us go ſee what he doth; he ſhall ſee him in the bottom of Hell, and ſhall ſay unto him, by God, it wanted little but that thou hadſt ſeduced me, without the grace of God I had been damned, as thou art, we are not in the number of the dead, we ſhall not ſuffer any pain; on the contrary, we are in exceeding great happineſs; thus are the righteous rewarded; who are the more happy? they who are in our felicity, or ſuch as are near to Zacon, the tree of hell? This tree cometh out of the bottom of hell, it riſeth high, and the branches themſelves reſemble the heads of Devils; the damned ſhall eat of the fruit thereof, they ſhall drink boiling water, and Hell ſhall be the place of their habitation; their fathers were Infidels, they followed their footſteps, and the way of them that were ſeduced before them; we ſent unto them Preachers, whom they refuſed to hear, but conſider what is the end of the righteous, and that of the wicked. We ſaved Noah, and gave grace to ſuch as obeyed him; we delivered him with his family from a great danger, and perpetuated his progeny; he ſhall be praiſed of all them that ſhall come after him, becauſe we gave him our bleſſing; thus do I recompence the righteous, he was in the number of them that obeyed my Commandments; we ſaved him, and them that followed him, and drowned the Infidels. Remember Abraham, God gave him an heart free from impiety and malice; he ſaid to his father and his people, wherefore worſhip ye falſe gods inſtead of the true God? think ye to eſcape the puniſhment of your crimes? Then he had a viſion in heaven, and ſaid, I am ſick of your Idolatry, they departed from him with purpoſe to be converted, and empty the Temples of Idols of their Treaſures; he ſaid to the Idols, wherefore eat ye not the ſacrifices that are before you? wherefore ſpeak ye not? and gave them a great blow with his right hand: the people came together with wrath, becauſe he had ſtricken their gods; he ſaid unto them, Will ye worſhip the works of your hands? know ye not that it is God that created you? then they ſaid among them, let us build a great pile, and put fire to it, and caſt Abraham into the fire; they conſpired againſt him, but we rendred them aſhamed and confounded. Abraham ſaid unto them, I go towards my Lord, he ſhall guide me into the way of ſalvation; Lord, give me a ſon that may be in the number of the righteous; we declared to him that he ſhould have a ſon, exceeding wiſe, when he arrived to years of diſcretion; he ſaid unto him, my ſon, I dreamed this night that I muſt ſacrifice thee, what wilt thou that I do? he replied, my father, do what is commanded you, ye ſhall find me full of patience; when his father laid him on the ground, and put the knife nigh unto his throat; we ſaid unto him, O Abraham! it is enough, thou haſt ſatisfied thy dream; thus do I intreat the righteous, thus were we wont to prove them. We redeemed his ſon with a fair Ram; he ſhall be praiſed of poſterity, and thoſe that ſhall come after him, ſhall bleſs his memory. Thus do I reward the righteous, he was in the number of them that obey my Commandments. We declared to him that he ſhould have a ſon called Iſaac, from whom ſhould iſſue many believers, and unbelievers. Certainly we gave our grace to Moſes and Aaron; we delivered them with their followers from an evident peril, we protected them, and they were in the number of the victorious; we gave them the Book full of light, and conducted them into the right way; they ſhall be praiſed in ages to come, and poſterity ſhall bleſs their memory. Thus do I recompence the righteous, they were in the number of them that obeyed my Commandments: Elias is in the number of my Prophets and Apoſtles; he ſaid unto the people, wherefore fear ye not God? wherefore worſhip ye the Idol Balan, and forſake the Creator of the world? God is your Lord, and the Lord of your predeceſſors; they traduced him, and were condemned to the fire of hell, except ſuch among them as obeyed my Commandments. We left his memory happy to poſterity; thus I reward the righteous; he was in the number of them that obeyed my Commandments. Lot was in the number of my Prophets and Apoſtles: Remember thou, how we delivered him and his family from evident peril, except his wife, who remained among them that were chaſtiſed; having ſaved him, we deſtroyed the wicked; they ſaw in the morning the footſteps of the ruin that befell them the night before; will ye not underſtand this miracle? Jonas was in the number of the Prophets. Remember thou, that he fled in a Ship, and was the cauſe of evil to the Sailors, he was ſwallowed of a Whale; had he not repented of his fault, he ſhould have continued in the belly of that Fiſh until the day of Judgment; we caſt him on the ſhore extremely feeble, we covered him with leaves of Filbert, and ſent him to preach to more than an hundred thouſand perſons, that we reconverted, whoſe deceaſe we deferred until the time appointed. The Infidels have demanded if thy Lord hath daughters, as they have ſons? did we create the Angels male and female in their preſence? They lye, when they ſay, that God hath a ſon; hath he deſired to have daughters rather than ſons? how can you thus blaſpheme? Conſider ye not that he is God alone, without children? have ye any reaſon or authority to ſpeak in this manner? bring your arguments, produce your reaſon, if ye are true. The Infidels have ſaid, that the Angels were of the lineage of God, but the Angels well know that the Infidels ſhall be damned, becauſe of their blaſphemies. Praiſed be God, he hath neither ſon nor daughter, other than the righteous that worſhip him, and obey his Commandments. You, with your Idols cannot eſcape the puniſhment of your ſins, ye ſhall be condemned to the fire of hell. There is none among the Angels that knoweth not his place, and his order in Paradiſe, to praiſe and worſhip his Divine Majeſty. If the Infidels ſay, we obſerve the Religion of our Predeceſſors, we are in the right way; Say unto them, that if they believe not in the Alcoran, they ſhall in fine know their incredulity. We have promiſed protection to believers, and Prophets, they ſhall be protected and victorious; depart for a time from the wicked, conſider how God puniſheth them, they ſhall feel the puniſhment

of their impiety; will they caſt themſelves headlong into the torments of hell? aſſuredly they will be aſtoniſhed when they ſhall feel them; depart from their company, and conſider that they ſhall not be able to eſcape the puniſhment of their crimes. Praiſe thy Lord, the Lord of power and greatneſs, above the wicked; ſalvation be to the Prophets, and eternal praiſe to the God of the Univerſe.

CHAP. XXXVIII.

The Chapter of Truth, containing fourſcore and eight Verſes, written at Mecca.

Reader, Mahomet intituled this Chapter with the Letter named in the Arabique Alphabet, Sſad, which ſignifieth in this place, Sſidk, that is to ſay, Truth. See the Gloſs of Gelaldin, Kitab el tenoir. They have intituled it the Chapter of Truth.

IN the name of God, gracious and merciful. I ſwear by the Alcoran, that this Book teacheth the way of Salvation; nevertheleſs, the Infidels reſiſt the Faith, and are among themſelves of a different opinion. How many have we deſtroyed in times paſt, that were like unto them? They cried, and required ſuccors, but they were no longer to be ſuccored. The Infidels wonder, that a man like themſelves ſhould be ſent to inſtruct them: they ſay, That he is a Magician, and a liyar, to preach one ſole God. It is a ſtrange thing! Their Doctors forſook their Aſſemblies, they went to preach through the City, and ſaid, Perſiſt to adore your Gods; we abjure the belief of the unity of God, the laſt Sect did not preach it; it is an evident lye. Was Mahomet choſen among us to receive alone the Alcoran deſcended from Heaven? Certainly they doubt the Alcoran, they ſhall know the truth, when they ſhall be in the fire of Hell. Have they in their power the Treaſures of the mercy of thy Lord, omnipotent and bountiful? Poſſeſs they the Kingdom of the Heavens and Earth, and whatſoever is betwixt them? If it be ſo, let them aſcend into Heaven with their forces; aſſuredly, they ſhall be ſhamefully beaten in all places. The wicked heretofore defamed Noah, Aad, Pharoah, the maker of Charme, and Temod, the Inhabitants of the City of Lot.; thoſe that dwelt in the Foreſt, and their companions, traduced the Prophets, and were puniſhed after their demerits; nevertheleſs, the Infidels conſider not that they ſhall be chaſtiſed, when the trumpet ſhall ſound at the day of Judgment, and that they ſhall no more return on earth to be converted. They ſay in ſcorn, Lord give us to ſee the Book of the Accompt of our ſins, before the day of Judgment. Perſevere, and be patient, be not troubled at their diſcourſe, and call to mind our ſervant David, ſtout and zealous in my Law; the Mountains and the Birds praiſed me with him; they aſſembled in his preſence, and obeyed him; we gave force to his reign, and endued him with knowledg and eloquence. Haſt thou learnt David's quarrel, when they hindred him to enter into the Temple? and how he feared his enemies? When they entred towards him, they ſaid unto him, Be not afraid, we have a diſpute among us, judg our difference with equity, and teach us the right way. This man is my brother, he hath fourſcore and nineteen ſheep: I had but one, which he hath raviſhed from me, becauſe he was ſtronger than I. David ſaid, He hath done thee wrong, art thou troubled for one Ew? The greateſt part of men aroſe againſt their neighbour, except ſuch as believe in the Law of God, and obſerve his Commandments, which are few in number. Then David knew that we had tried him, he implored pardon of his ſin, he humbled himſelf, worſhipped us, and was converted. We gave him pardon of his fault, we drew him near unto us, and lodged him in a place of content. I ſaid unto him, O David! we have eſtabliſhed thee on Earth, to determine the differences that ſhall ariſe among the people, follow not thine own appetite, it will ſeduce thee from the way of Salvation; ſuch as ſhall err from my Law, ſhall ſuffer grievous pains at the day of Judgment. We have not in vain created the Heaven, and the Earth, as the wicked affirm; miſery ſhall befal them, they ſhall be caſt headlong and burnt in the fire of Hell. Shall I alike entreat the believers, and unbelievers? the righteous and the wicked? This Book! we have ſent it to thee, and bleſſed it, to the end the people may meditate the myſteries thereof; and the wiſe reap advantage for their ſalvation. We gave Solomon to our ſervant David, he was extreamly zealous in our ſervice. Remember that horſes, ready and vigorous, were preſented to him about evening; that he forgot to make his prayer at the hour of Veſpers; and ſaid, What? Have I preferred the love of the wealth of the Earth, to the remembrance of God, even until the Sunſet? He cauſed them to be led back again, and ſacrificed ſome of them (for expiation of his fault.) He cauſed their legs and necks to be cut off. We tried Solomon, we cauſed a ſuppoſititious perſon to ſit on his Throne, and afterwards reſtored him to his dominions. He ſaid, Lord, give me thy mercy, give me ſo happy a reign, that the like hath not been ſeen; thou art liberal towards thy creatures. We made ſubject to him the winds, which blowed at his command, where it pleaſed him. We made the Devils ſubject to him; ſome built his Palaces, others dived into the Seas to bring him Pearls, and others were bound and chained to attend his commands; he retained and diſmiſſed whom he liſted, with rendring an accompt. We drew him near unto us, and lodged him in a place of content. Remember our ſervant Job, that he prayed to his Lord, and ſaid, That the Devil had heaped miſery and affliction upon him. It was ſaid unto him, Strike the Earth with thy foot; thou ſhalt ſee water ſpring forth to waſh thee, and to drink: We reſtored to him his children, and his riches, through our ſpecial grace, to be an example to poſterity. It was ſaid unto him, when his wife would have made him to murmur, Take rods in thine hand, ſtrike thy wife, and ſwerve not from what thou haſt promiſed. We found him patient, and zealous in obedience to our Commandments. Remember our ſervants Abraham, Iſaac, Jacob, affectionate and zealous in our Law; we ſaved, and choſe them among the righteous. Such as have my fear before their eyes, ſhall enjoy the delights of the Garden of Eden; where they ſhall repoſe upon moſt glorious beds; they ſhall there have all ſorts of fruits, and delicious drink; and their wives ſhall not look on any but on them. Behold, what is promiſed to them at the day of Judgment, and theſe pleaſures ſhall never end. The wicked and Infidels ſhall be precipitated into the fire of Hell, they ſhall drink boiling water in abundance, and water extreamly cold, full of all manner of noyſom ſmells; they ſhall be precipitated into the flames, and ſhall ſay to them that have obeyed them upon Earth, May ye be perpetually tormented, you have ſeduced and miſ-led us. On the contrary, may your ſelves be tormented, you have been the cauſe of our miſery, and ſhall be damned with us. Then ſhall they ſay, Lord encreaſe the puniſhment of him that is the cauſe of our miſery: Shall we not be able to ſee them whom we believed on Earth to be Infidels, and whom we derided? cannot our eyes ſee? Thus ſhall the damned quarrel. Say (to the people) I am ſent only to preach unto you the Unity of God, the Omnipotent Creator of Heaven and Earth, and of all that is between them. Behold, the beſt Sermon that I can make unto you; nevertheleſs you deſpiſe it. I know not what happened in Heaven when the Angels quarrelled. God hath inſpired it into me, and I am ſent but to inſtruct you, and to preach publikely the pains of Hell. Remember thou that God ſaid to his Angels, I will create man of the mire of the Earth; when I have formed him, I will breathe againſt him, and inſpire my Spirit into his body; proſtrate your ſelves before him with humility. The Angels there proſtrated themſelves, except the Devil; he was proud, and already in the number of the wicked. Thy Lord ſaid unto him. Wherefore doſt thou not humble thy ſelf before the work of my hands? Thou art in the number of the proud; he replied, I am better than man, thou haſt made me of fire, and haſt created him of the duſt of the Earth. Then thy Lord ſaid unto him, Get thee hence, thou ſhalt be chaſtiſed on all ſides, and my curſe be upon thee until the day of Judgment. He anſwered, Lord, defer my puniſhment until the day of the Reſurrection; he ſaid, I will defer it until the day appointed. He replied, through thy permiſſion I will tempt all the world, except ſuch as ſhall be zealous in thy Law, and ſhall obey thy Commandments. He ſaid, I tell thee true, I tell thee true, I will fill Hell with thee, and thoſe that ſhall follow thee. Say unto the people, I require of you no recompence for my inſtructions, I am not importunate. Certainly this Book is ſent only to inſtruct men, you ſhall one day know the truth of what it containeth.

CHAP. XXXIX.

The Chapter of Troops, containing ſeventy five Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the name of God gracious and merciful. This book was ſent by God, the Omnipotent and wiſe. We ſent it to thee, the contents thereof are moſt true: worſhip one God alone, and obey his Commandments; faith proceedeth from him alone: Such as worſhip any other but him, worſhip Idols. They have ſaid, we would not invoke our Idols, had they not power to draw us near to God: Certainly God ſhall judg one day the difference that is between the believers, and unbelievers; he guideth not him that is a lyar and impious. If he would have a ſon, he would make choice of one of his creatures, that ſhould be pleaſing to him; praiſed be God, there is but one God, always victorious, he created the heavens and the earth with proportion; he maketh the night to enter into the day, and the day into the night; he created the Sun and the Moon, which perform their courſe in heaven until the day appointed, he is omnipotent and merciful: He hath created all of you of one ſole man, of whom he created his wife; he hath given you clean beaſts, male and female; he formed you in the wombs of your mothers, form upon form: he brought you out of three * obſcurities, he alone is your God, and your Lord, the kingdom of the world appertaineth to him, there is no God but he. How can the Infidel depart from his ſervice? If ye will not worſhip him, he hath nothing to do with you, he deſireth not that his creatures ſhould be impious; his Will is that they praiſe him; this is his pleaſure, and none ſhall bear the burthen of his neighbour, ye all ſhall be aſſembled before him, he will ſhew ye what you have done, he knoweth what is in the hearts of men: When man is touched with any affliction, he invoketh God, and turneth; and when he is in proſperity, he forgetteth his vows; he hath ſaid that God hath a companion equal to him, and erreth from the way of his Law. Say unto him, thou ſhalt be awhile tolerated, in the end thou ſhalt be caſt headlong into the fire of hell; and he that ſhall pray to God day and night, erect, proſtrate, or on the knee, with fear of the torments of hell, ſhall enjoy the mercy of his divine Majeſty. Are ſuch as labour, to be compared to them that are idle? They that have judgment will underſtand this diſcourſe. Say unto them, oh ye people that believe in your Lord! have his fear before your eyes; ſuch as ſhall do good works in this world, ſhall enjoy abundantly the riches of the earth, God will innumerably reward them that perſevere in obedience to his Commandments. Say unto them, I am commanded to worſhip one God, to profeſs his Unity, and to be obedient to him. Say unto them, I apprehend the day of Judgment, if I diſobey God my Lord. Say unto them, I will worſhip but one God; worſhip ye others, whom ye will. Such as ſhall deſpiſe the Law of God, ſhall loſe their ſouls, and families, at the day of Judgment. Theſe are two great loſſes, and moſt certain they be involved in eternal fire. Thus God preacheth to true believers. O my creature! ſpeak unto them that have my fear before their eyes, that they adore not Idols, and that if they turn to their Lord, they ſhall enjoy the delights of Paradiſe. Proclaim to them that hear my Word, and obey my Commandments, that they are in the right way, and well adviſed; canſt thou deliver from the fire of hell him that ſhall be condemned? Certainly ſuch as obey God, ſhall enjoy the pleaſures of Paradiſe, wherein flow many rivers, and there ſhall they dwell eternally. This is the promiſe of God, he ſwerveth not from that which he promiſeth. Seeſt thou not that God ſendeth rain from heaven, and maketh the rivers to run upon the earth, he cauſeth plants to ſpring forth, and herbs of divers colours; then ſeeſt them become yellow, and then altogether drie; this is a ſign of his omnipotency. Hath not he to whom God hath given the light of faith, received a great grace from his divine Majeſty? Miſery is upon them that have an heart hardned, and forget his Law; they are manifeſtly ſeduced; he hath ſent an excellent book for the inſtruction of men, his precepts are alike in purity, and without contradiction: They that fear God, tremble when they hear mention of this book, and find their reſt in the word of his divine Majeſty. This book is the guide of the righteous, God by it guideth whom pleaſeth him. He whom God ſhall ſeduce, ſhall finde none to guide him; he ſhall be precipitated into the fire of hell at the day of Judgment. It ſhall be ſaid that day to the wicked, taſte the torments that ye have merited; their predeceſſors defamed the Prophets, and were punished when they least thought of it; God rendred them ignominious in this world, and they shall feel in the other, torments much more grievous, and they know it not. We have taught in this book what is necessary for the salvation of the people, peradventure they will learn it; it is in the Arabique tongue, without falsehood and contradiction, perhaps the people will fly from impiety; God teacheth you a parable: Two men are associates in their traffique, the one is wicked, the other an honest man, are they alike? Praise is due to one sole God; the greatest part of the Infidels understand it not. Thou shalt die, all men shall die, and ye shall be assembled at the day of Judgment, when ye shall dispute together; Who is more unjust, than he that blasphemeth against God, and against the known truth? Shall not the wicked be damned? Such as shall believe the Prophet, and fly impiety, shall obtain from God what they desire; such is the recompense of the righteous, God shall pardon their sins, and reward them for their good works: doth not he protect his servant? They will terrifie thee with the Idols which they adore; but he whom God shall mislead, shall finde none able to guide him, and none shall be able to seduce him whom he shall guide; is not he the omnipotent and revenging? If thou ask of the Infidels, who created heaven and earth? they will say it is God? Say unto them, have ye therefore considered the Idols which ye adore, can they exempt you from the wrath of God, when it shall be his pleasure to chastise you? Shall they be able to hinder his grace, when it shall be his will to pardon you? Say unto them, my refuge is God, I am resigned to his Will, the wise trust in his divine Majesty. Say unto them, oh people! do as you understand him. I will do as I understand him; ye shall know in the end, that whosoever shall be condemned, shall be ashamed, and be precipitated into eternall torments. We have sent unto thee the most true Book, to instruct the people; He that shall follow the right way, shall meet with nothing but good; and he that shall go astray, shall meet with nothing but evill; thou art not the guardian of the wicked; God causeth men to die when the hour of their death is arrived; he deferreth the death of many during their sleep, and remitteth that of others to the time appointed, this is a sign of his Omnipotencie, to such as consider it. Will ye worship any but God? Say unto them, how shall your Idols be able to intercede for you, since they want power? know you not this? Say unto them, we ought to invoke one God alone, King of the heaven and earth; you all shall one day be assembled before him to be judged. The Infidels tremble with fear, when they hear mention of one sole God, and rejoyce, when they hear speak of their Idols; Say unto them, God is Creator of the heavens and the earth, he knoweth the past, present, and future; (Lord!) thou shalt one day judge the differences of thy creatures: Should the Infidels possess all the riches of the earth, and yet as much more, they would not be able to escape the fire of hell at the day of Judgment; they shall be punished more grievously than they imagine, their sins shall be set before them, and they shall feel the rigors of the torments which they despise. Man calleth upon us when he is in affliction, and when we give him our grace, he saith, he meriteth it; on the contrary, this is to prove him, but most of them are ignorant of it; their predecessors spake as they; the good that they have done, hath profited them nothing; and the misery that they have merited, is fain upon them, they shall not escape the punishment of their crimes. Know they not that God giveth and taketh away wealth from whom pleaseth him? This is a sign of his omnipotency for the righteous. Say unto them, oh people! they who have offended God, ought not to despair of his grace, he is gracious and merciful; be ye converted, and recommend your selves to his will before ye be condemned, otherwise ye shall remain without protection; follow the instruction that God hath sent to you, before ye be chastised, the punishment of your crimes shall surprise you, ye know not the time; the wicked shall be afflicted, for that they have not obeyed Gods Commandments, they shall know their damnation, and the sin that they have committed, in scorning the true believers: They shall say, had God guided me into the right way, I had had his fear before mine eyes. When they shall see hell, they shall say, could I return into the world, I would be in the number of the righteous; on the contrary, my Commandments were taught you, but ye became proud, and despised them. Thou shalt see that day how the visages of Infidels shall be blackned: is there not a place in hell prepared for the proud? God loveth and putteth into a place of felicitie them that fear him, they shall not be touched, either with displeasure or affliction; God hath created all things, and disposeth all at his pleasure; he hath in his power the keyes of heaven and earth, such as disobey him are damned. Say unto them, oh ignorant [men] will ye enjoyn me to worship another god, besides God? It hath been preached to you, and your predecessors, that all your good works shall be unprofitable, if ye adore many gods, and that you shall be in the number of the damned: there is but one God, worship him, and be mindful of his graces. The Infidels have not praised God as he ought to be praised, they have no knowledg of his power, he shall make the earth to tremble, and gather together the heavens by the strength of his right hand at the day of Judgment; praised be God, he hath no companion. When the Trumpet shall sound the first time, he shall cause to die, whom he will have to die in the heavens and earth; the second time all the world shall rise again and attend his Commandments; the earth shall be full of the light of the Lord thereof; he shall bring his book, wherein shall be written what the Prophets and Martyrs have taught, he shall judge the world with equity, and shall not do injustice to any; every one shall be rewarded and chastised for his works, he knoweth all that they have done, he shall send the Infidels into the fire of hell, in troops; when they shall be arrived at the gate, it shall open before their eyes; it shall be said unto them, behold Hell, which ye have merited; were there not Prophets and Apostles, to teach you the Commandments of God, and to preach unto you on Earth the coming of this rigorous day? They shall say, yes, but the word of God, shall be accomplished against the wicked. It shall be said unto them, go, enter into Hell, ye shall abide there eternally, it is the habitation of the proud. Such as shall have the fear of God before their eyes, shall be conducted in troops to the gate of Paradise, the gate shall open before their eyes; it shall be said unto them, behold what ye have gained, the peace of God is with you, ye have not been ignorant, enter into Paradise, ye shall dwell therein eternally. They shall say, praised be God, for that we believed in his Law; and because we are heirs of his grace, we will will go into Paradiſe, into what place ſhall ſeem good to us, God giveth his bleſſing to the righteous. Thou ſhalt ſee the Angels about the Throne of thy Lord, who ſhall praiſe and exalt his glory; they ſhall ſay, God hath judged his creatures with equity, praiſe is due to the Lord of the Univerſe.

CHAP. XL.

The Chapter of the True believer, containing Eighty five Verſes, written at Mecca.

Reader, Gelaldin intituleth this Chapter, Of the Pitiful.

IN the Name of God, Gracious and Merciful: God is prudent and wiſe. This Book is ſent by the Omnipotent, who knoweth all things, who pardoneth ſins and accepteth the converſion of his creatures, he is ſevere in his chaſtiſements, and indulgent to his People, there is no God but he, and all the World ſhall one day be aſſembled before his Divine Majeſty [to be judged.] No man diſputeth againſt the Precepts of the Alcoran, but the wicked; be not thou diſcontented if they live on Earth with ſome felicity; the People of Noah's time contemned his inſtructions, their Poſterity did like them, and every Nation hath conſpired the death of them whom God ſent to inſtruct them; they diſputed to obſcure the truth through their lyes, but they were puniſhed; and after what manner? So is the Word of God accompliſhed againſt the wicked, they all ſhall be damned. The Angels that are about the Throne of God, and thoſe that bear him, praiſe and exalt his Divine Majeſty, they believe in his Unity, and beg pardon of him for the True believers; Lord, thy mercy extendeth through the whole World, nothing is hid from thee, either in Heaven or Earth, pardon their ſins that convert, and embrace thy holy Law; deliver them from the Fire of Hell; open to them the gate of the Gardens of Eden, which thou haſt prepared for them, their Fathers, Wives, and Children, and them of their Lineage that ſhall do good works, thou art Omnipotent and wiſe. Depart from ſin, he that ſhall depart [from it] ſhall reſent the effect of God's mercy at the Day of Judgment, and ſhall enjoy eternal felicity; the Infidels ſhall be hated of God, his hatred is infinitely more dangerous than yours; will ye be Infidels after being called to the obſervation of the Law of Salvation? They ſaid, Lord, wilt thou cauſe us to die twice? And ſhall we twice riſe again? But they ſhall ſay at the day of Judgment, Lord, we confeſs we have offended thee, we acknowledg our ſin, in having renounced the belief of thine Unity; ſhall we never go out of Hell, to obſerve thy Law, and follow the way of Salvation? No; ye ſhall ſuffer in the Fire of Hell, becauſe that ye have believed them that adored Idols, and becauſe ye have ſaid, that God hath companions equal to him. All things obey one ſole God Omnipotent, he it is that made you to ſee his Miracles, and ſendeth you the riches of Heaven and Earth; none conſider it, but ſuch as are converted. Pray to God, and obſerve his Law, although it be againſt the will of the wicked; he elevateth his Creatures to what degree he liſteth, he hath created his Throne, and ſent his inſpirations to whom he ſeeth good, to preach the Day of Judgment; that Day ſhall the People come out of their Monuments, and none ſhall be able to hide himſelf from his Divine Majeſty. Who ſhall command that day? It ſhall be God alone, victorious; that day ſhall he recompence every one after his works without injuſtice, he is exact to make account. If thou preach to the wicked the Day of Judgment, their heart will lift them up, and they ſhall be full of affliction, their prayers ſhall not be heard, and none ſhall intercede for them: God knoweth them that have eyes of treachery, and ſeeth all that is in the hearts of men, he judgeth of every thing with truth; the Idols which they worſhip are without power, God alone underſtandeth all things, and is Omnipotent. Conſider they not what was the end of their predeceſſors? Who were more powerful, and more wealthy than they? God ſurpriſed them in their ſins, there was none of power to ſave them, for that they deſpiſed the Prophets of his Divine Majeſty, they contemned his Law, and were impious; but he ſeverely chaſtiſed them, he is Omnipotent, and moſt ſevere. We ſent Moſes with Miracles, with Reaſons clear and intelligible to Pharaoh, to Haman, and Caron; they ſaid that Moſes was a Sorcerer, and a lyar; and when he preached to them the truth on our behalf, they ſaid, kill him, with all thoſe that believe him, and make their wives infamous; but their conſpiracy was but impiety: Pharaoh ſaid, hinder me not to kill Moſes, let him invoke his God to ſave him; I fear that he may alter your Law, and introduce ſome diſorder in the Land; Moſes ſaid, God, mine and your Lord, ſhall defend me from the malice of the proud, that believe not the Day of Judgment: Then a man of the domeſtiques of Pharaoh, that ſecretly profeſſed the true Law, ſaid, will ye ſlay a man that declareth that God is his Lord? And that hath made you to ſee Miracles? If he be a Lyar, his lye ſhall be againſt him; but if he ſpeak the truth, ſomething of what he hath preached ſhall befal you. God guideth neither the wicked nor lyars. Oh People! you this day command on Earth with ſplendor; who ſhall defend us from the wrath of God, if it fall upon us? Pharaoh ſaid, I ſpeak nothing to you, but what I have told you heretofore, and I will guide you all into the right way; he of his Domeſtiques, that ſecretly profeſſed the true Law, ſaid, Oh people! I fear leſt ye be chaſtiſed, as have been your predeceſſors, as were the people of Noah, Aad, Temod, and thoſe that were after them; God will not do injuſtice to men, I fear for you the Day of Judgment, a day, when ye ſhall riſe again with terror, to render account of your actions; he whom God ſhall ſeduce ſhall find none to guide him. Certainly Joſeph came heretofore with inſtructions, clear and intelligible: Nevertheleſs ye doubted, even until his death, and ſaid, that after him God ſhall not ſend a Prophet like unto him; thus doth God ſeduce the wicked, that doubt of his Law; he hateth ſuch as diſpute without reaſon, they are abhorred of them that believe in his Divine Majeſty; thus God hardneth the heart of the proud, and Tyrants. Pharaoh ſaid to * Haman, build me an high Palace, peradventure I ſhall arrive at the Heavens, and as high as the God of Moſes, I believe him to be a Lyar. Thus Pharaoh delighted in his wicked actions, he erred from the right way, and his conſpiracy was but his deſtruction. He of his Family that was a True believer, ſaid, Oh people! follow me, I will guide you into the right way, the riches of the Earth paſs away lightly, and the riches of of Heaven are Eternal; he that doth evil ſhall find evil; who doth good, man or woman, believing in God, ſhall enter into Paradiſe, where he ſhall be enriched innumerably with all manner of riches. Wherefore invite you me to precipitate my ſelf into the Fire of Hell, ſince I exhort you to your Salvation? Ye invite me to be wicked, and to believe that God hath companions, and I know it is not ſo; I call you to the Omnipotent and merciful [God,] doubtleſs I will not worſhip your Idols, they cannot hear you, either in this World, or in the other; we all ſhall be one day aſſembled before God, who will condemn Infidels to the Fire of Hell; conſider hereafter what to you I have preached; I am reſigned to the will of God, he beholdeth all the actions of his creatures; he ſhall chaſtiſe them for the evil that they ſhall commit, and for their wicked deſigns. He ſent his puniſhment upon the Lineage of Pharaoh, they deſerved to be precipitated into the Fire of Hell, they ſhall burn Evening and Morning. It ſhall be ſaid to them at the Day of Judgment, oh People of Pharaoh! go, enter into the Fire of Hell. The Infidels ſhall quarrel in Hell, the poor ſhall ſay unto the rich; We followed you, are ye able this day to deliver us from Eternal flames? They ſhall anſwer, we all are damned with you, God is a moſt juſt Judg. The damned ſhall ſay to the Miniſters of Hell, Pray to your Lord, that he may aſſwage theſe torments for one day; they ſhall anſwer, had ye not on Earth the Prophets and Apoſtles of God to inſtruct you? They ſhall ſay, Yes; pray therefore to God your ſelves; the wicked love nothing but impiety; I will protect on Earth my Prophets, and them that obſerve my Law, and particularly at the Day of Judgment; that day the wicked ſhall have no excuſe that ſhall advantage them, my curſe ſhall fall upon them, and they all ſhall be damned. We taught Moſes the way of Salvation, and made the Children of Iſrael heirs of his inſtructions, to inſtruct them that ſhall underſtand them. Perſevere and be patient, the promiſe of God is infallible; implore pardon of thy ſins, and exalt the praiſe of thy Lord Evening and Morning. They that diſpute againſt the Commandments of God are without reaſon, and have nought in their Souls but pride and ignorance: Implore ſuccor of God, he underſtandeth and ſeeth all things, the Creation of the Heavens, and of the Earth, is greater than the Creation of men, but the greateſt part of men know it not; the Blind is not like to him that ſeeth clearly, he that doth good, is not like to him that doth evil, neither is obſcurity ſuch as the light, but few men conſider it. Doubtleſs the Day of Judgment ſhall come, nevertheleſs the greateſt part of men will not believe it: Your Lord hath ſaid, Call upon me, I will hear you; ſuch as ſhall reſiſt my Law, ſhall go into Hell, and be Eternally ſeduced. God hath created the Night for repoſe, and the day for travel, he is bountiful towards his creatures, but the greateſt part of the people are ingrateful; God is your Lord, Creator of all things, there is no God but he. How can the wicked blaſpheme? So do they blaſpheme that are ingrateful for the graces of God; he hath eſtabliſhed you on Earth, he hath covered you with the Heavens, he hath formed you, enriched you; he is your God, your Lord, bleſſed be God, Lord of the Univerſe, he it is that giveth and depriveth you of life, there is no God but he, be obedient to him, and obſerve his Laws; praiſed be God, Lord of the Univerſe, who hath created you of mire. Say unto the Infidels; I am forbidden to worſhip the Idols that ye adore; God hath taught me his unity, I have received command to worſhip none but the Lord of the Univerſe; he created you of duſt, and mire, and congealed Blood, he cauſeth you to be born little Infants, he maketh you to arrive to the age of diſcretion, to virility, and old age; many die before that age, and all attain to the time of their deſtiny; peradventure ye ſhall underſtand his Unity; he it is that maketh you to live and to die, and when he willeth any thing, he ſaith, Be thou, and it is. See ye not, that they that diſpute againſt his Commandments, depart from his Law? Such as reject our Commandments, and what we enjoyned our Prophets to preach to men, ſhall find their errors, when they ſhall ſee Chains on their Necks, and Fetters on their feet; they ſhall be dragged and burned in Hell; then ſhall it be ſaid unto them, where are thoſe Idols that ye adored upon Earth? They ſhall anſwer, they are departed from us, certainly they are without power; thus God ſeduceth Infidels to their confuſion. It ſhall be ſaid unto them, Theſe pains befal you, for that ye were proud and inſolent without reaſon; enter within the gates of Hell, which is the habitation of the proud, ye ſhall dwell there Eternally. Be patient and and perſevere, the word of God is infallible; I will make thee to ſee a part of what I have promiſed to men, I will cauſe thee to die, and thou ſhalt behold them all aſſembled to be judged. Certainly we ſent Prophets before thee, we have ſpoken to thee of one part of our Apoſtles, and the reſt are concealed from thee; neither Prophet nor Apoſtles can preach any thing without God's permiſſion; he chaſtiſeth the wicked when he pleaſeth, he ſhall judg the differences that are between them and the Prophets, and ſhall deſtroy the unbelievers. God hath created the beaſts for your uſe; ſome ye eat, and others ſerve you to ride on, [from them] ye reap profit, they bear the burden, as likewiſe do the Ships for the advantage of your commerce; God manifeſteth to you his graces: And what graces! Will ye deſpiſe them? Do not unbelievers conſider the end of them that were before them, who were more powerful and rich than they? Their Treaſures did not ſave them; they derided the Prophets and Apoſtles that preached to them; and in the end felt the pains that they had deſpiſed. When they ſhall fear the torments of Hell, they ſhall ſay, We believe in One God alone, and renounce Idols. This profeſſion of Faith ſhall be unprofitable to them in Hell; they ſhall incur the rigor of the Law of God, that was obſerved againſt their predeceſſors, and all unbelievers ſhall be damned.

CHAP. XLI.

The Chapter of Expoſition, containing Fifty and Four Verſes, written at Mecca.

Reader, Gelaldin entituled this Chapter, Of Adoration.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful. The Alcoran was ſent by the gracious and merciful God: It explaineth Divine Myſteries in the Arabique Tongue, to them that have knowledg to underſtand them; it proclaimeth to the good, the delights delights of Paradiſe, and preacheth to the wicked the torments of Hell; nevertheleſs, the greateſt part of the world depart from the Faith, and hear not thy words: They ſay, We have obdurate hearts, we cannot comprehend what thou preacheſt, our ears are ſtopped, we are too remote to hear what thou ſayeſt. Obſerve thy Law, we will live after our own. Say unto them, I am a man like you, your God is one ſole God, be obedient to him, and beg pardon of him for your ſins: Miſery is upon unbelievers, that pay not Tythes, and believe not in the day of Judgment. The believers that ſhall do good works, ſhall enjoy an infinite reward. Say unto them, How, will ye be wicked towards him that created the Earth in two days? how can you ſay that he hath a Companion equal to him? He is ſole Lord of the Univerſe; he raiſed the Mountains, bleſſed the Earth, and gave to every Region the particulars thereof in four days, for them that ſhall have need: After this he aſcended into Heaven, that was like unto ſmoke, and ſaid unto Heaven and Earth, Ye ſhall obey me, either through force or affection: They anſwered, Lord, we will be obedient to thy Commandments. He created ſeven Heavens in two days, and diſpoſed every Heaven after his own will; he adorned them with Stars, and preſerveth them from the malice of the Devil. This is an effect of his Omnipotency; he is omnipotent, and knoweth all things. If the unbelievers depart from the Faith, ſay unto them, I have threatened you, as heretofore thunder did the people of Aad and Temod, when the Prophets taught them the Law of the ancient True-believers, to wit, To worſhip but one God: They ſaid, Were it Gods pleaſure to alter our Law, he would have ſent us Angels to preach unto us; we will not believe in thy Miſſion. The people of Aad waxed proud on the Earth without reaſon, and ſaid, Who is more powerful than we? will they not conſider, that he that created them, is more powerful and wealthy than they? Nevertheleſs they deſpiſed our Commandments. We ſent againſt them a cold and impetuous wind, in an unhappy time, that made them to ſuffer on Earth ſhame and ignominy, becauſe of their crimes: He ſhall cauſe them to feel the pains of Hell, that are much greater than thoſe of the Earth, and they ſhall be eternally deprived of protection. We inſtructed the men of Temod in the right way; they preferred blindneſs to light, and impiety to Salvation; they were ſurprized by thunder, and ſuffered great afflictions, becauſe of their ſins. We ſaved none of them, but the believers, who had our fear before their eyes. Be thou mindful of the day that the enemies of God ſhall be aſſembled in Hell, they ſhall defend their cauſe before the Judg, until teſtimony be brought againſt them; their ears, their eyes, and their skin ſhall be witneſſes of their iniquities: They ſhall ſay, Wherefore do ye witneſs againſt us? They ſhall anſwer, He that made us to ſpeak, giveth ſpeech to every thing; he it is that created you, and ye are this day aſſembled before him to be judged. Ye did not well conceal your ſelves, when ye offended him; your ears, your eyes, your skin are witneſſes againſt you; ye believed that God ſhould not ſee your ſins, this was your opinion: Certainly he ſhall chaſtiſe you, and you all ſhall be in the number of the damned. Perſevere, and be thou patient, the fire of Hell ſhall be their habitation; they ſhall not be able to pleaſe God in the flames. We have given them the Devils for their Companions, who cauſed them to delight in ſin. The word of God ſhall be accompliſhed againſt them, as it was accompliſhed againſt their Predeceſſors, as well men as Devils, that are condemned. The unbelievers have ſaid, Hear not that Alcoran, it is full of error; peradventure, ye ſhall be ſeduced. I will cauſe them to ſuffer grievous pains, and will chaſtiſe them after their demerits; ſuch is the reward of Gods enemies. They ſhall remain eternally in the fire of Hell, becauſe they deſpiſe his Commandments. The wicked ſhall ſay at the day of Judgment, Lord, let us ſee the Devils, and the men that ſeduced us? we will trample them under our feet, and precipitate them to the bottom of Hell. Such as ſhall have profeſſed the Law of God, as ſhall have obeyed his Commandments, ſhall be viſited by the Angels, and ſhall that day be free from fear and affliction. They ſhall ſay unto them, Rejoice ye in Paradiſe, that is prepared for you; ye ſhall there find all the contentments that ye ſhall deſire; they have been prepared for you by the gracious and merciful. There is nothing better than to pray to God, than to do good works, and to profeſs his unity. Good and evil are not alike: Expel evil with thy good works. There is an exceeding great antipathy between Faith and Impiety: Faith is given to ſuch as perſevere to do well, and to them that are endued with the grace of God. The Devil will tempt thee, but implore aſſiſtance from God; he heareth and knoweth all things. The night and the day, the Sun and the Moon, are Signs of his Omnipotency: Adore neither the Sun, nor the Moon, worſhip God that created them. If the Infidels reſiſt the Faith, the Angels that are in Paradiſe deſiſt not, notwithſtanding, to exalt the glory of his Divine Majeſty, day and night, without intermiſſion. It is a ſign of his Omnipotency, to ſee the barren and dry Earth to change the face, and become green, when it is watered with rain. He that maketh the plants to revive, is he that maketh every thing to live and die, he is Omnipotent. Such as depart from our Commandments, cannot hide themſelves from us: ſhall he that ſhall be precipitated into Hell, be better lodged than he that ſhall be ſaved at the day of Judgment; Do what ſhall pleaſe you, your Lord beholdeth all your actions. I will chaſtiſe them that traduce the Alcoran, it is a precious Book, it is approved by the ancient and modern Scriptures, it is ſent from the glorious and merciful. None other thing ſhall be ſpoken to thee, than what hath been ſpoken to the Prophets that preceded thee; thy Lord is merciful and juſt. Had we ſent the Alcoran in the Perſian tongue, to a Prophet, an Arabian by Nation, the wicked would have ſaid, That the Divine Myſteries are not well explained. Say unto them, It is the guide of Believers, and a remedy to their ignorance. Infidels have deaf ears, they are blind, and hear not, as thoſe that are called too far off: Certainly, we gave the Book and the Law to Moſes. Unbelievers doubt, but if thy Lord had not ſaid, That he would defer their puniſhment until the day of Judgment, he had already chaſtiſed them in this world, becauſe they doubt of the truth. Whoſoever ſhall do good, ſhall find good; and the evil that a man committeth, ſhall be againſt him. Thy Lord doth no injuſtice to his Creatures: None but he knoweth the day of Judgment; no fruit nor flower ſpringeth out of the Earth, and woman neither conceiveth, nor bringeth forth, but by his permiſſion. Be thou mindful of the day that thy Lord ſhall call Idolaters, and demand of them, where be their Idols? They ſhall ſay, Lord, we acknowledg thy Unity; none of us will hereafter adore thoſe falſe gods. They that worſhipped one God, departed from Idolaters; they know that the puniſhment of their ſins is infallible. Man never ceaſeth to require riches, and is troubled when evil befalleth him; if we give him good after his affliction, he ſaith, that he foreſaw it, and hath no thought of the coming of the day of Judgment; if he be converted, thy Lord openeth to him the Gate of Paradiſe. I will make the wicked to know their wickedneſs, and will moſt ſeverely puniſh them; when we beſtow wealth on man, he followeth his Idolatry and his ſin; and when he is touched in affliction, he raboundeth in prayer: Say unto them, know ye not that the Alcoran proceedeth from God? nevertheleſs ye have renounced it; who is more impious than he that impugneth the known truth? I will cauſe them to ſee my Miracles, even to the utmoſt parts of Heaven and Earth, and in their own perſons, to the end they may know the truth of the Alcoran. Sufficeth it not them that thy Lord ſeeth all things? nevertheleſs, they are in doubt of the Reſurrection, and of being aſſembled before him to be judged; certainly God is omniſcient.

CHAP. XLII.

The Chapter of Counſel, containing Fifty and three Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful. God is prudent, wiſe, Majeſtick; he underſtandeth all things, and is omnipotent; God hath ſent thee the ſame inſpirations that he ſent to them that did precede thee; he is omnipotent and wiſe, whatſoever is in Heaven and in Earth appertaineth to him; he is omnipotent, and knoweth all things; the Heavens open at his command, the Angels exalt his glory, and implore his pardon for them that are on earth; he is merciful, he beholdeth them that invoke Idols, and knoweth them all, but thou art not their Tutor. We have inſpired into thee the Alcoran in the Arabick Tongue, to preach to the Inhabitants of Mecca, and ſuch as dwell about that City; we have ſent thee to preach unto them the day of Judgment; there is no doubt that one part of men ſhall be ſaved, and the other ſhall be damned; had it pleaſed God, he had created them of one and the ſame Religion, he giveth his grace to whom he liſteth, and Infidels ſhall be deprived of ſuccour, becauſe they have required the protection of Idols; but God is the true protector of the world: he reviveth the dead, and is omnipotent; he ſhall one day judg all the difficulties, and reſolve all your doubts in your Religion, he is my Lord, I recommend my ſelf to his divine will; he created your wife of your ſelves, he created all beaſts male and female, and cauſed you to multiply; there is not any thing like unto him, he keepeth the keys of the Treaſures of Heaven and Earth, and taketh away, and giveth wealth as pleaſeth him. The Law that I gave to Noah, Abraham, Moſes, and Jeſus, is that which I commanded thee to obſerve, viz. to believe in one God. The Infidels are angry when thou preacheſt to them the unity of God, he teacheth it whom he pleaſeth, and guideth into the right way them that obey him; the wicked approve ſome points of his Law, and reject the reſt, although they have knowledg of his Unity, and that through the envy that is riſen among them; if thy Lord had not heretofore ſaid that he would defer their puniſhment until the day of Judgment, he had already deſtroyed them; many of thoſe, who after them ſhall have knowledg of the Scriptures, ſhall doubt of his Law; but follow thou the way that is appointed thee, and follow not their appetites: Say unto them, I believe in the Book that God hath ſent, I have received commandment to preach unto you, that God is your, and our Lord; ye ſhall anſwer for your actions, and we ſhall anſwer for ours; it is not neceſſary to diſpute againſt us, God will one day aſſemble us in his preſence to judg our differences, he is our refuge; ſuch as diſpute againſt the faith, after knowledg of the truth, are without reaſon; their arguments ſhall be vain with God, they ſhall be the object of his wrath, and ſhall ſuffer exceeding great pains. God hath ſent the Alcoran with truth and ballance; he will not inſtruct thee when the day of Judgment ſhall be: Such as have no faith in him, aſk when it ſhall come, and they that believe him, fear the coming thereof, and know it to be infallible; ſuch as doubt, are erroneous from the right way. God is merciful to his people, and enricheth whom he pleaſeth; he is ſtrong and omnipotent, he increaſeth the graces of him that deſireth the riches of Heaven; he giveth the wealth of the Earth to them that affect it, and depriveth them of the riches of Heaven: Are there wicked ones among men that teach them a falſe Religion prohibited of God? God hath not revealed it to them; had he not deferred their puniſhment until the day of Judgment, he had already deſtroyed them; they ſhall in the end feel grievous torments; ye ſhall ſee them fear their own deportments, ye ſhall ſee them chaſtiſed after their demerits; and the believers that do good works, ſhall enjoy the delights of Paradiſe, where they ſhall find whatſoever they ſhall deſire; this is the great grace of God; this is that which he hath proclaimed to the faithful that believed, and have done good works: Say unto them, I require none other recompence for the pains that I take in preaching to you, than to love my kindred; he that ſhall do any good work, ſhall be rewarded, God is merciful, and good works are pleaſing to him. Will they ſay that thou haſt blaſphemed againſt God? If it pleaſe God, he ſhall hinder thee to hear this diſcourſe, or will imprint patience in thine heart; he aboliſheth lyes, and confirmeth the truth through his words; he knoweth whatſoever is in the hearts of men; he accepteth the converſion of his Creatures, he pardoneth their ſins, and knoweth all their actions; he heareth the prayers of the faithful, that do good works, and augmenteth his grace upon them; but Infidels ſhall undergo the rigors of eternal pains. Had God equally enriched all his Creatures, they had been in confuſion upon earth; he enricheth whom he pleaſeth; he ſeeth and knoweth all; he ſendeth rain when men deſpair of his grace, he is the Protector of believers, and praiſe is due to him eternally: the Creation of the Heavens, and of the Earth, and of all that moveth between them, is a ſign of thine Omnipotency: If evil befall you, believe that ye have deſerved it; nevertheleſs, he pardoneth you many things; ye cannot eſcape his puniſhment on earth, and none is able to protect you againſt him; the veſſel that runneth on the water, big as a mountain, is a token of his Omnipotency, to them that perſevere in his Law, and acknowledg his graces. He ſhall reprove the wicked for their ſins, and ſhall pardon many: They that diſpute againſt his Commandments, cannot eſcape their puniſhment; the riches that we poſſeſs are the riches of the earth; the riches that God beſtoweth on them that truſt in him, are eternal: They that depart from mortal ſins, that repent to have committed them, that beg of God to be heard, and perſevere in their ſupplications; they that take counſel, and conſult among them what they ought to do, that employ in good works part of the wealth that God hath given them, that implore his help in their afflictions; ſuch as do good, and ſuch as commit evil, ſhall be recompenſed, and puniſhed according to their works. God abhorreth Infidels; ye have no power over them that implore his aſſiſtance in their affliction, and repent; your power extendeth over them that do injuſtice to the people, and diſobey on earth the Commandments of his divine Majeſty, they ſhall ſuffer great torments. Such as perſevere in well-doing, and pardon their neighbour, do what God hath Commanded. He whom God ſhall miſlead, ſhall find none to guide him. Thou ſhalt ſee that the Infidels ſhall ask if they may return into the world, when they ſhall behold the fire of hell; thou ſhalt ſee them flie with extream fear of external ignominy; they ſhall look awry upon hell, and the believers ſhall ſee that the wicked, that have loſt their ſouls, that have miſlead their family, and all the impious, ſhall be eternally damned, none ſhall be able to ſave them, and he that God ſhall miſlead, ſhall not find the right way. Say unto them, beg pardon of God before the day come, that ye ſhall find no way to return into the world, nor excuſe for your ſins. If they diſobey thee, we have not ſent thee to be their Tutor; thou art ſent only to preach unto them. When we give to man any proſperity, he rejoyceth, and when affliction befalleth him, he is ingrateful for the grace of his Lord, King of the heavens and earth. God giveth children, ſons and daughrers to whom he pleaſeth, he knoweth all things, and is omnipotent; he ſpeaketh not to man but by inſpiration, and parable, without being ſeen; he ſendeth his Prophets and Apoſtles, into whom he inſpireth what pleaſeth him; he knoweth all things, and is omnipotent; Thus have we ſent thee our ſpirit to teach thee our Commandments; thou knoweſt not before what was written in the Alcoran, neither thy myſteries of faith, we have ſent it to thee to be a light to the world: I will guide into the way of Salvation whom I pleaſe. I will guide him into the way of the Lord, to whom belongeth all that is in Heaven and Earth, and who diſpoſeth of all things.

CHAP. XLIII.

The Chapter of ornament, containing Eighty and nine Verſes written at Mecca.

Extoi intituled this Chapter, The Chapter of Gold.

IN the name of God, gracious and merciful: God is prudent and wiſe. I ſwear by the Book that teacheth to do well, that we have ſent it in the Arabique tongue, peradventure ye ſhall underſtand the Alcoran; it is written in our origiual Book, majeſtique and myſterious. Shall I conceal from you the Book of Salvation, if ye be wicked? How many Prophets and Apoſtles have we ſent in paſt Ages whom unbelievers have deſpiſed? We deſtroyed the moſt powerful among them, and all have incurred the pain of their predeceſſors. If thou ask of them who created Heaven and Earth; they will ſay, that it is the Omnipotent, who knoweth all things. Who hath extended the Earth under you? Who eſtabliſhed the wayes to guide you? It is God, he cauſeth the rain to deſcend from Heaven in your neceſſity; he maketh the dead, dry, and barren fields to revive; in like manner ſhall the dead come out of their Sepulchers. He it is that created whatſoever is in the world, of divers kinds and ſpecies. and created the Ships, and beaſt, to carry you. Remember the grace of your Lord, ſay, praiſed be he that created for us theſe things; we had not the power to create them. They alſo ſhall return before the Lord to be judged. The Infidels have divided God into many parts. Certainly he that ſaith that there are many Gods, is impious; hath he appointed you to ſay, that the Angels which he hath created are his daughters, ſeeing that he giveth you Sons? When it is declared to ſome Infidels that a daughter is born to him, he is not ſatisfied, (he deſireth to have a ſon) will they ſay that God adorneth himſelf, and taketh ornaments to beautifie him like their Idols? It is a manifeſt error they ſay, that the Angels that worſhip God, are the daughters of his divine Majeſty; I will write what they ſay, and will require of them an account of their diſcourſe at the day of Judgement. They have ſaid, had it pleaſed God, we had not adored the Angels; They know not what they ſay, and ignorantly blaſpheme: do they obſerve any Scripture that hath been taught them heretofore? On the contrary, they ſay that their fathers lived in like manner, and that they follow their ſteps; they have ſaid as much to all the Prophets that were ſent unto them. When thou ſpakeſt to them to obſerve what is contained in the Alcoran, and to abandon the Idols which their fathers worſhipped, they anſwered, that they believed neither in thee nor in thy miſſion; but we avenged our ſelves upon them; Conſider what is the end of blaſphemers; Remember thou, that Abraham ſaid to his father, and his people, I am innocent of the ſin that you commit, in adoring Idols, I worſhip him alone that created me, he ſhall guide me into the way of Salvation, and hath left his words to poſterity; perhaps the Infidels ſhall be converted. I deferred heretofore the puniſhment of Idolaters, untill they had learned the truth, and that a Prophet came to inſtruct them; When he preached unto them the truth, they ſaid, that it is but witchcraft, and that they would give no faith to it. Had the Alcoran been ſent to a man, * Maſter and Lord of two Cities, or Villages, they had eſteemed and approved it. Would they diſpoſe of the graces of God? He hath divided the riches of the world among men; Some there be that are more eminent, and ſcorn each other, but the mercy of God is more advantageous than the riches of the Earth, which they accumulate: Although all the people be not of the ſame Religion, we ceaſe not to beſtow on the wicked houſes adorned with ſeelings, enchaſed with ſilver, ſtairs, doors, and beds of ſilver and gold; Theſe things are the riches of the Earth, and Paradiſe is for them that are righteous. I will cauſe to fall headlong with the Devils, ſuch as ſhall reject the Law of the merciful; the Devils ſhall be their companions, they ſhall ſeduce them from the way of Salvation, and they ſhall not know know it. When we ſhall come to judg the Univerſe, they ſhall ſay, Would to God we had been as remote from you, as the Weſt is from the Eaſt. Oh what company for you! This day your repentance and your hopes ſhall be vain; ye were Infidels for company, ye ſhall be companions in the Fire of Hell. Wilt thou make the blind to ſee, and the deaf to hear? Wilt thou guide them that wilfully err? If they dye before being puniſhed on Earth, I will be avenged on them in the other World. Shall I ſhew thee during thy life, the puniſhment that we have prepared for them? We can do it, but do thou only what hath been commanded thee, thou art in the way of Salvation, inſtruct men therein; an account of thy miſſion ſhall be required of thee. I will require an account of their miſſion that we ſent heretofore to inſtruct the People, we will demand of them, if we appointed them to worſhip any other God but us. We ſent Moſes to Pharaoh, and his Miniſters, he cauſed them to ſee our Miracles, and preached to them our Commandments; he told them that he was the Meſſenger of the God of the Univerſe, nevertheleſs they ſcoffed. I ſhewed them no greater Miracle than that of Moſes his ſiſter, and we chaſtiſed them, becauſe of their incredulity. They ſaid unto Moſes, Oh Magician! pray unto thy Lord, that he deliver us from theſe evils, and we will be converted; when they were delivered, they violated their promiſes; and Pharaoh ſaid to his people, Am not I King of Ægypt? doth not the River Nilus flow under my obedience? Know ye not that I am more powerful than that poor wretch Moſes, that knows not what he ſays? Give him * Bracelets of Gold; we will ſee if the Angels, and thoſe that follow his Doctrine, will teſtifie the truth of his words. He terrified his Subjects, they obeyed him, for they were Infidels, but we were avenged on them when they provoked us; we drowned them, and made them ſerve for example to Poſterity, like thoſe that preceded them in impiety. The people would not hearken to the Son of Mary, when he ſpake by Parable; they ſaid, Our Gods are more profitable to us than his lyes and queſtions. On the contrary, they were refractory; he is our Servant, we conferred on him our grace, and made him like to the other Prophets of the Children of Iſrael: Had it pleaſed me, I had created Angels on Earth in your place; the coming of Jeſus, the Son of Mary, ſhall be a ſign of the certainty of the day of Judgment, doubt not concerning that day. He ſaid unto men, Follow me, it is the right way, beware leſt the Devil ſeduce you, he is your open Enemy. I come to teach you the Commandments of God, to reſolve the doubts, and judge the differences that are among you; fear God, and obey him, he is your Lord and mine, worſhip him, it is the right way; the people doubted his Doctrine, but miſery ſhall be upon the wicked, they ſhall ſuffer great torments at the Day of Judgment; will they expect that day for their converſion? It ſhall ſurprize them, and they know it not; that day ſhall they be enemies one of another, God ſhall ſay to the righteous, fear not, ye ſhall not this Day reſent any affliction; the believers that have obeyed my Commandments, ſhall enter into Paradiſe, you and your wives ſhall there rejoyce, ye ſhall drink in cups of fine Gold; ye ſhall there find whatſoever ye ſhall deſire, and all that can content the mind, and delight the eyes, and ye ſhall dwell eternally in ſupreme felicity; behold the Paradiſe that ye have gained by your good life! it is enriched with abundance of fruits, which ye ſhall eat with contentment; and the wicked ſhall remain eternally in the Fire of Hell, they ſhall not be eaſed in their miſeries, and ſhall be dumb with diſpair; we do no injuſtice to them, they draw miſchief on themſelves, through their diſobedience; they ſhall demand of the Keeper of the Fire, will thy Lord never deliver us from theſe pains? He ſhall anſwer them, Ye ſhall abide there eternally; We have taught men the truth, but the greateſt part of them would not believe it. The wicked have conſpired againſt thee, and we conſpired againſt them; think they that I know not their ſecrets, and whatſoever they utter? The Angels our Meſſengers keep account; ſay unto them, If God have a Son, who ſhall we firſt adore? Praiſed be God, King of the Heavens and of the Earth; the matter is not as the Infidels believe it: Leave them implunged in their impiety, let them laugh and rejoyce, until the day of their puniſhment arrive: One God alone ought to be worſhipped in Heaven and Earth, he is moſt wiſe and Omniſcient. Praiſed be he to whom appertaineth the Kingdom of the Heavens and Earth, and whatſoever is between them. He knoweth the hour and the day, that all the World ſhall be aſſembled before him to be judged. The Idols that the Infidels adore, ſhall not be able to intercede for them; the good intercede for them that have knowledge of the truth; if thou ask of men, Who created them? They will ſay, It is God; How can they then depart from his Commandments? Lord, this People is incredulous; Depart thou far from their company, they ſhall in the end, too late, acknowledg their errors.

CHAP. XLIV.

The Chapter of Smoke, containing Fifty nine Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful. God is Prudent and Wiſe. I ſwear by the Book that diſtinguiſheth good from evil, that we ſent it the Night of bleſſing, to teach the People the torments of Hell; this Book explaineth our Commandments, and all that we heretofore commanded the Prophets; this is a ſpecial grace of thy Lord, he heareth and knoweth all things, he is Lord of Heaven and Earth, and of all that is between them, believe his in Omnipotency. There is no God but he, he giveth life and death to whom he liſteth, he is your Lord, the Lord of your fathers and predeceſſors; the wicked deride this diſcourſe, but the Day of Judgment attends them; that day the Heaven ſhall reſemble Smoak, that ſhall cover the World; that day ſhall the People ſay, Behold here grievous torments; Lord deliver us from this miſery, we will believe in thy Law: Their converſion ſhall be in vain, becauſe when the Prophet preached to them, they ſcorned his words, and ſaid, That he was a fooliſh Teacher; and when they were comforted on Earth, they returned to their impiety; Remember thou the day when they were vanquiſhed, and taken by force, and that we were revenged on their impiety; We heretofore tryed the People of Pharoah; my beloved Prophet preached to them my Commandments, and ſaid, Come follow me, Oh ye ſervants God! I am a faithful Meſ-

Meſſenger of his divine Majeſty, reſiſt not his law; I will teach you his Commandments, he ſhall defend me from your malice, he ſhall preſerve me from being ſtoned; but if he will not believe me, depart far from me. He prayed to his Lord, when he knew, that that people was unbelieving, and impious. God ſaid unto him, Go forth by night out of the City with my ſervants; if the men of Pharoah purſue thee, enter into the Sea, through a path large and ſpacious, thine enemies that ſhall follow thee, ſhall be drowned. How many Gardens, Fountains, and places of Pleaſure, wherein they took delight, did they forſake? They fell into the power of another with all their treaſures, and none lamented them, either in Heaven or Earth, they expected not that puniſhment. We delivered the Children of Iſrael from Pharoahs tyranny, he was powerful, and a great ſinner. We elected them through our certain knowledg among all the world, and tryed them through our Miracles, and Commandments. The wicked ſay, we ſhall dye and not riſe again; if the Reſurrection be true, cauſe our fathers to revive, to evidence the truth of thy words; Are they more powerful than their predeceſſors, whom we deſtroyed, becauſe of their impiety? We have not created in vain the Heaven and the Earth, and whatſoever is between them; we created them for certain ſigns of our unity, the greateſt part of the world underſtand it not; the day of Judgment is the time appointed for their puniſhment, that day none ſhall be able to ſave his neighbour, or parent, or friend; nor ſhall any be ſaved, but thoſe to whom God ſhall give his mercy, he is omnipotent and merciful. The fruit of the Tree of Hell, called Zacon, ſhall ſerve for food to the wicked, it ſhall boyl in their bellies like pitch, or water. They ſhall cry, Take the wicked, drag them into the fire of Hell, pour upon their heads all manner of torments. It ſhall be ſaid unto them, taſte the pains of Hell; ye believed [your ſelves] to be the omnipotent and precious on Earth, behold the puniſhment of which ye doubted! The righteous ſhall be in delicious places, in Gardens adorned with Fountains, they ſhall be clothed with purple, they ſhall behold each other face to face; we will aſſemble them with women, pure and clean, who ſhall have moſt beautiful eyes, they ſhall have fruits, ſavoury and delicious, of all ſeaſons; they ſhall never dye, and ſhall be delivered from the torments of Hell, through the ſpecial grace of thy Lord; behold ſupreme felicity! Certainly, we have ſent the Alcoran in thy tongue, peradventure the Arabians will learn it; they covet thy ruine, but perſevere thou, and expect the time of the puniſhment of their crimes.

CHAP. XLV.

The Chapter of Genuflexion, or Knee-bowing, containing fifty nine Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful. God is moſt prudent and Wiſe. This Book is ſent by the Omnipotent and Wiſe. The Heavens and the Earth are moſt certain ſigns of his Unity, to ſuch as believe in his Law; your Creation, and the Creation of all Creatures, are marks of his greatneſs to them that have his fear before their eyes; the difference of the night, and the day; the rain that he ſendeth from Heaven, to cauſe fruits to ſpring out of the Earth, and to revive it after its death; and the diverſity of winds, are ſigns of his Omnipotency to them that have knowledg to comprehend it. I relate to thee the wonders of God with truth; in what will Infidels believe, if they believe not in the word of his divine Majeſty? Miſery is upon them that hear the Commandments of God, and become proud, as if they had not heard them. Preach unto ſuch men, that they ſhall ſuffer the rigors of infinite pains. They deride the Faith when they are ſpoken to: Certainly, they ſhall be puniſhed in the fire of Hell, their riches ſhall not be able to ſave them, neither the Idols which they adore; they ſhall be eternally damned. This Book guideth then into the way of ſalvation; they that ſhall not believe in the Law of God, ſhall feel the effects of his fury. He created the Seas that bear the Ships for the advantage of your commerce, peradventure ye will acknowledg this grace: He hath created for you, all that is in Heaven and on Earth; it is a ſign of his goodneſs to ſuch as conſider it. Speak unto them that believe in the Law of Salvation, that they pardon thoſe that have not the fear of God before their eyes. God ſhall chaſtiſe them after their demerits. Whoſoever ſhall do good, ſhall finde good; and ye ſhall be aſſembled before his divine Majeſty, to be judged. Certainly we inſtructed the children of Iſrael in the Scripture, and our Commandments; we taught them knowledg, and gave them the grace of Propheſie; we enriched them with all ſorts of riches, and preferred them to all the world. We taught them our Law, none diſputed againſt our Commandments, but ſuch as had knowledg, and that through the envy that aroſe among them; but thy Lord ſhall judge their differences at the day of Judgment. We have ſent thee our Law, obſerve it, and follow not the appetites of the ignorant, they ſhall not be able to deliver thee from eternal pains. The Infidels obey each other, and the true believers obey God. This book is the light of the world, it guideth into the way of ſalvation, and the mercy of God, them that believe in his divine Majeſty. Do the wicked imagine they ſhall be entreated like the godly in their life and death, and that they ſhall not be judged? God hath created heaven and earth for a mark of his power, he ſhall judge every one according to their works, and ſhall do injuſtice to none: Conſider how they worſhip what cometh into their fancy, God hath ſeduced them from his certain knowledg, he hath rendred them deaf, hath hardned their heart, and blinded them; who ſhall guide, if God ſeduce them? Do they not conſider it? They ſay, our Reſurrection ſhall be like the life of this world, ſome die, others are born; length of years cauſe us to die; they know not what they ſay, and ſpeak but by opinion. When they are preached unto, they have no other diſcourſe to utter, But make our fathers to revive, if what ye ſay be true. Say unto them, God cauſeth you to live and die, and ſhall aſſemble you at the day of Judgment; there is no doubt in this, but the greateſt part of the people know it not. God is the King of the heavens and earth, and of the day of Judgment; that day ſhall he aſſemble the Infidels; thou ſhalt ſee all Sects, and all Religions aſſembled before him upon their knees, every Sect ſhall ſee their ſins written in a particular book, and ſhall be all chaſtiſed after their demerits.

It ſhall be ſaid unto them, Behold the Book that ſpeaketh againſt you, we have exactly written what you have done; God ſhall give his mercy to the Righteous, that is, Supream felicity. It ſhall be ſaid to the wicked, have not the Commandments of God been preached to you? Ye became proud and were incredulous; when it was told you that the promiſes of God, and the Day of Judgment were indubitable; ye ſaid that it was but an opinion, and that ye believe it not; in the end ye ſhall acknowledg your offence, and ſhall ſuffer the pains that ye deſpiſed; God ſhall ſay unto them at the Day of Judgment, I have this day forgotten you, as ye forgot the coming of this day, the Fire of Hell ſhall be your Habitation, none ſhall deliver you, becauſe ye derided my Law, and waxed proud with the Riches of the Earth. They ſhall never get out of this Fire, neither be able to repent. Praiſe be to God, Lord of the Heavens and Earth, glory is due to him in all places, he is Omnipotent and wiſe.

CHAP. XLVI.

The Chapter of Hecaf, containing Thirty five Verſes, written at Mecca.

Hecaf is a Valley in the Countrey of Licmen, upon the frontiers of Arabia. See Gelaldin, and the Book entituled, Kitab el Tenoir.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful: God is moſt Prudent and Wiſe. This Book was ſent by the Omnipotent and Wiſe. We created the Heavens and the Earth, and all that is between them, for a ſign of our Omnipotency and Unity, and appointed to every thing a prefixed and limited time. If the Infidels depart from that which hath been preached to them, ſay unto them, Have ye conſidered the Idols that ye adore? Shew me what they have created on earth, are they God's companions in the Creation of the Heavens? Bring me a Book ſent from Heaven before the Alcoran, that containeth like it, what remained of the Doctrine of our Predeceſſors, we ſhall ſee if ye be true: Who is more ſeduced than he that worſhippeth things that can neither hear his prayers, nor protect him at the Day of Judgment? That day ſhall the Infidels be enemies to each other, and the Idols ſhall not acknowledg them that have worſhipped them. When they heard the Alcoran read, they affirmed it to contain the truth; and when they were commanded to obſerve it, they ſaid, That it is but Magick. Will they ſay, That thou haſt invented it? Say unto them, If I have invented it, ye cannot deliver me from the puniſhment of God, he knoweth all that is in this Book, it is ſufficient that he is witneſs between you and me, he is gracious and merciful: Say unto them, I am not the firſt Prophet, nor the firſt Apoſtle that God hath ſent, I know not what God ſhall determine of you and me, I do but what he hath inſpired into me, and am ſent to preach the torments of Hell; have ye conſidered in what condition ye ſhall be, if the Alcoran be ſent from God? Ye have renounced it, but one of the Children of Iſraell is witneſs that it is ſent from God, and hath believed in his Divine Majeſty. Nevertheleſs, ye are become proud; God guideth not the proud. The Infidels ſay to the Believers, If the Alcoran were any good thing, you ſhould not exceed us in obſerving it, it guideth not into the way of Salvation, it is but an old Fable; the Book of Moſes that came before it, teacheth the right way, and the Will of God: Say unto them, the Alcoran confirmeth the Scriptures ſent heretofore to them that preceded us, it is in the Arabique Tongue; he preacheth the pains of Hell to unbelievers, and declareth the joys of Paradiſe to the Righteous. Such as ſhall believe that God is their Lord, and ſhall obey him, ought to fear nothing, they ſhall ſuffer none affliction at the Day of Judgment, they ſhall enjoy Paradiſe for the reward of their good works. We have recommended to man, to honour Father and Mother, and to do good to them; his Mother beareth him with pain, ſhe bringeth forth with dolour, ſhe giveth him ſuck, and weaneth him at the end of Thirty months; ſhe hath care [of him] until he be in a condition to govern himſelf, and hath attained to Age of diſcretion. Then he ſaith, Lord, inſpire me to be grateful for the grace that thou haſt given to my Father and Mother; if I do well, thou wilt accept it, take care of my Poſterity, I truſt in thee, and deſire to obey thy Commandments: Their prayer ſhall be heard, their ſins ſhall be pardoned, and they ſhall enjoy the joys of Paradiſe, prepared for the Righteous. He that ſhall ſpeak to his Father and Mother in civility, and ſhall ſay unto them in deriſion, will ye bring me yet once more into the World after my death? will ye revive me from my grave? Many are dead heretofore, that are not return'd. He ſhall be puniſh'd of God, his Father and Mother ſhall require help of his Divine Majeſty, and ſhall ſay unto him, My Son, miſery is with thee, believe in God, and in the Reſurrection, the Word of God is infallible; if he reply that it is an old Fable; he ſhall feel the puniſhment of God, the Word of his Divine Majeſty ſhall be accompliſhed againſt him, as it hath been accompliſhed againſt them that did precede him in impiety, as well Devils as men, they ſhall be damned; they ſhall be in ſundry degrees of pains, he ſhall chaſtiſe them after their demerits, and no injuſtice ſhall be done to them. It ſhall be ſaid to the wicked that would depart out of Hell fire, Ye expelled your felicity, when ye lived in the World; your puniſhment was deferred until this preſent, ye ſhall this day be puniſhed in this Fire, becauſe of your pride and crimes. Remember thou the Brother of Aad, who preached the torments of Hell in the Valley of Hecaf, his words was heard in his time, and are come to Poſterity, viz. worſhip but one God alone; if you do otherwiſe, I apprehend for you the Day of Judgment: They anſwered him, Art thou come to hinder us to adore our gods? Let us ſee the torments that thou preacheſt to us, if thou art true: He ſaid, God knoweth in what time he will chaſtiſe you; I preach to you what hath been appointed me to preach, but I ſee that ye are obſtinate. When they beheld a black cloud appear, which approached the place of their habitation, they ſaid, Behold a Cloud that ſhall give us Rain; on the contrary, it is the puniſhment that ye have demanded, it is full of an impetuous wind that ſhall deſtroy you through the Commandment of God; in the Morning their houſes were found empty of inhabitants. Thus God chaſtiſeth the wicked; ye dwell in the places which they inhabited; they had hearts, eyes, and ears, but their hearts, eyes, and ears were to them unprofitable; the evil which they deſpiſed befel them, when they neglected to obſerve the Commandments of God. We have deſtroyed what-ever is round about Mecca, and have made the effects of our Omnipotency to appear; peradventure the inhabitants thereof will be converted. The Idols that they worſhipped, and thoſe to whom they ſacrificed, did not ſave them; on the contrary, they forſook them, becauſe of their blaſphemies. Remember thou, that we ſent to thee Devils, that deſired to hear a Lecture of the Alcoran; when they heard thee, they ſaid, Hark, he begins; and when thou madeſt an end, they returned with exceeding great fear, and ſaid to their companions, We have heard a Lecture of a Book ſent from Heaven after the Book of Moſes, it confirmeth the ancient Scriptures, teacheth the truth, and guideth the people into the way of ſalvation. O people! hear him that calleth you to the Law of God, and to the obſervance of his Commandments; believe him, God ſhall pardon your ſins, and deliver you from the pains of Hell: ſuch as ſhall not hearken to him, ſhall not eſcape the puniſhment of their crimes, and ſhall be deprived of protection at the day of Judgment; ſuch men are ſeduced from the way of ſalvation. Conſider they not that God, who created Heaven and Earth, did not labour in creating them? that he is able to give life and death, and is omnipotent? Be thou mindful of the day that the Infidels ſhall deſire to get out of the fire of Hell; it ſhall be ſaid unto them, Are not the pains that were preached to you true? they ſhall ſay, yes Lord; it ſhall be ſaid to them, Taſte then the torments which ye have merited through your impiety. Perſevere thou, as the Prophets thy Predeceſſors perſevered. Be not impatient, till thou ſee the puniſhment of Infidels; they ſhall ſee it when they ſhall riſe again, and ſhall believe that they have been but an hour in their Sepulchres: This is that which God hath commanded to preach; he ſhall deſtroy thoſe only that diſobey his Commandments.

CHAP. XLVII.

The Chapter of the Combat, containing four-ſcore and eight Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the name of God, gracious and merciful. Good works are vain and unprofitable to the wicked, and to them that hinder their neighbour to follow the Law of God; he pardoneth their ſins, who believe in what Mahomet hath preached; it is the very truth that proceedeth from his Divine Majeſty, but the Infidels have followed vanity, and the believers have embraced the truth ſent from their Lord: Thus God ſpeaketh to the people in Parables. When ye ſhall meet the Infidels in time of war, cut their necks, purſue them until ye take them priſoners, then bind them; after this, ye ſhall either give them liberty, or put them to ranſome, until their party ſhall lay down arms. If God pleaſed, he could give you victory without fighting, but his will is to prove you; he guideth into Paradiſe, them that are ſlain for the defence of his Law, and giveth them his grace. Oh ye that believe in God! If ye protect the Law of God, God will protect you, he will confirm your ſteps, and deſtroy the Infidels, becauſe they have contemned his Commandments, and their good works ſhall be to them unprofitable; conſider they not what hath been the end of the impious that were before them, and that God hath deſtroyed them? He ſhall deſtroy them in like manner, becauſe he protecteth the Believers, and Infidels are deprived of his protection; he maketh the righteous to enter into Paradiſe, into Gardens wherein flow many Rivers. The puniſhment of the wicked is ſometimes deferred in this world, they live like beaſts, but the fire of Hell is prepared for their puniſhment. How many Cities, ſtronger, and more opulent than that which they cauſed thee to abandon, have we deſtroyed? They found no protection. Are ſuch as embrace the Law of God like to them that follow their own appetites? God hath promiſed Paradiſe to them that have his fear before their eyes; there be in Paradiſe rivers of water, that receiveth no alteration; there be rivers of milk that never corrupteth, rivers of wine, ſavoury and delicious to the taſte; rivers of honey, pure and clean; fruits of all ſorts, and the grace of God for them that ſhall obey his Commandments; the wicked ſhall remain eternally in the fire of Hell, where they ſhall drink a boiling liquor, that ſhall burn their entrails. There be perſons among the Infidels, that hear what thou doſt preach; when they are gone from thee, their Doctors demand of them what thou haſt ſaid concerning the day of Judgment? God hath hardned the hearts of ſuch men, and they ſhall never follow but their own paſſions. God encreaſeth the graces of them that obey his Commandments, and fortifieth them in their perſeverance: Shall the Infidels tarry until the day of Judgment ſurprizeth them? The ſigns of that day hath already appeared, that day ſhall repentance be in vain: There is no God but God, implore from him pardon of thy ſin; and for theſe men and women, that believe in his Law, he knoweth what they do day and night: If the Chapter of the place where Juſtice is rendred, had not been ſent, and had not made mention of Combats, thou hadſt not ſeen them, that doubt of the Law, look upon thee with eyes troubled, becauſe of their fears of dying. Teach them obedience, and ſpeak to them with civility. Had they believed, and obeyed, when they were appointed to fight, they had performed a good work. Have ye diſobeyed? Have ye abandoned the Law of God, to defile the Earth? and to deprive your ſelves of his mercy? God rendreth them whom he curſeth, and who comprehend not the truth of the Alcoran, deaf and blind. Have they a firm heart? Such as have returned to their impiety, after having known the right way, were tempted of the Devil, and particularly, when they told the Infidels that they would obey them in any thing, God knoweth all their ſecrets; what will become of them when the Angels ſhall cauſe them to die? they ſhall beat them before and behind, becauſe they have incutred the wrath of God, and deſpiſed his Commandments; their good works ſhall be unprofitable; think they that God will never make manifeſt their malice? If thou wilt, I will make it appear, thou ſhalt know them by their countenance, thou ſhalt diſcover them by their voice and ſpeech. Say unto them, God knoweth all your actions; he ſhall prove you, to diſcover the believers, and the unbelievers. The wicked, who hinder the people to follow the way of Salvation, that contradict the Prophet, after they have had knowledg of the Law of God, hurt not his Divine Majeſty, their actions are vain and unprofitable. Oh ye that believe! obey God, and his Prophet, and render not your good works ineffectual through diſodiſobedience; he pardoneth not the wicked, who ſeduce the people from the way of Salvation, and die in their impiety: Be not faint-hearted and ſlothful, ye ſhall be victorious, God is with you. He will not deprive you of reward; the life of this world is but fooliſh paſtime and deluſion; if ye believe in God, and have his fear before your eyes, he will recompence you for your good works, he requireth not an account of your riches; if he do require [it] of you, it is to hinder you to be avaricious, and to baniſh uſury from among them that believe in his Law: Oh people! ye are commanded to make ſome expence for the love of God: He that ſhall be a niggard, and avaricious in this occurrence, ſhall be avaricious, and a niggard to himſelf. God is rich, and ye are poor; if ye deſpiſe his Law, he will create in your place other perſons, that ſhall not do like you.

CHAP. XLVIII.

The Chapter of Conqueſt, containing twenty nine Verſes, written at Mecca.

This is the Chapter, Of the taking of the City of Mecca.

IN the name of God, gracious and merciful. We have given thee a manifeſt victory. God pardoneth the ſin that thou didſt commit, when thou wert too prompt, and when thou wert too tardy, [to fight for his Law;] he ſhall accompliſh his grace upon thee, he ſhall guide thee into the right way, and ſhall powerfully protect thee; he hath delivered the hearts of the believers from fear, to augment their faith; he diſpoſeth the forces of the Heavens and Earth, he knoweth all, and is moſt prudent. He ſhall make them that ſhall obey his Commandments, to dwell in Gardens, wherein flow many rivers, and ſhall remit to them their offences, this is ſupreme felicity: The Infidels, the wicked, the diſobedient, and unjuſt, that have evil thoughts of God, ſhall be accurſed of his Divine Majeſty, miſery ſhall always purſue them, and his wrath be eternally upon them; he hath prepared for them the pains of Hell. God diſpoſeth the powers of the Heavens and Earth, he is omnipotent and wiſe. We have ſent thee to be witneſs of the deportments of thoſe of thy Nation, to proclaim to them the joys of Paradiſe, and to preach to them the pains of Hell, to the end they may believe in God, and in his Prophet, that they may praiſe him, honour him, and exalt his glory evening and morning: Such as ſhall obey thee, obey God; the hand of God is ſtronger than the hand of men; he that ſhall ſin, ſhall offend againſt his own ſoul; and he that performed what he hath promiſed to God, ſhall have an exceeding great reward. Such of the Arabians as have no inclination to follow thee, ſay, thou imployeſt our wealth and perſons to go with thee, implore therefore pardon of God for us; but they ſpeak not with the mouth, what they have in the heart; Say unto them, who but God is able to do ought for you? if it be his will to bring good or evil upon you, he is omnipotent, and knoweth all that you do. Ye believed that the Prophet and True-believers ſhould be ſlain when they fought for the Law of God; ye believed that they ſhould never return to their houſes. This opinion rejoiced your heart, but you were deceived, and were your ſelves deſtroyed with them that believed not in God, nor his Prophets; God hath prepared the fire of Hell for Infidels; the Kingdom of the Heavens and Earth appertaineth to him, he puniſheth and chaſtiſeth whom he liſteth, he is gracious and merciful. When ye ſhall go to the ſpoil, ſuch as refuſed before to follow you to the fight, will ſay, Permit us to go with you; they would pervert the Word of God. Say unto them, Ye ſhall not follow us in this occaſion, God hath not heretofore ordained it; they will reply, Certainly ye are envious againſt us; on the contrary, they underſtand not the Law of God, except very few among them. Say to the Arabians, that refuſed to follow thee, Ye ſhall be called to fight againſt miſerable men, ye ſhall fight them, nevertheleſs they ſhall ſtill be obedient to God; if ye obey and fight for the Faith, he will largely reward you; if ye deſert his ſervice, as heretofore ye have done, he ſhall ſeverely chaſtiſe you. The blind, the lame, and the ſick, are not obliged to go to the war. He that ſhall obey God and his Prophet, ſhall dwell eternally in Gardens, wherein flow many rivers; and he that ſhall diſobey Gods Commandments, ſhall be puniſhed for his diſobedience. God accepted their action that repaired to thee under the tree, he knew what they had in their hearts; he confirmed their ſteps, and gave them victory, he is omnipotent and wiſe. God had promiſed you great ſpoil, he gave it you, and delivered you from the hands of the people; this ſhall ſerve for a ſign of his omnipotency to the true believers, he will conduct you into the right way; none but you could have atchieved that conqueſt, he well knew that that was for none other, he is omnipotent: if the wicked fight you, they ſhall fly, they ſhall turn the back, and find none to protect them. Obſerve the Law of God againſt them, do as was heretofore commanded you; the Law of God admits no alteration; God hath delivered you from their hands, and delivered them into yours in the midſt of Mecca, having given you victory over them; he beholdeth all their actions, they have deſpiſed the Commandments of his Divine Majeſty, and hindred you heretofore to go to the Temple of Mecca; they are at preſent priſoners; without the aſſiſtance of the True-believers that were within the City with you; ye had not known them, ye had trampled them under foot without diſtinction, and had offended God without knowledg of your ſin. God beſtoweth his mercy on whom he pleaſeth; had ye been ſeparated from the unbelievers, we had ſeverely puniſhed them. When they were ſuccoured of the ignorant, and had ſome advantage, God put his Prophet, and all the believers in a place of ſafety, they had recourſe to the word of force and virtue, wherein they did better than the Infidels; God knoweth all. Aſſuredly the Dream of the Prophet of God was true, when he dreamed that ye were in the Temple of Mecca without fear, your hair ſhaven, and beards trimmed; fear nothing, God knoweth what you know not; in lieu of this Dream, he hath given you a great victory; he it is that hath ſent you his Prophet, to teach you his Law, more ſalutary than all other Laws of the world. It is ſufficient, that God is witneſs that Mahomet is his Prophet, and Apoſtle; it ſufficeth that the True-believers, who are with him, bear teſtimony. God extendeth his mercy towards thoſe Infidels that convert; thou ſhalt ſee them worſhip God, humble themſelves before his Divine Majeſty, and implore his grace; thou ſhalt know them by their aſpect, aſpect, they ſhall have in their countenance the marks of their zeal; it is ſo written in the Old Teſtament and the Goſpel; they are like a Plant that produceth its leaves, that grows ſtrong by little and little, and becometh big, afterwards it taketh ſtrength upon its roots, becometh a great Tree, and the wood thereof ſerveth to make war againſt Infidels. God hath promiſed his mercy, and an exceeding great reward to the Infidels that ſhall be converted, that ſhall believe in his Law, and do good works.

CHAP. XLIX.

The Chapter of Incloſures, containing Eighteen Verſes, written at Medina.

Exteri entituleth this Chapter, The Chapter of Walls.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful. O ye that believe! perfer not what ye have done, to what God and his Prophet hath performed, and fear God, he heareth whatſoever ye ſay, and ſeeth all that you do. O ye that believe! when ye ſhall ſpeak to the Prophet, ſpeak not louder than he; cry not, as when ye talk among your ſelves, leſt ye render your good works vain and unprofitable, and know it not; God hath tried the vertue of them that ſpeak low in the preſence of the Prophet, he ſhall pardon their ſins, and give them an exceeding great reward. They that call thee behind the Incloſures, know not what they do; had they attended until thou hadſt been towards them, they had done very well, God is gracious and merciful. O ye that believe! if any Infidel deſireth to preach to you, diſtinguiſh the truth from a lye; if ye give credit to the ignorant, ye ſhall repent you. Know that the Apoſtle of God is among you; ye ſhall offend God, if ye obey unbelievers in many things; God willeth that ye embrace his Law, it ſhall rejoyce your hearts, and make you to abhor diſobedience and impiety: Such as abhor it, are ſtedfaſt in their faith, through his ſpecial grace, he knoweth them, and is moſt wiſe. If two Nations, or two Provinces, of ſuch as believe in God are at odds, reconcile them; if the one do injury to the other, fight againſt him that is unjuſt, until he repair what God hath ordained; if he make reparation, reconcile them with equity; be juſt, God loveth them that do juſtice to his people: All thoſe that believe in his Law, are brethren; make peace among your brethren, and fear God, he ſhall give you his mercy. O ye that believe! ſcorn not your neighbour, perad venture that he ſhall one day be of better value than you. O ye women! ſcorn not others, perhaps they ſhall one day be more worth than you. Utter no reproaches, and give no name to your neighbour that may diſpleaſe him; call him by his name, otherwiſe ye will diſobey God: Such as repent not, are exceedingly too blame. O ye that believe in God! take heed of evil thoughts, theſe are oftentimes in the number of ſins; do no diſpleaſure to your Neighbour, and ſpeak to each other nothing that may diſpleaſe: Who among you would eat the fleſh of his dead Brother? ye ſhall abhor it; fear therefore God, who is gracious and merciful to ſuch as have his fear before their eyes. O people! we created you Male and Female; we have cauſed to iſſue out of your Loyns, People and Nations; ye know each other, but your greateſt honour is, to fear God, he knoweth you, and underſtandeth all your ſecrets. Some among the Arabians have ſaid, We believe; ſay unto them, Say not we believe, but ſay, We are obedient, otherwiſe faith ſhall not enter into your hearts; if ye obey God and his Prophet, ye ſhall be recompenced for your good works, God is gracious and merciful to them that obey his Commandments. Such as are beloved of God, believe in his Unity, and in his Prophet, they doubt not of his Law, and imploy their perſons and wealth for the propagation of the faith. Say unto them, Know ye not that your Law proceedeth from God? He knoweth whatſoever is in the Heavens and Earth, he knoweth all. They think to do thee a pleaſure in ſaving them, Say unto them, Believe not that ye pleaſure me, for it is God that guideth you into the way of Salvation; ye ought ſo to believe it; God knoweth all that is in the Heavens and Earth, and beholdeth whatſoever ye do.

CHAP. L.

The Chapter of the Thing Judged, containing Forty five Verſes, written at Mecca.

Mahomet hath intituled this Chapter with the Letter Kaf of the Arabique Alphabet, which ſignifieth in this place, Kada el mer, that is to ſay, the thing judged; See Gelaldin; and Bedaoi, who have intituled this, The Chapter of Judgment, or the thing judged. Many Mahometans ſay likewiſe, that Kaf is a Mountain that environeth the World, and that Mahomet ſwore by that Mountain.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful. I ſwear by the Alcoran, worthy of praiſe, that the inhabitants of Mecca wonder that a man of their Nation teacheth them the torments of Hell; they ſay, that he ſpeaketh ſtrange things. What, ſay they, Shall we die? Shall we be Earth, and return into the World? Behold a very ſtrong return! we know aſſuredly what the Earth will do with us, we have a Book, wherein all is written; they impugn the known truth, and are in a great confuſion: See they not Heaven above them, how we have built it, how we have adorned it, and how there is no defect? We have extended the Earth, raiſed the Mountains, and cauſed all ſorts of fruits to ſpring forth, for a ſign of our Omnipotency. We have ſent the bleſſed Rain from Heaven, made Gardens to produce Grain, pleaſing to the Reapers, and Date-trees, exceeding each other in height, to enrich our creatures. We have given life to the dead, dry, and barren Earth; ſo ſhall the dead come out of their ſepulchres. The People of Noah's time, thoſe that inhabited near the Well, Temod, Pharaoh, the fellow-citizens of Lot; they that dwelt in the Foreſt, and People of King Teba, did heretofore traduce our Prophets, and felt the puniſhment denounced againſt Infidels. Was it a trouble to us to create men at firſt? Nevertheleſs they are in doubt if they ſhall riſe again. We created man without difficulty, we know the motions of his Soul, and penetrate into his heart, as the blood into the veins of his Body. O man! think upon the day that thou ſhalt ſee thy good and evil Angel near thee, at the right hand, and on thy left; they have obſerved and written all that thou haſt done; repreſent to thy ſelf death before thine eyes, it is inevitable: Think on the Angel that ſhall ſound the Trumpet at the Day of the Reſurrection; that day ſhall the wicked behold what was promiſed them, and all men ſhall come before God to be judged. Their guardian Angels ſhall conduct them, and be the witneſſes of their deportments: It ſhall be ſaid to the Infidels, Behold the day of which ye would have no thoughts; we have now opened your eyes, ye ſhall ſee this day more hard than Iron; their guardian Angels ſhall ſay unto them, Behold here before your eyes all that ye have done; caſt into Hell thoſe obſtinate Infidels that have hindred their Neighbour to do good, that have offended in doubting of God's Law, and have affirmed there was another God with God; caſt them into the moſt grievous torments. Then ſhall the Devil ſay to them, Lord, I did not ſeduce them, they ſeduced themſelves; God ſhall ſay, Diſpute not before me, what was heretofore promiſed you is infallible, my Word admitteth no alteration, and I will do injuſtice to none. God ſhall ask at the Day of Judgment, If Hell be full? It ſhall anſwer, Is there any more? Paradiſe is prepared for the Righteous, who ſhall have the fear of God before their eyes, it is promiſed to them that ſhall be converted, that ſhall obey the Commandments of his Divine Majeſty, and perſevere in their obedience. It ſhall be ſaid to them, Enter ye into Paradiſe, exempt from all evil; behold the eternal day, ye ſhall have all that ye ſhall deſire, and more. How rich and powerful Cities have we in times paſt deſtroyed? Their inhabitants ſought in their Countries places of retreat, and eſcaped not the puniſhment of their crimes; this ought to ſerve for example to them that comprehend it, to them that hear it, and to ſuch that ſaw it. Certainly we created in Six days, without difficulty, the Heaven and Earth, and all that is between them. Perſevere, be not impatient for the words of unbelievers, exalt the glory of thy Lord before the Sun go down, and before it riſe; pray to thy Lord at the entrance of the Night, the laſt of all ſhall be worſhip. Hearken when the Angel ſhall call thee to general Judgment; that day ſhall all the World hear the Trumpet; the people ſhall come out of their ſepulchres, and Earth ſhall open before the eyes of men. I give life and death, and all the World ſhall be aſſembled before me to be judged. This aſſembly is eaſie for me to accompliſh; I know what the wicked ſay, thou ſhalt not cauſe them by force to embrace my Law: Teach it thoſe that fear the torments prepared for Infidels.

CHAP. LI.

The Chapter of Things diſperſed, containing Sixty Verſes, written at Mecca.

Gelaldin and Falkredin intitle this, the Chapter of things that diſperſe.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful. I ſwear by the Winds that diſperſe the duſt, by the Clouds charged with Rain, by the Ship that runneth upon the Waters, and by them that divide the Wealth of the Earth; that what hath been promiſed to you, is true, and that the Day of Judgment is infallible. I ſwear by Heaven, and the Stars thereof, that ye are in an exceeding great error; God expelleth lyars far from him, he curſeth them that blaſpheme, and ſuch as believe not in the Reſurrection: They ask, When ſhall be the Day of Judgment? That day ſhall they be puniſhed in the Fire of Hell. It ſhall be ſaid unto them, Taſte the torments that ye have with impatience demanded. They who had the fear of God before their eyes, ſhall be in Gardens, adorned with Fountains, they ſhall enjoy the pleaſures prepared for them by God, becauſe they are Righteous; they ſleep very little by Night, implore pardon of God at the dawning of the Day, and give alms to the poor that beg, and the poor that are bathful. God manifeſteth on the Earth, and in your perſons, the ſigns of his Omnipotency; conſider ye not that what is promiſed to you is written in Heaven? God is Lord of Heaven and Earth, he is truth it ſelf, will ye not confeſs him? Did the Angels convey to thee the books of Abraham? When they entred into his Houſe, they ſaluted him; he likewiſe ſaluted them, made ſigns to his ſervants to bring a fat Calf roaſted, which he preſented to them; he ſaid unto them, Wherefore do ye not eat? And was afraid in his mind, of their coming: They ſaid, Fear not, we are the Meſſengers of God; they declared to him that he ſhould have a Son, that ſhould be a great perſonage. Then his wife drew near, crying with a loud voice, and ſmiting her Face, ſaid, One that is barren beareth no Child? they ſaid, The thing ſhall come to paſs as we have ſpoken, thy Lord ordaineth what pleaſeth him, and knoweth all. Abraham ſaid unto them, O ye Meſſengers of God! what is your deſign? They replied, We are ſent from God to deſtroy the Cities inhabited by the wicked, and caſt upon them ſtones of Fire, whereon are inſcribed the names of them that they ſhall ſtrike: We will cauſe all the Righteous to depart from among them; if we find there but one Family of Righteous, we will there leave an example to Poſterity for them that fear the torments of Hell. Moſes is a ſign of our omnipotency; we ſent him to Pharaoh with reaſons clear and intelligible, he deſpiſed my Commandments, and ſaid, That Moſes was a Magician, and poſſeſſed of the Devil, but we ſurpriſed him, and drowned his People, to his great diſpleaſure; Aad is an example of our Omnipotency: We ſent an impetuous Wind againſt thoſe wicked people, that deſtroyed them. Temod is an example of our Omnipotency, with his Nation; they waxed proud, and reſiſted the Commandments of their Lord; when it was ſaid to them, that the puniſhment of the wicked was deferred to another time; but Thunder ſurpriſed them, they ſaw it, they had not the power to ſtand on their feet, and were deprived of protection. The People of Noah's time are an example of our Omnipotency, we deſtroyed them, becauſe they were impious: We built Heaven with ſtrength and virtue; I am he that giveth power and ſtrength; we extended the Earth, and created of every thing, Male and Female; perhaps ye will conſider it. Say unto them, Turn ye to God; I am ſent from him to preach to you the pains of Hell: Believe not that God hath another God with him; the wicked ſaid heretofore, that the Prophets and Apoſtles whom he ſent, were Magicians, and poſſeſſed of the Devil: Have they recommended to their Poſterity to do the like? Certainly they are in a great error. Separate thy ſelf far from their company, and be not troubled at what they preach the Alcoran, it is profitable to the Righteous. I did not create the Devils and men but to worſhip me. Say unto them, I require nothing of unbelievers for inſtructing them; I require not that they nouriſh me, God enricheth whom he he pleaſeth, he is omnipotent; the wicked ſhall be chaſtiſed as heretofore have been their predeceſſors, in their malice, their time ſhall come, and miſery ſhall befal them at the day of Judgment.

CHAP. LII.

The Chapter of the Mountain, containing thirty nine Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the name of God gracious and merciful. I ſwear by the Mountain, upon which God ſpake to Moſes, by what is contained in the book written in parchment, by the firſt Temple of Mecca, by the arches of the heavens, and by the ſea full of water, that God is one ſole God, and the puniſhment promiſed to unbelievers is infallible, they ſhall not be able to eſcape it in the day when the heaven ſhall tremble, and the mountains ſhall walk; that day ſhall be unhappy to the incredulous, they ſhall be precipitated in the fire of hell; it ſhall be ſaid to them, behold the flames that ye deſpiſed; is this Magick? See ye it not? enter, have patience, or ye will deſpair; ye ſhall be chaſtiſed after your demerits. They that ſhall have the fear of God before their eyes, ſhall be in delicious gardens, which God hath prepared for them, and ſhall be delivered from the pains of hell; It ſhall be ſaid unto them, Drink and eat at your pleaſure, for recompence of your good works; they ſhall repoſe upon beds well ordered, we will marry them to wives that ſhall have fair eyes, they ſhall be attended of their family, and be largely rewarded for their good works; every good action ſhall be to them a degree of happineſs; We will give them ſuch fruits and Vines as they ſhall deſire; they ſhall preſent to each other the cup to drink, they ſhall not ſpeak an evil word, and ſhall not ſin; they ſhall have Pages about them for their ſervice beautiful as poliſhed pearls, they ſhall diſcourſe among them, concerning what they did before on Earth, and ſay, We were in the world, we and our families, with a great apprehenſion of the pains of hell, but God hath gratified us, he hath delivered us from eternal flames. They ſhall ſay moreover, we worſhipped in the world but one God, moſt juſt, and moſt merciful. Remember thou to preach the Alcoran; thou art not ingrateful for the grace of God, thou art not poſſeſſed of the Devil; will they ſay that thou art a Poet, a Rimer? that nothing muſt be expected from thee but fables of paſt Ages? Say unto them, ye expect the time of my deſtruction, but I with you, expect the time of your [ruine.] Do their Superiors command them to ſpeak in this manner? Will they be obſtinate in their errors? Will they ſay, that Mahomet hath invented the Alcoran! Certainly they are incredulous, let them bring any diſcourſe like to this book, in Doctrine and Eloquence, if what they affirm be true. Were they created of any thing? have they created any thing? have they created themſelves? have they created the Heavens and the Earth? Certainly they are incredulous: Have they in their power the treaſures of thy Lord? are they Giants? Have they a ladder, that may raiſe them to hear what is ſpoken in Heaven? let them produce ſome reaſon of their opinion; Believe ye that God hath daughters, and that ye have ſons? Will ye require of him a Salary for obeying his Law? Is he your debtor? The wicked are lyars; do they know what ſhall be? do they write it? Deſire they to conſpire againſt thee? The wicked often conſpire againſt the righteous, that worſhip but one God: Praiſed be God, he hath no companion; If the Infidels ſhould ſee a piece of the heaven to fall, they would ſay, It is a cloud driven by the winds; leave them in their obſtinacy until they come to the day of their death, that day ſhall their conſpiracy be vain, and they deprived of protection: They likewiſe ſhall be puniſhed before their death, but the greateſt part know it not. Have patience, and expect the Judgment of God, thou ſhalt ſoon ſee it; I will protect thee, and thou ſhalt not want help; Praiſe thy Lord, exalt his glory when thou ſhalt riſe, praiſe him in the night, and before the Stars diſappear.

CHAP. LIII.

The Chapter of the Star, containing ſixty Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the name of God, gracious and merciful. I ſweat by the Star that diſappeareth, that your friend Mahomet erreth not, he ſpeaketh nothing of his own, he ſpeaketh but what hath been inſpired into him by the omnipotent and moſt bountiful God. The Angel approached him in the higheſt place of Heaven, within the length of two bowes, and ſomewhat nearer; God hath inſpired into him. what he hath inſpired into his ſervant, who altered nothing of what hath been inſpired into him. He hath ſpoken what he hath ſeen, and in what form the Angel was. Diſpute not againſt him concerning what he ſaw; he another time ſaw the Angel in heaven, near to the Tree that is at the right ſide of Gods throne; and although that tree was covered with that which covered him, his ſight was not dazled, and he is not in error. Certainly he hath ſeen the great wonders of his Lord: Have ye conſidered Alat, Aza, and Menat, thoſe three Idols? Will ye ſwear that God hath daughters, and that ye have ſons? Ye will make a falſe oath, and ſhall be in a manifeſt error; Thoſe Idols have nothing but the names which your fathers and you have given them, God hath not commanded you to worſhip them. Ye follow only your paſſions, remote from the truth, God teacheth you the way of Salvation by the mouth of his Prophet; doth man obtain from Idols what he required of them? God is God in the beginning, and the end; How many Angels be there in Heaven, whoſe prayers are unprofitable, if God doth not accept them? They that believe not in the day of Judgment, ſay, that Angels are Maidens; they underſtand not what they ſay, they ſpeak through opinion, and that opinion is not conformed to truth. Depart thou far from them that reject our Law, and deſire only the goods of the Earth, and are ignorant of all other things. Thy Lord knoweth them that go aſtray from the right way, and ſuch as follow the path of Salvation; all that is in the Heavens, and Earth, is Gods, he ſhall chaſtiſe the wicked, and reward the juſt. He pardoneth their venial ſins, who flie ſins mortal, he is exceeding merciful. He knoweth that he hath created you of Earth, and that he formed you in in your Mothers womb. Extol not your ſelves, he knoweth ſuch as have his fear before their eyes. Haſt thou ſeen him that abandoneth the faith? A little wealth was given him, and nothing more; doth he know what muſt befal him? Hath he knowledg of what is to come? Will he not learn what is written in the books of Moſes, and Abraham? To wit, that none ſhall bear the burden of another: man ſhall have but what he ſhall have gained; he ſhall in the end ſee his labour be rewarded after his works, and all ſhall appear in the preſence of thy Lord. He it is that cauſeth to laugh and mourn, to live and to die; he created the Male and Female of every thing, he giveth and taketh away mans ſoul when he liſteth; he is moſt Rich, and hath no want of any perſon. He is the Lord of the Planet, which men adored. He deſtroyed Aad, and Temod, drowned the People of Noah, who were moſt erroneous and unjuſt, overthrew the City of Lot, and covered it with burning ſtone. In whom will they believe, if they believe not in thy Lord? This Prophet is ſent to preach to you the pains of Hell, as did the other Prophets that were before you; the Day of Judgment approacheth, and none but God knoweth when it will come; wonder ye at this diſcourſe? Ye ſcoff, and lament not when ye are ſpoken to; but ye ſhall be ſurprized in your ſin, if ye humble not your ſelves before God, neither worſhip him.

CHAP. LIV.

The Chapter of the Moon, containing Fifty five Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful. The Day of Judgment approacheth, the Moon was divided into two parts, nevertheleſs Infidels believe not Miracles when they ſee them; they ſay that this is Magick, they lye, and follow but their paſſion, but all is written. The Hiſtory of paſt Ages, full of ſalutary Counſels, was preached to them; nevertheleſs Preachers were to them unprofitable; depart thou far from them, when they ſhall be called to the Univerſal Judgment, which they will not believe; that Day ſhall their eyes be troubled with fear; they ſhall come out of the Earth, diſperſed, like frighted Graſshoppers, they ſhall flock to him that ſhall ſummon them to Judgment, and ſhall ſay, Behold here a Day, unhappy for the wicked. The People heretofore belyed Noah, and ſaid, That he was poſſeſſed of the Devil, Noah exhorted them, and invoked his Lord; in the end, he ſaid, That his ſtrength was gone, and that he was overcome through the malice of men; then was he powerfully ſuccoured; we opened the gates of the Heavens, and cauſed an extraordinary Rain to fall; we cauſed Fountains to iſſue forth from under the Earth, the water of Heaven and Earth were gathered together, and overwhelmed the Infidels, becauſe of their ſins: We ſaved Noah in the Ark, well pinned, and chaulked, it floated upon the waters through our permiſſion, to ſerve for a token of our Omnipotency; will any of the unbelievers of this time conſider this? Will they conſider the puniſhment of their crimes, and the pains of Hell? We have made the Alcoran eaſie to be underſtood, will there be any that ſtudy it? The wicked that traduced Aad were chaſtiſed, but with what chaſtiſement? We ſent againſt them an impetuous wind, in a day to them unfortunate, that cauſed men to fall like Palms rooted up; conſider what was their puniſhment; we have rendred the Alcoran intelligible, will there be any one that will ſtudy it? Temod and his People traduced the Prophets, and contemned their exhortations; they ſaid, There is a man among us, who would ſeduce us from the right way, if ye follow him, he will lead you into Hell; was he alone elected among us to receive the inſpirations of God? No, he is an Impoſtor; but in the end, they know them that were wicked, and lyars. We ſent the Camel to prove the Infidels; their Prophet obſerved what they did, and was patient, the water was divided for them, and for the Camel, and each at his day found to drink, nevertheleſs they called their companions, and ſlew the Camel of Salhe, but in what manner were they chaſtiſed? I darted Thunder againſt them, which made them dry as Chaff; we have made the Alcoran eaſie to be underſtood, Will there be any to ſtudy it? Lot's Citizens traduced him, and deſpiſed his inſtructions; we ſent againſt them an hot wind, with burning ſtones, that deſtroyed them, and we in the Morning ſaved Lot, with his Family, through our ſpecial grace; thus do I recompence them that acknowledge my benefits. Lot had preached to them the pains of Hell, we ſurprized them; when they diſputed againſt his exhortations, they ſaw his gueſts enter into the City, in the figure of men; we blinded their ſight, and ſaid, Taſte oh ye wicked! the puniſhment of your crimes; in the Morning they were chaſtiſed with a perpetual chaſtiſement, becauſe they deſpiſed the words of Lot. We have made the Alcoran intelligible, will there be any that will ſtudy it? Certainly the men of Pharaoh were preached unto; they would not obey my Law, and deſpiſed my Miracles, but we ſurprized them in their ſins; Are the Infidels that are among you of more value than thoſe that preceded them? Find ye any Salvation for them in the Scripture? Will they ſay they ſhall obtain victory over the believers? On the contrary, they are vanquiſhed, and turn the back. Certainly the hour of their puniſhment ſhall ſpeedily come, their time approacheth, and their pain in Hell ſhall be greater than that of the Earth, they are wholly ſeduced from the way of Salvation, and ſhall be dragged, and caſt headlong into Eternal flames. We have created all things by our ſole power; we ſpake but one word, and in the twinkling of an eye the thing was; we heretofore deſtroyed a great number of Infidels like unto them, will there be any that conſidereth it? All the good and the evil that they have done is exactly written. The Righteous ſhall dwell in pleaſant Gardens, they ſhall drink in Eternal Rivers, they ſhall not ſpeak a Lye in their Aſſemblies, and ſhall dwell eternally near to the moſt Majeſtique and Omnipotent God.

CHAP LV.

The Chapter of the Merciful, containing eighteen Verſes, written at Medina.

IN the name of God gracious and merciful. The merciful hath taught the Alcoran; he hath created man, and given him the uſe of reaſon; he created the Sun and the Moon to count ſeaſons, the Stars and Trees adore him; he hath elevated the Heavens, eſtabliſhed Juſtice, and commanded to weigh with good weights; he hath created the Earth for the habitation of men, with all ſorts of fruits, grain, and leaves; he created the winds and tempeſts: Oh men and Devils! what Lord do ye blaſpheme, but your own Lord? He created man of Earth, like a pot, and the Devils of the flame of fire: what Lord do ye blaſpheme, but your own Lord? He is the Lord of both the Weſts, and both the Eaſts, what Lord do you blaſpheme, but your own Lord? He maketh the freſh water to mingle with the ſalt, and the one eaſily mingleth with the other: what Lord do ye blaſpheme, but your own Lord? he bringeth Pearls and Coral out of the Sea; what Lord do ye blaſpheme, but your own Lord? he hath created the Ships that float upon the Sea, big as Mountains; what Lord do ye blaſpheme, but your own Lord? all things ſhall have end, and the majeſtique and glorious face of thy Lord ſhall be permanent; what Lord do ye blaſpheme, but your own Lord? Whatſoever is in Heaven and in Earth, imploreth his grace, he is ever himſelf; what Lord do ye blaſpheme, but your own Lord? Oh ye men and Devils! I will require an account of your actions; what Lord will ye blaſpheme, but your own Lord? Oh ye men and Devils! paſs the extremities of Heaven and Earth, go beyond them if ye can, ye have not the power; what Lord do ye blaſpheme, but your own Lord? If he ſend againſt you flames without ſmoak, and ſmoak without fire, ye cannot defend your ſelves; what Lord do you blaſpheme, but your own Lord? When the heaven openeth, it reſembleth a roſe, or a crimſon-coloured skin; what Lord do ye blaſpheme, but your own Lord? The time will come, when an account ſhall be required from men and Devils of their ſins: what Lord do ye blaſpheme, but your own Lord? The wicked ſhall be known by their countenance, an account ſhall be required of their readineſs and negligence; what Lord do ye blaſpheme, but your own Lord? Behold hell! which the wicked would not believe; they ſhall turn round about, and round about in boyling water, of which they ſhall drink; what Lord do ye blaſpheme, but your own Lord? Such as have had the fear of God before their eyes, ſhall enter into gardens, where the trees are covered with branches and leaves, adorned with Rivers and fountains, with abundance of all ſorts of fruits; what Lord do ye blaſpheme, but your own Lord? They ſhall repoſe upon fair beds, lined with Crimſon; what Lord do ye blaſpheme, but your own Lord? They ſhall gather the fruits of this garden, to their contentment; what Lord do ye blaſpheme, but your own Lord? They ſhall there have wives, who ſhall not caſt [illegible] upon them, and whom no perſon, man or Angel ſhall touch before them; what Lord do ye blaſpheme, but your Lord? They ſhall reſemble Coral and Rubies; what Lord do ye blaſpheme, but your own Lord? Good deeds are recompenced with good deeds; what Lord do ye blaſpheme, but your own Lord? There be yet other Gardens, wherein are herbs exceeding green, Rivers, Dates, Pomegranets, and all ſorts of fruits; what Lord do ye blaſpheme, but your own Lord? There be in theſe Gardens women, who have eyes exceeding black, and bodies exceeding white, they are covered with pavillions, and none, either men, or Angels ſhall touch them before their husbands; what Lord do ye blaſpheme, but your own Lord? They ſhall repoſe upon green Carpets, near rivolets, bordered with flowers; what Lord do ye blaſpheme, but your own Lord? Praiſed be the name of God thy Lord, honour and glory are due to him eternally.

CHAP. LVI.

The Chapter of Judgment, containing fourſcore and nineteen Verſes, written at Medina.

IN the name of God, gracious and merciful. The day of Judgment will come, none can deny it. That day ſhall many be afflicted and humbled, and many ſhall be elated, and rejoyced; the Earth ſhall tremble, the Mountain open, and be diſperſed like duſt carried away by the wind; ye ſhall be preſent at that day, in a threefold manner; † Some ſhall have in their right hand the book, wherein ſhall be written all their actions, * Others ſhall have it in their left hand, and † ſuch as preceded them in well-doing, ſhall be the neareſt to his divine Majeſty, and the higheſt in Paradiſe; * there ſhall be a great number of the firſt Ages, and few of the latter; they ſhall repoſe upon beds, adorned with Gold, and precious ſtones; they ſhall look upon each other; young boys ſhall go about them with veſſels, Cups, and Goblets, full of delicious drink, that ſhall not offend the head, neither intoxicate them; they ſhall have all the fruits that they can covet, and ſuch viands as they ſhall deſire; they ſhall have women with black eyes, and who ſhall be white as poliſhed pearls, for recompence of their good works; they ſhall not hear an evil word ſpoken, they ſhall not ſin, and ſhall hear perpetually the voice of them that bleſs them; They that ſhall hold their book in their right hand, ſhall be near to an Apple-tree, freſh and without thorn, and near the Tree of † Muſe, under a pleaſant ſhadow, by flowing water, with ſtore of fruits of all ſeaſons: they ſhall uſe [them] with freedom, lying on delicious beds. We have created the daughters of Paradiſe Virgins, and affectionate to their husbands, for the content of them that ſhall have in their right hands the book of the account of their actions, and of many of thoſe that were in the firſt Ages, and of many of ſuch as ſhall be in the latter: Thoſe that ſhall have their book of account in the left hand, ſhall be tormented with an exceeding hot wind, they ſhall drink boiling water, they ſhall be in a black, hot, and ſalt ſmoak, for that they were luxurious in the world, for that they were negligent to obſerve the Commandments of God, and continued in the enormity of their ſins. The Infidels ſay, what! after death we ſhall be earth, and duſt, and ſhall we riſe again with our fathers and predeceſſors? Say unto them, You, your Predeceſſors, and poſterity, ſhall all be aſſembled befor:

† Theſe are the Bleſſed. * Theſe are the Damned. † The Prophets.

† Muſe is a fruit common in Egypt.

God to be judged; Then, oh wicked Impoſtors! ſhall ye eat of the fruit of the Tree * Zacon; ye ſhall fill your belly, ye ſhall drink boiling water, and be daily altered; behold your condition at the day of Judgment. We created all of you; if ye believe it not, conſider the wealth ye poſſeſs; did you, your ſelves create it? We have appointed that ye ſhall dye; we can if we pleaſe, put other creatures like unto you in your place, and metamorphize you into another form, which ye know not; we cauſed the ſoul to enter into the body; if ye conſider not this, think upon your tillage; do ye make the earth to bring forth fruits? or do I cauſe them to ſpring forth? If I will, I can render your fields drie as ſtraw, without grain, nevertheleſs are ye proud; Ye ſay, what! ſhall our grain that we have ſown be loſt? No, we will preſerve it; Conſider the water that ye drink, have ye made it to fall from the clouds? or did we cauſe it to deſcend? if we pleaſe, we can render it ſo ſalt, that ye ſhall not be able to drink it; if ye acknowledg not this grace, conſider the fire that ye kindle; did ye create the wood that burneth? We created it, to put you in mind of the fire of Hell, and for the profit of the people. Exalt the name of God moſt mighty. I ſwear by him that maketh the Stars to fall, (this is a great oath, if ye underſtand it,) that the Alcoran is a book worthy of praiſe, all therein is written in good order, no perſon ſhall handle it that is not clean and purified; it is ſent from God, Lord of the Univerſe: If ye renounce what is written in this book, ye ſhall be in the number of Infidels, and ſhall know the truth when the ſoul ſhall forſake your body; I know this better than you, but ye do not conſider it; if ye believe not to riſe again, cauſe your ſoul to return into your body, when it ſhall be upon your lips; when a righteous man dyeth, he ſhall find reſt, and all manner of contentment in the delights of Paradiſe, if he be of them that hold the book of the account of their works in the right hand, and ſhall be free from eternal pains: If he be in the number of Infidels, and ſeduced, he ſhall be precipitated into hell; this is a moſt certain truth, Exalt the name of thy Lord Omnipotent.

* Zacon is the tree of Hell. See Gelaldin.

CHAP. LVII.

The Chapter of Iron, containing twenty nine Verſes, written at Medina.

IN the name of God gracious and merciful. All that is in the heavens and earth, exalteth the glory of God, he is omnipotent and wiſe; the Kingdom of the Heavens and Earth is his, he giveth life and death to whom he pleaſeth; he is without beginning, and without end, he knoweth all that men make manifeſt, and whatſoever they keep ſecret, he knoweth all things. He it is that created the earth and the heavens in ſix days, and ſitteth on his throne, he knoweth whatſoever entreth into the earth, and all that cometh out; he knoweth whatſoever deſcendeth from heaven, and whatſoever aſcendeth, he is with you in whatſoever place ye are, and ſeeth all your actions; the Kingdom of the heavens and earth is his, and all things obey him; He maketh the night to enter the day, and knoweth what is in the heart of men. Believe in God and his Prophet, expend in pious works ſome part of the wealth that he hath given you, he ſhall give you more. Do good abundantly to them that believe in his Law; wherefore will ye not believe in God, and his Apoſtle, who teacheth you the Commandments of your Lord? Ye have promiſed him to embrace his Law; he hath inſpired his Commandments into his ſervant, to bring you out of darkneſs, and guide you into light; he is gracious and merciful. Who hindreth you to make any expence for his glory? The inheritance of the heavens and earth is his; Such as for his ſervice have expended any thing before the taking of Mecca, are not equal in merit to them that fought to conquer that City; they are far above them that fought not, and ſhall be protected of his divine Majeſty; he promiſeth Paradiſe to the righteous, and knoweth all your actions. Who is he that ſhall lend to him any alms? he ſhall encreaſe his ſubſtance, and give a great reward: Be thou mindful of the day when thou ſhalt ſee thoſe men and women that have obeyed my Commandments, with a light that ſhall go before them; it ſhall be ſaid to them, this day it is declared to you, that you ſhall enter into, and dwell eternally in Gardens, wherein flow many Rivers, and where ye ſhall find ſupreme felicity. Be thou mindful of the day that the wicked ſhall ſay to the True believers, Behold us, caſt your eye to our ſide, that we may partake a little of your light. They ſhall ſay unto them, Return upon your ſteps to demand light. There is a place, betwixt them, that hath a ſecret gate, full of grace, and repoſe for the righteous, and without, environed with miſery for the wicked; they ſhall call upon the righteous, and ſay, Were not we of your Religion? they ſhall reply, Yes, but ye betrayed your ſouls through diſobedience; ye doubted of the Law of God; your blaſphemies rendred you inſolent, until the hour of your death; the Devil made you proud, and moved you to riſe againſt the Commandments of his divine Majeſty: this day there is neither ranſome, nor favour for you: the fire of hell is the habitation of the wicked. Oh what an habitation! Such as believe in God think it no trouble to humble their hearts at the remembrance of the Alcoran, and the truth that it containeth; they are are not like them that heretofore had the knowledg of the written Law, they have been a long time without Prophets, their hearts are hardned, and the greateſt part of them have been impious. Know, that God reſtoreth life to the earth after the death thereof: we have taught you the myſteries of faith, peradventure ye will comprehend them; God ſhall multiply the benefits that the righteous ſhall lend to him, and ſhall return them a great reward: Such as believe in God and his Prophet, are righteous: Martyrs ſhall be recompenced of God, they ſhall be covered with light, and the wicked that diſobey his Commandments ſhall be damned eternally: the life of this world is but vanity, ſport, and deluſion, it is but pride: the abundance of wealth, and children, is like to the rain: the wicked wonder at the plants that it produceth; in the end they wither, become yellow, and then are altogether dry; the impious ſhall ſuffer great torments, and the good ſhall enjoy the mercy of God; the life of this world is but matter of pride, implore pardon of God; Paradiſe, large as heaven and earth, is prepared for them that ſhall believe in his divine Majeſty, Majeſty, and his Prophet, this is an immenſe grace, which he conferreth on whom he pleaſeth. All the evil that ye ſuffer on earth, in your goods and perſons, is written in a Book, before it befal you; it is an eaſie thing to God; to the end that ye afflict not your ſelves extraordinarily in your diſpleaſures, and that ye rejoyce not over-much in your contentments; God loveth not the proud, he hath not to do with the covetous, who recommend avarice to the People, and who neglect their duty. Praiſe is due to him, praiſe is due to him in all places; certainly we ſent our Meſſengers with our Commandments, we ſent with them their Scriptures, and Ballance, that People might weigh with good weights. We gave Iron to men, it cauſeth great evils, and great good in the World, God knoweth them that fight with zeal for his Law and his Prophet, without ſeeing him, he is Strong and Omnipotent. We ſent Noah and Abraham to inſtruct the People; we inſtructed their Progeny in the Scripture; ſome followed the right way, and many diſobeyed our Commandments; we ſent after them our Prophets and Apoſtles; we ſent Jeſus the Son of Mary, we taught him the Goſpel; we put civility, clemency, and chaſtity into the hearts of them that followed him; we did not command them to keep Virginity, they kept it of their own accord, becauſe of their deſire they had to pleaſe God; they have not obſerved their Law as they ought, many have been diſobedient, but we have rewarded thoſe among them that believed. O ye that believe in Jeſus! fear God, and believe in his Prophet, ye ſhall have double the reward of God's mercy, he ſhall pardon your ſins, he is gracious and merciful: I teach you theſe things, to the end that ſuch as have heretofore received the written Law, may know, that they have no power over the grace of God, he giveth it to whom he liſteth, certainly it is immenſe.

CHAP. LVIII.

The Chapter of the Diſpute, containing Twenty two Verſes, written at Medina.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful. God hath heard the ſpeech of her that diſputed with thee, concerning the action of her Husband; ſhe exhibited to him her complaints, he heareth all your diſcourſes, he heareth and ſeeth all. No perſon among you ſhall ſwear never to touch his Wife no more than his Mother; your wives are not your mothers; your Mothers are thoſe that conceived and brought you forth; they that ſpeak in that manner, ſpeak uncivilly, but God is gracious and merciful. He that ſhall have ſworn to touch no more his Wife, and ſhall deſire (afterwards) to know her, ſhall give liberty to a Slave, for ſatisfaction of his Oath, before he touch her; this is commanded you, God knoweth all your actions: if he have not the power to free a Slave, he ſhall faſt two Months together, before touching her; if he cannot faſt, he ſhall give to Fifty poor: Thus ought ye to do, if ye believe in God and his Prophet, God ſo appointed it, and hath prepared great tormets for them that tranſgreſs his Commandments. They that ſhall diſobey him and the Prophet, ſhall be covered with ſhame and ignominy, as were their Predeceſſors in impiety; God hath ſent his Commandments on Earth, thoſe who ſhall reject them, ſhall be ſeverely tormented at the day that he ſhall revive them, he ſhall declare to them all that they have done, he hath kept account, and they have forgotten it, he ſeeth all. Seeſt thou not that all that is in the Heaven and Earth is Gods? If ye be Three ſecretly met together, he is the Fourth; if ye be Five, he is the Sixth; if ye be more or leſs, he is always with you whereſoever you are. He ſhall relate to men at the Day of Judgment all that they have done, he knoweth all things. Seeſt thou not the actions of them to whom private meetings were prohibited? They return to their ſin, and do what was forbidden them; they aſſemble ſecretly with malice to conſpire againſt thee, and to diſobey thee; and when they come towards thee, they ſay, that thou haſt ſpoken things that God hath not inſpired thee to utter; they know in their Souls that God will chaſtiſe them for their diſcourſe, and that they all ſhall go into Hell, where their Rendezvous is: Oh ye that believe! make no private meetings to offend God, to conſpire againſt his Prophet, and to diſobey him; aſſemble ye to perform acts of Virtue, and to ſerve God; have his fear before your eyes, ye ſhall once appear before his Divine Majeſty to be judged. Private aſſemblies proceed from the Devil, for the affliction of the Righteous: He bringeth no evil upon them, but through God's permiſſion; and all believers ought to reſign themſelves to his Divine Will. O ye that believe! when ye ſhall be aſſembled with your Prophet, and are entreated to inlarge your ſelves, inlarge ye your ſelves, God ſhall inlarge to you his grace. When ye are bid to riſe, riſe, God ſhall raiſe up all the True believers that are among you, and place the learned ſome degrees above others, he knoweth your actions. O ye that believe! when ye ſhall be diſpoſed to deliver any ſecret to the prophet, ſpeak to him with truth, good ſhall befal you, and [he] ſhall purifie you: If ye fear to impart to him your ſecret, God will not give you his grace. Make your prayers at the time appointed, diſtribute Tithes, obey God and his Prophet, God knoweth what ye do: Seeſt thou not them that have abandoned his Law? The wrath of his Divine Majeſty is faln upon them, they are of different opinion in their lye, and know not that they lye, but he hath prepared for them a great puniſhment, becauſe of their blaſphemies; they have concealed their Faith, and are ſeduced; certainly he hath prepared for them grievous pains, their Wealth and their Children ſhall not be able to deliver them from his Indignation, they ſhall be precipitated into the Fire of Hell, where they ſhall abide eternally. Be thou mindful of the day, when he will cauſe them to revive; they ſhall ſwear, as they ſwear before thee, that they believed in his Law; they affirm they do good, and are Lyars, the Devil hath prepoſſeſſed them, and hath made them forget the word of God; ſuch as follow him are damned. They that tranſgreſs the will of God, and that of his Prophet, are overcome of the Devil; God hath ſaid in the Scriptures, thou ſhalt not obtain victory over me, neither over my Prophet, he is Omnipotent, and alway victorious; thou ſhalt find none of them that believe in his Law, and the Day of Judgment, that doth not exactly obſerve the Commandments of his Divine Majeſty, and thoſe of his Prophet, although their Fathers, their Children, their Brethren, and companions oppoſe them. God hath imprinted Faith in their hearts, he hath ſtrengthened them through his Spirit, and ſhall cauſe them to enter into gardens, wherein flow many Rivers, where they ſhall abide eternally: He ſhall be ſatisfied with their obedience, and they ſhall be content with his grace. Such as ſhall obey his Commandments ſhall be happy.

wherein

CHAP. LIX.

The Chapter of Exile, containing Twenty four Verſes, written at Medina.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful: Whatſoever is in the Heavens and Earth, exalteth the glory of God, he is Omnipotent and Wiſe; he it is that hath exiled the wicked from among them that have knowledg of the written Law; when he the firſt time exiled them, ye believed not that they ſhould depart from their Houſes; ye believed that their Cittadels would defend them from his puniſhment, but he ſurprized them, and did caſt terror into their hearts, and they deſtroyed their dwelling places with their own hands, to aſſiſt the True believers. O ye that are wiſe! conſider their end. If God had not appointed them to quit their Countrey, he had chaſtiſed them in ſome other manner; they in the end ſhall ſuffer the pains of Hell fire, becauſe they have diſobeyed his Commandments, and his Prophet; he that ſhall diſobey him, ſhall be ſorely chaſtiſed: ye cut not Palm-trees, and leave none ſtanding, but through Gods permiſſion; he covereth with ſhame and infamy them that diſobey him. He commandeth you to give to the Prophet a part of the ſpoil that ye ſhall gain from your enemies, as well of Horſes and Camels, as of other ſpoils; he endueth him with power and authority over whom he pleaſeth, he is Omnipotent. He enjoineth you to give to the Prophet a part of what ye ſhall conquer over them of the City of Mecca; he commandeth what pleaſeth him. Give a ſhare to God, to the Prophet, his Parents, Orphaus, the poor, and Pilgrims, that no diſorder may ariſe among you that are rich; perform what the Prophet ſhall command you, abſtain from what he ſhall prohibit you, and fear God, he is ſevere in his chaſtiſements: Do good to the poor, that have forſaken their faculties and houſes, and ſeparated themſelves from the wicked, for the Service of God, and to defend his Law and Prophet. They that before them forſook their houſes for the Service of God, affect thoſe that have followed them, they bear them no malice for the wealth they poſſeſs, although themſelves are neceſſitous. They that are not avaricious, ſhall be happy; ſuch as ſhall ſucceed them, ſhall pray for them, and ſay, Lord, pardon our ſins, and our brethren, that were our Predeceſſors in the obſervance of thy Commandments; infuſe no malice into our hearts againſt them that follow thy Law, thou art gracious and merciful: Seeſt thou not, that the wicked ſay to their brethren, wicked as themſelves, Had ye not ſo ſoon left Medina, we had gone out with you, and had never obeyed him whom ye have obeyed; had ye fought, we had defended you; God ſeeth that they are impious; had they delayed to go forth, they ſhould not have gone forth with them; had they fought, they would not have ſuccoured them, they had turned the back, and had found no protection; they fear men more than God, becauſe they are ignorant. [The Jews] ſhall not fight againſt you together, unleſs in their Fortreſſes, and behind Walls; the War among them is cruel, but think not that they may aſſemble and unite themſelves, their hearts are divided becauſe they are ignorant, they are like their Predeceſſors, who were chaſtiſed and ſlain, and ſhall ſuffer great torments at the Day of Judgment; they are like to him whom the Devil hath ſeduced, and ſaid to him, I am innocent of thine impiety, I fear God, Lord of the Univerſe; the end of both is to be caſt headlong into the fire of Hell, where they ſhall abide Eternally; ſuch is the reward of the wicked. O ye that believe! fear God, and conſider what ye ſhall do at the Day of Judgment; fear God, he knoweth whatſoever ye do; be not like to thoſe that forget his Commandments, he forgetteth them, and they continue in the number of the damned, they ſhall be moſt miſerable; and ſuch as ſhall go into Paradiſe ſhall be bleſſed. If we ſhould make the Alcoran to deſcend upon a Mountain, it will open it ſelf, with the fear it will have of the Word of God. Thus do I ſpeak in Parables to the People, peradventure they will be converted. There is but One only God, who knoweth what is preſent, future, and paſt, he is gracious and merciful, there is but one God, King of all things: He is holy, the deliverer, true, the puniſher, ſtrong, powerful, glorious. Praiſed be God, he hath no companion, he is God the Creator, who hath formed whatſoever is in the World, all glorious Attributes are due to him; whatſoever is in Heaven and Earth, exalt his glory, he is Omnipotent and Wiſe.

CHAP. LX.

The Chapter of Tryal, containing Eighteen Verſes, written at Mecca.

Some Mahometan Doctors have intituled this the Chapter of Vocation, becauſe it entreateth of Women that forſook their Husbands, to follow the Law of Mahomet, who appointed to try their hearts, intention, and to know their Vocation.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful. O ye that believe! obey not mine, nor your enemies; ye ſhew kindneſs to them when ye meet them; nevertheleſs they reject the truth that hath been ſent unto them, and chaſe away the Prophet and you alſo; and that, becauſe ye believe in God your Lord; ſeek not their friendſhip; when ye fight againſt them for my Law, I know what ye ought to fear, and ye know it not; he that ſhall do what is here above prohibited, followeth an evil way; if they have advantage over you, they will be your enemies, they will ſtretch forth their hands and Tongues againſt you, they will revile you, and deſire that you may renounce your faith; if ye do it, ye ſhall have no content in your Wives or Children, at the Day of Judgment, ye ſhall be ſeparated from them, and God ſhall behold all your actions: Ye have a fair example in Abraham, and them that were with him, when they ſaid to the People, we are innocent [illegible] that ye commit, in worſhipping any [illegible] but God; Abraham ſaid to his Father, I will implore pardon of God for thee, I am not able to deliver thee from his puniſhment, if thou art an Idolater; Lord, all our confidence is in thee, our refuge is in thy mercy: protect not unbelievers againſt us, pardon our ſins, thou art merciful and and wife; ye have in them a fair example for them that fear God, and apprehend the day of Judgment. God hath not to do with them that obey Infidels, neither hath he need of any perſon, and praiſe is due to him in all places; peradventure he will eſtabliſh for the future great amity between you and them that ye hate, he is omnipotent, gracious, and merciful; he doth prohibit you the converſation of them that fight not againſt you for his faith, and that expel you not from your houſes; he doth not forbid you to do them juſtice, he loveth the juſt; He forbiddeth you to converſe with them that fight againſt your faith, that drive you from your houſes, and aid to expel you; he prohibiteth you to obey them, and to contract amity with them: ſuch as obey them, ſhall be exceedingly too blame. O ye that believe in God! when the wives of your enemies ſhall throw themſelves into your party, try their conſcience: if ye know them to be faithful, and to believe in the Law of God, reſtore them not to the incredulous Infidels, it is not lawful for them to know them, neither for the women to teach them: give them ſubſiſtence, ye ſhall not ſin in eſpouſing them: marry them not after the laws of unbelievers; demand of them what dowry they require: they ſhall demand of you what ye are willing to beſtow on them: continue in accord, God ſo commandeth, he ſhall be your judg at the day of Judgment, he knoweth all your actions, and is moſt wiſe. If your wives revolt to the party of unbelievers, and ye ſuffer any damage, ye ſhall repair that damage to him that ſuffereth, out of the booty that ye ſhall conquer; fear God, and believe in the Law of his divine Majeſty. O Prophet! when women ſhall deſire to embrace thy Religion, with firm purpoſe to believe in one only God, not to ſteal, neither to commit adultery, neither to murther their children, to lye, blaſpheme, or be diſobedient, receive them; implore pardon of God for them, he is gracious and merciful. O ye that believe! obey not them againſt whom God is angry, they deſpair of their ſalvation, as the wicked deſpaired, that died heretofore in their impiety.

CHAP. LXI.

The Chapter of Array, containng fourteen Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the name of God, gracious and merciful. Praiſe God all that is in heaven and earth, he is omnipotent and wiſe. O ye that believe! ſay not that ye do that which ye do not. God abhorreth them that ſay they do what they do not; and loveth them that fight in rank and file for his Law, like to a ſtrong wall. Remember thou that Moſes ſaid to his people, Ye ſhall do me no harm, ye ſhall know in the end that I am the Meſſenger of God: but God ſeduced them from the right way, when they departed from obedience to his Commandments, he guideth not the wicked. Remember thou that Jeſus, the ſon of Mary, ſaid to the children of Iſrael, I am the Meſſenger of God, he hath ſent me to confirm the old Teſtament, and to declare to you that there ſhall come a Prophet after me, whoſe name ſhall be Mahomet. When he came with miracles, reaſons moſt intelligible, and arguments infallible, they ſaid that he was a Magician; who is more impious than he that blaſphemeth againſt God? The Infidels would extinguiſh with their mouth the light of faith, but God ſhall make it manifeſt againſt their will; he hath ſent his Prophet to guide the people into the way of ſalvation, to teach them the truth of his Law, and make it more evident than all other Laws of the world, againſt the will of Infidels. O ye that believe! Will ye that I teach you one thing, that ſhall deliver you from the pains of hell? Believe in God and in his Prophet; imploy your wealth and perſons in fighting for his Law; ye ſhall do exceeding well, if ye have knowledg to underſtand it; God ſhall pardon your offences, he ſhall cauſe you to enter into gardens, wherein flow many rivers; he ſhall cauſe you to go into the beautiful Palaces of Eden, where is ſupreme felicity; he ſhall confer upon you yet another grace, which ye deſire, viz. victory over your enemies. Oh ye that believe! maintain the Law of God; Jeſus, the Son of Mary, ſaid to his Apoſtles, Who will maintain the Law of God with me? he ſhall be ſupported, and protected of God: The Apoſtles anſwered, We will maintain it; One part of the Children of Iſrael believed in Jeſus, and another rejected his Law; we gave ſuccor to them that believed, againſt their enemies, and they were victorious.

CHAP. LXII.

The Chapter of the Aſſembly, containing eleven Verſes, written at Medina.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful. Praiſe God all that is in heaven and earth, praiſe the King, holy, majeſtique, and omnipotent, who hath ſent his Prophet, an Arabian by Nation, to preach his Commandments to the Arabians, to purifie them, to teach them the Scriptures, and myſteries of faith, they were before ſeduced from the right way. They that ſhall come after them, ſhall not ſee a Prophet equal to him, this is a ſpecial grace of God, the omnipotent and wiſe; he conferreth it on whom he liſteth, and his graces are immenſe. They that preach the old Teſtament, and perform not what it enjoyneth, are like to an Aſs charged with books; Such are they that diſobey the Commandments of God; he guideth not the impious. Oh ye Jews! believe not your ſelves to be the beloved of God, expect death, ye ſhall underſtand your error; they believe not that they ſhall be chaſtiſed for their ſins, but God beholdeth all the unjuſt. Say unto them, Ye ſhall find one day the death that ye flie; ye be ſent back before God, who knoweth what is preſent, paſt, and to come; he ſhall ſet before you all that ye have done, to be judged. Oh ye that believe! when ye are called to the aſſembly of Friday, to make your prayers, pray, and quit your trade; this ſhall be a good act, if ye underſtand it; when you ſhall have finiſhed your Prayers, ſeparate your ſelves, go whither you pleaſe, and beg of God his grace, call frequently to mind his divine Majeſty, and ye ſhall be happy. When the Infidels ſaw any thing of profit, or any divertiſement, they forſook thee, and went out from the Sermon; Say unto them, how great riches and delights are there with God? He is the Rich of the Rich.

CHAP. LXIII.

The Chapter of the Wicked, containing Twelve Verſes, written at Medina.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful. When the wicked ſhall come to viſit thee, they will ſay, That they are witneſſes, that thou art a Prophet ſent from God; he well knoweth that thou art his Prophet, he ſeeth that they diſſemble, and ſell their Faith to enjoy wealth in the World, wherein they commit evil; they ſay with the mouth, We believe in the Law of God, and are impious in their Souls, impiety is imprinted in their hearts, and they will not learn the Myſteries of Faith; the beauty of their bodies ſhall not diſpleaſe thee, when thou ſhalt ſee them; they erect themſelves when they ſpeak, and reſemble a piece of wood ſet up againſt a wall; they fear all rumors that fly abroad, and are your enemies. Beware of them, doubtleſs God will deſtroy them; how can they blaſpheme againſt his Law? When it was ſaid to them, Come to the Prophet, he ſhall beg pardon of God for your ſins, they ſhook the head, and withdrew with pride; miſery is upon them; whether thou implore pardon for them, or doſt not implore it; God will not pardon them, he abhorreth the wicked. They ſay, Do no good to them that follow that Prophet of God, until they abandon him; the treaſures of Heaven and Earth are Gods, but they comprehend it not; they ſay, If we return to the City of Medina, we will drive thence ſhame and infamy, and will there eſtabliſh Greatneſs and Honour; on the contrary, Greatneſs, Power, and Victory proceed from God, his Prophet, and them that believe in his Law, but Infidels underſtand it not. Oh ye that believe in God! your Riches, and your Children ought not to ſeduce you from his Service; ſuch as ſhall forſake it, ſhall be in the number of the damned; give alms of the Wealth that he hath given you, before the Hour of your Death arrive; then ſhall the wicked ſay, Lord, if thou hadſt not ſo ſoon cauſed me to die, I had embraced thy Law; God retardeth not the day of any one, when the Hour is come; he knoweth all that ye do.

CHAP. LXIV.

The Chapter of Deceit, containing Eighteen Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful. Praiſe God whatſoever is in Heaven and Earth, he is King of all things, Praiſe is due to him, he is Omnipotent; he it is that hath created you; ſome obſerve his Commandments, and others are unbelievers, he beholdeth all your actions. He created the Heavens and the Earth, he formed you, and ye ſhall be one day aſſembled before him to be judged, he knoweth all that is in Heaven and Earth, he underſtandeth your ſecrets, and what ye publiſh, he is not ignorant of what is in the hearts of men. Have ye not heard what did heretofore befal the wicked? They were puniſhed, they died in their miſery, and in the end ſhall ſuffer grievous torments, becauſe God hath ſent them Prophets to inſtruct them, and they ſaid, What! ſhall a man like our ſelves teach us the right way? They deſpiſed them, and forſook the Law of God; he hath not to do with them, neither hath he need of the World, praiſe is due to him in all places; do the wicked believe that they ſhall not riſe again? Contrariwiſe, God ſhall make them to revive, and ſhall declare to them all that they have done; this thing is eaſie to his Divine Majeſty; Believe in God, his Prophet, and the light that he hath ſent you, he knoweth all your actions. Remember thou the day, when he ſhall Summon all to Judgment, this ſhall be the Day of Deceit; they ſhall be known that have deceived themſelves, and thoſe that have deluded their Neighbours. That day their ſins ſhall be pardoned, that ſhall have believed in his unity, and have done good works, they ſhall dwell eternally in Gardens, wherein flow many Rivers; the Infidels that deſpiſe his Commandments ſhall be precipitated into Hell, where they ſhall burn eternally. No evil befalleth you, but through God's permiſſion; he giveth patience to him that believeth in his Divine Majeſty, and knoweth all. Obey God and his Prophet; if ye obey him not, know, that the Prophet of God is obliged only to preach the truth of Faith; there is but one God, all True believers reſign themſelves to his Divine Will. O ye that believe! ye have Children, and Wives, that are your enemies, beware of their malice, if ye pardon them; if ye depart from them, God ſhall be to you gracious and merciful. Wealth and Children do often hinder you to obey God; but know, that he rewardeth abundantly the Righteous; fear him with all your power, hearken to his Commandments, obey him, give alms; he that is not avaricious ſhall be bleſſed; if ye lend any thing to God, he ſhall cauſe it to multiply, he ſhall pardon your ſins, he accepteth the acknowledgment of his benefits, and is moſt merciful. He knoweth what is preſent, paſt, and future, he is Omnipotent and Wiſe.

CHAP. LXV.

The Chapter of Divorce, containing Eighteen Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful. Oh Prophet! when you repudiate them, following the Ordinances and Laws, and reckon the time that they ought to tarry before they marry again; Fear God your Lord, cauſe them not to depart their houſes, neither expel them before the time appointed, if they be not taken in Adultery; ſuch are the Ordinances of God, he that ſhall trangreſs them, ſhall do injury to himſelf, peradventure God will enjoyn ſomething concerning them, of which ye are ignorant. When the time that they ought to tarry ſhall be finiſhed, retain, or diſmiſs them with civility; ye ſhall take perſons of your Religion, honeſt men, that ſhall be witneſſes of your Actions, depoſe with truth what ye have ſeen; it is ſo appointed to them that believe in God, and the day of Judgment. God ſhall ſhall deliver from affliction him that ſhall have his fear before his eyes, and ſhall enrich him, when he leaſt thinks of it; he that ſhall truſt in him, ſhall not be deceived, he doth what he pleaſeth, and hath appointed a prefixed time to every thing. If the Women hope no more to have their three months, and doubt that they are miſreckoned, they ſhall tarry three months before they marry again, if they be not Nurſes; if they be with Child, ye ſhall abſtain till their delivery; whoſoever feareth God, rejoiceth in the obſervance of his Commandments. What is above, is ordained of God; he ſhall pardon their ſins, that have his fear before their eyes, and give them an exceeding great reward. Cauſe them that ye repudiate, to dwell in your houſes, or near to you, abuſe them not; if they be with Child, allow them what ſhall be neceſſary for them, until they ſhall be delivered; if they deſire to nurſe their Children, ye ſhall give them an honeſt ſalary, and entreat them with civility and curteſie; if ye like not this, ye ſhall cauſe them to be nurſed by another, whoſe pains ye ſhall reward. If ye be not wealthy, you ſhall allow according to your power; God doth not enjoyn any one to expend more than his ability permitteth; he ſhall give you good after evil; how many have been the Cities that have heretofore diſobeyed the Commandments of God, and of his Prophets? We have kept an exact account of their ſins, their Inhabitants have been chaſtiſed, and ſhall be in the end, in the number of the damned; God hath prepared for them grievous torments. Oh ye that are wiſe! fear God, he hath ſent you the Alcoran; he hath ſent you a Prophet, to teach you the myſteries of his Law, to lead you out of darkneſs, and to guide into light them that ſhall believe in him, and do good works: He ſhall open to them the Gate of Paradiſe, wherein flow many Rivers, where they ſhall dwell eternally, with all manner of content. God! He it is, that created the ſeven Heavens, and as much of Earth, and ordaineth among them what pleaſeth him, to the end ye may know that he is Omnipotent, and knoweth all things.

CHAP. LXVI.

The Chapter of Prohibition, containing Twelve Verſes, written at Medina.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful. Oh Prophet! prohibit not for the contentment of thy wives, to do that which God hath permitted thee, he is gracious and merciful; he hath appointed to do what is permitted by your Law, he is your Lord, is Omniſcient and moſt Wiſe. When the Prophet went to viſit one of his wives, God revealed to him, what ſhe deſired to ſay to him; he approved one part, and rejected the other; when he told his Wife what was in her will to ſpeak to him, ſhe demanded of him, who had revealed it to him; he that knoweth all things hath revealed it to me, that ye may be converted, your hearts are inclined to do what is forbidden; if ye act any thing againſt the Prophet, know, that God is his protector, the Angel Gabriel, and all the believers will defend him, the Angels ſhall protect him againſt you. If it be his will to repudiate you, God ſhall give him for the future, other wives in your place, that ſhall be obedient; True believers, humble, faithful, devout, contented, mild, clean Virgins, and not Virgins: Oh ye that believe in God! ſtrengthen your ſelves, you and your Families, in obedience to his Commandments; the Idolaters ſhall burn in the Fire of Hell, with their Idols; the Angels deputed to torment them, diſobey not God, they execute whatſoever is commanded them. Oh ye that are Infidels! there is no excuſe for you, ye ſhall be chaſtiſed after your demerits. Oh ye that believe! turn to God with affection, he ſhall pardon your ſins, and make you to enter into Gardens, wherein flow many Rivers; the light of Faith ſhall go before the Prophet, and them that have followed him; when God ſhall recompence them, they ſhall ſay, Lord, give us thy light, pardon our ſins, thou art Omnipotent. Oh Prophet! fight againſt the Infidels, and the wicked, fortifie thy ſelf againſt them, Hell ſhall be their habitation. God teacheth unbelievers a Parable, and ſaith, the wives of Noah, and the wives of Lot were under the power of my two Servants, righteous men; they betrayed them, but did not eſcape the puniſhment of their ſin. It was ſaid unto them, enter into the Fire of Hell with them that go into it. God teacheth them a Parable, that follow his Law; take example by the Wife of Pharaoh, ſhe prayed to God, and ſaid, Lord build me an Houſe in Paradiſe, deliver me from Pharoah, from his works, and unjuſt men. Mary the daughter of Joſaphat preſerved her Virginity; we inſpired into her our Spirit, ſhe believed the words of her Lord, and the Scriptures; ſhe was in the number of them that obey.

CHAP. LXVII.

The Chapter of Empire, containing Thirty Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the name of God, gracious and merciful. Praiſed be he to whom belongeth the Empire of the World, who is Omnipotent, and hath created Life and Death, to let you know which is the better; he is Omnipotent and merciful. He hath created ſeven Heavens, one upon another; thou ſeeſt nothing of what he hath created, that is not proportioned; raiſe yet thy ſight to Heaven, thou ſhalt not there ſee any thing defective; behold it twice, or more often, thou ſhalt not perceive therein any thing vain, or imperfect. We have adorned the Heaven, and the World with Stars, we expelled thence the Devils, we prepared for them a great fire, and the torments of Hell for unbelievers. They ſhall hear horrible and terribble voices, that proceed from deſpair and wrath; when they ſhall be caſt thither headlong, when they ſhall enter into Hell by Troops, the Overſeer of the torments ſhall ſay unto them, Had you none on Earth that preached to you the pains of Hell? Yes, ſhall they reply, they were preached to us, but we traduced our preachers, we ſaid, that God did not command to do what they declared; that they were lyars, and ſeduced from the right way; had we heard them, and had we been wiſe, we ſhould not this day have been in the number of the damned; they ſhall confeſs their ſins in the bottom of Hell. Such as fear God, without ſeeing him, ſhall receive pardon of their offences, and an exceeding great reward.

ward. Speak ſecretly, or publickly, God knoweth whatſoever ye have in your hearts, ſince the time of your creation, he is bleſſed and omniſcient. He hath eſtabliſhed ways upon the earth, go on all ſides, and live of his good things: ye all ſhall revive, and be one day aſſembled before him to be judged. Believe ye that he who is in heaven, cannot render the earth dry and barren, and cauſe it to tremble? Believe ye, that he who is in heaven is not able to ſend againſt you an impetuous wind, to deſtroy you? Ye ſhall hereafter feel what are the torments of hell. Your predeceſſors would not believe them, and were chaſtiſed for their incredulity. Conſider ye not the birds that flie over your heads, how they extend, and ſhut their wings? nothing ſupporteth them, but that mercy that beholdeth all things. Who but God ſhall protect you in your miſeries? The Infidels are proud: Who ſhall enrich you, if God reſtraineth his grace? nevertheleſs ye perſevere in your ſins, and flie the truth; Is he that creepeth on his face, like to him that goeth on his feet in the right way? Say unto them, God hath created you; he hath given you ſight, hearing and ſenſe, but few among you return him thanks for his graces: Say unto them, he created you of earth, and ye ſhall one day be aſſembled before him, to render account of your actions. The wicked demand when the day of Judgment ſhall be; Say unto them, God knows, I am ſent only to preach to you the pains of hell; Their viſages ſhall become black, when they ſhall ſee the puniſhment of their ſins approach: It ſhall be ſaid to them, behold that which ye have demanded with ſo much impatience! Say unto them, did you ſee that God deſtroyed me, and them that were with me? No, he gave us his grace. Who ſhall deliver the Infidels from the torments of hell? Say unto them, God is merciful; we believe in him, and we are reſigned to the will of his divine Majeſty, ye ſhall know hereafter them that ſhall be ſeduced. If the water that watereth your flocks enter under the earth, who ſhall give you other water, or another Fountain to ſupply you?

CHAP. LXVIII.

The Chapter of the Pen, containing fifty two Verſes, written at Mecca.

Bedaoi entituleth this the Chapter of the Letter Noun, n, and ſaith, that it is as much as to ſay, Whale, or great Fiſh: Some other Doctors ſay, that Noun, n, is the name of the Ink, or Table, on which the Angels write the Commandments of God: Others affirm it, to ſignifie the Inkhorn; but many of the Mahometan Doctors intitle this, the Chapter of the Pen.

IN the name of God, gracious and merciful. I ſwear by the Pen, and by all that is written, that thou art not poſſeſſed of the Devil; through the grace of thy Lord, thou ſhalt have an infinite reward; God hath created thee, with a creation high, and moſt illuſtrious. Thou ſhalt hereafter know, and the Infidels likewiſe ſhall know one day, them among you that are ignorant. Certainly thy Lord knoweth them that are ſeduced, and them that follow the right way. Obey not the wicked, they deſire thee to be more indulgent towards them, and themſelves more mild towards thee; Obey not thoſe infamous lyars, thoſe bablers, ſinners and ſeducers, and wicked perſons, full of treaſures and children; When the Myſteries of faith are related to them, they ſay, that they are but fables of antiquity; we will put upon their noſes a mark of ſhame and ignominy; we have tried them, as Gardeners when they have reſolved in the evening to cut off the morning following ſome fruits of their garden, for their refection, and have not ſaid, if it pleaſe God; By night, while they ſlept, God ſent fire into their gardens, that conſumed them; in the morning they called [each other] and ſaid, Come to put order to your garden, if ye deſire to gather the fruits; they believed the poor would enter, they ran [to drive them away] and found their fruits black, and their gardens blaſted: Then they ſaid, We are ſeduced, we are ſinners; one of them ſaid that it was requiſite to praiſe God; then they ſaid, Praiſed be God, we are great ſinners: they approached each other, and complained among themſelves: they ſaid, miſery is upon us; we were in a great error, peradventure God will give us hereafter more than the value of what we have loſt, we muſt beg his grace; thus God chaſtiſeth on earth, whom he pleaſeth, but the torments of the other world are much more grievous: They that have his fear before their eyes, ſhall dwell in gardens full of delights. Shall I entreat the good like the wicked? How can ye judg it? have ye a book, wherein you read what pleaſeth you? have we promiſed to you any content at the day of Judgment? Shall you have that day what ye have promiſed to your ſelves? Ask of them, who will be ſurety for their belief? will their Idols and companions be their ſurety? Let them cauſe them to come, if they be true. Be thou mindful of the day when ſins ſhall be detected, and the wicked ſhall be commanded to worſhip God, but they ſhall not be able to behold him, their eyes ſhall be troubled with fear, and their ſight covered with ſhame. They are enjoyned in the world to worſhip his divine Majeſty, but they refuſe to pertorm it; I will niſh them by little and little, when they ſhall leaſt think of it; I will defer the puniſhments of their crimes, becauſe my wrath is ſtrong; Doſt thou demand of men any recompence for thy preaching? are they charged with any expence? Have they in their power the book, wherein is the future, to write therein what they affirm? Attend the Judgment of thy Lord, and be not like him that was ſwallowed of the Whale. He invoked his Lord in his affliction: if his Lord had not ſent him his grace, he ſhould never have come upon earth: when he repented of his ſin, his Lord pardoned, and placed him in the number of the righteous. The unbelievers labour to ſhake thee through their looks, and that through envy: they affirm, that thou art poſſeſſed of the Devil, when they hear thee read the Alcoran: It was not ſent but to inſtruct the world.

CHAP. LXIX.

The Chapter of Verification, containing Fifty two Verſes, written at Mecca.

Exteri intituleth this, The Chapter of Judgment, becauſe that day all ſhall be verified.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful. Verification approacheth, Verification approacheth; God hath not told thee in what time ſhall be the day of Verification; Temod and Aad would not believe him that preached to them the day of affliction and ſorrow, but Temod was deſtroyed by an extraordinary noiſe, and Aad by an impetuous wind that God ſent againſt them Seven nights, and eight days together; they were overthrown, ſtretched out like Palms faln upon the Earth: Did any one among them ſave himſelf? Pharaoh, and his predeceſſors, with the Inhabitants of the Cities that were overthrown becauſe of their ſins, diſobeyed the Prophets and Apoſtles of God, and were rudely chaſtiſed. We preſerved you in Noah's Ark, when the waters ſwelled, to ſerve for example of our Omnipotency to them that ſaw it, and to ſuch as ſhall hear it mentioned. Be thou mindful of the day when the Angel ſhall ſound the Trumpet, when the Earth ſhall lift it ſelf up, and the Mountains tremble; then what muſt come, to paſs, ſhall come to paſs; Heaven with Weakneſs ſhall open, and the Angel that ſhall bear the Throne of God, ſhall be upon the border of the Heaven. Then ſhall Eight Angels preſent the books, wherein ſhall be written the ſins of Men, and nothing ſhall be concealed. Such as ſhall take in the right hand the Book of the account of their actions, ſhall ſay, We find what we believed to be true, we know with certain knowledg the coming of this day, and the felicity of Life is in Paradiſe: It ſhall be ſaid to them, Eat and drink of the good things of Paradiſe at your pleaſure. They that ſhall take the Book of account of their actions in their left Hand, ſhall ſay, Would to God that this Book had been loſt, I know not what is this account; would to God that I had been eternally buried in the Earth; the Riches, Authority, and Treaſures of the World are to me unprofitable: It ſhall be ſaid to the Devils, Take them, bind them, and throw them headlong in to Hell, put Chains ſeventy Cubits long upon their arms, and caſt them into fire; they would not believe in the Unity of God the Omnipotent; they have eaten the Bread of the Poor, they are this day without protection and want Bread, and ſhall find nothing but the pains of Hell prepared for the wicked. I ſwear, Although ye ſee, and although ye do not ſee the Alcoran, it is the word of the Prophet, the Apoſtle of God, it is not the word of a Poet, but few perſons will believe it. It is not the word of one that is wicked, but few men remember it, it is ſent from God, Lord of the Univerſe. The Infidels ſay, Oh Prophet! if thou ſpeak, we will not hear thee, thy ſpeech ſhall not enter into our hearts: Say unto them, There is none among you able to deliver you from the puniſhment of your crimes; the Alcoran inſtructeth in the way of Salvation them that believe in his Divine Majeſty; I know that there are Lyars among you, whom God ſhall put into the number of Infidels: The Alcoran is truth it ſelf. Praiſed be the Name of God Omnipotent, and Majeſtick.

CHAP. LXX.

The Chapter of the Aſcent, containing Forty four Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful. Some perſons have demanded when ſhall be the Day of Judgment, and in what time the wicked ſhall be chaſtiſed? None but God is able to deliver men from the torments of Hell; he is Lord of the way that aſcendeth to Heaven, the Angels and Spirits ſhall aſcend towards him at the Day of Judgment; that day ſhall ſeem to the wicked to endure Fifty thouſand years; expect with patience; the wicked imagine they are far from that day, but thou ſhalt ſee it ſpeedily; that day ſhall the Heaven reſemble diſſolved Metal; the Mountains ſhall be like to carded Wool, which bendeth downwards; none ſhall ask his Neighbor who he is; and they ſhall look one upon another; the unbelievers ſhall deſire to redeem themſelves from theſe pains, through the loſs of their Children, their Wives, their Brethren, their Companions, their Neighbours, and the loſs of all that is on Earth. The flame of Fire ſhall riſe upon them, and ſhall burn the skin of their head; they ſhall call upon thoſe that are behind them, that have, like themſelves, abandoned the Law of God; and the covetous, that ſhall have heaped up Treaſures. Man was created timerous, he is afraid when evil befalleth him, and is arrogant when good hapneth to him; except the believers, who are ſtable in their Faith, that perſevere in their prayers, that give alms to the poor that beg, and thoſe that are baſhful, that believe in the Day of Judgment, fear the puniſhment of God, and know none other Women but their own, and their Slaves, they ſhall be exempt from affliction at the Day of Judgment; thoſe that ſhall act the contrary, ſhall be in the number of the unjuſt. They who effect what they have promiſed, and preſerve faithfully what to them hath been entruſted, who ſpeak the truth in teſtimony, and who make their prayers at the time appointed, ſhall be honoured in Paradiſe. Wherefore is it that the Infidels, who are about thee, caſt their eyes to the right Hand, and to the left, with pride? Do they require to enter into Paradiſe, and be ſaved? We have created them as other men. I ſwear by the Lord of the Eaſt and Weſt, That we are able to change them into a People better than they, and that it is a thing eaſie for us to perform; leave them in their errors, until they be come to the day when they are promiſed to be chaſtiſed, and that they ſhall come out of their Sepulchres to repair to Univerſal Judgment; they ſhall repair thither terrified, and their ſight ſhall be covered with ſhame; this is the day that hath been heretofore preached to them.

CHAP. LXXI.

The Chapter of Noah, containing Twenty eight Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the name of God, gracious and merciful. Before men were chaſtiſed, we ſent Noah to preach to them the pains of hell: he ſaid unto them, O ye people! I preach to you the pains of hell, worſhip one only God, and fear him, obey me, he ſhall pardon your ſins, he deferreth your puniſhment until the day appointed, and ſhall not retard it; when his hour ſhall be come, did he know it, ye would be converted. Afterward he ſaid, Lord, I have exhorted this people night and day, but mine exhortations have been very much in vain, they have ſtrengthned themſelves in their impiety; and when I preached to them, they put their fingers into their ears, and covered their heads with their garments, that they might not hear; they continue in their impiety, and become proud: I have preached to them publickly, I lifted up my voice, I have expounded to them the myſteries of thy Law; I ſaid unto them, Implore pardon of God, he is moſt merciful; he ſhall ſend you abundance of rain to water the earth; he ſhall give you ſtore of wealth, and many children; he ſhall give you gardens embelliſhed with fountains, and rivers; who hindereth you to honour God? He it is that hath created you in the condition wherein you are: conſider ye not that he hath created ſeven heavens, the one upon the other? that he created the Moon with her brightneſs, and the Sun with his light? he hath cauſed the earth to bring forth all ſorts of plants; he will cauſe you all to return to earth, and to revive; he hath extended it, to the end ye may walk in the ways thereof, large and ſpacious. Lord, ſaid Noah, this people hath diſobeyed me, they have followed that which can give them neither poſterity nor profit, but rather a moſt certain damage; they have conſpired againſt me, and ſaid among themſelves, Forſake not your gods, forſake not Od, Soa, Igout, Jaoc, and Neſar; they err from the right way; Lord, add to their confuſion. Then were they drowned becauſe of their ſins, they ſhall be caſt headlong into the fire, whence none but God is able to deliver them. Noah ſaid, Lord, leave not a wicked man upon the earth, they will ſeduce thy creatures from the right way, they will leave children, lyars, and impious like themſelves; pardon my ſins, pardon the ſins of my father, my lineage, and thoſe that ſhall believe in thy Law, and deſtroy the unjuſt.

These are Idols.

CHAP. LXXII.

The Chapter of Devils, containing twenty eight Verſes, written at Mecca.

Some Mahometans intitle this; The Chapter of Spirits.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful: Say to the people, I have received an inſpiration, which ſome devils heard of me when I read the Alcoran, and that they ſaid, We have heard the miraculous Alcoran read, it teacheth the right way; we believe in what it contains; we believe not that God hath companions; we believe there is but one God, we believe not that he hath wives, or children, our ignorant perſons blaſpheme againſt his divine Majeſty, nevertheleſs we imagine that they could not do it. There are who require aid of the devils, and augment their confuſion, becauſe they ſay, that God will not cauſe any to riſe again; ſome devils have ſaid, We have been as high as heaven, and found it furniſhed with guards and ſtars, we ſtayed in a place a little diſtant to hear; there is one ſtar that watcheth them that hearken, and drives them away; we know not if God hateth the men that are upon earth, or if he will teach them the right way; but we are now in the number of them that believe in the unity of his divine Majeſty: they ſaid, Oh ye people! we were before in the way of error; we heretofore believed that God did not operate on earth; but no perſon, in whatſoever place he be, can avoid obeying his Will; we heard the book read that teacheth the right way; we believe in what it contains; he that believeth in God, will not fear any miſery or injuſtice: there be of us that are good, and that truſt in God? others there are, who are wicked and impious: ſuch as obey the Commandments of God, follow the right way, and the wicked ſhall be precipitated into the fire of hell. Had the Infidels followed the right way, we had ſent them from heaven abundance of rain, and given them our grace; I will try them, and ſuch as ſhall deſpiſe the Alcoran ſhall be puniſhed. The Temples belong to God, invoke one ſole God in the Temples: when his ſervant riſeth, he worſhippeth his divine Majeſty; it wanteth not much, but theſe devils had publiſhed the plurality of Deities: Say unto the people, worſhip God my Lord; I believe in one God, who hath no companion; I can neither guide nor ſeduce you, but through his permiſſion; If I diſobey him, none ſhall be able to ſave me, and I ſhall want protection at the day of Judgment. I can do no more for you, than to preach to you his Law; this is the ſubject of my Embaſſie: He who ſhall diſobey God and his Prophet, ſhall be damned, and ſhall remain eternally in the fire of hell. The wicked ſhall know ſuch as ſhall be deprived of ſuccour and protection, when they ſhall behold the pains prepared for them. Say unto them, I know not whether what is promiſed to you, ſhall incontinently happen, or whether God will defer it ſome time; none knoweth what is to come, but God, and thoſe whom he hath elected to be Prophets and Meſſengers of his Will; he inſpireth into them his Commandments, to preach to men; he upholdeth all the actions of men, and keepeth an exact account of every thing.

CHAP. LXXIII.

The Chapter of the Fearful, containing Twenty Verſes, writen at Mecca.

The Arabians have intituled this, The Chapter of the Fearful; when the Angel Gabriel brought this Chapter to Mahomet, he was afraid of the ſplendour of his light, and covered himſelf with his garments, which gave occaſion to the Angel to call him, and ſay, Oh fearful! and not, oh prophet! as he was wont.

IN the name of God, gracious and merciful. O thou Fearful! Ariſe by night, pray to God at midnight, until two third parts of

of the night and more. Read the Alcoran, and meditate thereon, obſerve what it contains: although it be tedious to thee, thou wilt beſt comprehend it after thy firſt ſleep, becauſe thou in the day haſt affairs that divert thee. Remember thou the name of God, forſake the world to worſhip him, he is Lord of the Weſt, and Eaſt, there is no God but God, take him for thy protector: be not impatient at what the wicked ſay; ſeparate thy ſelf from their ſociety, without fear, leave me to puniſh them: is there any one that is able to defend them? their puniſhment is deferred, but I have chains of iron, bread full of thorns, and great torments to inflict on them, at the day when the earth ſhall tremble, and the mountains ſhall be diſſolved into duſt. O ye people! we have ſent to you a Prophet, our Apoſtle, to inſtruct you, as we did to Pharoah: he was diſobedient and obſtinate, and we ſeverely chaſtiſed him. How will ye ſecure your ſelves from the torments of hell, if ye be in the number of the wicked? What will ye do at the day when Infants ſhall be men, and heaven ſhall be opened? What God promiſeth is infallible: theſe things are for the inſtruction of them that deſire to follow the way of ſalvation. Thy Lord knoweth that thou wilt ariſe about the third part of the night, or at midnight, as likewiſe a part of thoſe that are with thee; he reckoneth the hours and the minutes of night and day, he knoweth that thou canſt not reckon them exactly: he pardoneth thee, if thou riſeſt a little ſooner, or a little later: read during this time what thou ſhalt be able to read of the Alcoran: God knoweth that there will be perſons among you that will be ſickly, others that will be in travel for their affairs, and ſome that will fight for the faith; theſe perſons ſhall be excuſed: Read what ye ſhall be able of the Alcoran, lift up your prayers to God, pay tithes, lend to God ſome benefit, ye ſhall one day find the good that ye ſhall have done, and a very good reward: beg pardon of God, he is gracious and merciful.

CHAP. LXXIV.

Mahomet was wrapt in his garments when the Angel brought him this Chapter.

The Chapter of the Wrapped, containing fifty ſeven Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the name of God gracious and merciful. O thou wrapped! Ariſe, and preach to the people the torments of hell; thy Lord is more powerful than the Idols, make clean thy garments, be thou mindful of the pains prepared for unbelievers; ſeparate thy ſelf from their company: lend nothing to Uſury: the day that the Trumpet ſhall ſound, ſhall be extreamly irkſome to the wicked; that day, let me chaſtiſe him whom I created, and to whom I gave riches, and children, and whom I placed in plenty; nevertheleſs he demandeth more, and is obſtinate, to diſobey my Commandments: I will add to his pains, becauſe he blaſphemeth againſt the Alcoran: wherefore doth he blaſpheme? he maketh his countenance ſorrowful, covered with hypocriſie: when he beholdeth the people, with his eyes melancholique, and eſtranged from the way of ſalvation, he is proud, ſcorneth to follow the Prophet: ſaith, that the Alcoran is but Magick, and but the word of man; he ſhall be precipitated into the bottom of hell, nothing remains to him but to be burned: nineteen Spirits ſhall be appointed to torment the wicked: they that puniſh the damned are Spirits. We have mentioned this number of nineteen, to ſeduce the Infidels, and confirm the truth, and the True believers in their faith. They whom God inſtructeth in the Scripture, and who believe in his Law, are not in doubt of theſe Spirits; but ſuch as have evil in the heart, who doubt of his Laws, and the wicked, ſay, that he by this number, meaneth God: Thus God ſeduceth and guideth whom he pleaſeth: no perſon knoweth the number of his Angels, but God. I ſwear by the entrance of the night, and the morning, that hell is an exceeding great puniſhment, prepared for the impious. The believers, and unbelievers, the good and the bad, ſhall anſwer for their actions; and ſuch as ſhall have their book of account in the right hand, ſhall go into Paradiſe: they ſhall enquire of the damned, and ſay to them, Who did caſt you into hell? They ſhall anſwer, We did not pray to God at the time appointed; we gave not to the poor to eat; we believed there was neither Reſurrection, nor Judgment, until death ſurprized us; the prayers of them that pray for them, ſhall be in vain. Wherefore is it that unbelievers depart from the Law of God? They are like to the wild Aſs, which flyeth as far as he can, when he ſeeth the Lion approach him; every one of them would particularly ſee a book to inſtruct them, and apprehendeth not the day of Judgment: Certainly the Alcoran teacheth them the Law of God, that read it: none ſhall underſtand it, but he that ſhall be pleaſing to God, who ſhall have his fear before his eyes, and ſhall implore pardon of his ſins of his divine Majeſty.

CHAP. LXXV.

The Chapter of the Reſurrection, containing forty Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the name of God gracious and merciful. I ſwear that it is moſt true, That men ſhall riſe again. I ſwear that the wicked ſhall render an account of their actions: think they that I cannot recollect their bones? I will recollect all of them after they ſhall be corrupted; I am able to recollect their fingers, as they had them in their youth. Certainly man is prone to blaſpheme, before the coming of the day of Judgment, and enquireth when that day will be. When his ſight ſhall be troubled, and the Sun and Moon gathered together, then ſhall he ſay, Whither ſhall I flye? It ſhall be ſaid to him, Thou ſhalt have none other refuge but in God: he ſhall be ſurprized, and all his offences ſhall be commemorated to him, and he ſhall witneſs againſt himſelf: Speak not then in a word, if he will excuſe himſelf, be not thou impatient; I know all that is in his heart, I know what thou haſt taught him: I did read with him, that read to thee the Alcoran, and made thee to underſtand it: Man preſſeth himſelf to go to his diſhonor, and conſidereth not his end, he ſhall raiſe the head, with a countenance content to ſee God, but at the ſame inſtant ſhall have the face covered with affliction, and ſhall know, that he is in the height of all miſeries; His ſoul ſhall be conducted towards God, when it it ſhall be ſeparate from his body; if it renounce the Law of God, it ſhall go towards the damned, towards them that extend their arms through diſpair. It ſhall be ſaid to him, God alone, whom thou wouldſt not obey, was thy Lord and Protector. Doth man think to be forſaken, and that no account ſhall be required of his actions? Was not he created through our ſpecial Grace, of mire, and of congealed Blood? Did we not create him Male and Female? He that hath done this, cannot he revive the dead?

CHAP. LXXVI.

The Chapter of Man, containing Thirty Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful. Man continued a while, without having in him any thing memorable; we created his Poſterity of his Seed, mingled with that of the Woman: we gave him ſight and hearing, and taught him the way of Salvation. Some have embraced the Faith, and others have been Infidels; we have prepared for them Chains, and Bonds, to drag them into the Fire of Hell. The juſt ſhall drink of Wine, that ſhall iſſue out of a fair Fountain; all the ſervants of God ſhall drink [thereof] and ſhall cauſe it to flow, as ſhall ſeem good to them. God will deliver from the pains of Hell, ſuch as ſhall ſatisfie their Vows, as ſhall apprehend the Day of Judgment, as ſhall give alms to the Poor, to Orphans, and Priſoners, without hope of thanks, of recompence, but only for the love of his Divine Majeſty, becauſe of the fear they have of the torments of the day, grievous and irkſom to behold. God ſhall rejoice, and reward them for their good works, he ſhall open to them the gate of Paradiſe; they ſhall be cloathed with ſilk, repoſed on ſtately Beds, and ſhall not be troubled either with the heat of the Sun, or the cold of the Moon; they ſhall be under the ſhadow of the Trees of Paradiſe, there ſhall they gather fruits, as they ſtand, ſit, and lie down; Veſſels of Silver ſhall be brought about them, and round Cups full of a delicious drink, as much as they ſhall deſire, mingled with Ginger, that ſhall iſſue out of a clear Fountain, and ſhall be encompaſſed with young Pages to ſerve them, who ſhall reſemble poliſhed Pearls; when thou ſhalt behold them, thou ſhalt ſee a grace that cannot be expreſt; they ſhall be cloathed with Purple, and Green ſhining ſilk, and ſhall have Bracelets of Silver; God ſhall give them a Drink, clear and moſt pure; theſe delights ſhall be the reward of their perſeverance. We have ſent thee the Alcoran to inſtruct the People; attend the Judgment of thy Lord againſt them that ſcoff, and obey not, the wicked; Remember thou the Name of God, Morning and Evening, worſhip him by Night, praiſe him a long time; the Infidels affect the World, and think not on their end, neither the Day of Judgment; we created them, we have given them ſtrength to walk, and if it be our pleaſure, we will eſtabliſh other Perſons in their place. He that ſhall deſire to follow the Law of God, ſhall follow it; but none ſhall follow it, if it pleaſe his Divine Majeſty; he knoweth all, and is moſt wiſe, he giveth his grace to whom he pleaſeth, and hath prepared grievous torments for the unjuſt.

CHAP. LXXVII.

The Chapter of them that are Sent, containing Fifty Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful. I ſwear by the Angels that followed [each other] thick as the hair of the foretop of Horſes, when God ſendeth them to execute his commands; by the Angels which he ſendeth to puniſh them whom he will deſtroy; by the Winds which he ſendeth, to make the Rain to fall where he liſteth; by the Alcoran, that diſtinguiſheth good from evil; and by the Angels that inſpire into men the fear of the pains of Hell, and implore pardon of his Divine Majeſty, that the puniſhment promiſed to the wicked, is infallible. Then ſhall not the Stars appear any more; the Heaven ſhall open, the Mountains ſhall walk, the Prophets and Apoſtles of God ſhall aſſemble, to bear teſtimony againſt them that have deſpiſed their inſtructions; the good, and the wicked, and believers and unbelievers ſhall be ſeparated. I will not tell thee when this day ſhall be, it ſhall be unhappy for the wicked. Have not I heretofore deſtroyed the impious with their Blaſphemies? Have not they left a Poſterity, wicked as they, whom I likewiſe have deſtroyed? Thus will I hereafter deſtroy the Infidels; and miſery ſhall be upon them eternally: Have we not created you of weak Seed; retained in the womb of your Mothers, until the time appointed? This is a grace that we have conferred on you: Miſery ſhall be upon the Infidels at the day of Judgment. Have we not created the Earth, to aſſemble the Living and the Dead? Have we not raiſed the Mountains? Have we not given you freſh Water to drink? Miſery ſhall be upon the wicked at the Day of Judgment; it ſhall be ſaid unto them, Go into the Fire of Hell, which ye would not believe; go into the Smoak, divided into three parts, nothing ſhall free you from the heat thereof, and flight ſhall not deliver you from that Fire; it ſhall caſt forth black flames, that ſhall riſe higher than the higheſt buildings of the Earth, and like to large Coverlets of Beds, extreamly black. The Day of Judgment ſhall be unhappy to Infidels: It ſhall be ſaid to them, Behold the Day of the Separation of the good from the bad; exerciſe your ſlights, if ye can, to deliver you from the pains of Hell; the Day of Judgment ſhall be unhappy to Infidels. The good, who ſhall have had the fear of God before their eyes, ſhall be under the ſhadow of the Trees of Paradiſe, nigh to delicious Fountains, with all ſort of fruits, that they ſhall deſire. It ſhall be ſaid to them, Eat, and drink at your pleaſure, in reward of your good works; thus are the Righteous rewarded. The Day of Judgment ſhall be unhappy for Infidels. Oh ye Infidels! live in the World, ye ſhall be there ſuffered ſome time; ye are wicked, but ye ſhall be miſerable at the Day of Judgment. The wicked deride them that exhort them to pray to God, they ſhall be miſerable at the Day of Judgment. In what will they believe, if they believe not in the Alcoran?

CHAP.

CHAP. LXXVIII.

The Chapter of News, containing Forty Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful. What do the wicked enquire of each other, touching the great news, of which they are in different Opinion? They ſhall learn it, they ſhall learn it. Have not I created, and extended the Earth? Have not I raiſed the Mountains to eſtabliſh it? Have not we created you, Male and Female? Have not we created Sleep, and the Night for repoſe, and the Day of Labour? Have we not built over you Seven Heavens, and the Sun full of light? Have we not cauſed Rain to deſcend from the Clouds, to cauſe the Earth to produce its Plants, and Gardens of divers faſhions? The day of Judgment ſhall be a day of Joy, and Sorrow. When the Angel ſhall ſound the Trumpet, all the World ſhall come in Troops to Univerſal Judgment; Heaven ſhall open its Gates, the Mountains ſhall walk, and Hell is the place prepared for the ſeduced, there ſhall they remain eternally. They ſhall find there no reſt, neither drink, but of boyling, and moſt ſtinking Water, a reward conformed to their works; the Infidels believe not that they muſt render an account of their actions, and blaſpheme, but we keep account, and write exactly what they do. It will be ſaid to them at the Day of Judgment, Taſte, this day the puniſhment that ye have merited, your pains ſhall be augmented, and pains upon pains. They who ſhall have had the fear of God before their eyes, ſhall be in a place of felicity, in the Gardens of a moſt fertile Land, enriched with Grapes, and Pomegranats; they ſhall drink in Cups full of a delicious Liquor, and ſhall hear no vain ſpeeches, nor lying; ſuch is the recompence of them that obey the Commandments of God; He is Lord of the Heavens and Earth, none ſhall dare to ſpeak when the Spirits and Angels ſhall be aſſembled before him, none ſhall be able to ſpeak or pray for another, without his permiſſion. This day ſhall be the day of truth; they that ſhall be acceptable to him ſhall retire towards his Divine Majeſty. We have preached unto you, that the puniſhment of God ſhall ſpeedily come upon you; every one ſhall ſee all that he ſhall have done, and the wicked ſhall ſay at the Day of Judgment, Would to God that I had been earth and duſt.

CHAP. LXXXIX.

The Chapter of Them that take away, containing Forty ſix Verſes, written at Mecca.

Gelaldin entituleth this, The Chapter of them that draw forth the Soul.

IN the name of God gracious and merciful. I ſwear by the Angels that take away the Souls from the Bodies of Infidels, and the wicked; by the Angels that accompany the Souls of Believers; by the Angels that exalt the glory of God; By the Angels that guide the Souls of the Righteous, when they go into Paradiſe; and by the Angels that are appointed for the affairs of the World, That all People ſhall riſe again at the Day of Judgment; that Day the Earth ſhall tremble, and the hearts of men ſhall tremble at the firſt time that the Trumpet ſhall ſound; at the ſecond, their ſight ſhall be troubled with fear, and they ſhall ſay, Behold! we, we are returned upon Earth, to the place whence we departed; our bones were rotten, and our return to the World ſhall bring upon us only miſery; this ſecond ſound of the Trumpet is a ſign of the wrath of God; then ſhall they be out of their Sepulchres, revived upon the Earth. Haſt thou learned the Hiſtory of Moſes, and how God his Lord called him in the Holy Valley, called Toi, and how he ſaid, Go towards Pharaoh, he is ſeduced from the right way, and is in a great error; ſay unto him, I called thee to the way of Salvation, I will purifie and guide thee into the way of the Law of God, to the end thou maiſt have his fear before thine eyes. Moſes made Pharaoh to ſee one of his great Miracles, nevertheleſs he contemned Moſes, diſobeyed him, and departed from the right way; he cauſed his People to aſſemble, and made Proclamation, that he was their God, but God rigorouſly chaſtiſed him, becauſe of his Blaſphemies; this is an example of his Omnipotency to them that are Righteous. Oh ye wicked! were ye more difficult to create than Heaven? God hath raiſed the roof thereof, and proportioned it; he hath made the Night obſcure, and the day full of ſplendor; he hath ſtretched forth the Earth, hath made Fountains to ſpring forth, to water the Plants, and to give drink to Beaſts; he hath elevated and eſtabliſhed the Mountains for you, and for your Flocks. Men ſhall call to mind the good and the evil that they have done, at the ſecond ſound of the Trumpet, and Hell ſhall appear open before their eyes. The wicked, that have followed their own appetites on Earth, ſhall be precipitated into Hell, and ſuch as have had the fear of God before their eyes, and have ſubdued their paſſions in this World, ſhall go into Paradiſe. The wicked will ask of thee, when the Day of Judgment ſhall be? None knoweth it but thy Lord: Thou art not ſent but to preach the pains of Hell to them that fear that day, as if they ſaw it preſent before their eyes; they ſhall imagine that they have not remained in the Tomb but from Evening until Morning, when they riſe again.

CHAP. LXXX.

The Chapter of the Blind, containing Forty two Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful. The Prophet frowned, had a ſurly countenance, and withdrew himſelf when the blind came towards him. He will not tell thee, if he will believe in God, and if he will profeſs thy preaching; depart thou from him that ſhall depart from the Law of God; thou art obliged only to preach to him, and not to make him to believe; but forſake not them that ſhall come to ſee thee to be inſtructed; and ſhall fear God. The Alcoran is ſent for the inſtruction of men; it was copied upon the Book that is kept in Heaven, to which Honour and praiſe is due eternally. Wherefore is man impious? Is it becauſe he is created of a little Water, retained in the womb of his Mother, until the time appointed? And becauſe he found the way to come forth? Is it for that God cauſed him to dye, and to revive when it ſeems good to him? He performeth not what God commandeth, neither conſidereth the good things that nouriſh him: We have ſent rain, we opened the treaſures of the earth, we have made all ſorts of grain to ſpring forth; Blites, Olives, Dates, Gardens, and fields full of Fruits, and herbs to nouriſh you, and your flocks. When the Angel ſhall ſound the Trumpet the ſecond time, Man ſhall fly his brother, his mother, wife, and children; every one ſhall take thought for himſelf; that day ſhall the wicked have countenances covered with affliction; the countenance of the good ſhall be joyful, and ſuch as have ſought the way between faith and impiety, ſhall have their countenance covered with earth, and duſt.

CHAP. LXXXI.

The Chapter of Roundneſs, containing Twenty nine Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful. When the Roundneſs of the Sun ſhall appear, the Stars fall, the Mountains walk, the Camel be without burden, and without keeper; when the beaſt ſhall be gathered together, the Sea covered with fire, Souls return into Bodies, the * Daughter demand why they put her to death; when the book of good and evil ſhall open, when heaven ſhall caſt off its ornaments, the fire of hell appear, and Paradiſe be opened; then ſhall ſouls know the good and the evil that they have committed. I ſwear by the Planets, by the obſcurity of night, and by the brightneſs of day, that the words of the Alcoran are the words of the Prophet, beloved of God, powerful with his divine Majeſty; ye ought to obey him, he is a faithful obſerver of what is commanded him, he is not poſſeſſed of the Devil, as ye have imagined, he hath ſeen the Angel clearly, and without riddle, and is not perplexed for what is to come; the words of the Alcoran are not the words of the Devil; on whatſoever ſide ye turn you, it is only for the inſtruction of men, and ſuch among you, as will follow the right way, but ye ſhall have no inclination to follow it, if it pleaſe God, the Lord of the Univerſe.

* The Arabians buried their daughters alive, when they had done a fault.

CHAP. LXXXII.

The Chapter of the opening of Heaven, containing ſeventeen Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful. The ſouls ſhall know the good and the evil that they have done, when the heavens ſhall open, the ſtars fall, the ſeas be gathered together, and the ſepulchres be opened. O man, what maketh thee ſo proud, as to riſe againſt God, who hath created thee, who hath formed and proportioned thee after what manner he pleaſed? O ye wicked! ye will not believe the day of Judgment: there are Angels that obſerve your actions, and are obedient to God. The juſt ſhall go into Paradiſe, and the unjuſt be precipitated into the fire of hell, whence they ſhall never return. I will not tell when the day of Judgment ſhall be; that day none ſhall be able to ſuccour his neighbour, and God alone ſhall command.

CHAP. LXXXIII.

The Chapter of Them that weigh with falſe weights, containing Thirty ſix Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful. They that weigh with falſe weights, and meaſure with falſe meaſures, believe not to riſe again, at the day when all the World ſhall appear before God to be judged. Certainly the book wherein the ſins of the wicked are written, is kept in hell. Miſery ſhall be upon Infidels at the day of Judgment; none doubteth the coming of this day but the wicked: when they hear the Commandments of God preached, they ſay, that it is but an old fable, impiety retaineth them in this error, and induceth them to abandon the Law of his divine Majeſty, but they ſhall be caſt headlong into the flames of hell. It ſhall be ſaid unto them, behold the puniſhment which ye would not believe. The book wherein the good works of the righteous are written, is reſerved in heaven; the Angels are witneſſes, how the juſt ſhall enjoy the delights of Paradiſe, they ſhall ſee the immenſe graces of God, repoſed on delicious beds, their countenance ſhall be covered with joy and content; they ſhall drink of purified wine, moſt ſavory, that ſhall have the odour of Muſk, preſerved in bottles that none but themſelves ſhall open, and it ſhall be mixt with the water of the fountain of Paradiſe, where the Cherubins do drink. The Infidels deride the true believers that would inſtruct them, nevertheleſs when they return to their companions, they admire their doctrine, and ſay, when they ſee them, behold the ſeduced, but they are not ſent to be their tutors. The Infidels that ſhall be converted, and believe in the day of Judgment, ſhall go into Paradiſe, they ſhall enjoy the grace of God, they ſhall behold the grievous torments of the damned, that ſhall be puniſhed after their demerits, and ſhall find in the other world what they have done on earth.

CHAP. LXXXIV.

The Chapter of the Cleft, containing Twenty five Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful. The day of Judgment ſhall appear, when the heaven ſhall cleave aſunder, and the earth caſt men out of their ſepulchres by the commandment of God. O man! thou goeſt daily towards death, and ſhalt find in the end the good and evil that thou ſhalt have done: he to whom ſhall be given the book of accompt of his actions in the right hand, ſhall be bleſſed, he ſhall go with his companions into Paradiſe, where he ſhall enjoy eternal felicity: He to whom ſhall be given the account of his actions in the left hand, ſhall be damned, he ſhall be caſt headlong into the fire of hell, becauſe of the unlawful pleaſures that he hath taken in the world, and for that he believed not in the Reſurrection. God beholdeth all that he doth, and keepeth account. I ſwear by the redneſs that appeareth in the Air when the Sun ſetteth, by the obſcurity of the night, and the brightneſs of the Moon, That you all ſhall change being and poſture, and ſhall revive after your death. Wherefore is it that the wicked believe not in God? why do they not humble themſelves when they hear the Alcoran read? They blaſpheme againſt God, but he knows all their actions; declare to them that they ſhall be chaſtiſed, and that ſuch as believe in his Unity and do good works, ſhall receive an infinite reward.

CHAP. LXXXV.

The Chapter of Signs Celeſtial, containing twenty Verſes, written at Mecca.

Many Mahometan Doctors entitle this, The Chapter of Caſtles.

IN the name of God, gracious and merciful. I ſwear by heaven, adorned with ſigns, and by the day of Judgment, by the Angels and men, that they who have made pits filled with fire to burn the true believers, ſhall be witneſs of their own malice, and ſhall avouch, that the fire burned themſelves, to make them know the unity of God, and the truth of his Law. God is Omnipotent, and always victorious, he is the King of the heavens and earth, he beholdeth all. They that torment true believers, and ſhall not repent, ſhall be damned, they ſhall burn eternally in the fire of hell; and ſuch as ſhall believe in God, and do good works, ſhall dwell in pleaſant gardens, wherein flow many rivers, where they ſhall for ever enjoy ſupream felicity. The wrath of God is ſtrong, he maketh his creatures to die, and riſe again when he pleaſeth; he is merciful towards them that repent of their ſins, and loveth them that ſerve him. He hath created his throne, to which praiſe is due eternally; he raiſeth up whom he liſteth; and nothing is to him impoſſible. Haſt thou heard the Hiſtory of the people of Pharaoh and Temud? God ſhall chaſtiſe in like manner them that ſhall not believe in his Law, he knoweth them all. Certainly the precious Alcoran is written in the book that is reſerved in heaven.

CHAP. LXXXVI.

The Chapter of the Star, or of the North Star, containing ſeventeen Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the name of God, gracious and merciful. I ſwear by Heaven, and the Star that teacheth men the way. I will not tell thee by what ſtar; by the ſtar full of brightneſs; that every perſon hath a guardian (which obſerveth the good and the evil that it acteth;) Doth not man conſider of what he is created? he is made of a little ſprinkled water that iſſueth out of the body of man and woman? God ſhall make him to riſe again at the day of Judgment, and none ſhall be able to protect or defend him from the wrath of his divine Majeſty. I ſwear by heaven that returneth the rain, by the earth that openeth it ſelf, and receiveth it, to produce its fruits, that the Alcoran diſtinguiſheth good from evil, and that it was not ſent in vain. The unbelievers conſpire againſt the Prophet, but God ſhall turn their conſpiracy againſt them, and they ſhall not know it. Be thou patient, and awhile endure the Infidels.

CHAP. LXXXVII.

The Chapter of the High and Mighty, containing ſeventeen Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful. Exalt the name of thy Lord, high and mighty; who hath proportioned all that he hath created; he ordaineth what he liſteth, and guideth into the right way them that are pleaſing to him; he cauſeth herbs to ſpring out of the earth, createth them green, rendreth them dry, and altereth them as to him ſeems good. I will read to thee the Alcoran; forget nothing of what thou ſhalt read, but that which God ſhall will thee to forget; he knoweth whatſoever is kept ſecret in the world, and whatſoever is made manifeſt. I will inſtruct thee in his Law; preach the Alcoran, it ſhall be profitable to him that ſhall have the fear of God before his eyes: ſuch as ſhall deſpiſe it, ſhall be miſerable, they ſhall be precipitated into the fire of hell, where they ſhall not be able, either to live, or die; and he that ſhall embrace the Law of God, and ſhall be mindful of his name, ſhall be bleſſed. Pray to God at the time appointed. Certainly the righteous ſhall be heirs of the good things of the earth, and thoſe of heaven that are exceeding great, and eternal; this is written in the ancient books of Abraham and Moſes.

CHAP. LXXXVIII.

The Chapter of the Covering, containing twenty ſix verſes, written at Mecca.

Geladin intituleth this, The Chapter of Judgment, becauſe that day the damned ſhall be covered with fire and fear. See Exteri.

IN the name of God, gracious and merciful. Haſt thou heard mention of the covering? That day ſhall the countenance of the wicked be covered with affliction, they ſhall enter into fire that is extreamly hot; they ſhall drink of boyling water, they ſhall eat nothing but bryers and thorns; they ſhall be extreamly lean, and famine ſhall not deliver them from an infinite number of other miſeries. That day ſhall the good be filled with content, they ſhall be recompenced or their labours; in Paradiſe they ſhall hear nothing ſpoken that may diſpleaſe them; they ſhall ſee fountains flow, lying upon high beds, they ſhall drink in fair glaſſes, fixed on diamonds, upon pillows well diſpoſed, and upon pallets well adorned; will not

not the wicked conſider the Miracle of the ſhe-Camel? How it was created? How Heaven was elevated? How the Mountains were diſpoſed, how the Earth was extended? Preach to the wicked the pains of Hell, thou art ſent to preach to them, and not to conſtrain them. God will chaſtiſe with his great chaſtiſement him that ſhall abandon his Law, and traduce the Alcoran; all men ſhall be one day aſſembled before his Divine Majeſty, to give account of their actions.

CHAP. LXXXIX.

The Chapter of the Morning, containing Thirty Verſes, written at Mecca.

See Kitâb el tenoir. Ye ſhall there ſee the expoſition of this paſſage.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful. I ſwear by the Morning, by the tenth Night of the Month, by even and odd, and by the coming of Night, That the wicked ſhall be chaſtiſed. Is there any thing in conſideration of this Oath, that can move men to fly uncleanneſs? Conſidereſt thou not how God entreated Aad the Son of Arem, that dwelt in Pavillions ſupported by Columns ſo big, that there were none like to them in his Countrey? Knoweſt thou not how he uſed Temod, who hewed Stones and Rocks to inhabit the Valley? Knoweſt thou not how he entreated Pharaoh, who pierced with Pins the feet and hands of ſuch as he gave up to puniſhment? Knoweſt thou not how he entreateth them that heretofore erred from the right way in their own Countreys, and that increaſed their pollution? He poured upon them divers torments; he obſerveth all that men do; he giveth ſtore of goods to them that he doth not try, and taketh them away from ſuch as he proveth. The wicked will not give Honour to Orphans, they will not abſtain from eating the Bread of the Poor; they ſhall give an account, they too much affect riches; when the Earth ſhall tremble, and ſhall over-throw all the buildings; when the Angels ſhall deſcend in order, by the command of thy Lord, then ſhall Hell be open to the wicked, they ſhall call to mind what was preached to them in the World, and ſay, Why did not I obſerve the Commandments of God during my life? They ſhall be puniſhed more than ever any hath been, and ſhall be more ſtraitly bound than ever any hath been bound. It ſhall be ſaid to the bleſſed, O thou Soul! that haſt obſerved with courage, and without fear the Commandments of God, return to thy Lord with content, enter into the Society of the bleſſed, enter into Paradiſe.

CHAP. XC.

The Chapter of the City, containing Twenty Verſes, written at Mecca.

Many have entituled this, The Chapter of Night.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful. Mecca.
I ſwear by that City which is permitted thee to conquer; I ſwear by the Father and the Child, that we created man in miſery; thinketh he that there is none ſtronger than he? He ſaith, That he hath expended great wealth; doth he think that none hath ſeen what he hath done? Have we not given him two eyes, a tongue, two lips? Have we not given him to ſee the way of good and of evil? He ſhall be ſeverely chaſtiſed, but I will not tell thee with what kind of chaſtiſement. Wherefore doth he not deliver Slaves? Wherefore doth he not give to eat to them that are hungry, to Orphans, and his Kindred that are in neceſſity, and to the poor? Patience and Charity are recommended among True believers, they ſhall be ſeated at the right hand; and ſuch as impugn the Myſteries of our Law, ſhall be at the left hand, they ſhall be ſhut up in the Fire of Hell.

He declaims againſt Corets. See Gelaladin.

CHAP. XCI.

The Chapter of the Sun, containging Fifteen Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful. I ſwear by the Sun and his light, by the Moon and her ſplendour, by the Fire and its elevation, by the Night and its obſcurity, by Heaven and the Stars thereof, by the Earth, and its plains, by the creation of the Soul, by the knowledg of Virtue and Vice, That he that ſhall be purified from his ſins, ſhall be moſt happy, and that he who defileth himſelf with Vice, ſhall be moſt miſerable. The People of Temod traduced their Prophet, becauſe of their obſtinacy; but certainly they were chaſtiſed. The Apoſtle and Prophet of God ſaid unto them, Behold the Camel of God, ſuffer it to drink; they derided him, and ſlew that Camel. God ſeverely puniſhed them, he ſpared not his chaſtiſement againſt them.

CHAP. XCII.

The Chapter of Night, containing Twenty Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful. I ſwear by the obſcurity of Night, by the brightneſs of Day, by the creation of man and woman, That your actions are very different. He that ſhall yield to God the obedience that is due to him, and believeth in his Unity, ſhall go into Paradiſe; and whoſoever ſhall not praiſe his Divine Majeſty, Majeſty, and will not be converted, ſhall go into hell, his riches ſhall not ſave him, and he ſhall be caſt headlong into eternal flames. It is we that guide the people, we diſpoſe the beginning and end of every thing; I preach to you the torments of hell, none ſhall enter there, but the wretches that have blaſphemed, and departed far from the way of ſalvation; he that hath the fear of God before his eyes, and giveth alms, ſhall be delivered from the fire of hell, every one ſhall be recompenced for what he hath done for the love of God; he ſhall be ſatisfied and contented.

CHAP. XCIII.

The Chapter of the Sun riſing, containing ten Verſes, written at Mecca.

Mahomet complains to the Angel Gabriel, becauſe he ſo long had refrained to viſit him.

IN the name of God, gracious and merciful. I ſwear by the brightneſs of the riſing of the Sun, and by the darkneſs of Night, That thy Lord hath not forſaken thee. He doth not hate thee, his delay ſhall be to thee advantage, and in the end thou ſhalt be content; Did he not well lodge thee, when thou wert an Orphan? Did he not well guide thee, when thou wert ſeduced? Did not he enrich thee, when thou wert poor? Do no injury to Orphans, devour not the poor, and recount the graces that God hath conferred on thee.

CHAP. XCIV.

The Chapter of Joy, containing Eight Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the name of God, graeious and merciful. Have not I rejoyced thine heart? have not we delivered thee from the burden that was heavy on thy ſhoulders? we have raiſed thy name and reputation, affliction is followed of content; when thou ſhalt have finiſhed thy prayers, labour, and love thy Lord.

CHAP. XCV.

The Chapter of the Fig, containing eight Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the name of God, gracious and merciful. I ſwear by the Figs and Olives, by Mount Sinai, and by the ſafety and freedom that is in this City [of Mecca] that we created man with proportion, afterwards we rendred him contemptible, except the true believers that do good works; they ſhall receive an infinite reward. After this, (O wicked man) what maketh thee to blaſpheme againſt the Faith? is not God the Judg of Judges?

CHAP. XCVI.

The Chapter of Blood congealed, containing ſeventeen Verſes, written at Mecca.

Bedaoi and Gelaldin call this, The Chapter of Reading.

IN the name of God, gracious and merciful. Read the Alcoran, and begin through the name of God, who created all, who made man of a little congealed blood. Read the Alcoran, and exalt the glory of thy Lord, who hath inſtructed man in the Scriptures, who taught him what he knew not; nevertheleſs, he is in a great error, he will not conſider that he ſhall return before God. Haſt thou conſidered him that would have hindred one of the ſervants of God to make his prayers? haſt thou underſtood if he were in the way of ſalvation? haſt thou ſeen if he blaſphemed? if he hath abandoned the faith? knoweth he not that God forſaketh him? If he deſiſt not, he ſhall be dragged by the hair into the fire of hell, with the wicked; he ſhall quit the place where they aſſemble, to diſpute againſt the faith, and the devils ſhall caſt caſt them headlong into flames eternal. Diſobey not the commandments of God, perſevere in thy prayers, worſhip God always; obedience to his commaindments ſhall draw thee near to his divine Majeſty.

CHAP. XCVII.

The Chapter of Glory or Power, containing five Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the name of God gracious and merciful. We ſent the Alcoran in the night of Glory and Power. I have not taught thee the graces of this night of glory and vertue; The prayers and good works that are done that night, have more of merit and efficacy, than thoſe that have been performed in a thouſand months. The Angels deſcended that night to the earth, thorough the permiſſion of their Lord, and ſalute the true believers until the dawning of the day.

CHAP. XCVIII.

The Chapter of Inſtruction, containing eight Verſes, written at Medina.

IN the name of God, gracious and merciful. They that underſtand the Scripture, and believe in many gods, will not relinquiſh their idolatry, until they have heard the inſtruction of the Prophet of God; he ſhall read unto them a book clean and pure, wherein are written the precepts of the right way. They that know the Scripture, are not divided, until they have learned this inſtruction. It commandeth to worſhip one only God, to make their prayers at the time appointed, and to pay tithes; this is the right way.

The unbelievers that know the Scriptures, and adore many Gods, ſhall remain eternally in the fire of hell, and ſhall be moſt miſerable. They that believe in one God, and perform good works, ſhall be moſt happy, they ſhall be recompenced of their Lord in the garden of Eden, wherein flow many rivers, where they ſhall dwell eternally. God ſhall be ſatisfied with their obedience, and ſhall give them his bleſſing, prepared for them that fear him.

CHAP. XCIX.

The Chapter of the Earthquake, containing eight Verſes, written at Medina.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful. when the earth ſhall tremble, and ſhall caſt bodies out of their ſepulchres, man ſhall demand what it will do; they ſhall tell him news, to wit, that God hath commanded it to do ſo. That day ſhall men come out of ſepulchres from divers places, and ſhall ſee the good and the evil that they have done; he that hath committed evil, of the weight of an atome, ſhall be chaſtiſed; and he that ſhall have done good, of the weight of an atome, ſhall be rewarded.

CHAP. C.

The Chapter of Horſes, containing eleven Verſes, written at Mecca and Medina.

Some Arabians have called this, The Chapter of Return, or of them that return.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful. I ſwear by the Horſes; and the noiſe that they make with their feet, when they return to war, and by the fire which they make to ariſe, when they ſtrike their feet againſt ſtones, that run lightly through jealouſie, and raiſe the duſt in the midſt of enemies, That man is ingrateful for the graces of his Lord, he himſelf is witneſs of his ingratitude, and too much affecteth the riches of the Earth; knoweth he not that God will make all the world to revive? that he will bring to light whatſoever is moſt ſecret in the hearts of men, and that he knoweth all that they have done?

CHAP. CI.

The Chapter of Affliction, containing eleven Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the Name of God gracious and merciful. When the extreme affliction ſhall appear, I will not tell thee in what time this ſhall be then ſhall all men be aſſembled, ſtretched out like Quilts, and the mountains ſhall be like carded wool. Such whoſe ballance ſhall be weighty with good works, ſhall go into Paradiſe; and they whoſe ballance ſhall be light of good works, ſhall go into hell, they ſhall go into a fire ſo hot, that I am not able to expreſs the heat.

CHAP. CII.

The Chapter of Abundance, containing eight Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful. Certainly all your care, even to the grave, is in the abundance of your wealth; but ye ſhall hereafter learn, ye ſhall hereafter learn the truth; If ye had knowledge, ye would meditate on the torments of hell; you ſhall ſee one day, that they are indubitable, then ſhall ye ask where is Paradiſe?

CHAP. CIII.

The Chapter of the Evening.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful. I ſwear by the hour of the Evening, That men are inclined to their deſtruction, except ſuch as believe in God, that do good works, and have in eſteem truth and perſeverance.

It is an hour appointed to the Mahometans to pray.

CHAP. CIV.

The Chapter of Perſecution, containing ſeven Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful. Miſery is upon him that perſecuteth his Neighbour; Perſecution hath its Counter-Perſecution. He that heapeth up treaſures, and is buſied to count them, thinketh they will make him immortal, but they ſhall precipitate him into his miſery; I will not tell thee into what miſery, but the fire of hell is always kindled to burn the heart of the wicked; they ſhall be overwhelmed in flames, and bound to great pillars.

CHAP.

CHAP. CV.

The Chapter of Elephants, containing five Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the name of God, gracious and merciful. Conſidereſt thou not how thy Lord entreated them that came mounted upon Elephants, to ruin the Temple of Mecca? Was not their Conſpiracy their own deſtruction? God ſent againſt them flying Troops, that threw upon them Stones, whereon were imprinted their names; he made them like to Corn ſown in Fields, devoured by Beaſts.

CHAP. CVI.

The Chapter of Coreis, containing four Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful. Coreis had no humanity for them; the People come every Winter, and every Summer, to worſhip the God of the Temple of Mecca, which nouriſheth and delivereth them from famine and fear.

CHAP. CVII.

The Chapter of the Law, containing ſeven Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful. Saweſt thou him that blaſphemed againſt the Law? He it is that devoureth the ſubſtance of Orphans, and the bread of the Poor: Miſery is upon them that are not attentive to their Prayers, that are Hypocrites, and hinder men to do well.

CHAP. CVIII.

The Chapter of Affluence, containing three Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful. We have given thee a great Affluence of our Graces. Pray to thy Lord, lift up thine hands; he that hateth thee, ſhall be accurſed.

CHAP. CIX.

The Chapter of Infidels, containing ſix Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful. Oh Infidels, Idolaters! I worſhip not what ye worſhip, and ye worſhip not what I worſhip; I will not worſhip that which ye worſhip, and ye will not worſhip that which I worſhip; you obſerve your Law, and I mine.

CHAP. CX.

The Chapter of Protection, containing four Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful. A great number of People embrace the Law of God, when he protecteth the true Believers, and giveth them victory. Exalt his Glory, and implore pardon of him, he is moſt merciful.

CHAP. CXI.

The Chapter of the Cord of Palm, containing eleven Verſes, written at Mecca.

Galaldin entituleth this, The Chapter of Loſs.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful. Ablheb loſt his hand; God chaſtiſed him, his Riches ſhall not ſave him, he ſhall burn in eternal Flames, with his Wife that carrieth Wood upon her Neck, bound with a Cord of Palm.

The Wife of Ablheb did caſt ſtones in Mahomets way, in contempt. See Bedaoi.

CHAP. CXII.

The Chapter of Salvation, containing four Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful. Say unto unbelievers, God is eternal, he neither begetteth, nor is begotten, and hath no companion.

CHAP.

CHAP. CXIII.

The Chapter of Separation, containing five Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful. Say unto them, God, who hath ſeparated light from darkneſs, ſhall defend me from all the evils that he hath created, from danger, darkneſs, from them that blow againſt the knot of the ſtring, from Sorcerers, and the Envious.

CHAP. CXIV.

The Chapter of the People, containing ſix Verſes, written at Mecca.

IN the Name of God, gracious and merciful. Say unto them, I will beware of the temptations of the Devil, and the malice of the people, through the aſſiſtance of the Lord, and King of the people.
